TO THE

READER.

THE quick Sale of this Excellent Author's former Volume, Viz. His Diſcourſes upon the Exiſtence and Attributes of God, as well as that of Divine Providence; conſidering how heavily the Works of ſome others on ſuch like Subjects have gone off in our decrepit Age, may be abundant Evidence what acceptance they have found with the judiciouſly Pious, who converſe with Books: and thereupon afford perſuaſive hopes, that more of the genuine and uſeful iſſue of the ſame Father, not leſs like to him than thoſe born before, will yet be more favourably entertained. Wherefore preſuming we have not any way impeach'd our Reputation by any thing we wrote in the foregoing Prefaces; if thou wilt (without any Repetition of the ſame, with reſpect to theſe) but give us credit till thou haſt took a diſtinct view by a due Proportion of the ſeveral well-made Parts and Features here preſented to thine Eye by us, who were deſired to perform this Office of Love to our deceaſed worthy Friend, we doubt not but thou wilt eaſily ſay, As thoſe Treatiſes were, ſo theſe are *; yea (as Joſeph's Brethren ſaid ‖) All ſons of one man in the land of Canaan (above), each one reſembling the children of him that now reſts from his labours, and his works do follow him *, being made a king and prieſt unto God the father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ‖, whom he ſerved with his ſpirit in the Goſpel ‡: Which the choice Heads of Evangelical Truths clearly open'd, and practically applied in this Volume may largely atteſt, and ſo give a ſuperſedeas to any further Recommendation of ours: The rather, when thou maiſt be fully aſſured, that a conſiderable part, namely, the Learned and Spiritual Diſcourſes of Regeneration, were carefully Copied out by one * of the former happy Undertakers; and tho another who attain'd to the Skill of perfectly reading his Manuſcripts, was chiefly employ'd in Tranſcribing the major part of this Great Work from the Authors own Copy; yet the Tranſcript hath been diligently compar'd with the Original, by the other * of the former Tranſcribers, before we read it each of us ſeparately, and afterwards thoſe paſſages conjunctly, in conſultation together, wherein either of us conceived any little ſcruple might ariſe concerning the Authors genuine ſenſe, we ſaw re-examined, being ſtudious to do him all the right we could, and give his own meaning in his own words unto the World, without adventuring to interpoſe our own conceptions. Yet after our utmoſt care, and the vigilant Surviſal of the Preſs by an Ingenious perſon *, who did much honour the Author, we doubt not but had he himſelf ſurviv'd the Publication of what now appears, he would have ſweetned and given grace to ſome lines, that we preſume not to alter. If then there ſhould be found ſome things leſs clear, or any Metaphor leſs pleaſing, there be other things of greater weight ſingularly well delivered, will abundantly compenſate it; yea, which will greatly inform the judgment, affect the ſerious heart, and notably quicken to the main buſineſs of Religion. And poſſibly, as the Remains of the Prophet Eliſha *, which revived the man that was occaſionally let down into his ſepulchre, be a means, under Gods gracious influence, to enliven ſome ſpiritually dead Soul, ſet him upright, and enable him to run the ways of Gods Commandments: Or, like the writing left behind Elijah ‖ ſerve to warm ſome who are contributing to the Removal of the Goſpel from among us. However, this later, with the former Volume, will evince to thoſe who are addicted to an over-haſty cenſuring Men of his perſuaſion, without any Juſt grounds, what his great Soul was moſtly exerciſed about; namely, not matters of humane policy, but the great things of the kingdom of God; not meats and drinks, i.e. meer circumſtances, but the eſſentials and ſubſtantials of the Chriſtian Inſtitution, righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the holy Ghoſt *: which we are confident he hath explain'd very conſonant to the Doctrinal Articles of Religion, drawn up by our firſt Reformers, and ſubſcribed by the Miniſters of the Church of England. We know not that he doth at all vary from them, or other of the Reformed Churches. Diſcipline he doth not inſiſt on. And we ſuppoſe Ingenuous Readers, if they find in any little matter his Sentiments different from their own, will freely give an allowance for a fair interpretation of the Authors ſenſe, at leaſt in a poſthumous work, and not wire-draw any ſentences a working fancy might produce, and not review, to make them look crooked; conſidering what we are put in mind of in this Book *, Viz. Every error in the head doth no more deſtroy the truth of Faith, than every miſcarriage in the life, through infirmity, nulls the being of Grace; or every ſpot upon the face impairs the beauty and features of it.

Some who have heartily bleſſed God for thoſe good things they have already received ſince this Authors departure, (and we have no ſmall engagement upon us to be thankful to God for good Books, when there be ſuch ſwarms of bad ones) do with greedy eyes long to peruſe his Meditations upon the propoſed Subjects: which now appearing to their view, we are perſuaded will eaſily gain their grateful acknowledgments that they are not diſappointed, when they here find the fruitful products of the very ſame ſpirit of Mr. Charnock, which was of no ordinary elevation.

And however in the Diſcourſe of Chriſts Exaltation there be ſome few materials which be of the ſame import with ſome of thoſe in that of Reconciliation, yet handled with an acceptable variety: this might eaſily eaſily ſo fall out in the courſe of his celebrated preaching, not deſigning to lay them together in one Volume, without the leaſt diſparagement; Yea, now they are Printed, the bottomleſs pit being opened * by the Papiſts, cauſing ſmoke to ariſe thence to trouble the eyes of real Chriſtians; the inculcating of ſuch choice notions ſeems to be an Angelical voice from Heaven opened *, to direct Gods choſen ones into that way of truth which others have not known. And if in two or three ſmaller Tracts the Author ſeem not altogether ſo elaborate as in his other pieces; it cannot but be granted, that they were ſome occaſional Sermons compoſed in great ſtraits of time. Yet ſuch as kindly ſavour of the ſame ſpirit with the reſt; unto which it was thought fit to annex them, that there might not be any occaſion to mutter, that we had kept back part of what was primarily dedicated to the uſe of the Church; or locked up in ſecret any pieces of ſo good an Author, whoſe buſineſs whiles he liv'd, was to benefit others. Being happy in verifying the Arabick Proverb, Viz. That that learned Scholar is the worſt of men, who doth not profit others by his learning.

As to that Diſcourſe about The Spirits convincing the World of ſin, the Authors own Notes upon ſtricter ſearch not being found, two Skilful ſhort-hand Writers *, who conſtantly attended his Miniſtry, have ſupplied the defect, from what they both took from his own mouth, when they had compared their Notes; which ſupply, tho it ſhould want ſomewhat of the Acuracy of thoſe other parts Tranſcrib'd from his own Manuſcripts: yet thoſe who are not over-critical will find for the compleating of theſe Diſcourſes upon that Text, not much real detriment; and upon the whole matter not any detracting from that powerful Name which the Title-page is adorn'd with. We therefore taking the freedom to adviſe thee, Chriſtian Reader, of thoſe things, are not much concern'd with the carping cenſures of ſupercilious Criticks, having, we hope, conſcientiouſly done what was incumbent on us with all Faithfulneſs, in emitting theſe Writings, which might as Peter's be beneficial after his deceaſe * to the publick, which was not more the deſign of the deceaſed Author in his Miniſtry, than of his yet ſurviving Friends, and

Reader,

THOU art here Preſented with a little Piece, of a Great Man; Great indeed, if great Piety, great Parts, great Learning, and great Wiſdom, may beadmitted to claim that Title: And we verily belive that none well accquanted with him, will deny him his right: however malevolent Perſons may grudge him the honour. It hath been expected, and deſired by many, that ſome account of his Life might be given to the World; But we are not willing to offer violence to his aſhes, by making him ſo publick now he is Dead, who ſo much affected privacy while he lived. Thou art therefore deſired to reſt ſatisfied with this brief account of him, That being very young he went to Cambridge, where in Immanuel Colledge, he was brought up under the Tuition of the preſent Arch-B. of Canterbury: What Gracious workings and Evidences of the New-Birth appeared in him while there, hath already been ſpoken of by * one who was at that time his Fellow-Collegiate and Intimate. Some time he afterward ſpent in a private Family, and a little more in the exerciſe of his Miniſtery in Southwark, then removed to New-Colledge in Oxon, where he was Fellow, and ſpent ſeveral years; being then taken notice of for his ſingular Gifts, and had in Reputation by the moſt Learned and Godly in that Univerſity, and upon that account the more frequently put upon Publick work. Being thence (the year after he had been Proctor) called over into Ireland to a conſtant publick Employment, he exerciſed his Miniſtry for about four or five years, not with the approbation only, but to the admiration of the moſt Wiſe and and Judicious Chriſtians, and with the concurrent applauſe of ſuch as were of very different ſentiments from him in the things of Religion; Nay, even thoſe that never loved his Piety, yet would commend his Learning and Gifts, as being beyond exception, if not above compare. About the year 1660. Being diſcharged from the publick exerciſe of his Miniſtry, he returned back into England, and in and about London ſpent the greateſt part of fifteen years, without any call to his old work in a ſetled way; but for about theſe five years laſt paſt hath been more known known by his Conſtant Preaching, of which we need not ſpeak, but let them that heard him, ſpeak for him; or, if they ſhould be ſilent, his Works will do it. He was a Perſon of excellent Parts, ſtrong Reaſon, great Judgement, and (which do not often go together) curious Phanſie, of high Improvements, and general Learning, as having been all his days a moſt diligent and methodical Student, and a great Redeemer of time, reſcuing not only his reſtleſs hours in the Night, but his very walking-time in the Streets, from thoſe impertinencies and fruitleſs vanities which do ſo cuſtomarily fill up mens minds, and ſteal away their hearts from thoſe better and more Noble objects, which do ſo juſtly challenge their greateſt regards: This he did by not only carefully watching (as every good Chriſtian ſhould do) but conſtantly writing down his Thoughts, whereby he both govern'd them better, and furniſhed himſelf with many materials for his moſt elaborate diſcourſes. His chief Talent was his Preaching-Gift, in which, to ſpeak modeſtly, he had few equals. To this therefore, as that for which his Lord and Maſter had beſt fitted him (neglecting the practice of Phyſick, in which he had arrived at a conſiderable meaſure of knowledg) he did eſpecially addict himſelf, and direct his Studies, and even when Providence denied him opportunities, yet he was ſtill laying in more Stock, and preparing for work againſt he might be called to it. When he was in imployment, none that heard him, could juſtly blame his retiredneſs, he being even when moſt private, continually at work for the Publick; and had he been leſs in his Study, he would have been leſs liked in the Pulpit. His Library, furniſhed (though not with a numerous, yet) a curious collection of Books, was his Workhouſe, in which he laboured hard all the week, and on the Lords day made it appear, he had not been idle; and that though he conſulted his privacy, yet he did not indulge his Sloth. He was ſomewhat reſerved where he was not well acquainted; otherwiſe very free, affable and communicative, where he underſtood and liked his Company. He affected not much acquaintance, becauſe he would eſcape Viſitants, well knowing how much the ordinary ſort of Friends were apt to take up of his time, which he could ill ſpare from his beloved Studies, meeting with few that could give him better entertainment with their company, than he could give himſelf alone: They had need be very good, and very learned, by whoſe converſe he could gain more than by his own Thoughts and Books. He was a true Son of the Church of England, in that ſound Doctrine laid down in the Articles of Religion, and Taught by our moſt famous ancient Divines and Reformers; and a real follower of their piety, as well as a ſtrenuous maintainer of the Truth they profeſſed. His Preaching was moſtly practical, yet rational and argumentative, mentative, to his Hearers understandings, as well as affections; and where Controversies came in his way, he shewed great Acuteness and Judgment in discussing and determining them, and no less skill in applying them to practise: So that he was indeed a workman that needed not to be ashamed, being able by sound Doctrine both to exhort and convince gain-sayers. Some have thought his Preaching too high for vulgar Hearers; and it cannot be denied but his Gifts were suited to the more intelligent sort of Christians; yet it must withal be said, that if he were sometimes deep, he was never abstruse; he handled the great Mysteries of the Gospel with much clearness and perspicuity; so that if in his Preaching he were above most, it was only because most were below him. Several considerable Treatises on some of the most important points of Religion, he finished in his ordinary Course, which he hath left behind him, in the same form he usually writ them for the Pulpit. This comes out first as a Prodromus to several others designed to be made publick, as soon as they can be with conveniency transcribed, which (if the Lord will, and spare life) shall be attested with our hands; and whatever any else shall publish, can be but imperfect Notes (his own Copies being under our revisal at the request of his Friends) taken from him in the Pulpit; in which, what mistakes do often happen, every one knows, and we have found by experience in the case of this very Author more than once. This was thought fit to be said to secure the Reputation of the Dead, and prevent the abuse of the Living. These Sermons might have come out with the solemn ceremony of large recommendations, the Authors worth being so well known to, and his Preaching so highly esteemed by the most eminent Ministers about this City; but it was judged needless, his own Works being sufficient to Praise him.

One thing more is to be added, That such as he is here, such he is in his other pieces; so that thou hast here, Reader, a specimen of the strain and Spirit of this holy man, this being his familiar and ordinary way of Preaching, and these Sermons coming out first, not as if they were the non-such of what he left behind him, but because they could soonest be dispatched; and to obviate the injuries might else be done by spurious Treatises, both to him, and thee; and likewise by this little taste to gratifie the Appetites of such who having been his Auditors, did long even with greediness, to Feast themselves again upon those excellent Truths, which in the delivery were so sweet to them; Perhaps too it may quicken their appetites who never heard him, it may be never yet heard of him. If thou like this Cluster, Fear not but the Vintage will be answerable: If this little earnest be good metal, the whole sum will be no less currant. That a Blessing from Heaven may be upon this work, and upon thee in read-reading and ſtudying the Nature, and Beauty, and Ends of Divine Providence, and that the Lord of the Harveſt (eſpecially when ſo many are dayly called home) would ſend forth more and more ſuch labourers into the Harveſt, is the hearty prayer of

Thine in the Lord,

Divine Providence.

2 Chron. 16. 9.

For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong in the behalf of them whoſe heart is perfect towards him.

IN the beginning of the Chapter you find Baaſha King of Iſrael raiſing Walls about, and Fortifying Ramah, a place about twelve miles from Jeruſalem, the Metropolis of Judah, intending by that means to block Aſa up, becauſe Ramah lay juſt upon the Road between Jeruſalem and Samaria, the Seats of the two Kings, ver. 1.

Baaſha was probably afraid of the Revolt of Iſrael to Judah, upon that Reformation of Religion wrought by Aſa, and therefore would Fortifie that place to be a hinderance, and to intercept any that ſhould paſs upon that account. And to this purpoſe makes great preparation, as appears ver. 6. for with the proviſion Baaſha had made for the Fortification of Ramah; Aſa after the ſeizing of theſe Materials builds two Towns, Gaba and Miſpah.

Aſa ſeeing Baaſha ſo buſie about this Deſign, and fearing the conſequence of it, hath recourſe to carnal policy rather than to God: And therfore enters into league with Benhadad, a Neighbour, though an Idolatrous Prince, and purchaſeth his aſſiſtance with the Sacrilegious price of the Treaſure of the Temple, ver. 2, 3. And hereby engageth him to invade the King of Iſraels Territories, that he might thereby find work for Baaſha in another part, and ſo divert him from that Deſign upon which he was ſo bent, ver. 3. Go, break thy League with Baaſha, that he may depart from me.

Benhadad is eaſily perſwaded by the quantity of Gold, &c. to break his League, and make an Inroad, and proves victorious, and takes many Cities where the Magazines and Stores were laid up, ver. 4.

Baaſha now to ſave his Countrey, and make head againſt his Enemies, is forced to leave Ramah; whereupon Aſa, who watched his opportunity, ſeizeth the materials he had left for the fortifying of Ramah, and puts them to another uſe, ver. 5, 6.

Hanani the Seer is preſently ſent by God with a threatning of War, becauſe he applies himſelf to a Heathen Prince, rather than to the Lord of Hoſts, ver. 7. his ſin is aggravated by Gods former kindneſs to him, and experience he had given him of his miraculous Providence in his ſucceſs againſt that vaſt Army of the Ethiopians and Lubims, or Lybians, and that upon his recourſe to, or reliance on God. Aud that he ſhould afterwards have recourſe to the arm of Fleſh, was a diſparagement to Gods providential kindneſs, ver. 8. He further aggravates his ſin by by the conſideration of Gods general providential care of his Creatures, and the particular end of it, and of all his providences, viz. the good of his Church and people, ver. 9. For the eyes of the Lord, &c. Eyes of the Lord, in Scripture, ſignify,

1. His knowledge, Job 34.21. For his eyes are upon all the ways of man, and he ſees all his goings. Heb. 4. 13. *All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do.

* τετυχθαι ſignificat ſpinam dorſi, & in mactatis animalibus per ſpinam omnia apparent interiora, ita ut nihil latere poteſt. Glaſſius, Vol. 3. 1. 106.

1. For good, So it notes his Grace and good Will; ſo his Eyes and his Heart are joyned together, 1 Kings 6. 3. Mine Eyes and my Heart ſhall be there perpetually, viz. in his Temple, the place which he had hallowed to put his Name there for ever, Pſal. 32. 8. I will guide him with mine eye, that is, I will counſel him, and direct him in a gracious and a favourable way. Therefore to be cut off from the eye of the Lord, is to be deprived of his favour, Pſal. 31. 22. for none can be cut off from a ſimple knowledg of God: So Zach. 3. 9 ſeven eyes upon one ſtone, that is, the Providence of God was in an eſpecial manner with Chriſt in the midſt of his paſſion.

2. For evil, So it notes His anger and vindictive juſtice. Iſa. 3. 8. Their doings are againſt the Lord, to provoke the eyes of his Glory. Kindneſs and anger appear firſt in the Eye, one by its pleaſantneſs, the other by its redneſs.

(Run) that notes diligence and care, an induſtrious inſpection into all things. Pſal. 119. 32. I will run the ways of thy Commandments; noting ſpeed and diligence.

In the Verſe, we have

I. A Deſcription of Gods Providence.

II. The end of it.

I. The deſcription of Gods Providence.

1. The immediateneſs of it, [his eyes] his own eyes, not anothers. Not like Princes, who ſee by their Servants eyes more than by their own, what is done in their Kingdoms; his care is immediate. Though Angels are Miniſters of his Providence, the Guardians and Watchers of the World, yet God is their Captain, and is alwayes himſelf upon the Watch.

2. Quickneſs and ſpeed of Providence [run] His eyes do not only walk, but run the round; they are not ſlumbring eyes, nor drowzy eye-lids, their motion is quick and nimble.

3. Extent of Providence [the whole Earth] all things in the Earth, all the hairs on the Heads of theſe men: The meaneſt Worm as well as the mightieſt Prince, the loweſt Shrub as well as the talleſt Cedar, every cranny, corner or chink of the Earth.

4. Diligence of Providence [to and fro] His care is repeated, he looks this way and that way, again and again, his eyes are not confin'd to one place, fixed on one object, but are alwaies rouling about from one place to another.

5. The Efficacy of his Providence; His care doth engage his ſtrength; he doth not only diſcover dangers, but prevent them; he hath Eyes to ſee, and Power to order all things according to his pleaſure; Wiſe to ſee, and ſtrong to ſave.

II. The end of Providence [to ſhew himſelf ſtrong, &c.]

1. Finis cujus, [to ſhew himſelf ſtrong.] Heb. to make himſelf ſtrong, but beſt Tranſlated, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong. It is not an addition of ſtrength, but an exerciſe of ſtrength that is here meant.

2. Finis cui, or the Perſons for whom, Thoſe that are perfect in heart.

Doctrines.

Doct. 1. There is a Providence exerciſed by God in the World.

2. All Gods Providences in the world, are in order to the good of his people.

3. Sincerity in Gods way gives a man an intereſt in all Gods Providences, and the good of them.

Doct. For the Firſt There is a Providential inſpection and Government of all things in the World by God: 'Tis not a bare ſight of things that is here meant by Gods eye, but a ſight and knowledge in order to the Governing and diſpoſing of them. View this Doctrine at your leiſure, preached by God himſelf, with an inconceivable elegancy, and three whole Chapters ſpent in the Sermon, and *by the Pſalmiſt *.

* Job 38. 39, 40.
* Pſal. 147. 148.

Some obſerve, that the ſociety of Angels and Heavenly Creatures is repreſented Ezek. 1. by a quaternarian number, becauſe the World is divided into four dimenſions, Eaſt, Weſt, North and South, as Intimating the extention of Gods Providence over all parts*.

* Hudſons Divine right of Government, chap. 6. pag. 3.

Things are not ordered in the World cæco impetu; not by blind fortune, but an Allſeeing Deity, who hath the management of all ſublunary affairs. Τὴν μεγάλην Δύναμιν τῆς προνοίας πάντα ὑπ' ἀῖδιον ἄγουσι, was the Theological Maxim of the Stoicks.

* Clemens ad Corinth, p. 34.

Before I come partiularly to explain the Providence of God, I ſhall lay down ſome Propoſitions as the Foundations of this Doctrine.

1. God hath an indiſputable and peculiar Right to the Government of the World: None ever queſtioned Gods Right, no nor his act, but thoſe that were ſwelled with an unreaſonable ambition, ſuch as Nebuchadnezzar, who for this cauſe underwent the puniſhment of a ſeven years baniſhment from the ſociety of men *.

* Dan. 4. 17.

None indeed that acknowledg a God, did or can queſtion Gods Right, though they may queſtion his Will and actual exerciſe of his Right. He is the Creator, and therefore is the Soveraign Lord and Ruler. The World is his Family, and as a Maſter, he hath an undoubted Right to govern his own Family; He gave all Creatures their beings, and therefore hath a right to enact their Laws, appoint their ſtations, and fix their ends. 'Tis as much his property and prerogative to rule, as it is to create. Creation is ſo peculiarly proper to God, that it is not communicable to any Creature, no not to Angels, though of a vaſt Capacity in other things, and that becauſe they are Creatures themſelves. 'Tis as impoſſible for one Creature, or all, to govern the world, and manage all the boyſterous paſſions of men to juſt and glorious ends, as to create them. 'Tis true, God uſeth inſtruments in the executive part of his Providence; but he doth not deſign the Government of the world only by Inſtruments. He uſeth them not for neceſſity, but ornament. He Created the World without them, and therefore can Govern the World without them.

Virtus Creativa eſt fundamentum providentiæ & argumentum ad providentiam. This right is founded upon that of Creation as he is the efficient cauſe of it. This right is alſo founded upon the excellency of his Being. That which is excellent having a right to rule in the way of that excellency, that which is inferior; every man hath a natural right to rule another in his own art and skill wherein he excells him: If it be the right of a chief Magiſtrate to manage the concerns of his Kingdom, with what reaſon can we deny that right to God?

2. God only is qualified for the univerſal government of the World. All Creatures, as they were unable to create themſelves, ſo are unable to manage themſelves without the Direction of a Superior power, much more unable to manage the vaſt body of the World. God is only fit in regard of,

1. Power: Conſervation is continuata Creatio; that power which is fit to Create, is only fit to preſerve. A continued Creation belongs as much to Omnipotency as the firſt Creation.

The Government of it requires no leſs power, both in regard of the numerouſneſs of the objects, and the ſtrange contrariety of paſſions in rational Creatures, and qualities in irrational; conſervation is but one continued act with Creation, following one from an inſtant to duration, as a line from its Mathematical point *.

* Tailors exemplar, preface. 6. 31.

2. Holineſs and Righteouſneſs. If he that hates right is not fit to govern, Job 34. 17. then he that is infinitely Righteous, and hath an infinite love to Righteouſneſs, is the fitteſt to undertake that task; without Righteouſneſs there would be nothing but confuſion in the whole Creation. Diſorder is the effect of unrighteouſneſs, as order is the effect of Juſtice. The juſteſt man is fitteſt for ſub-ordinate Government among men, and the infinite juſt God is fitteſt for the univerſal Government of the World.

3. Knowledge. An infinite knowledge to deſcry all the contrivances and various labyrinths of the hearts of men, their ſecret intentions and aims, is neceſſary. The Government of the World conſiſts more in ordering the inward faculties of men touching the hearts, and tuning them to play what notes he pleaſes, than in external things. No Creature hath the skill or power to work immediately upon the will of man; neither Angels nor Divils can do it immediately, but by propoſing objects, and working upon the fancy, which is not alwaies ſucceſsful. He that created the heart, knows all the wards of it, and hath only the skill to turn it, and incline it as he pleaſes; he muſt needs know all the inclinations of the Creatures and their proper activities, ſince he alone conferred all thoſe ſeveral principles and qualities upon them. * Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the World, viz. the particular natures, inclinations, inward motions, which no Creature fully underſtands; he needs no deputy to inform him of what is done, he is every where, and ſees all things: Worldly Governors cannot be every where eſſentially preſent.

* Act. 15. 8.

God is ſo perfect in his knowledge of all things, that he cannot be impoſed upon by the evil ſuggeſtions and flatteries of men or Angels.

In nature it is ſo, the eye guides the body, becauſe that is the chief Organ of ſenſitive knowledge; the mind, which is the ſeat of Wiſdom, guides the whole.

4. Patience. Infinite patience is requiſite to the preſervation and government of the World in the circumſtances wherein it hath ſtood ever ſince the fall: What Angel, though the meekeſt, or can all the Angels in Heaven be Maſters of ſo much patience as is needful for this work of governing the World, though for the ſpace of one day? Could they bear with all thoſe evils which are committed in the world in the ſpace of 24 hours? Might we not reaſonably conceive, that they would be ſo tired with the obliquities, diſorders, deformities which they would ſee in the acts of men, (beſides all the evil which is in the hearts of men, which lye without the verge of their knowledge) that they would rather call for fire from Heaven to burn the World to Aſhes.

* Trap in Exod. 34.

* Averroes thought, that becauſe of Gods ſlowneſs to anger, he meddled not with ſublunary concerns: This rather fits him for it, becauſe he can bear with the injuries of wicked men, otherwiſe the World would not continue a moment.

Angels, though powerful, holy, wiſe and patient creatures, yet being Creatures, they want the infiniteneſs of all theſe qualifications which are neceſſary to this government: Though they are knowing, yet they know not mens hearts; though they are wiſe, yet they may be charged with a folly uncapable of this; though holy, yet not able in this reſpect to manage it to the ends and deſigns of an infinite holineſs; though nimble, yet cannot be in all parts of the world at every turn: but the Providence of God is infallible, becauſe of his infinite Wiſdom; indefatigable, becauſe of his Omnipotency; and righteons, becauſe of his Goodneſs.

3. There can be no reaſon rendered why God ſhould not actually govern the World, ſince He only hath a right and fitneſs. If God doth not actually govern it, it is either becauſe He cannot, or becauſe He will not.

1. Not becauſe He cannot, this inability muſt be either for want of knowledge, or want of power. The one if aſſerted, would deny his Omnipotence, the other his Omniſcience; the one would make him a weak God, the other an ignorant God, and conſequently no God.

2. Not becauſe He will not; If He can and will not, it is, ſay ſome, a teſtimony of envy, that he maligns the good of his Creatures: but not to inſiſt upon this; This muſt be either becauſe of the

1. Difficulty. This cannot be: What difficulty can there be in a ſingle word, or one act of his will, which can be done by God without any moleſtation, were there millions of Worlds as well as this? For ſtill they would be finite, and ſo governable by an infinite Superior. May we not more reaſonably think the forming ſuch a Maſs would require more pains than the government of it? The right ſtringing an inſtrument is more trouble to a skilful Muſitian, than the tripping over the ſtrings afterwards to make an harmony. What difficulty can it be to Omnipotence? Is it a greater labour to preſerve and govern, than it was to create? Doth not the Soul order every part of the body, and all its functions, without any pain to it? and ſhall not the God that made that Soul ſo indefatigable, much more manage the concernments of the World without labour to himſelf? Is it not as eaſie with God to guide all theſe things by one ſingle act of his Will, as for me by an act of my Soul to do many things without a diſtinct act of cogitation or conſideration before? Can it be more laborious to him, to govern the world, than it is to know all things in the World? He ſees all things in an inſtant by one act of his underſtanding, and he orders all Creatures in a moment by one act of his will. Can one act of his will be more painful, than one act of his underſtanding? Can he with a word make this great Ball, and can he not with as much eaſe order all to conform to the law of his own righteous will? Can a continual eruption of goodneſs be a difficulty to an infinite Being, which we find natural to the Sun, to the Fountains, to the Sea, to many works of that Omnipotent Goodneſs? Or,

2. Diſparagement, Denial of Gods Providence over the leſſer things of the World, did ariſe from the conſideration of the ſtate of Monarchs, who thought it an abridgment of their felicity and dignity, to ſtoop to ſuch low conſiderations as the minutula of their eſtates might exact from them, but left them to their Vicegerents. But they conſider not that the felicity of God as it reſpects the Creature, is to communicate his goodneſs to as many ſubjects as he hath made capable of his care. If it were his glory to create the world, can it be his diſhonour to Govern it? The glorifying his wiſdom is as honourable to him as the magnifying his power; though both are eminent in Creation and Providence, yet his wiſdom is more ſignal in the Governing, as his power was in framing of the world.

Why was it not as much a diſparagement to God to Create things contemptible in our eyes, as ſince he hath Created them to take care of them, and marſhal them for his own glorious ends? The Sun in the Heavens is a ſhadow of God, which doth not diſdain to communicate its natural goodneſs, and emit its beams to the meaneſt Creatures, and let the little flies ſport themſelves in them, as well as the greateſt Princes: and tranſmits its influences upon things obſcure and at a diſtance from it, whereby it manifeſts an univerſal regard to all. And would it not be a diſparagement to an infinite goodneſs to be out-ſtript by a Creature, which he hath ſet up for a natural communication of goodneſs to the reſt of the World? The very conſideration of the Sun, and the nature of it, gives us as much an account of God, as any inanimate being whatſoever: 'Tis as much the Suns honour to produce a ſmall Inſect, as the growth of the greateſt Plant.

*Have not all Creatures a natural affection in them to preſerve and provide for their own? hath not God much more, who endued all creatures with that diſpoſition? Whatſoever is a natural perfection in Creatures, is eminently an infinite perfection in God. If it be therefore a praiſe to you to preſerve your own, can it be a diſgrace to God? You may as well ſay, it is as much a diſhonour to him to be good, as to have a tender regard to his Creatures. Cenſure him, as well you may, for creating them for your delight as preſerving and governing them for the ſame end. They are all good, for he pronounced them ſo; and being ſo, a God of goodneſs will not account them unworthy of his care. Are they now the Products of his Omnipotent wiſdom, and ſhall not they be the objects of his directing Wiſdom? If they are not unworthy of God to create, how can they be unworthy of God to govern them? It would be as much below him to make them, as to rule them when they were made.

* Mornæ. de Verit Relig. Chriſtian. Chap. 11.

4. Therefore, God doth actually preſerve and govern the World; though Angels are in Miniſtry in ſome particular works of his providence, yet God is the Steersman, who gives out his particular orders to them. Fourthly.

Jacobs Ladder had the top in Heaven, where God ſtood to keep it firm: Its foot on Earth, and the Angels going up and down upon ſeveral errands at their Maſters beck.

As God made all things for himſelf, ſo he orders the ends of all things made by him, for his own glory. For being the moſt excellent and intelligent Agent, he doth reduce all the motions of his Creatures to that end for which he made them.

This actual government of the World by God, brancheth it ſelf out in three things.

1. Nothing is acted in the world without Gods knowldege. The Viſion of the Wheels in Ezekiel, preſents us with an excellent portraiture of providence, there are eyes round about the Wheels*.

* Ezek. 18. their wings were full of eyes, &c.

The eye of God is upon the whole circle of the Creatures motion. In all the revolutions in the World, there is the Eye of Gods Omniſcience to ſee them, and the arm of his Omnipotence to guide them: Not the moſt retired corner, or the darkeſt cell, not the deepeſt cavern, or moſt inward project, nor the moſt ſecret wickedneſs, not the cloſeſt goodneſs, but the eye of the Lord beholds it. * Prov. 15. 3.* The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good. He hears the words, ſees the actions, knows the thoughts, regiſters the gracious diſcourſes, bottles up the penitent tears, and conſiders all the wayes of men; not a whiſpered Oath, not an Atheiſtical thought, though but only peeping upon the heart, and ſinking down again in that maſs of corruption; not a diſorderly word, but he knows and marks it. The Soul hath a particular knowledge of every act, becauſe it is the ſpring of every act in any member; and nothing is done in this little World, but the Soul knows it. Surely then there is not an act done in the world, nor the motion of any Creature, but as God doth concur to it, he muſt needs know what he doth concur to. The knowledge and ordaining every thing, is far leſs to the infinite being of God, than the knowledg and ordaining every motion of the body is to a finite Soul.

Or, Suppoſe a Soul cloathed with a body of as big a proportion as the matter of the whole Creation, it would actuate this body, though of a greater bulk, and know every motion of it. How much more God, who hath infinity and excellency and ſtrength of all Angels and Souls, muſt needs actuate this World, and know every motion of it? There is nothing done in the World, but ſome Creature or other knows it; he that acts it, doth at leaſt know it: If God did not know it, the Creatures then in that particular knowledge would be ſuperior to God, and know ſomething mor than God knows; can this be poſſibe?

2. Nothing is acted in the World without the Will of God. His Will either commands it, or permits it. * Pſal. 135. 6. Whatſoever the Lord pleaſed, that did he in Heaven and in Earth.

* Eph. 1. 11. He works all things after the Counſel of his own will.

Even the ſins of the World, his will permits them, his power aſſiſts in the act, and his Wiſdom orders the ſinfulneſs of the act for holy ends. The Four Chariots in Zech. 6. 2, 3, 4, 5. by which ſome underſtand Angels, are ſent upon commiſſion into the ſeveral parts of the world, and compared to Chariots, both for their ſtrength, their ſwiftneſs, their employment in a military way to ſecure the Church. Theſe are ſaid to come * out of the two Mounrains of braſs, which ſignify the irreverſible decrees of God, which the Angels are to execute. He alarums up the Winds, when he would have Jonah arreſted in his flight. He ſounds a retreat to them, and locks them up in their Chambers *. Bread hath a natural vertue in it to nouriſh, but it muſt be accompanied with his ſecret bleſſing, Mat. 4. 4.

Reynolds.

* Pſal. 107. 25, 29.

Virtute primi actus, agunt agentia omnia quicquid agunt.

3. Nothing doth ſubſiſt without Gods care and power. His eyes running to and fro, implies not only knowledg, but care. He doth not careleſly behold what is done in the World, but like a skilful Pilot, he ſits at the helm, and ſteers the World in what courſe it ſhould Sale. Our being we owe to his power, our well-being to his care, our motion and exerting of every faculty, to his merciful proviprovidence and concurrence; *in him we live and move and have our being. He frames our being, preſerves our life, concurs with our motion. This is an Idea that bears date in the minds of men, with the very notion of a God. Why elſe did the Heathen in all their ſtreights fly to their Altars, and fill their Temples with cries and ſacrifices? To what purpoſe was this, if they had not acknowledged Gods ſuperintendency, his taking notice of their cauſe, hearing their prayers, conſidering their cries? Why ſhould they do this, if they thought that God did not regard humane affairs, but ſtood untouched with a ſenſe of their miſeries?

If all things were done by chance, there could be no perdictions of future things, which we frequently find in Scripture, and by what wayes accompliſhed. Impoſſible it is that any thing can be continued without his care. If God ſhould in the leaſt moment withhold the influence of his Providence, we ſhould melt into nothing, as the impreſſion of a Seal upon the water, vaniſhes, as ſoon as the Seal is removed; or as the reflection of the face in the glaſs diſappears upon the firſt inſtant of our removal from it. The light in the air is by participation of the light of the Sun; The light in the air withdraws upon the departure of the Sun. The Phyſical and moral goodneſs the Creature would vaniſh upon the removal of God from it, who is the Fountain of both.

What an Artificer doth work, may continue, though the workman dies, becauſe what he doth is materially, as to the matter of it, ready to his hands; he creates not the matter, but only ſets materials together, and diſpoſeth them into ſuch a form and Figure: But God gives a being to the matter and form of all things, and therefore the continuance of that being depends upon his preſerving influence*. God upholds the World, and cauſes all thoſe laws which he hath impreſſed upon every Creature, to be put in execution; not as a man that makes a Watch, and winds it up, and then ſuffers it to go of it ſelf; Or that turns a River into another Channel, and lets it alone to run in the graff he hath made for it; but there is a continual concurrence of God to this goodly frame. For they do not only live, but move in him, or by him; His living and Omnipotent power runs through every vein of the Creation, giving it life and motion, and ordering the acts of every part of this great body. All the motions of ſecond cauſes are ultimately reſolved into the Providence of God, who holds the firſt link of them in his hands*. More particularly, the nature of Providence may be explained by Two propoſitions.

I. The higheſt and moſt magnificent pieces of the Creation. First.

1. Over Jeſus Chriſt, the firſt-born of every Creature. Gods providence was in an eſpecial manner converſant about him, and fixed upon him. It was by the determinate Counſel of God, that he was delivered up*: His providence was diligently exerciſed about him in his whole courſe. Chriſt anſwers his Mothers ſolicitouſneſs with the care his Father took of him*. Do you not know that I am about thoſe things my Father takes care of*? This expoſition beſt agrees with his reproof, who blames them for creating ſo much trouble to themſelves upon their miſſing him in the Town. 'Tis not, why do you interrupt me in my diſpute with the Jewiſh Doctors? But [How is it that you ſought me? Do you think I am not under the care of my Father?] It was particularly exerciſed on him in the midſt of his paſſion*. Seven eyes were upon the Stone; Seven, a number of perfection, a perfect and peculiar care of God attended him.

* Luk. 2. 49. wiſt you not that I muſt be about my Fathees buſineſs?

2. Over Angels and Men. The Soul of the leaſt Animal, and the ſmalleſt plant, is formed and preſerved by God, but the breath of mankind is more particularly in his hand: Job 12. 10. In whoſe hand is the Soul of every living thing, and the breath of all Mankind.

* Zach. 3. 9.

1. Over good Angels and Men. He charges his Angels with folly and weakneſs. They cannot direct themſelves without his wiſdom, nor preſerve themſelves without his power. God hath a Book of Providence, wherein he writes down who ſhall be preſerved, and this Book Moſes underſtands, Exod. 32. 33. Whoſoever hath hath ſinned againſt me, him will I blot out of my Book; not the Book of Election, no names written there are blotted out; but out of the Book of Providence. As it is underſtood, Iſa. 4. 3. [Every one that is written among the living in Jeruſalem,] i. e. every one whom God deſigns to preſervation and deliverance *. That God, ſurely, that hath a care of the mean animals, will not be careleſs of his affectionate Worſhippers. He that feeds the Ravens, will not ſtarve his Doves. He that ſatisfies the Ravening Wolf, will not famiſh his gentle Lambs and harmleſs Sheep. He ſhelters Jacob from Labans fury, and * tutors him how he ſhould carry himſelf towards the good man. He brought Haman out of favour, and ſet Mordecai in his place for the deliverance of the Jews which were deſign'd for ſlaughter.

* Hortons Serm. Pſ. 87. p. 56.

* Gen. 2. 9.

2. Over evil Angels and Men. Gods power preſerves them, his patience ſuffers them, his Wiſdom orders them, and their evil purpoſes and performances to his own glory. The Devil cannot arreſt Job, nor touch a Lamb of his Flock, nor a hair of his head, without a commiſſion from God. He cannot enter into one filthy Swine in the Gaderenes herd, without asking our Saviour leave. Whatever he doth, he hath a grant or permiſſion from Heaven for it. Gods ſpecial providence is over his people, but his general Providence over all Kingdoms and Countreys.

He takes care of Syria, as well as of Judea; and ſends Eliſha to anoint Hazael King of Syria, as well as Jehu King of Iſrael *. Though Iſhmael had mocks for Iſaac, yet the God of Iſaac provided for the wants of Iſhmael *. He cauſeth his Sun to ſhine upon the unjuſt, as well as the juſt, to produce Fruits and plants for their preſervation.

* 1 King. 19. 13.

* Gen. 25. 16, 17, 18.

II. Over the meaneſt Creatures. As the Suns light, ſo Gods Providence diſdains not the meaneſt worms. 'Tis obſerved, that in the enumeration of the works of Creation *, only the Great Whales and ſmall creeping things are mentioned, and not the intermediate Creatures; to ſhew, that the leaſt as well as the greateſt are under his care. 'Tis one of his Titles to be the preſerver of Beaſts as well as men *. He is the great Caterer for all Creatures *. The young Lyons ſeek their meat from God. They attend him for their daily portion, and what they gather and meet with in their purſuit, is Gods gift to them, verſ. 27, 28. He liſtens to the cries of the young Ravens, though they are Birds of Prey. He gives to the Beaſt his food, and to the young Ravens which cry *. In Pſalm. 104. David throughout the whole reads a particular Lecture of this Doctrine, wherein you may take a proſpect of Gods Providence all over the world. He acts them by a Commandment and imprinted Law upon their natures, and makes them obſerve exactly thoſe ſtatutes he enacts for the guidance of them in their proper operations. Pſal. 147. 15. [he ſendeth forth his Commandment upon Earth, and his word runs very ſwiftly] viz. his word of Providence. God keeps them in the obſervation of their firſt ordinance *. They obſerve their ſtations, the Law God hath ſet them, as if they had a rational knowledg of their duty in their particular motions, Pſ. 104. 19. the Sun knoweth his going down. Sometimes he makes them inſtruments of his Miniſtry to us; ſometimes executioners of his judgments. Lice and Frogs arm themſelves at his command to puniſh Egypt. He makes a Whale to attend Jonas dropping into the Sea, to be an inſtrument both to puniſh and preſerve him? Yea, and which is more wonderful, the multitude of the very Cattel is brought among others as a reaſon of a peoples preſervation from deſtruction, Jonah 4. 11. the multitude of the Cattel are joyned with the multitude of the infants, as an argument to ſpare Nineveh. He remembers Noah's Cattel as well as his Sons, Gen. 8. 1. God remembered Noah and every living thing, and all the Cattel that were with him in * the Ark. He numbers the very hairs of our heads, that not one falls without his Will. Not only the immortal Soul, but the decaying body; not only the vital parts of that body, but the inconſiderable hairs of the head, are under his care.

* Pſal. 147. 9.

* Pſ. 119. 91. They continue this day according to thine Ordinances, for all are thy Servants. i. e. The Earth and what is upon it.

* A particular Act of remembrance is exerciſed by God for the very Battel.

1. This is no diſhonour to God, to take care of the meaneſt Creatures. 'Tis as honourable for his Power to preſerve them, and his Wiſdom to Govern them, as for both to create them. 'Tis one part of a mans righteouſneſs to be merciful to his beaſts which he never made; and is it not a part of Gods righteouſneſs, as the Rector of the World, to take care of those Creatures which he did not disdain to give a being to?

Rector

II. It rather conduceth to his honour.

1. The honour of his goodness. It shews the comprehensiveness of his goodness, which embraceth in the arms of his Providence, the lowest Worm, as well as the highest Angel. Shall infinite goodness frame a thing, and make no provision for its subsistence? At the first Creation he acknowledged whatever he had created, good in his kind, good in themselves, good in order to the end for which he created them; 'tis therefore an honourable thing for his goodness to conduct them to that end which in their Creation he design'd them for; and not leave them wild disorders, unsuitable to the end of that goodness which first called them into being. If he grow out of love with the operations of his hands, he would seem to grow out of love with his own goodness that formed them.

2. The honour of his Power and Wisdom. The Power of God is as much seen in making an insect full of life and spirit in all the parts of it, to perform all the actions suitable to its life and nature, as in making Creatures of a greater bulk; and is it not for the honour of his Power to preserve them, and the honour of his Wisdom to direct these little animals to the end he intended in their Creation; for as little as they seem to be, an end they have, and glorious too, for natura nihil facit frustra. It seems not to consist with his Wisdom to neglect that which he hath vouchsafed to Create. And though the Apostle seems to deny Gods care of Brutes, 1 Cor. 9. Doth God take care for Oxen? 'Tis true God did not in that Law only take care of Oxen, i. e. with a legislative care, as making a Law only for them, though with a Providential care he doth; but the Apostle there doth not deny Gods care for Oxen, but makes an argument a minori ad majus.

2. Providence extends to all the actions and motions of the Creature. Every second cause implies a dependance upon a first cause in its operation. If God did not extend his Providence over the actions of Creatures, he would not every where, and in all things and beings be the first Cause.

1. To natural Actions. What an orderly motion is there in the natural actions of Creatures, which evidenceth a guidance by an higher reason, since they have none of their own? How do fish serve several coasts at several seasons, as if sent upon a particular message by God? This cannot be by any other faculty than the instinct their Maker hath put into them. Plants that grow between a barren and fruitful Soil, shoot all their roots towards the moist and fruitful ground; by what other cause than a secret direction of Providential Wisdom*? There is a Law impress upon them and their motions, that are so orderly, as if they were acted according to a Covenant and agreement between them and their Creator, and therefore called the Covenant of the day and *night. What avails the toyl and labour of man in plowing, trading, watching, unless God influence, unless he bless, unless he keep the City? The proceed of all things depends upon his goodness in blessing, and his power in preserving. God signified this, when he gave the Law from Mount Sinai, promising the People, that if they kept his Commandments, he would give them rain in due season, and that the Earth should bring forth her Fruit*. Evidencing thereby, that those natural causes can produce nothing without his blessing; that though they have natural principles to produce such Fruits according to their natures, yet he can put a stop to their operations, and make all their Fruits abortive. He weighs the waters, how much shall be poured out in showrs of rain upon the parched Earth. He makes a decree for the rain, and gives the Clouds Commission to dissolve themselves so much and no more*. Yea, he doth order the conduct of them by counsel, as imploying his wisdom about these things which are of concern to the World. Job 37. 11, 12. He scattereth his bright Cloud, and it is turned round about by his Counsels, that they may do whatsoever he commands them upon the face of the World in the Earth.

* Lev. 26. 3, 4 Then will I give you rain, and the Land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit.

* Job 28. 23, 24, 25, 26.

2. To Civil actions. Counsels of men are ordered by him to other ends than what they aim at, and which their Wisdom cannot discover. God stirred up

Senacherib

Senacherib to be the Executioner of his juſtice upon the Jews, and afterwards upon the Egyptians, when that great King deſigned only the ſatisfaction of his ambition in the enlarging his Kingdom, and ſupporting his greatneſs. Iſa. 10. 6,7. I will ſend him againſt an Hypocritical nation, and againſt the people of my wrath: howbeit he means not ſo, neither doth his heart think ſo, [He deſigns not to be an inſtrument of my juſtice] but it is in his heart to deſtroy and cut off Nations, not a few. His thoughts and aims were far different from Gods thoughts. The hearts of Kings are in his hands, as wax in the hands of a man, which he can work into what form and ſhape he pleaſes. He hath the ſoveraignty over, and the ordering the hearts of Magiſtrates, Pſa. 47. 9. the ſhields of the Earth belong unto God. Counſels of men for the good of his people, are his act. The Princes adviſed Jeremiah and Baruch, Jer. 36. 19. to hide themſelves, which they did, yet ver. 26. it is ſaid the Lord hid them. Though they followed the advice of their Court-friends, yet they could not have been ſecured, had not God ſtep't in by his providential care, and covered them with his hand. It was the Courtiers Counſel, but God challenges the honour of the ſucceſs.

Military actions are ordered by him. Marſhal employments are ordered by his providence. He is the great General of Armies: 'Tis obſerved that in the two Prophets, Iſaiah and Jeremiah, God is called the Lord of Hoſts no leſs than a Hundred and Thirty times*.

Arrowſmith Chain of Principles Exercit. 1. Sect. 1.

3. To preternatural actions. God doth command Creatures to do thoſe things which are no way ſuitable to their inclinations, and gives them ſometimes for his own ſervice a writ of eaſe from the performance of the natural Law he hath impreſſed upon them. A devouring Raven is made by the Providence of God the Prophets Caterer in time of Famine*. God inſtructs a ravenous Bird in a leſſon of abſtinence for Elijah's ſafety, and makes it both a Cook and a Serving-man to the Prophet. The Whale that delights to play about the deepeſt part of the Ocean, approaches to the ſhore, and attends upon Jonah to tranſport him to the dry Land*. The fire* was ſlacked by God, that it ſhould not ſinge the leaſt hair of the three Childrens heads, but was let looſe to conſume the Officers of the Court. The mouths of the ravenous Lyons which had been kept with an empty ſtomach, were muzled by God, that they ſhould not prey upon Daniel in a whole nights ſpace. God taught them an Heroical temperance with ſo dainty a diſh at their mouths, and yet they tore the accuſers in a trice.

* 1 Kings 17. 4.

* Jonah 2. 10.

* Dan. 3.

4. To all ſupernatural and miraculous actions of the Creatures which are as ſo many new Creations. As when the Sun went backward in Hezekiah's time; when it ſtood ſtill in the valley of Ajalon, that Joſhuah might compleat his Victory on the Canaanites. The boyſterous waves ſtood on a heap like Walls to ſecure the Iſraelites paſſage; but returning to their natural motion, were the Ægyptians Sepulchre. When Creatures have ſtept out of their natural courſe, it could not be the act of the Creature, it being ſo much againſt and above their natures, but it muſt be by the order of ſome Superior Power.

5. To all fortuitous actions. What is caſual to us, is ordained by God; as effects ſtand related to the ſecond cauſe, they are many times contingent; but as they ſtand related to the firſt cauſe, they are acts of his Counſel, and directed by his Wiſdom. God never left ſecond cauſes to ſtraggle and operate in a Vagabond way; tho the effect ſeem to us to be a looſe act of the Creature, yet it is directed by a Superior cauſe to a higher end than we can preſently imagine. The whole diſpoſing of the lot which is caſt into the lap, is from the Lord*. A Souldier ſhoots an arrow at random, and God guides it to be the Executioner of Ahab for his Sin*; which Death was foretold by Micaiah, v. 17, 28. God gives us a certain Rule to judge of ſuch contingencies, Exod. 21. 13. And if a man lye not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; A man accidentally kills another, but it is done by a ſecret commiſſion from God. [God delivered him into his hands.] Providence is the great Clock, keeping time and order, not only hourly, but inſtantly to its own honour. *

6. To all voluntary actions.

1. To good actions. Not by compelling, but ſweetly inclining, determining the Will, ſo that it doth that willingly, which by an unknown and unſeen neceſſi-

ty

ty cannot be omitted. It conſtrains not a man to good againſt his will, but powerfully moves the will to do that by conſent, which God hath determined ſhall be done. The way of man is not in himſelf; the motion is mans, the action is mans, but the direction of his ſteps is from God. Jer. 10. 23. 'Tis not in man that walketh, to direct his ſteps.

2. To evil actions.

1. In permitting them to be done. Idolatries and follies of the Heathen were permitted by God. He checked them not in their courſe, but laid the reins upon there necks, and ſuffered them to run what race they pleaſed, Acts 14. 16. Who in times paſt ſuffered all nations to walk in their own wayes. Not the moſt execrable villany that ever was committed in the world, could have been done without his permiſſion. Sin is not amabile propter ſe, and therefore the permiſſion of it is not deſirable in it ſelf, but the permiſſion of it is only deſirable, and honeſtatur ex fine. God is good and wiſe and righteous in all his acts: ſo likewiſe in this act of permitting ſin: and therefore he wills it out of ſome good and righteous end, which belongs to the manifeſtation of his glory, which is that he intends in all the acts of his will; of which this is one. Wicked men are ſaid to be a ſtaff in Gods hand; as a man manages a ſtaff which is in his own power, ſo doth God manage wicked men for his own holy purpoſes, and they can go no further than God gives them licence.

2. In ordering them. God governs them by his own unſearchable Wiſdom and Goodneſs, and directs them to the beſt and holieſt ends. Contrary to the natures of the ſins, and the intentions of the ſinner. Joſeph's Brothers ſold him to gratifie their revenge, and God ordered it for their preſervation in a time of famine. Pharaoh's hardneſs is ordered by God for his own glory, and that Kings deſtruction: God decrees the delivering up Chriſt to Death, and Herod, Pilate, the Phariſees, and common rout of People in ſatisfying their own paſſion, do but execute what God had before ordained. Act. 4. 28. for to do whatſoever thy hand and thy Counſel determined before to be done. Judas his Covetouſneſs, and the Devils malice, are ordered by God to execute his decree for the redemption of the World. Titus the Emperour, his ambition led him to Jeruſalem, but Gods end is the fulfilling of his threatnings, and the taking revenge upon the Jews for their murdering of Chriſt. The aim of the Phyſician is the Patients health, when the intent of the Leeches is only to ſuck the blood. God hath holy ends in permitting ſin, while man hath unworthy ends in committing it. The rain which makes the Earth fruitful is exhaled out of the Salt-waters, which would of themſelves ſpoil the ground and make it unfruitful. The deceiver and the deceived are his, Job 12. 16. Both the action of the Devil the Seducer, and of wicked men the ſeduced, are reſtrained by God within due bounds, in ſubſerviency to his righteous will. [For with him is ſtrength and wiſdom.]

2. As Providence is univerſal, ſo it is myſterious. Who can trace the motions of Gods eyes in their race? He makes the *Clouds his Chariot in his motions about the Earth, and his throne is in the dark. He walks upon the wings of the wind, His providential ſpeed makes it too quick for our underſtanding. His wayes are myſterious, and put the reaſon and wiſdom of men to a ſtand. The cleareſt ſighted Servants of God do not ſee the bottom of his works, the motion of Gods eyes is too quick for ours. Second Propoſition. Pſal.* 104. 3.

John Baptiſt is ſo aſtoniſht at the ſtrange condeſcention of his Saviour to be baptiſed of him, that he forbids it*; Man is a weak Creature, and cannot trace or ſet out the wiſdom of God. * Mat. 3.

But this myſteriouſneſs and darkneſs of Providence adds a luſtre to it. As ſtones ſet in Ebony, though the grounds be dark, make the beauty and ſparkling the clearer.

1. His wayes are above humane methods. Dark Providences are often the groundwork of ſome excellent piece he is about to diſcover to the world. His methods are like a plaited Picture, which on the one ſide repreſents a Negro, on the other a Beauty. He lets Sarahs womb be dead, and then brings out the root of a numerous progeny. He makes Jacob a Cripple, and then a Prince to prevail with God; he gives him a wound, and then a bleſſing. He ſends not the Goſpel till reason was nonpluſt, and that the world in that higheſt wiſdom it had at that that time attained unto, was not able to arrive to the knowledge of God. 1 Cor. 1. 21. After that the World by Wiſdom knew not God, it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe.

2. His ends are of a higher ſtrain than the aims of men. Who would have thought that the forces Cyrus raiſed againſt Babylon to ſatisfie his own ambition, ſhould be a means to deliver the Iſraelites, and reſtore the Worſhip of God in the Temple? God had this end, which Iſaiah prophecyed of, and Cyrus never dreamt of, Iſa. 82 ·†1 That ſaith of Cyrus, thou art my Shepherd, and ſhalt perform all my pleaſure, even ſayin 'gthat Jeruſalem ſhall be built, &c. * And this a long time before Cyrus was born: Pharaoh ſent Iſrael a way in the very night, at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, the time perfixt by God; he could not keep them longer becauſe Gods promiſe, he would not becauſe of Gods Plagues. God aims at the glorifying his truth; in keeping touch with his word. Pharaoh deſigns not the accompliſhing Gods will, but his deliverance from Gods judgements.

There is an obſervable conſideration to this purpoſe, how Gods ends are far different from mans. Luke 2. 1, 4. In the taxing the whole World by Auguſtus. Auguſtus out of pride to ſee what a numerous people he was Prince of, would tax the whole world: Some tell us he had appointed the enrolling the whole Empire Twenty Seven years before the Birth of our Saviour, and had proclaimed it at Tarracon in Spain: But ſoon after this proclamation, Auguſtus found a breaking out of ſome ſtirrs, and thereupon deferred his reſolution to ſome other fit time, which was the very time of the birth of Chriſt. See now Gods wiſe diſpoſal of things, in changing Auguſtus's reſolution, and deferring it till the Forty Fourth year of his Reign, when Chrſt was ready to come into the World! And this by giving occaſion, yea, neceſſitating Mary to come from Nazareth, where Joſeph and Mary dwelt, who perhaps being big with Child, without this neceſſity laid upon her by the Emperors edict, would not have ventured upon the Journey to Bethlehem: there ſhe falls in travel, that ſo Chriſt the ſeed of David being conceived in Nazareth ſhould be born at Bethlem, where Jeſſe lived, and David was born. How wiſely doth God order the ambition and pride of men to fulfil his own predictions, and to publiſh the truth of Chriſts birth of the ſeed of David, for the names of Joſeph and Mary were found in the Records of Rome in Tertullians time?

3. God hath ſeveral ends in the ſame action. Jacob is oppreſt with Famine, Pharaoh enricht with plenty, but Joſeph's impriſonment is in order to his Fathers relief, and Pharaohs wealth; his Miſtreſſes anger flings him into a Priſon. Joſeph is wronged, and hath Captivity for a reward of his chaſtity. God makes it a ſtep to his advancement, and by this way brings him from a Captive to be a favourite. What is Gods end? Not only to preſerve the Ægyptian Nation, but old Jacob and his Family. Was this all that God aimed at? No, He hath a further deſign, and lays the Foundation of ſomething to be acted in the future age. By this means Jacob is brought into Ægypt, leaves his poſterity there, makes way for that glory in the working of the future miracles for their deliverance, ſuch an action that the world ſhould continually ring of, and which ſhould be a type of the ſpiritual deliverance by Chriſt.

4. God has more remote ends than ſhort ſighted Souls are able to eſpy. God doth not eye the preſent advantage of himſelf and his Creature, but hath an eye to his own glory in all, yea, in the very laſt ages of the world. In ſmall things, there are often great deſigns laid by God, and myſteries in the leaſt of his acts. Iſaac was delivered from his Fathers Sword, when he was intentionally dead, to ſet forth to the World a type of Chriſts reſurrection, and a Ram is conducted thither by God, and entangled in the thickets, and appointed to ſacrifice, whereby God ſets forth a type of Chriſts death.* He uſeth the captivities of the People, to enlarge the bounds of the Goſpel.

* Halls Contempl. P. 796.

The wiſe men were guided by a Star to Chriſt as King of the Jews, and come to pay homage to him in his infancy; whence was the foundation of this remarkable event laid? Probably, in Balaams prophecy, Numb. 24. 17. I ſhall ſee him, but not now: I ſhall behold him, but not nigh. There ſhall come a ſtar out of Jacob, and a Scepter ſhall riſe out of Iſrael, &c.) tranſmitted by tradition to thoſe wiſe men, and perhaps renewed by Sibilla Chaldæa, and confirm'd in their minds by the Jews, whilſt in the Babyloniſh captivity they converſed with them. Thus God many ages before in this prophecy had an end in promoting the readier entertainment of Chriſt among this people, when he ſhould be born; what the Wiſe mens end was, the Scripture doth not acquaint us; but however, their gifts were a means to preſerve our Saviour, Joſeph and Mary, from the rage of a Tyrant, and affording them wherewithal to ſupport them in Ægypt, whither they were ordered by God to fly for ſecurity. So * God threatens by the Prophet the Noble-man for his ſcoffing unbelief, that though he ſhould ſee the plenty, that he ſhould not taſte of it. See how God doth order Second cauſes, naturally to bring about his own decree! The King gives this perſon charge of the gate; whilſt the People croud for proviſion to ſatisfie their hunger, they accompliſh the threatning which they had no intentions to do, and trod him to death. Now I come to ſhew, That there is a Providence,

* 2 King. 7. 1, 2, 17.

1. The wiſdom of God would not be ſo perſpicuous, were there not a providence in the World. 'Tis eminent in the Creation, but more illuſtrious in the Government of the Creatures. A muſician diſcovers more skill in the touching an inſtrument, and ordering the ſtrings, to ſound what notes he pleaſeth, than he doth in the firſt framing and making of it. * All Gods providences are but his touch of the ſtrings of this great inſtrument of the World. And all his works are excellent, becauſe they are the fruit of his wonderful counſel, and unſearchable wiſdom, which is moſt ſeen in his providence, as in reading the verſes before. His power is glorified in creating and upholding this Fabrick: How ſhall his wiſdom be glorified but in his government of it? Surely God will be no leſs intent upon the honour of his wiſdom, than upon that of his power. For if any Attribute may be ſaid to excel another, it is his wiſdom and holineſs, becauſe thoſe are perfections which God hath ſtampt upon the nobler part of his Creation. Inferiour Creatures have more power and ſtrength than man, but Wiſdom is the perfection of a rational Creature. Now it is Gods Wiſdom to direct all things to their proper end, as well as to appoint them their ends, which direction muſt be by a particular providence, eſpecially in thoſe things which know not their end, and have no reaſon to guide them; We know in the World it is not a part of Wiſdom to leave things to chance, but to ſtate our ends, and lay a plat-form of thoſe means which direct to an attaining of them. And Wiſdom is moſt ſeen in drawing all things together, and making them ſubſervient to the end he hath fixed to himſelf; and therefore one of the great things that ſhall be admired at laſt, next to the great work of redemption, will be the harmony and conſent of thoſe things which ſeemed contrary, how they did all conſpire for the bringing about that end which God aimed at.

* Iſa. 28. 29. This alſo come's from the Lord of Hoſts, which is wonderful in Counſel, and excellent in working.

2. The means whereby God acts, diſcover a providence, He acts. Secondly.

1. By ſmall means. The conſiderable actions in the World have uſually very ſmall beginnings. As of a few letters, how many Thouſand words are made? of Ten figures, how many Thouſand Numbers? And a point is the beginning of all Geometry. A little ſtone flung into a pond, makes a little circle, then a greater, till it inlargeth it ſelf to both the ſides. So from ſmall beginnings, God doth cauſe an efflux through the whole World.

1. He uſeth ſmall means in his ordinary works. The common works of nature ſpring from ſmall beginnings. Great Plants are formed from ſmall ſeeds. The Clouds which water the great Garden of the World, are but a Collection of Vapours. The nobleſt operations of the Soul are wrought in an Organ, viz. the Brain, compoſed of coagulated Phlegm. Who would imagine that Saul in ſeeking his Fathers Aſſes, ſhould find a Kingdom?

2. In his extraordinary works he uſeth ſmall means. Eliſha that waited upon Elijah, and poured water upon his hands, ſhall do greater miracles then his Maſter. And the Apoſtles ſhall do greater works than Chriſt *; that the world may know that God is not tyed to any means that men count excellent; that all Creatures are his, and act not of themſelves, but by his Spirit and power.

* John. 14. 12.

In his extraordinary works of Juſtice. He makes a Rod in the hand of Moſes to confound the skill of the Ægyptian Magicians: He commiſſioned Frogs and Flyes to countercheck a powerful and mighty people; When Benhadad was ſo proud as to ſay, the duſt of Samaria ſhould not ſuffice for handfuls for his Army, God ſcattered his army by the Lacquies of the Princes* a bout two hundred thirty two v. 15. The little ſling in the hand of David a youth, guided by Gods eye and hand, is a match fit enough for a blaſphemous Gyant, and defeats the ſtrength of a Weavers beam.

In his extraordinary works of mercy.

1. In the deliverance of a people or perſon. A dream was the occaſion of Joſephs greatneſs, and Joſephs preſervation. He uſed the Cacklings of Geeſe to ſave the Roman Capitol from a ſurprize by the Gauls. He picks out Gideon to be a General, who was leaſt in his Fathers eſteem*; and what did his army conſiſt of, but few, and thoſe fearful*; thoſe that took water with their hands, (which as Joſephus ſaith, is a natural ſign of fear) did God chooſe out to overthrow the Midianites who had over-ſpread the Land as Graſhoppers, to ſhew that he can make the moſt fearful men to be ſufficient inſtruments againſt the greateſt powers, when the concernments of his Church and People lye at ſtake.

* Judg. 6. 15.
* Judg. 7. 6, 7.

God ſo delights in thus baffling the pride of men, that Aſa uſes it as an argument to move God to deliver him in the ſtrait he was in, when Zerah the Æthiopian came againſt him with a great multitude, when he was but a ſmall point and center in the midſt of a wide circumference*. Hereby God ſets off his own power, and evidenceth his ſuperintendent care of his People. It was more ſignally the arm of God for Moſes to confound Pharaoh with his Lice and Frogs, than if he had beaten him in a plain field with his Six Hundred Thouſand Iſraelites.

* 2 Chron. 41. 11. Lord, it is nothing with thee to help with many or with few.

2. In the Salvation of the ſoul. Our Saviour himſelf, though God, the great redeemer of the World, was ſo mean in the eyes of the World, that he calls himſelf a worm, and *no man. He picks out many times the moſt unlikely perſons to accompliſh the greateſt purpoſes for mens Souls. He lodgeth the Treaſures of Wiſdom in Veſſels of Earth; He choſe not the Cedars of Lebanon, but the Shrubs of the valley; not the learned Phariſees of Jeruſalem, but the poor men of Galilee; out of the mouths of Babes and Sucklings, he ordains praiſe to himſelf.

* Pſal. 22. 6.

The Apoſtles breeding was not capable of ennobling their minds, and fitting them for ſuch great actions as Chriſt employed them in. But after he had new-moulded and enflamed their Spirits, he made them of Fiſhermen, greater conquerors of the World, than the moſt magnified Grandees could pretend to.

Thus Salvation is wrought by a crucified Chriſt; and that God who made the world by wiſdom, would ſave it by the fooliſhneſs of preaching. And make Paul, the leaſt of the Apoſtles as he terms himſelf, more ſucceſful than thoſe who had been inſtructed at the feet of Chriſt*.

* 2 Cor. 15. 9. 10.

2. By contrary means. God by his Providence makes contrary things contribute to his glory, as contrary Colours in a picture do to the beauty of the piece. Nature is Gods inſtrument to do whatſoever he pleaſes; and therefore nothing ſo contrary, but he may bring to his own ends. As in ſome Engines you ſhall ſee wheels have contrary motions, and yet all in order to one and the ſame end. God cured thoſe by a Brazen Serpent, which were ſtung by the fiery ones; whereas Braſs is naturally hurtful to thoſe that are bit by Serpents*.

* Grotius Mat. 20. 16. Æs naturaliter nocet τοῖς ὀφιοδήκτοις.

1. Afflictions. Joſeph is ſold for a ſlave, and God ſends him as a Harbinger; his Brothers ſold him to deſtroy him, and God ſends him to ſave them. Pauls Bonds in the opinion of ſome might have ſtifled the Goſpel; but he tells us, that they had fallen out to the furtherance of the Goſpel, Phil. 1. 12.

* Hall contempl. book 3. p. 806, 807.

2. *Sins. God doth often effect his juſt Will by our weakneſs; neither thereby juſtifying our infirmities, nor blemiſhing his own action: Jacob gets the bleſſing by unlawful means, telling no leſs than two lies to attain it; [I am Eſau, and this is veniſon] But hereby God brings about the performance of his promiſe, which Iſaac's natural affection to Eſau would have hindred Jacob of.

The breach of the firſt Covenant was an occaſion of introducing a better. Mans ſinning away his firſt ſtock, was an occaſion to God to enrich him with a ſurer. The loſs of his original righteouſneſs made way for a clearer and more durable. The folly of man made way for the evidence of Gods wiſdom; and the ſin of man for the manifeſtation of his grace; and by the wiſe diſpoſal of God, opens a way for for the honour of thoſe attributes, which would not elſe have been experimentally known by the Sons of men.

3. Caſual means. The Viper which leapt upon Pauls hand out of the bundle of ſticks, was a caſual act, but deſigned by the providence of God for the propagation of the Goſpel. Pharaoh's Daughter comes caſually to waſh her ſelf in the river, but indeed conducted by the ſecret influence of God upon her, to reſcue Moſes, expoſed to a forlorn condition, and breed him up in the Ægyptian learning, that he might be the fitter to be his kindreds deliverer. Saul had been hunting David, and at laſt had lodged him in a place whence he could not well eſcape, and being ready to ſeize upon him in that very inſtant of time, a Poſt comes to Saul, and brings the news that the Philiſtines had invaded the Land, which cut out other work for him, and David for that time eſcapes*. * 1 Sam. 23. 26, 27, 28.

3. Reaſon. Such actions and events of things are in the world, which cannot rationally be aſcribed to any other cauſe than a ſupreme providence. Thirdly. Tis ſo in common things. Men have the ſame parts, the ſame outward advantages, the ſame induſtry, and yet proſper not alike. One labours much, and gets little; another uſes not altogether ſuch endeavours, and hath riches flowing in upon him. Men lay their projects deep, and queſtion not the accompliſhment of them, and are diſappointed by ſome ſtrange and unforeſeen accident. And ſometimes men attain what they deſire in a different way, and many times contrary to the Method they had projected. This is evidenced,

1. By the reſtraints upon the paſſions of men: the waves of the Sea, and the tumults of the People are much of the ſame impetuous natures, and are quelled by the ſame power. * Tumults of the People could no more be ſtilled by the force of a man, than the Waves of the Sea by a puff of breath. How ſtrangely did God qualify the hearts of the Ægyptians willingly to ſubmit to the ſale of their Land, when they might have riſen in a tumult, broke open the Granaries, and ſupplied their wants*. Indeed, if the World were left to the conduct of chance and fortune, what work would the ſavage luſts and paſſions of men make among us? How is it poſſible that any but an Almighty power can temper ſo many jarring Principles, and rank ſo many quarrelſom and trubulent Spirits in a due order? If thoſe bruitiſh paſſions which boyl in the hearts of men, were let looſe by that infinite power that bridles them, how ſoon would the World be run headlong into unconceivable confuſions, and be rent in pieces by its own diſorders? * Pſal. 65. 7. which ſtilleth the noiſe of the Sea, and the tumult of the People. * Gen. 47. 19, 21.

2. By the ſudden changes which are made upon the Spirits of men for the preſervation of others. God takes off the Spirit of ſome as he did the wheels from the Egyptian Chariots, in the very act of their rage. Paul was ſtruck down, and changed while he was yet breathing out threatnings, &c. God ſees all the workings of mens hearts, all thoſe cruel intentions in Eſau againſt his Brother Jacob; but God on a ſudden turns away that torrent of hatred, and diſpoſeth Eſau for a friendly meeting*. And he who had before an exaſperated malice by reaſon of the loſs of his birth-right and bleſſing, was in a moment a changed man. Thus was Sauls heart changed towards David, and from a Perſecutor, turns a juſtifier of him, confeſſeth Davids innocence, and his own guilt, 1 Sam. 24. 17, 18. Thou art more righteous than I, for thou haſt rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil, &c. What reaſon can be rendred for ſo ſudden a change in Saul's revengeful Spirit, which had all the force of intereſt to ſupport it, and conſidered by him at that very time? For verſ. 24. he takes ſpecial notice that his Family ſhould be diſinherited, and David be his Succeſſor in the Throne. How ſuddenly did God turn the Edge of the Sword, and the heart of an Enemy from Jehoſaphat. 2 Chron. 18. 31. Jehoſaphat cried out, and the Lord helped him, and God moved them to depart from him. The holy Ghoſt emphatically aſcribes it to Gods motion of their wills, by twice expreſſing it: But ſtranger is the preſervation of the Jews from Hamans bloody deſigns, after the decree was gone out againſt them. Mordecai the Jew is made Ahaſuerus's Favourite by a ſtrange wheeling of Providence: Firſt, The Kings Eyes are held waking, and he is inclined to paſs away the ſolitarineſs of the night with a Book, rather then a game, or ſome other Court paſt-time; no book did he fix on but the Records of that Empire, no place in that voluminous book, but the Chronicle of Mordecai's ſervice * in the diſcovery of a treaſon againſt * Gen. 33. 4 againſt the Kings life; he doth not careleſly paſs it over, but requires what recompence had been beſtowed on Mordecai for ſo conſiderable a ſervice, and this juſt before Mordecai ſhould have been deſtroyed; had Ahaſuerus ſlept, Mordecai and all his Countrey-men had been ſacrificed notwithſtanding all his Loyalty. Could this be a caſt of blind chance which had ſuch a concatenation of Evidences in it for a ſuperior power?

3. In cauſing Enemies to do things for others which are contrary to all rules of policy. 'Tis wonderful, that the Jews, a People known to be of a ſtubborn nature, and tenacious of their laws wherein they differed from all the nations, ſhould in the worſt of their captivities be ſo often befriended by their Conquerors, not only to rebuild their City, and reedify their Temple, but at the charge of their Conquerors too. The very Enemies that had captived the Jews, though they knew them to be a People apt to rebel: That the People whoſe Temple they helped to build, would keep up a diſtinct worſhip and difference in Religion, which is uſually attended with the greateſt animoſities. And when they knew it to be ſo ſtrong in ſcituation, as to be a Fort as well as a place of Worſhip. That for this, their Enemies ſhould furniſh them with materials, when they were not in a condition to procure any for themſelves, and give them money out of the Publick Exchequer, and timber out of the Kings Foreſt, as we read*. And all this they lookt upon as the hand of God. Ezra 6. 22. [The Lord had turned the heart of the King of Aſſyria unto them, to ſtrengthen their hands in the work of the houſe of God. And the Heathen Artaxerxes takes notice of it. Cicero tells us, that in his time Gold was carried out of Italy for the ornament of the Temple. They had their rites in religion preſerved intire under the Roman Government, though more different from the Roman cuſtoms than any Nation ſubdued by them. Dion, and Seneca, and others obſerve, that whereever they were tranſplanted, they proſper'd and gave Laws to the victors. And this was ſo generally acknowledged, that Hamans Cabinet-counſel (who were ſurely none of the meaneſt States-men) gave him no hopes of ſucceſs, when he appeared againſt Mordecai, becauſe he was of the race of the *Jews; ſo much did God own them by his gracious Providence: They were alſo ſo intire in all their Captivities before their crucifying of our Lord and Saviour, that they count their Genealogies.

* Ezra 1. 1, 2, 4, 7. Ezra 4. 12, 15, 19. Ezra 6. 4, 5, 8, 9, 11. Nehem. 2. 8.

4. In infatuating the Counſels of men. God ſets a ſtamp of folly upon the Wiſdom of men, Iſa. 44. 25. That turns the wiſe men backward, and makes their knowledge fooliſhneſs. And makes their Counſels as Chaff and Stubble. Iſa. 33. 11. [ye ſhall conceive chaff, and ſhall bring forth ſtubble]. Herod was a crafty perſon, inſomuch that Chriſt calls him Fox. How fooliſh was he in managing his project of deſtroying Chriſt, his ſuppoſed competitor in the Kingdom, when the wiſe men came to Jeruſalem, and brought the news of the birth of a King of the Jews? He calls a Synod of the ableſt men among the Jews. The reſult of it is to manifeſt the truth of Gods perdiction in the place of our Saviours birth, and to direct the wiſe men in their way to him. Herod had no reſolutions, but bloody, concerning Chriſt*. God blinds his mind in the midſt of all his craft, that he ſees not thoſe rational waies, which he might make uſe of for the deſtruction of that which he feared; he ſends thoſe wiſe men, meer ſtrangers, to him, and intruſts them with ſo great a concern; he goes not himſelf, nor ſends any of his guard with them to cut him off immediately upon the diſcovery, but leaves the whole conduct of the buſineſs to thoſe he had no acquaintance with, and of whoſe faithfulneſs he could have no aſſurance. God croſſes the intentions of men. Joab ſlew Amaſa, becauſe he thought him his rival in Davids favour, and then imagined he had rid his hands of all that could ſtand in his way; yet God raiſed up Benajah, who drew Joab from the horns of the Altar, and cut him in pieces at Solomons comand. God doth ſo order it, many times, that when the moſt rational Counſel is given to men, they have not hearts to follow it. Achitophel gave as ſutable Counſel for Abſaloms deſign, as the beſt Stateſman in the World could give*; To ſurprize David while he was amuz'd at his Sons rebellion, and dejected with grief at ſo unnatural an action, and whilſt his forces had not yet made their Rendezvouz, and thoſe that were with him were tired in their march. Speed was beſt in attempts of this nature. David in all probability bility had been cut off, and the hearts of the People would have melted at the fall of their Soveraign. But Abſalom inclines rather to Huſhai's Counſel, which was not ſo proper for the buſineſs he had engaged in, v. the 7*th*, to v. 14. Now this was from God. For the Lord had appointed to defeat the good Counſel of Achitophel, to the intent that the Lord might bring evil upon Abſalom. So fooliſh were the Egyptians againſt reaſon, in entring into the Red Sea after the Iſraelites; for could they poſſibly think that that God who had by a ſtrong hand, and an Army of Prodigies brought Iſrael out of their Captivity, and conducted them thus far, and now by a miracle opened the Red Sea, and gave them paſſage through the bowels of it, ſhould give their Enemies the ſame ſecurity in purſuing them, and unravel all that web he had been ſo long a working?

5. In making the Counſels of men ſubſervient to the very ends they deſign againſt. God brings a Cloud upon mens underſtandings, and makes them the contrivers of their own ruin, wherein they intend their own ſafety, and gains honour to himſelf by outwitting the Creature. The Babel projectors fearing to be ſcattered abroad, would erect a power to prevent, and this proved the occaſion of diſperſing them over the World in ſuch a confuſion, that they could not underſtand one another *. God ordered Pharaohs policies to accompliſh the end againſt which they were directed; He is afraid Iſrael ſhould grow too mighty, and ſo wreſt the Kingdom out of his hands, and therefore he would oppreſs them to hinder their increaſe, which made them both ſtronger, and more numerous. [Exerciſe ſtrengthens men, and luxurie ſoftens the Spirit.] The Jews fear, if they ſuffered Chriſt to make a farther progreſs in his Doctrine and miracles, they ſhould loſe Cæſars favour, and expoſe their Country as a prey to a Roman Army; this cauſed their deſtruction by thoſe Enemies they thought by this means to prevent: God ordering it ſo, that a Roman Army was poured in upon them, which ſwept them into all corners of the Earth. Prieſts and Phariſees ſit cloſe together in Counſel, how to hinder mens believing in Chriſt, and the reſult of their conſultation was to put him to death, and no man then would believe in a dead perſon, not capable of working any miracles *, for the amuſing of the People, and by this means there were a greater number of believers on him, than in the time of his life, according to his own prediction, Joh. 12. 32. and I, if I be liſted up from the Earth, will draw all men unto me.

* Gen. 11. 4, 8.

* Joh. 11. 47, 48, 49, 50.

6. In making the fancies of men ſubſervient to their own ruine. God brings about ſtrange events by the meer imaginations and conceits of men, which are contrary to common and natural obſervation, and the ordinary courſe of rational conſequences *. The Army of the Moabites which had invaded Iſrael, thought the two Kings of Judah and Iſrael had turned their Swords againſt one another, becauſe the riſing Sun had coloured thoſe unexpected waters, and made them look red, which they took for the blood of their Enemies, and ſo diſorderly run without examination of the truth of their conceit; but inſtead of dividing the ſpoil, they left their lives upon the points of the Iſraelites ſwords. So the Syrian Army are ſcared with a panick fear, and ſcatter themſelves upon an empty ſound *. Thus a dream ſtruck a terror into the Midianites, and the noiſe of the broken pot-ſheards made them fear ſome treaſon in their Camp, and cauſed them to turn their ſwords into one anothers bowels, Judg. 7. 19, 22, The Lord ſet every mans ſword againſt his fellow.

Anſwer in ſeveral Propoſitions. Anſw.

1. 'Tis certain, God hath a hand about all the ſinful actions in the World. The ſelling Joſeph to the Iſhmaelites, was the act of his Brethren; the ſending him into Egypt, was the act of God *, Gen. 45. 8. It was not you that ſent me hither, but God. Where Joſeph aſcribes it more to God than to them. Their wicked intention was to be rid of him, that he might tell no more tales of them to his Father: Gods gracious intention was to advance him for his honour and their good; and to bring about this gracious purpoſe, he makes uſe of their ſinful practice.

* Pſa. 105. 17. He ſent a man before them, even Joſeph, who was ſold for a Servant.

practice. Gods end was righteous, when theirs was wicked. 'Tis ſaid, God moved David to number the People, 2 Sam. 24. 1. The anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he moved David againſt them to ſay, Go number Iſrael and Judah. Yet Satan is ſaid to provoke David to number the People, 1 Chron. 21. 1. And Satan ſtood up againſt Iſrael, and provoked David to number Iſrael. Here are two agents; But the text mentions Gods hand in it out of Juſtice to puniſh Iſrael; Satans end, no queſtion, was out of malice to deſtroy. Satan wills it as a ſin. God as a puniſhment. God, ſay ſome, permiſſive, Satan Efficaciter. In the moſt villanous and unrighteous action that ever was done, God is ſaid to have an influence on it. God is ſaid to deliver up Chriſt, Act. 2. 23. Him, being delivered by the determinate Counſel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and ſlain. Acts 4. 28. For to do whatſoever thy hand and thy Counſel determined before to be done. Not barely as an act of his preſcience, but his Counſel, and that determinate, i. e. ſtable and irreverſible. He makes a diſtinction between thoſe two acts. In God it was an act of Counſel, in them an act of wickedneſs [by wicked hands;] there was Gods Counſel about it, an actual tradition. Rom. 8. 32. He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all. All the Agents had ſeveral ends. God in that act aimed at the redemption of the world; Satan at the preventing it; Judas to ſatisfie his covetouſneſs; the Jews to preſerve themſelves from the Roman invaſion, and out of malice to him for ſo ſharply reproving them. God had a gracious principle of love to mankind, and acted for the Salvation of the World in it; the inſtruments had baſe principles and ends, and moved freely in obedience to them. So in the affliction of Job, both God and Satan had an hand in it. Job 1. 12. The Lord ſaid unto Satan, behold, all that he hath is in thy power, verſ. 11. Touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face; their ends were different, the one righteous for Tryal, the other malicious againſt God, that he might be curſed, againſt Job that he might be damned. Gods end was the brightning of his grace, and the Devils end was the ruin of his integrity, and diſpoiling him of Gods favour.

* Senguer. Metaph. lib. 2 cap. 15. Sect. 5.

2. In all Gods acts about ſin, there is no ſtain to Gods holineſs *. In ſecond cauſes, one and the ſame action proceeding from divers cauſes, in reſpect of one cauſe, may be ſinful; in reſpect of the other, righteous. As when two Judges condemn a guilty perſon, one condemns him out of love to juſtice, becauſe he is guilty; the other condemns him out of a private hatred and ſpleen: One reſpects him as a Malefactor only, the other as a private Enemy chiefly. Here is the ſame action with two concurring cauſes, one being wicked in it, the other righteous. Much more may we conceive it in the concurrence of the Creator, with the action of the Creature.

1. God moves every thing in his ordinary providence according to their particular natures. God moves every thing ordinarily according to the nature he finds it in. Had we ſtood in innocency, we had been moved according to that originally righteous nature; but ſince our Fall we are moved according to that nature introduced by us with the expulſion of the other. Our firſt corruption was our own act, not Gods work; we owe our Creation to God, our corruption to our ſelves. Now, ſince God will govern his Creature, I do not ſee how it can be otherwiſe, than according to the preſent nature of the Creature, unleſs God be pleaſed to alter that nature. God forces no man againſt his nature; he doth not force the will in converſion, but graciouſly and powerfully inclines it. He doth never force nor incline the will to ſin, but leaves it to the corrupt habits it hath ſettled in it ſelf. Pſal. 81. 12. So I gave them up to their own hearts luſts, and they walked in their own Counſels; Counſels of their own framing, not of Gods. He moves the will which is ſponte mala, according to its own nature and counſels. As a man flings ſeveral things out of his hand, which are of ſeveral figures, ſome ſpherical, tetragons, cylinders, conicks, ſome round, and ſome ſquare; though the motion be from the agent, yet the variety of their motions is from their own figure and frame; and if any will hold his hand upon a ball in its motion, regularly it will move according to his nature and figure; and a man by caſting a boul out of his hand, is the cauſe of the motion, but the bad biaſs is the cauſe of its its irregular motion. The power of action is from God, but the viciousnes of that action from our own nature. As when a Clock or Watch hath some fault in any of the wheels, the man that winds it up, or putting his hand upon the wheels moves them, he is the cause of the motion, but it is the flaw in it, or deficiency of something is the cause of its erroneous motion; that error was not from the person that made it, or the person that winds it up, and sets it on going, but from some other cause; yet till it be mended it will not go otherwise, so long as it is set upon motion. Our motion is from God. [Acts 17. 28. in him we move] but not the disorder of that motion. 'Tis the foulnes of a mans stomach at Sea is the cause of his sickness, and not the Pilots government of the ship.

2. God doth not infuse the lust, or excite it, tho he doth present the object about which the lust is exercised. God delivered up Christ to the Jews, he presented him to them: but never commanded them to crucifie him, nor infused that malice into them, nor quickned it; but he seeing such a frame, withdrew his restraining grace, and left them to the conduct of their own vitiated wills. All the corruption in the World ariseth from lust in us, not from the object which God in his providence presents to us. 2 Pet. 1. 4. the corruption that is in the World through lust. The Creature is from God, but the abuse of it from corruption. God created the grape, & filled the Vine with a sprightlines; but he doth never infuse a drunken frame into a man, or excite it. Providence presents us with the Wine, but the precept is to use it soberly. Can God be blamed, if that which is good in it self, be turned into Poyson by others? No more than the flower can be called a criminal, because the Spiders nature turns that into venome, which is sweet in it self. Man hath such a nature not from Creation, wherein God is positive; but from corruption, wherein God is permissive. Providence brings a man into such a condition of poverty, but it doth not encourage his stubbornes and impatience. There is no necessity upon thee from God to exercise thy sin under affliction, when others under the same exercise their graces. The Rod makes the Child smart, but it is its own stubbornes makes it curse. In short, though it be by Gods permission that we can do evil, yet it is not by his inspiration that we will to do evil; that is wholly from our selves.

3. God supports the faculties wherewith a man sinneth, and supports a man in that act wherein he sinneth, but concurs not to the sinfulnes of that act. No sin doth properly consist in the act it self, as an act, but in the deficiency of that act from the rule. No action wherein there is sin, but may be done as an action, though not as an irregular action. Killing a man is not in it self unlawful, for then no Magistrate should Execute a Malefactor for murdering another, and justice would cease in the World; man also must divest himself of all thoughts of preserving his Life against an invader; but to kill a man without just cause, without authority, without rule, contrary to rule, out of revenge, is unlawful. So that it is not the act, as an act, is the sin, but the swerving of that act from the rule, makes it a sinful act: So speaking as speaking, is not a sin, for it is a power and act God hath endued us with; but speaking irreverently and dishonourably of God, or falsly and slandrously of man, or any otherwise irregularly, therein the sin lyes. So that it is easie to conceive that an act and the viciousnes of it are separable. That act which is the same in kind with another, may be laudable, and the other base and vile in respect of its circumstances. The mind wherewith a man doth this or that act, and the irregularity of it, makes a man a criminal. There is a concurrence of God to the act wherein we sin, but the sinfulnes of that act is purely from the inherent corruption of the Creature. As the power and act of seeing is communicated to the eye by the Soul, but the seeing doubly or dimly, is from the vitiousnes of the Organ, the eye. God hath no manner of immediate efficiency in producing sin; as the Sun is not the efficient cause of darknes, though the darknes immediately succeeds the setting of the Sun, but it is the deficient cause. So God withdraws his grace, and leaves us to that lust which is in our wills. Act. 14. 16. Who in times past suffered all Nations to walk in their own wayes. He bestowed no grace upon them, but left them to themselves. As a man who lets a glass fall out of his hand is not the efficient cause that the glass breaks, but its own brittle nature; yet he is the deficient cause, because he withdraws his support from it. God is not obliged to give us grace, because we have made a total forfeiture of it He is not a Debtor to any man by way of merit, of any thing but puniſhment. He is indeed in ſome ſence a debtor to thoſe that are in Chriſt upon the account of Chriſts purchaſe and his own promiſe, but not by any merits of theirs.

4. Gods providence is converſant about ſin, as a puniſhment, yet in a very righteous manner. God did not will the firſt ſin of Adam as a puniſhment, becauſe there was no puniſhment due to him before he ſinned, but he willed the continuance of it as a puniſhment to the nature ſub ratione boni. This being a judicial act of God, is therefore righteouſly willed by him. Puniſhment is a moral good. 'Tis alſo a righteous thing to ſuit the puniſhment to the nature of the offence, and what can be more righteous than to puniſh a man by that wherein he offends? Hence God is ſaid to give up men to ſin. Rom. 2. 26, 27. for this cauſe God gave them up unto vile affections. And to ſend ſtrong deluſions that they may believe a lye. And the reaſon is rendred 2 Theſ. 2. 12. *that they all might be damned, who believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. What more righteous than to make thoſe vile affections, and that unrighteouſneſs their puniſhment, which they made their pleaſure, and to leave them to purſue their own ſinful inclinations, and make them (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks) Pſal. 5. 10. fall by their own Counſels? A Drunkards Beaſtlineſs is his puniſhment as well as his Sin. Thus God delivers up ſome to their own luſts as a puniſhment both to themſelves and others. As he hardened Pharaohs heart for the deſtruction both of himſelf and his People.

2 Theſ. 2. 11.

5. God by his providence draws glory to himſelf, and good out of ſin. 'Tis the higheſt excellency to draw good out of evil, and it is Gods right to manifeſt his excellency when he pleaſes, and to direct that to his honour, which is acted againſt his Law. The holineſs of God could never intend Sin as Sin. But the Wiſdom of God foreſeeing it, and decreeing to permit it, intended the making it ſubſervient to his own honour. He would not permit it but for ſome good, becauſe he is infinitely good, and could not by reaſon of that goodneſs, ſuffer that which is purely evil, if by his Wiſdom he could not raiſe good out of it: 'Tis purely evil as it is contrary to Law; It is good ratione finis as God orders it by his Providence; yet that goodneſs flows not from the nature of ſin, but from the wiſe diſpoſal of God.

As God at the Creation framed a beautiful world out of a Chaos, out of matter without form, and void. So by his infinite wiſdom he extracts honour to himſelf, out of the ſins of men. As ſin had diſhonoured him at its entrance in defacing his works, and depraving his Creature: So he would make uſe of the ſins of men in repairing his honour, and reſtoring the Creature.

'Tis not conceivable by us, what way there could be more congruous to the wiſdom and holineſs of God, as the ſtate of the World then ſtood, to bring about the death of Chriſt, which in his decree was neceſſary to the ſatisfaction of his juſtice, without ordering the evil of ſome mens hearts to ſerve his gracious purpoſe. If we could ſuppoſe that Chriſt could commit ſome capital crime for which he ſhould deſerve death, which was impoſſible by reaſon of the hypoſtatical union, the whole deſign of God for redemption had ſunk to the ground. Therefore God doth reſtrain or let out the fury of mens paſſions, and the corrupt habits of their wills to ſuch a degree as ſhould anſwer directly to the full point of his moſt gracious will, and no further. He lets out their malice ſo far as was conducing to the grand deſign of his death, and reſtrains it from every thing that might impair the truth of any prediction, as in the parting his garments, or breaking his bones. If God hath put him to death by ſome thunder or otherwiſe, and after raiſed him, how could the voluntarineſs of Chriſt appear, which was neceſſary to make him a perfect oblation? How would his innocency have appeared? The ſtrangeneſs of the judgment would have made all men believe him ſome great and notorious ſinner. How then could the Goſpel have been propagated? Who would have entertained the Doctrine of one, whoſe innocency could not be cleared? If it be ſaid, God might raiſe him again, what evidences would have been had that he had been really dead? But as the caſe was, his Enemies confeſs him dead really, and many Witneſſes there were of his reſurrection.

1. God orders the ſins of men to the glory of his grace. As a foil ſerves to make the luſtre of a Diamond more conſpicuous; ſo doth God make uſe of the deformities of men to make his own grace more illuſtrious, and convey it with a more more pleasing relish to them. Never doth grace appear more amiable, never is God entertained with so high admirations, as by those who of the worst of sinners are made the choicest of Saints; Paul oftentakes occasion from the greatness of his sin, to admire the unsearchable riches of that grace which pardoned him.

2. God orders them to bring forth temporal mercies. In Providence there are two things considerable. First, Mans Will. 2. Gods purpose. What mans will intends as a harm in sin, God in his secret purpose orders to some eminent advantage. In the selling of Joseph, his Brothers intend the execution of their revenge; And God orders it for the advancement of himself, and the preservation of his unrighteous Enemies, who might otherwise have starved. His Brothers sent him to frustrate his dream, and God to fulfil it. Our reformation and return from under the yoke of Antichrist, was by the wise disposal of God occasioned by the three great Idols of the World, the lust of the eye, the lust of the Flesh, and the pride of life; lust, covetousness and ambition, three vices notoriously eminent in Henry the Eighth, the first instrument in that work. What he did for the satisfaction of his Lust is ordered by God for the glory of his mercy to us. And though the Papists upon that account reflect upon our Reformation, they may as well reflect npon the glorious work of redemption, because it was in the wisdom of God brought about by Judas his covetousness, and the Jews malice.

3. God orders them for the glory of his justice upon others. Nathan had threatned David, that one in his house should lye with his Wives in the sight of the Sun *. Achitophel adviseth Absalom to do so, not with any design to fulfil Gods threatning, but secure his own stake, by making the quarrel between the Father and the Son irreconcilable, because he might well fear that upon a peace between David and Absalom he might be offered up as a Sacrifice to Davids justice. God orders Achitophels counsel, and Absoloms sin to the glory of his justice in Davids punishment. *2 Sam. 12. 11.

The ambition of Vespasian and Titus was only to reduce Judea to the Roman Province after the revolt of it: But God orders hereby the execution of his righteous will in the punishment of the Jews for their rejecting Christ, and the accomplishment of Christs prediction. Luke 19. 43. For the days shall come, that thy enemies shall cast a trench about thee, &c. To conclude, if we deny God the government of sin in the course of his Providence, we must necessarily deny him the government of the World, because there is not an action of any mans in the World, which is under the government of God, but is either a sinful action, or an action mixt with sin. Luk. 19. 43.

God therefore in his government doth advance his power in the weakness, his wisdom in the follies, his holiness in the sins, his mercy in the unkindness, and his justice in the unrighteousness of men; yet God is not defiled with the impurities of men, but rather draws forth a glory to himself, as a rose doth a greater beauty and sweetness from the strong smell of the garlick set near it. Vid. Ovid Amor. lib. 3. Eleg. 3. v. 1. and v. 27. Boetius de Conso. lib. 1.

Second Question. If there be a providence, how comes those unequal distributions to happen in the World? How is it so bad with good men as if they were the greatest enemies to God; and so well with the wicked, as if they were the most affectionate Friends? Doth not vertue languish away in obscurity, whiles wickedness struts about the World? What is the reason that splendid vertue is oppresst by injustice, and notorious vices triumph in prosperity? It would make men believe that the world was governed rather by a blind and unrighteous, than by a wise, good and just Governor, when they see things in such disorder as if the Devil had, as he pretends, the whole power of the world delivered to him*: and God had left all care of it to his will. Quest. 2. * Luk. 4. 6.

Ans. This consideration has heightned the minds of many against a providence. It was the notion of many Heathens, when they saw many who had acted with much gallantry for their Countreys afflicted, they questioned whether there were a superintendent power over the world. This hath also been the stumbling-block of many taught in a higher School than that of nature, the Jews, Mal. 2. 17. Ye say every. See instances in Jackson. vol. 1. 8. chap. 4. Sect. 5.

every one that doth evil is good in the ſight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them, and where is the God of judgment? Yea, and the obſervation of the outward felicities of vice, and the oppreſſions of goodneſs, have cauſed fretting commotions in the hearts of Gods people, the Pſal. 73, is wholly deſigned to anſwer this caſe. Jeremy though fixed in the acknowledgment of Gods righteouſneſs, would debate the reaſon of it with God, Jer. 12. 1. Righteous art thou, oh Lord, yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: Wherefore doth the way of the wicked proſper? wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherouſly? thou haſt planted them, yea, they have taken root, they grow, yea, they bring forth fruit. He perceiving it a univerſal caſe [wherefore are all they happy, &c.] did not know how to reconcile it with the righteouſneſs of God. Nor Habbakkuk with the holineſs of God. Hab. 1. 14. [thou art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, wherefore holdeſt thou thy tongue, when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he? In point of Gods goodneſs too, Job expoſtulates the caſe with God, Job 10. 3. Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldeſt oppreſs, that thou ſhouldeſt deſpiſe the work of thy hands, and ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked? You ſee upon the account of Holineſs, Righteouſneſs, Goodneſs, the three great Attributes of God, it hath been queſtioned by good men, and upon the account of his Wiſdom by the wicked Jews.

Anſw. 1. 1. Anſwer in general, Is it not a high preſumption for ignorance to judg Gods proceedings? In the courſe of providence ſuch things are done that men could not imagine could be done without injuſtice; yet when the whole connexion of their end is unravelled, they appear highly beautiful, and diſcover a glorious wiſdom and righteouſneſs. If it had entered into the heart of man to think that God ſhould ſend his Son in a very low eſtate to die for ſinners, would it not have been judged an unjuſt and unreaſonable act, to deliver up his Son for rebels, the innocent for the criminals, to ſpare the offender and puniſh the obſerver of his Law? Yet when the deſign is revealed and acted, what an admirable connexion is there of juſtice, wiſdom, mercy, and holineſs? which men could not conceive of. It will be known to be ſo at laſt in Gods dealing with all his members. We are incompetent judges of the righteouſneſs and wiſdom of God, unleſs we were infinitely righteous and wiſe our ſelves; we muſt be Gods, or in another ſtate, before we can underſtand the reaſon of all Gods actions. We judge according to the law of ſenſe and ſelf, which are inferior to the rules whereby God works. Judge nothing then *before the time. It is not a time for us to paſs a judgment upon things. A falſe judgment is eaſily made, when neither the Counſels of mens hearts, nor the particular Laws of Gods actions are known to us. In general it is certain, God doth righteouſly order his providences; he may ſee ſome inward corruptions in good men to be demoliſhed by afflictions, and ſome good moral affections, ſome uſeful deſigns, or ſome ſervices he employs wicked men in to be rewarded in this life.

* 1 Cor. 4. 5.

Secondly. 2. God is Soveraign of the World. He is ſui juris, The Earth is his, and the fulneſs thereof, may he not do what he will with his own? * Who ſhall take upon them to controul God, and preſcribe Laws to him how to deal with his Creatures? Why ſhould a finite underſtanding preſcribe meaſures and methods to an infinite Majeſtie?

Thirdly: 3. God is wiſe and juſt, and knows how to diſtribute: If we queſtion his providence, we queſtion his wiſdom. Is it fit for us who are but of yeſterday, and know nothing, to ſay to an infinite Wiſdom, what doſt thou? and to direct the only wiſe God to a method of his actions? His own vviſdom vvill beſt direct him to the time vvhen to puniſh the inſolence of the vvicked, and relieve the miſeries of his people: We ſee the preſent diſpenſations, but are vve able to underſtand the internal motives? May there not be ſome ſins of righteous mens Parents that he vvill viſit upon their Children? ſome virtues of their Anceſtors, that he vvill revvard even in their vvicked poſterity? He may uſe vvicked men as inſtruments in ſome ſervice. 'Tis part of his diſtributive juſtice to revvard them. They aim at theſe things in their ſervice, and he gratifies them according to their deſires. Let not then his righteouſneſs be an argument againſt his providence; 'tis righteous vvith God not to be in arrears vvith them. Sometimes God gives them not to them as revvards of any moral virtue, but puts power into their hands, that they may be instruments of his justice upon some offenders against him, Isa. 10. 5. The staff in the Assyrians hand was Gods indignation.

4. There is a necessity for some seeming inequality at least in order to the good government of the world. Can all in any community of men be of an equal height? A house hath not beams and rafters of an equal bigness, some are greater, and some less. The world is Gods Family. 'Tis here as in a family, all cannot have the same office, but they are divided according to the capacities of some persons, and the necessities of others: Providence would not be so apparent in the beauty of the world, if all men were alike in their stations. VVhere would the beauty of the body be, if all the members had one office, and one immediate end? Man would cease to be man, if every member had not some distinct work, and a universal agreement in the common profit of the Body. All mankind is but one great body constituted of several members, which have distinct offices, but all ordered to the good of the whole; the Apostle argues this excellently in a parallel case of the diversities of gifts in the Church, 1 Cor. 12. 19. If all were one member, where were the body? ver. 23. those members of the body which we think to be less honourable, upon those we bestow more abundant honour, ver. 24. God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lackt. VVhat harmony could there be, if all the voices and sounds were exactly the same in a consort? VVho can be delighted with a Picture that hath no shadows? The afflictions of good men are a foyl to set off the beauty of Gods providence in the world. Fourthly.

5. Unequal dispensations do not argue carelessness. A Father may give one Child a gayer Coat than he gives another, yet he extends his fatherly care and tenderness over all: According to the several imployments he puts his Children upon, he is at greater expence, and yet loves one as well as another, and makes provision for all. As the Soul takes care of the lowest member, and communicates Spirits to every part for their motions: So though God place some in a higher, some in a lower condition, yet he takes care of all, *God divides to every man as he will. Every man hath a several share according to Gods pleasure, of a goodness in the world, as well as of gifts in the Church. Fifthly. * 1 Cor. 12. 11.

6. Yet upon due consideration the inequality will not appear so great as the complaint of it. If the wants of one, and the enjoyment of another were weighed in the ballance, the Scales might not appear so uneven; we see such a mans wealth, but do you understand his cares? A running sore may lye under a purple Robe. Health, the salt of blessing, as one calls it, is bestowed upon a Labourer, when many that wallow in abundance, have those torturing diseases which imbitter their pleasures. If some want those worldly ornaments which others have, may they not have more wisdom than those that injoy them, (the noblest perfection of a rational Creature)? Pro. 3. 13, 14. The merchandize of it is better than the Merchandize of Silver, and the gain thereof than fine Gold. Pro. 15. 16. better is a little with the fear of the Lord, than great treasure, and trouble therewith. As some are stript of wealth and power, so they are stript of ther incumbrances they bring with them. One hath that serenity and tranquility of mind, which the cares and fears of others will not suffer them to injoy, and a grain of contentment is better than many pounds of wealth. 'Tis not a desirable thing to be a great Prince, attended with as many cares and fears as he hath subjects in his Empire. He made a true estimate of his greatness, that said he would not stoop to take up a Crovvn if it lay at his feet. But more particularly to the parts of the case. Sixthly. * Pro. 15. 16.

1. Is it well with them who are tortured by their own lusts? VVhat peace can vvorldly things bestovv upon a Soul filled vvith impurity? in 2 Cor. 7. 1. Sin is called filthiness, can it be vvell vvith them that have nasty Souls? Is it vvell vvith them vvho are rakct by pride, stung vvith cares, gnavvn vvith envy, distracted by unsatiable desires, and torn in pieces by their ovvn fears? Can it be vvell vvith such vvho have a multitude of vipers in their breasts, sticking all their stings into them, though the Sun shine, and the shadovvs drop upon them? You are Spectators tators of their felicity, but do you underſtand their inward gripes? Pro. 14. 13. even in laughter the heart is ſorrowful. Can ſilken Curtains or purple Clothes confer a happineſs upon thoſe who have a mortal plague-ſore poyſoning their bodies, and are ready to expire? Sin is their plague, whatever is their happineſs*. Their inſolent luſts are a far greater miſery than the poſſeſſion of all the Kingdoms in the World can be a happineſs.

* 1 King. 8. 38. Sin is called the plague of the heart.

II. Is it well with them who have ſo great an account to make, and know not how to make it? Thoſe that enjoy much, are more in Gods debt, and therefore more accountable. The account of wicked men is the greater, beca uſe of their abundance; and their unfitneſs to make that account is the greater, becauſe of their abuſe. Would any reckon themſelves happy to be called upon to give an account of their Stewardſhip for Talents, and know not how to give a good account of one farthing? Luk. 16. 2. give an account of thy Stewardſhip.

III. Is it well with them who are the worſe for what they have? Is it a happineſs to command others, and be more ſlaves to the worſt of Creatures, than any can be to them? The wicked mans well-ſpread table ſometimes proves his ſnare, * Pſal. 69. 22. * and his deſtruction is bound up in his very proſperity: Pro. 1. 32. and the proſperity of fools ſhall deſtroy them. Proſperity falling upon an unregenerate heart, like the Sun and rain upon bad ground, draws forth nothing but weeds and vermin. Would you think it your happineſs to be Maſters of their concerns, and ſlaves to their pride? Is a ſtubbornneſs againſt God ſo deſirable a thing, which is ſtrengthened by thoſe things in the hands of the wicked?

IV. Is it well with them who in the midſt of their proſperity are reſerved for juſtice? Can that Traytor be accounted happy that is fed in priſon by the Prince with better diſhes than many a loyal ſubject hath at his table, but only to keep him alive for his Tryal, and a publick Example of juſtice? God raiſes ſome for greater falls: Miſerable was the felicity of Pharaoh, to be raiſed up by God for Exod.* 9. 16. a Subject to ſhew in him the power of his Wrath. *'Tis but a little time before they ſhall be cut down as graſs, and wither as the green herb. Pſal. 37. 2. None would value the condition of that Souldier who leaping into a River to ſave a Kings Crown, and putting it upon his own head, that he might be enabled to ſwim out with it, was rewarded for ſaving it, and executed for wearing it. God rewards wicked men for their ſervice, and puniſhes them for their inſolence.

Secondly. 2. Neither is it bad here with good men, if all be well conſidered. Others mens judgment of a good man is frivolous, they cannot rightly judge of his ſtate and concerns, but he can make a judgment of theirs. 1 Cor. 2. 15. a ſpiritual man judgeth all things, but he himſelf is judged of no man. No man can make a ſound judgment and eſtimate of a righteous mans ſtate in any condition, unleſs he hath had experience of the like in all the circumſtances, the inward comforts as well as the outward Croſſes. For,

I. Adverſity cannot be called abſolutely an evil, as proſperity cannot be called abſolutely a good. They are rather indifferent things, becauſe they may be uſed either for the honour or diſhonour of God. As they are uſed for his honour, they are good, and as uſed for his diſhonour they are evil. The only abſolutely bad thing in the world is ſin, which cannot be in its own nature, but a diſhonour to God. The only abſolutely good thing in the world is holineſs, and a likeneſs to God, which cannot be in its own nature, but for his glory. As for all other things, I knovv no true ſatisfaction can be in them, but as they are ſubſervient to Gods honour, and give us an advantage for imitating ſome one or other of his perfections. Croſſes in the Scripture are not excluded from thoſe things vve have a right to by Chriſt, vvhen they may conduce to our good, 1 Cor. 3. 22. Life and Death, things preſent, and things to come, are yours, and you are Chriſts. Since the Revelation of the Goſpel, I do not remember that any ſuch complaint againſt the Providence of God fell from any holy man in the nevv Teſtament; for our Saviour had given them another proſpect of thoſe things. The holy men in the Old Teſtament comforted themſelves againſt this objection by the end of the vvicked vvhich ſhould happen, and the rod ceaſe *. In the Nevv Teſtament vve are more comforted by the certain operation of croſſes to our good and ſpiritual advantage. Our Saviour did not promiſe vvealth and honour to his followers, nor did he think it worth his pains of coming and dying, to bestow such gifts upon his Children: He made Heaven their happiness, and the Earth their Hell; the Cross was their badge here, and the Crown their reward hereafter; they seemed not to be a purchase congruous to so great a price of Blood. VVas Gods Providence to Christ the more to be questioned because he was poor? Had he the less love to him because he was a man of sorrows, even while he was a God of glory? Such groundless conceits should never enter into Christians, who can never seriously take up Christs yoke without a proviso of afflictions, who can never be Gods Sons, without expecting his corrections.

2. God never leaves good men so bare, but he provides for their necessity, Psal. 84. 11. the Lord will give grace and glory, and no good thing will be withhold from them that walk uprightly. If any thing be good, an upright man may expect it from God's providence; if it be not good, he should not desire it: Howsoever grace, which is necessary for preparing thee for happiness, and glory, which is necessary for fixing thee in it, he will be sure to give, we have David's experience for it * in the whole course of his life.

* Psal 37. 5.

3. The little good men have, is better than the highest enjoyments of wicked men. Psal. 37. 16. a little that a righteous man hath, is better then the riches of many wicked, not better then many riches of the wicked, but better then the riches of many wicked, better then all the treasures of the whole Mass of the wicked world; others have them in a providential way, good men in a gracious way. Pro. 16. 8. better is a little with righteousness then great revenues without right, without a Covenant right. VVicked prosperity is like a shadow that glides away in a moment, whereas a righteous mans little is a part of Christ's purchase, and part of that inheritance which shall endure for ever, Psal. 37. 18. their inheritance shall be for ever, i. e. God regards the state of the righteous, whether good or evil, all that befals them. God doth all with a repect to his everlasting inheritance. No man hath worldly things without their wings. And though the righteous have worldly things with their wings, yet that love whereby they have them, hath no wings ever to fly away from them; how can those things be good to a man that can never tast them, nor God in them?

4. No righteous man would in his sober wits be willing to make an exchange of his smartest afflictions for a wicked mans prosperity, with all the circumstances attending it. It cannot therefore be bad with the righteous in the worst condition: VVould any man be ambitious of snares, that knows the deceit of them? Can any but a mad man exchange Medicines for poyson? Is it not more desirable to be upon a Dunghil with an intimate converse with God, then upon a Throne without it? They gain a world in prosperity, a righteous man gains his Soul by afflictions, and possesses it in patience; is the exchange of a valuable consideration? God strips good men of the enjoyment of the VVorld, that he may wean them from the love of it; keeps them from Idolatry by removing the fuel of it; sends afflictions that he may not lose them, nor they their Souls. VVould any man exchange a great goodness laid up for him that fears God, for a lesser goodness laid out upon them that are Enemies to him *?

VVho would exchange a few outward comforts with God's promise, inward comforts with assurance of Heaven, Godliness with contentment, a sweet and Spiritual life, Soveraignty over himself and lusts, though attended with sufferings, for the Government of the whole VVorld?

5. It is not ill with the righteous in afflictions, because they have high advantages by them. That cannot be absolutely evil, which conduceth to a greater good.

As, First, Sensible experiments of the tender providence of God over them. If the righteous had not afflictions in this life, God would lose the glory of his providence, and they the sweetness in a gracious deliverance from them in ways which makes the affliction the svveeter, as vvell as the mercy; they vvould lose the comfort of them in not having such sensible evidences of God's gracious care.

The svveetness of the promises made for times of trouble vvould never be tasted. Psal. 37. 19. They shall not be ashamed in the evil time; that is, they shall be mightily encouraged and supported. God's people do best understand God's strength, ſtrength, when they feel the ſmart of mens malice. 2 Tim. 4. 17. [the Lord ſtood with me and ſtrengthened me.] he had never felt ſo much of God's ſtrength, if he had not taſted much of mans wickedneſs in forſaking him, Pſal 37. 39. [he is their ſtrength,] when in times of trouble they experiment more of his care in preſerving them, and his ſtrength in ſupporting them, than at other times. Abundance of conſolations are manifeſted in abundance of ſufferings *. A greater ſence of joy and glory lights upon them in a ſtorm of perſecutions. Men ſee the ſufferings of the godly, but they do not behold that inward peace which compoſeth and delights their Souls, worth the vvhole Maſs of the Worlds goodneſs, and pleaſures of the unrighteous.

* 2 Cor. 1. 5. 1 Pet. 4. 13, 14.

2. Inward improvements. Opportunities to manifeſt more love to God, more dependance on him, the perfection of the Soul. 1 Tim. 5. 5. Now ſhe that is a Widow indeed, and deſolate, truſts in God, and continues in Supplications and Prayers night and day; there is a ground of more exerciſe of truſt in God, and ſupplication to him. The poor and deſolate have an advantage for the actual exerciſe of thoſe graces, which a proſperous condition wants: God changeth the metal by it: what was Lead and Iron, he makes come forth as Gold. Job 23. 10. when he hath tried me, I ſhall come forth as Gold. Croſſes and ſufferings which fit good men for ſpecial ſervice here, and eternal happineſs hereafter, can no more be ſaid to be evil, then the fire which refines the gold, and prepares it for a Prince's uſe. If there were not ſuch evils, what ground could you have to exerciſe patience? what Heroick acts of faith could you put forth without difficulties? how could you believe againſt hope, if you had not ſometimes ſomething to contradict your hopes? And if a good man ſhould have a confluence of that which the ignorant and pedantical world calls happineſs, he might undervalue the pleaſures of a better life, deface the beauty of his own Soul, and withdraw his love from the moſt gratifying, as well as the moſt glorious object, unto that which is not worth the leaſt grain of his affection.

3. Future glory. The great enquiry at the day of Chriſt's appearing, will be how good men bare their ſufferings, what improvements they had; and the greater their purity by them, the greater will be their praiſe and honour. 1 Pet. 1. 7. That the tryal of your faith [viz. by manifold Temptations] may be found to praiſe, and honour and glory, at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt. For a good improvement by them, they will have a Publick praiſe from God's mouth, and a Crown of Honour ſet upon their heads. Providence ſends even light afflictions as ſo many Artificers, to make the Crown more Maſſy and more bright, 2 Cor. 4. 17. [Works for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of Glory.] They are at work about a good man's Crown, while they make him ſmart. They prepare him for heaven, and make it more grateful to him when he comes to poſſeſs it. A Chriſtian carriage in them prepares for greater degrees of Glory. Every ſtroke doth but more beautifie the Crown.

6. Sufferings of good men for the Truth highly glorifies the Providence of God. This is a matter of glory and honour, 1 Pet. 4. 16. If any man ſuffer as a Chriſtian, let him not be aſhamed, but let him glorifie God on this behalf. They thereby bare a Teſtimony to the higheſt Act of Providence that God ever exerciſed, even the redemption of the world by the blood of his Son. And the Church which is the higheſt object of his Providence in the world, takes the deeper root, and ſprings up the higher; the foundation of it was laid in the blood of Chriſt, and the groweth of it is furthered by the blood of Martyrs. The carriage of the righteous in them, makes the Truth they profeſs more valued. It enhanceth the excellency of Religion, and manifeſts it to be more amiable for its beauty than for its dowry; ſince they ſee it deſirable by the ſufferers, not only without vvorldly enjoyments, but vvith the ſharpeſt miſeries. This conſideration hath vvrought upon many to embrace the Religion of the Sufferers. If it reaches as far as death, they are but diſpatched to their Fathers houſe, and the day of their death is the day of their Coronation; and vvhat evil is there in all this?

To conclude, this argument is ſtronger (upon the infallible righteouſneſs of God's nature) for a day of Reckoning after this life, than againſt Providence. 'Tis a more rational concluſion, That God will have a time to juſtifie the Righteouſneſs and Wiſdom of his Providential Government, and repair the honour of the righteous, oppreſſed by the injuſtice of the wicked. And indeeed, unleſs there be a retribution in another world, the queſtion is unanſwerable, and all the reaſon in the world knows not how to ſalve the Holineſs and Righteouſneſs of God in his Providential Diſpenſations in this life; ſince we ſee here Goodneſs unrewarded, and debaſed to the dunghill, Vice glorying in impunity, and ranting to the firmament. We cannot ſee how it can conſiſt with the nature of God's Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs and Holineſs, if there were not another life wherein God will manifeſt his Righteouſneſs in the puniſhing ſin, and rewarding goodneſs: For it is impoſſible that a God of Infinite juſtice ſhould leave ſin unpuniſhed, and Grace unrewarded here or hereafter. The Scripture gives us ſo full an account of a future ſtate, that may ſatisfie all Chriſtians in this buſineſs.

The wicked rich man is in his Purple, and Lazarus in his rags, yet Abraham's Boſom is prepared for the one, and an endleſs Hell for the other. Jeremy reſolves the caſe in his diſpute with God about it, Jer. 12. 3. Pull them out like ſheep to the ſlaughter, and prepare them for the day of ſlaughter. They are but fattening for the knife of Juſtice, and the day will come when they ſhall be conſum'd, like the fat of Lambs in the Sacrifice, which ſhall wholly evaporate into ſmoke, ſo the Pſalmiſt reſolves it in Pſal. 37. 20. a Pſalm written for the preſent caſe. God laughs at their ſecurity in a way of mockery, Pſal. 37. 13. The Lord ſhall laugh at him, for he ſees that his day is coming. God's day for the juſtification of his proceedings in the world, and the wicked man's day for his own deſtruction, wherein they ſhall all be deſtroyed together, Pſal. 37. 38. The whole maſs of them in one bundle. Who then will charge God with unequal diſtributions at that day, which is appointed for the clearing up of his righteouſneſs, which is here maskt in the world? who can be fond of the State of the wicked? Who would be fond of dead mans condition, becauſe he lies in State, whoſe Soul may be condemned, whilſt his body vvith a pompous ſolemnity is carried to the Grave, and both body and Soul joyned together at the reſurrection, adjudged to eternal miſery?

Qu. 2. What hath been ſaid in this, vvill alſo anſvver another Queſtion, Why God doth not immediately puniſh notorious offenders, ſince the beſt Governments in the vvorld are ſuch as call the violaters of the Lavv to a ſpeedy account, to keep up the honour of Juſtice? Thus the Epicures charge God vvith neglects of providenee, becauſe if he doth puniſh vvicked men, it is later than is fit and juſt, becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily, therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil. Eccleſiaſtes 8. 11. Delay of Juſtice is an encouragement to Sin.

Anſw. 1. This is an argument for Gods patience, none againſt his providence. ſhould he make ſuch quick vvork, vvhat vvould become of the vvorld? Could it have held out to this day? If God had inſtantly taken revenge upon thoſe that thus diſparage his providence, the frame of ſuch an objection had not been alive. No man is ſo perfectly good, but he might fall under the revenging ſtroke of his ſword, if he pleaſed to draw it. Suffer God to evidence his patience here, ſince after the winding up of the world, he will have no time to manifeſt it. God doth indeed ſometimes ſend the ſharp arrow of ſome judgment upon a notorious offender, to let him underſtand that he hath not forgotten how to govern; but he doth not alwayes do ſo, that his patience may be glorified in bearing with his rebellious Creature.

2. God is juſt in that wherein the queſtion ſuppoſeth him unjuſt; he ſuffers wicked men to continue to be the plagues of the places where they live, and the executioners of his Juſtice upon offenders againſt him. Pſal. 17. 13. The wicked are God's Sword. Jeremiah 47. 6. Thoſe that God would ſtir up againſt the Philiſtines, are called the Sword of the Lord, Iſa. 10. 5. Aſſur is ſaid to be the Rod of his anger; would it conſiſt with his wiſdom to drop the inſtruments out of his hand, as ſoon as he begins to uſe them? To caſt his Rods out of his hand as ſoon as he taks them up? The rules of juſtice are as much unknown to us, as the communications of his goodneſs to his people are unknown to the world.

3. Let me ask ſuch a one, whether he never injur'd another man, and whether he would not think it very ſevere, if not unjuſt, that the offended perſon ſhould preſently take revenge of him? If every man ſhould do the like, how ſoon would mankind be diſpatcht, and the World become a ſhambles, men running furiouſly to one anothers deſtruction for the injuries they have mutually received? Do we praiſe the lenity of parents to their Children, and diſpraiſe the mercy of God, becauſe he doth not preſently uſe his right? Is then forbearance of revenge accounted a virtue in a man, and ſhall it be an imperfection in God? With what reaſon can we thus blame the eminent patience of God, which we have reaſon to adore, and which every one of us are monuments of? The uſe is.

Uſe. 1. Of Information,

1. How unworthy and abſurd a thing is it to deny Providence? Some of the Heathens fancyed, that God walked his Circuit in Heaven, or ſat with folded arms there, taking no cognizance of what was done in the World; Some indeed upon ſome great emergencies have acknowledged the mercies and juſtice of God, which are the two arms of his providence. The Barbarians, his juſtice, when they ſaw a Viper leap upon Paul's hand, Act. 28. 4. they ſay among themſelves, no doubt this man is a murderer, whom though he hath eſcapt the ſea, yet vengeance ſuffers not to live. The Mariners in Jonah implored his mercy in their diſtreſs at Sea, yet they generally attributed affairs to blind chance, and worſhipped Fortune as a Deity: For this vain conceit, the Pſalmiſt calls the Atheiſt fool, Pſal. 14. 1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart, there is no God. Potiphar acknowledged it, he ſaw that the Lord was with Joſeph, and favoured his deſigns, Gen. 39. 3. And his Maſter ſaw that the Lord was with him, and that the Lord made all things that he did to proſper in his hand.

It will not be amiſs to conſider this, For the root of denial of providence is in the hearts of the beſt men, eſpecially under affliction. Aſah was a holy man, Pſal. 73. 13. ſaith he, Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency. He had taken much pains with his heart, and had been under much affliction. V. 14. All the day long have I been plagued and chaſtened every morning. And the conſideration of this, that he ſhould have ſo much affliction with ſo much holineſs, ſo ſtrangely puzled him, that he utters that dreadful Speech, as if he had a mind to caſt off all cares about the worſhip of God, and ſanctifying his heart, and repent of all that he had done in that buſineſs, as much as to ſay, had I been as very a villain as ſuch, or ſuch a man, I might have proſpered as well a they, but I was a fool to have any fear of God.

Therefore we will conſider,

1. The evil of denying Providence.

2. The grounds of the denial of it by the heathen, which we ſhall find in our own hearts.

3. The various wayes wherein men practically deny providence.

1. The evil of denying it.

Firſt.

1. It gives a liberty to all ſin. It gives an occaſion for an unbounded licentiouſneſs; for what may not be done, where there is no government? The Jews tell us, That the diſpute between Cain and Abel was this: Cain ſaid, becauſe his ſacrifice was not accepted, that there was no Judge, no reward of good works, or puniſhment of bad, which when Abel oppoſed, Cain ſlew him; they ground it upon the diſcourſe of God with Cain, v. 7. which had been about his providence and acceptation of men, if they did well, and puniſhment of men if they did ill; whence they gather, the diſcourſe, v. 8. Cain had with his brother, was about the ſame ſubject, for Cain talked with Abel, and upon that diſcourſe roſe up againſt him, and ſlew him. And his diſcourſe afterwards with God, v. 9. ſeems to favour it, Am I my Brothers keeper? Thou doſt ſay, thou art the Governour of the World, it is not my concern to look after him. Their conjecture is not improbable. If it were ſo, we ſee how early this opinion began in the World, and what was the horrid effect of it, the firſt ſin, the firſt murder that we read of after the Sin of Adam. And what confuſion would grow upon the entertainment of ſuch a notion.

Indeed the Scripture every where places ſin upon this root. Pſal. 10. 11. [God hath forgotten, he hides his face, he will never ſee it.] He hath turned his back upon the World. This was the ground of the oppreſſion of the poor by the wicked which he mentions, v. 9, 10. So Iſa. 26. 10. [The wicked will not learn righteouſneſs, he will deal unjuſtly; the reaſon is, he will not behold the Majeſty of the Lord; he will not regard God's government of the World, though his hand be liſted up to ſtrike. There is no ſin, but receives both its birth and nouriſhment from this bitter root: Let the notion of Providence be once thrown out, or the belief of it faint, how will ambition, Covetouſneſs, neglect of God, diſtruſt, impatience and all other bitter gourds grow up in a night? 'Tis from this Topick all iniquity will draw arguments to encourage it ſelf; for nothing doth ſo much diſcountenance thoſe riſing corruptions, and put them out of heart, as an actuated belief, that God takes care of humane affairs. Upon the want of this actuated knowledg, God charges all the ſin of Ephraim, Hoſea. 7. 2. They conſider * not in their hearts that I remember all their wickedneſs. As if God were blind and did not ſee, or ſtupid and did not concern himſelf, or of a very frail memory ſoon to forget.

* Pſal. 10. 11.

* Heb. they ſpeak not to their hearts.

2. It deſtroys all Religion. The firſt Foundation of all Religion is, firſt the Being, Secondly the Goodneſs of God in the Government of the World. Heb. 11. 6. he that comes to God, muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him. He is the object of Religion, as he is the Governour of the World. This denial would ſhut up Bibles and Temples, and bring irreligious diſorder into all Societies.

1. All Worſhip. He that hath not deſign to govern, is ſuppoſed to expect no homage; if he regards not his Creatures, he cares for no worſhip from them. How is it poſſible to perſuade men to regard him for God, who takes no care of them? Who will adore him, who regards no adoraton?

2. Prayer. To what purpoſe ſhould they beg his directions, implore his aſſiſtance in their calamities, if he had no regard at all to his Creatures? What favour can we expect from him who is regardleſs of diſpenſing any?

3. Praiſe. Who would make acknowledgments to one, from whom they never received any favour, and hath no mind to receive any acknowledgments from them, becauſe he takes no care of them? If the Deity have no relation to us, how can we have relation to him? To what purpoſe will it be either to call upon him, or praiſe him, which are the prime pieces of Religion, if he concern not himſelf with us?

4. Dependance, Truſt and Hope. What reaſon have we to commit our concerns to him, and to depend upon him for relief? Hence the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ. 2. 12. The Gentiles were without hope, and without God in the World. The reaſon they were without hope, was becauſe they were without God, they denied a ſettled Providence, and acknowledged a blind Chance, and therefore could have no ſound hope; ſo ſome underſtand it of denial of God's government. It might well give occaſion to people to utter Pharaoh's Speech, Exod. 5. 2. Who is the Lord that I ſhould obey his voice to let Iſrael go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Iſrael go. What is God that I ſhould ſerve him? I have no ſuch notion of a God that governs the World. The regardleſneſs of his Creature diſobligeth the Creature from any ſervice to him.

3. It is a high diſparagement of God. To believe an impotent, ignorant, negligent God, without care of his works, is as bad or worſe than to believe no God at all. The denial of his Providence is made equal with the denial of God. Pſal. 14. 1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God. He denied God, Elohim, which word notes Gods providence; Not, there is no Jehovah, which notes his eſſence; he denied not God, quoad Eſſentiam, but quoad Providentiam, whereupon the Pſalmiſt dubs the Atheiſt fool It ſtrips God of his judicial power. How ſhall he judge his Creatures, if he know not what they think, and regards not what they do? How eaſie will it be for him to be impoſed upon by the fair pretences and lying excuſes of men? 'Tis Diabolical. The Devil denies not God's right to govern, but he denies Gods actual government, for he ſaith, Luk. 4. 6. the power and glory of the World is delivered unto him, and to whomſoever ſaith he, I will, I give it. God had caſt off all care of all things, and made the Devil his Deputy. He that denies Providence, denies moſt of Gods attributes, he denies at leaſt the exerciſe of them; he denies his Omniſcience, which is the eye of Providence; Mercy and Juſtice, which are the arms of it; Power, which is the life and Motion of Providence; Wiſdom, which is the rudder of Providence, whereby it is ſteered; and Holineſs, which is the compaſs and rule of the motion of Providence.

4. It is clearly againſt natural light. Socrates an Heathen could ſay, Whoſoever denied providence, did Δαιμονιᾶν, was poſſeſſed with a Devil *. Should God create a man anew with a ſound judgment, and bring him into the World, when he ſhould ſee the harmony, multitude, vertues and operations of all Creatures, the ſtated times and ſeaſons; muſt he not needs confeſs that ſome inviſible, unconceivable wiſdom did both frame, and doth govern all the motions of it? And it is a greater crime in any of us to deny providence either in opnion or practice, than it was or could have been in Heathens; becauſe we have not only that natural reaſon which they had, ſufficient to convince us; but ſupernatural revelation in the Scripture wherein God hath declared thoſe methods of his Providence which reaſon could not arrive to. As to deny the Creation of his the World, is a greater crime in a man that knows the Scripture, than in a Heathen, becauſe that hath put it out of doubt. And the aſſerting of this, being the end of all Gods judgments in the World, Wrath brings the puniſhment of the Sword, that you may know there is a judgment, i. e. Providence; the denial of it is a ſin againſt all paſt or preſent judgements, which God hath or doth exerciſe. The Scripture frequently declaring the reaſon of ſuch and ſuch judgments to be, that men may know that the Lord is God.

* Job 19. 29.

Secondly. 2. The ſecond thing is, the grounds of the denial of providence. This Atheiſm has been founded,

1. Upon an overweening conceit of mens own worths; when men ſaw themſelves fruſtrated of the rewards they expected, and ſaw others that were inſtruments of Tyranny and Luſt, graced with the favours they thought due to their own vertue, they ran into a conceit, that God did not mind the actions of men below. So that it was pride, intereſt, ſelf-conceit and opinion of merit, rather than any well-grounded reaſon introduced this part of Atheiſm into the World; for upon any croſs this opinion of merit ſwelled up into blaſphemous ſpeeches againſt God. When we have any thoughts, (as we are apt to have) by our religious acts to merit at Gods hand, we act againſt the abſoluteneſs of his Providence, as though God could be obliged to us by any other than his own promiſe. Methinks Job hath ſome ſpice of this in ſpeaking ſo often of his own integrity, as though God dealt injuriouſly with him in afflicting him. God ſeems to charge him with it, Job 40. 8. [Wilt thou alſo diſannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me that thou mayeſt be righteous? As though in ſpeaking ſo much of his own integrity, and in complaining expreſſions, he would accuſe God of injuſtice, and condemn him as an unrighteous Governour; and in Job's anſwer you find no ſyllable or word of his integrity to God, but a ſelf-abhorrency, Job 42. 26. Wherefore I abhor my ſelf in duſt and aſhes. I doubt that from this ſecret root ariſe thoſe Speeches which we ordinarily have among men, What have have I done that God ſhould ſo afflict me? Though in a ſerious vvay it is a uſeful queſtion tending to an enquiry into the ſin that is the cauſe of it. But I doubt ordinarily there is too much of a reflection upon God, as though they had deſerved other dealing at his hands. Take heed therefore of pride and conceits of our own worth, we ſhall elſe be led by it to diſparaging conceits of God, which indeed are the roots of all actions contradictory to God's Will.

2. It is founded upon pedantical and ſenſual notions of God. As though it might detract from his pleaſures and delight, to look down upon this World; or, as though it were a moleſtation of an infinite power, to buſie himſelf about the cares of ſublunary things. They thought it unſutable to the felicity of God, that it ſhould interrupt his pleaſure, and make a breach upon his bleſſedneſs. As though it were the felicity of a Prince not to take care of the Government of his Kingdom, nor ſo much as provide for the well-being of his Children. I doubt that from ſuch, or as bad conceptions of God, may ſpring ordinarily our diſtruſt of God upon any diſtreſs; take heed therefore of entertaining any conceptions of God, but what the Scripture doth furniſh you with.

3. Or elſe, this ſort of Atheiſm was uſher'd in by a flattering conceit of the Majeſty of God. They thought it unbecoming the excellency of the divine Majeſty to deſcend to a regard of the petty things of the World; this ſeems to be the fancy of them, Pſal. 37. 11. How doth God know? is there knowledge in the moſt high? They think him too high to know, too high to conſider. How unreaſonable is it to think God moſt high in place, and not in perfection; and if in perfection, not in knowledge and diſcerning? They imagined of him as of a great Prince, taking his pleaſure upon the battlements of his palace, not beholding the Worms upon the ground; muffled with Clouds, as Job 22. 13, 14. how doth God know? Can he judge through the dark Clouds? thick Clouds are a covering to him, that he ſees not, and he walks in the circuit of Heaven. We cannot indeed have too high apprehenſions of Gods Majeſty and excellency: But muſt take heed of entertaining ſuperſtitious conceits of God, and ſuch as are diſhonourable to him, or make the grandeur and ambition of men, the meaſures of the greatneſs and Majeſty of God. Upon this root ſprung Superſtition and Idolatry, and the Worſhip of Dæmons, who according to the Heathens fancy, were Mediators betwen God and men. And I doubt ſuch a conceit might be the firſt ſtep to the introducing the Popiſh Saint-worſhip into the Chriſtian World: and this lies at the root of all our omiſſions of duty, or neglects of ſeeking God. Let us therefore have raiſed thoughts of God's Majeſty, and admiring thoughts of his condeſcention, who notwithſtanding his greatneſs, humbles himſelf to behold what is done upon the Earth. The Pſalmiſt ſets a pattern for both, Pſal. 113. 5, 6. * Pſal. 113. 5, 6.

4. From their wiſhes upon any gripes of conſcience. They found guilt ſtaring them in the face, and were willing to comfort themſelves with the embraces of this Doctrine, wherein they might find a ſecurity and eaſe to their proſtituted conſciences, and unbounded liberty in the ways of ſin. Thoſe in Zephaniah, were firſt ſettled upon their lees, and then to drive away all fears of puniſhment, deny Gods Government, Zeph. 1. 12. the Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil. A brave liberty for a City to be without a Magiſtrate, a houſe without a Governour, a Ship without a Pilot, expoſed to the mercy of Winds and Waves; A man to be without reaſon, that paſſion and luſt ſhould act their pleaſure; a Liberty that Beaſts themſelves would not have, to be without a Shepherd, and one to take care of them. Such wiſhes certainly there are in men upon a ſenſe of guilt: they vviſh for their ovvn ſecurity there vvere no providential eye to inſpect them. Take heed therefore of guilt vvhich vvill dravv you to vviſh God deprived of the government of the World, and all thoſe attributes vvhich qualify him for it. The readineſs to entertain the motions of Satan, rather than the motions of the Spirit, implies a vvillingneſs in them that Satan might be the God of the World, World, who favours them in Sin, rather than the Creator who forbids it. But indeed the fears of conſcience evidence a ſecret belief in men of a juſt providence, whatever means they uſe to ſtifle it; elſe why is man upon the commiſſion of ſome notorious ſinful act, afraid of ſome evil hap to betide him? Why is he reſtleſs in himſelf? There is no ſinner unleſs extreamly hardned, but hath ſome ſecret touch of conſcience upon notorious enormities: While the work of the Law is written in their heart, their conſcience will bear witneſs and accuſe them. * In the moſt flagitious courſes which the Apoſtle reckons up, * they cannot put off the knowledge of the judgment of God, that they which commit ſuch things are worthy of death, that is, worthy of death by the judgment of God, which judgment is diſcovered in the Law of Nature.

* Rom. 2. 14.

* Rom. 1. 29, 30, 31, 32.

Thirdly. 3. The third thing is, The various wayes wherein men practically deny providence, or abuſe it, or contemn it.

1. When we will walk on in away contrary to checks of providence, when we will run againſt the will of God manifeſted in his providence, we do deny his government, and refuſe ſubjection to him; when we will be peremptory in our reſolves againſt the declaration of God's will by his checks of providence, we contend with him about the government of us and our actions. Such a diſpute had Pharaoh with God, notwithſtanding all the checks by the plagues poured out upon him, he would march againſt Iſrael to take them out of God's hand into his own ſervice again, Exod. 15. 9. The enemy ſaid, I will overtake, I will divide the ſpoil, my luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them, I will draw my ſword, my hand ſhall deſtroy them. Here is the will of man vaunting againſt the Governour of the World, reſolved to diſpute God's Royalty with him in ſpight of all the blaſtings of his deſigns, and the ſmart blows he had had from that powerful arm, which coſt him and his ſubjects their lives; they would not underſtand the taking off their wheels, but would run headlong into the Red Sea: A remarkable example of this is in a good man not ſo peremptory in words, but againſt the revelations of God's mind both by the Prophet, and his Providence; Jehoſaphat had made a League with Ahab, * and God had ordered Micajah to acquaint him with the ill ſucceſs of the affair they went about, verſ. 16, 19. which Jeloſaphat found true, for his own life was in danger, he was hardly beſet by the Enemy upon a miſtake, verſ. 31, 32. he had an eminent anſwer of prayer, for upon his cry he had a quick return; God engaged his providence over his Enemies hearts for him, verſ. 13. the Lord helped him, and God moved them to depart from him. And for this conjunction and continuance in it againſt Micajah's propheſie, God ſends a Prophet to reprove him, 2 Chron. 19. 2. ſhould thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from the Lord; he reproves him ſharply for this confederacy, yet Jehoſaphat after had a ſignal providence in delivering him from another army, 2 Chron. 20. 24. Yet after this he goes on in this way, 2 Chron. 20. 35. after this, i. e. after a reproof by a prophet, after ill ſucceſs in his league, after eminent care of God in his deliverance, after a ſignal freeing him from a dangerous invaſion in a miraculous way, he enters into a league with Ahab's Son, as wicked as his Father, verſ. 36. he joyned himſelf with him to make ſhips to go to Tarſhiſh, and after that a third Prophet is ſent to reprove him, and the Ships were broken, verſ. 37. Here is a remarkable oppoſition to checks of providence, and manifeſt declarations of God's will, as if he would be the Commander of the World inſtead of God. Abner's action is much of the ſame kind, who would make the houſe of Saul ſtrong againſt David, though he knew and was ſatisfied that God had promiſed the Kingdom to David.

* 2 Chro. 18. 1, 2, 3.

2. In omiſſions of Prayer. One reaſon to prove the fools denying God's government of the world, is, that they call not upon the Lord. Pſal. 14 1, 4. The Lord looked down from Heaven to ſee if there were any that did underſtand and ſeek God. 'Tis certainly either a denying of God's ſufficiency to help us, when we rather beg of every Creature, than ask of God; or a charging ging him with a want of Providence, as though he had thrown off all care of worldly matters, 2 King. 1. 3. Is it not becauſe there is not a God in Iſrael, that you go to enquire of Baalzebub the God of Ekron? Seeking of any thing elſe with a neglect of God, is a denying the care of God over his Creature. Do we not in this caſe make our ſelves our own governours and Lords, as though we could ſubſiſt without him, or manage our own affairs without his aſſiſtance? If we did really believe there was a watchful Providence, and an infinite powerful goodneſs to help us, he would hear from us oftener then he doth. Certainly thoſe who never call upon him, diſown his government of the World, and do not care whether he regards the Earth or no. They think they can do what they pleaſe without any care of God over them. The reſtraining prayer is a caſting off the fear of God. Job. 15, 4. Thou caſteth off fear, why? and reſtraineſt Prayer before God. The neglect of Prayer ariſeth from a conceit of the unprofitableneſs of it. Job 21. 15. What profit ſhould we have if we pray unto him? Which conceit muſt be grounded upon a ſecret notion of God's careleſneſs of the world; ſuch fruit could not ariſe, but from that bitter root. But the Prophet Malachi plainly expreſſes it, Malach. 3. 14. Ye have ſaid it is in vain to ſerve God, and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance? Whence did this ariſe, but from a denial of Providence upon the obſervation of the outward happineſs of the wicked? verſ. 15. And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedneſs are ſet up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered. Sometimes it ariſeth from an apprehenſion that God in the way of his Providence dealeth unjuſtly with us. A good Prophet utters ſuch a ſinful ſpeech in his paſſion, 2 King. 6. 33. Behold, this evil is of the Lord, what ſhould I wait for the Lord any longer?

3. When men will turn every ſtone to gain the favourable aſſiſtance of men in their deſigns, and never addreſs to God for his direction or bleſſing. When they never deſire God to move the hearts of thoſe whoſe favour they court, as though Providence were an unuſeful and unneceſſary thing in the World. It was the caſe of thoſe Elihu ſpeaks of, Job 35. 9, 10. They cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty, but none ſaith, where is God my Maker, who gives ſongs in the night? &c. none in the midſt of their oppreſſions and cryes under them, did conſider either the power of God in the Creation, as he was their Maker, nor his Providence in the government of the World, as he raiſed up men from low eſtates, and gave matter of chearfulneſs even in a time of darkneſs. This was the charge God by his Prophet brought againſt Aſa, 2 Chron. 16. 7. (before the text) Thou haſt relyed on the King of Syria, and not relyed on the Lord thy God, herein thou haſt done fooliſhly, v. 9. where he ſets a reliance on the creature, and a reliance on God, in direct oppoſition. In ſeveral caſes men do thus deny and put a contempt on God as the governour of the World, when we will caſt about to find out ſome Creature-refuge rather than have recourſe to God for any ſupply of our neceſſities. Doth not he ſlight his fathers care that will not ſeek to him in his diſtreſs? This was Aſah's Sin, 2 Chron. 16. 12. in his diſeaſe he ſought not to the Lord, but to the Phyſicians. The Jews think, that one reaſon why Joſeph continued two years in Priſon, was his confiding too much upon the Butler's remembrance of him, and intereſt for his deliverance, which they ground upon the requeſt he makes to him, Gen. 40. 14. but think on me when it ſhall be well with thee, and ſhew kindneſs to me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this houſe. I muſt confeſs the expreſſions are very urgent, being ſo often repeated, and ſeems to carry a greater confidence at preſent in the arm of fleſh, than in God. We do not read that Joſeph prayed ſo earneſtly to God, though no doubt but being a good man he did: Methinks the ſetting down his requeſt with that repetition in the Scripture, ſeems to intimate a probability of the Jews conceit. Or alſo when we do ſeek to him, but it is out of a general belief of his Providence and ſufficiency, not out of an actuate conſideration, or when we ſeek to him with colder affections than we ſeek to Creatures, as if vve did half deſpair of his ability or vvill to help us: as vvhen a man thinks to get learning by the ſagacity of his ovvn vvit, his indefatigable induſtry, and never deſires vvith any ardent affection the bleſſing of God upon his endeavours. When we lean to our own Wiſdom, we diſtruſt the Providence of God, Pro. 3. 5. Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not to thine own underſtanding. Truſt in God, and leaning to our own Wiſdom, are oppoſed to one another as inconſiſtent; or when a man hath ſome great concern, ſuppoſe a ſuit at Law, to think to carry his cauſe by the favour of friends, the help of his money, the eloquence of his Advocate, and never intereſt God in his buſineſs: This is not to acknowledge God in thy ways, which is the command, Pro. 6. In all thy ways acknowledg him; as though our works were not in the hand of God, Eccleſ. 9. 1. This is to take them out of God's hand, and put them into the hands of men. To truſt in our wealth, it is to make God a dead and a ſtupid God, and diſown his Providence in the beſtowing it upon us. The Apoſtle ſeems to intimate this in the oppoſition which he makes between uncertain riches, and the *living God. Theſe and many more actions ſuitable to them, are virtual denials of God's ſuperintendency, as though God had left off the Government of the World, to the wits, or rather follies of men. Theſe are to magnifie the things we ſeek to, above God, as the chief Authors of all our good. 'Tis to imagine him leſs careful than man, more inſufficient than man. 'Tis a departure from a full fountain to a ſhallow ſtream; not to deſire God's aſſiſtance, is either from ſome check of conſcience that our buſineſs is ſinful, that we dare not intereſt him in it, or a diſowning God's care, as if we could hide our counſels from him, (Iſa. 29. 15. Wo unto them that ſeek deep to hide their Counſel from the Lord, and they ſay, who ſeeth us, and who knoweth us?) and bring our buſineſs to paſs before he ſhall know of it; At leaſt it is a ſlighting God's government, ſince we will not engage God by prayer in the exerciſe of it on our behalf, and diſdain to acquaint him with our concerns. 'Tis a reflection upon God's wiſdom to do ſo, which the Prophet mentions with a wo, Iſa. 31. 1, 2. Wo unto them that go down to Egypt for help, but they look not to the holy one of Iſrael, yet he alſo is wiſe. It is a diſparagement to God's Providential wiſdom, not to look to him in our concerns, yea, and of his righteouſneſs too, they look not to the holy one of Iſrael. In this they neither regard his holineſs, nor his wiſdom. When we conſult not with him upon emergent occaſions, we truſt more to our own Wiſdom, Counſel and Sufficiency, than to God's; and ſet up our ſelves as our own Lords, and independent upon him, as though we could manage things according to our pleaſure.

* 1 Tim. 6. 17.

4. When upon the receiving any good, they make more grateful acknowledgment to the inſtruments, than to God the principal Author of it. As if God had no hand in beſtowing thoſe bleſſings upon them, as if the inſtruments had diſpoſſeſſed God of his governing-Providence, and engroſt it in their own hands. This men are guilty of when they aſcribe their Wealth to their own wit and fortune, their health to their own care, or the Phiſician's skill; their learning to their own induſtry, their proſperity to their friends or merits. When men thus return their thank-offering to ſecond cauſes, and aſcribe to them what is due to God, they give the glory of his Providence to a miſerable Creature. Thus was the fooliſh boaſting of the Aſſyrian, Iſa 10. 13, 14. By the ſtrength of my hand I have done this, and by my wiſdom: for I am prudent, for I have removed the bounds of the People, &c. Belſhazzar's offence alſo, Dan. 5. 23. Thou haſt lifted up thy ſelf againſt the Lord of Heaven, and praiſed the gods of ſilver, as though they were the authors of all thy greatneſs: ſo Hab. 1. 16. they ſacrifice to their net, and burn incenſe to their drag, becauſe by them their portion is fat. Alluding to thoſe that then worſhipped their warlike weapons, and the tools whereby they had got their wealth, in the place of God, as the Heathen uſed to do*. How baſe a uſage is this of God to rifle him of all his glory, and beſtow it upon the unvvorthieſt inſtruments, inanimate Creatures? 'Tis as high Idolatry as that of the Heathens, in as much as it is a ſtripping God of the glory of his Providential care, though the object to vvhich which we direct our acknowledgments, is not so mean as their's which was a stock or stone. But is it not the same injury to a person to rifle him of his goods to bestow it upon a begger, as to give it to a Prince? 'Tis a depriving a man of his right: Yet, is not this ordinary! Do not men ascribe more to the Physician that saves an eye in danger of being lost by a defluxion, than to God who hath given them both with the enjoyment of the light of the Sun; yea more to the Medicine, than to that God, who hath a witness of his Deity in every Drug? 'Tis as if the kindness a Prince shews to his Subjects should be attributed to a Scullion in his Kitchin rather than to himself. This is to be-ly God and say it is not he: * 'Tis applicable to the case of mercies as well as afflictions and judgments, of which it is properly meant. And this contempt is the greater by how much the greater mercy we have received in a way of Providence, Hos. 2. 8. she did not know that I gave her Corn, and Wine, and Oyl, and multiplyed her Silver and Gold, which they prepared for Baal. She that had most reason to know, because she had enjoyed so much, she that had experience how by a strong and mighty hand I brought her out of Egypt into the Land now possessed by her, She would not know that I gave her those good things she prepared for Baal. It would be a natural consequence from this Scripture, that those that employ the good things they enjoy upon their lusts, do deny the Providential goodness of God in their possession and enjoyment of them, because they prepare God's goodness for their sinful pleasures, as though their own lusts had been the Authors of them; and also their instruments, that receive too high and flattering thanks of this nature, are much like Herod, that tickled himself with the Peoples applause, that his voice was the voice of God and not of man.

* Dought Analect. Sacr. Excurs. 182

* Jer. 5. 12.

5. When we use indirect courses, and dis-honest waies to gain wealth or honour. This is to leave God, to seek relief at Hells gates, and adore the Devil's Providence above God's: When God doth not answer us, like Saul we will go to the witch of Endor, and have our ends by Hell when Heaven refuseth us. 'Tis a covenanting with the Devil, and striking up a bargain and agreement with Hell, and acknowledging Satan to be the God of the World. No man will doubt but in expres Covenants with the Devil, as Witches and Conjurers are reported to make, that the Devil shall give them such knowledge, such wealth, or bring them to such honour; 'tis no doubt, I say, but such do acknowledge the Devil the God of the world, because they agree by articles to have those things conferred upon them by Satan, which are only in the power of God absolutely to promise or bestow. So when a man will commit Sin to gain the ends of his ambition or covetousness, does he not implicitely covenant with the Devil who is the head of sinners, and set up his sin in the place of God, because he hopes to attain those things by sinful means which are only in the hand of God, and on whom he only can have a dependance? This is the Divil's design out of an enmity to Providence. He tempted Christ to be his own Carver, thereby to put him upon a distrust of his Father's care of him, Mat. 4. 3. Command that these stones be made Bread, as though God would not provide for him; which design of the Devil is manifest by our Saviour's answer. This is to prostitute Providence to our own lusts, and to pull it down from the Government of the World, to be a Lacky to our sinfull pleasure; to use means which God doth prohibit, is to set up Hell to govern us, since God will not govern our affairs in answer to our greedy desires. 'Tis to endeavour that by God's curse which we should only expect by God's blessing: For when God hath forbid sinful waies, severely threatned them, perhaps cursed them in Examples before our eyes, what is it but to say, that we will rather believe God's curse will further us than his blessing? 'Tis to disparage his blessing, and prefer his curse, to slight his wisdom and adore our folly. When we go out of God's way, we go out of God's protection, we have no Charter for the blessing of providence without that condition, Psal. 37. 3. trust in the Lord, and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the Land, and verily verily thou ſhalt be fed, to do evil then is not to truſt in God, or have any regard to his Providential care.

6. When we diſtruſt God when there is no viſible means. A diſtruſt of God renders him impotent, or falſe and mutable, or cruel and regardleſs, and what not? We detract from his power, as if it depended upon Creatures, or that he were like an Artificer that could not act without his Tools: As if God were tyed to means, and were beholding to Creatures for his operating power; as if that God who created the World without inſtruments, could not providentially apply himſelf to our particular exigencies without the help of ſome of his Creatures. If he cannot work without this or that means you did expect your mercy by. It ſupoſeth that God hath made the Creature greater then himſelf, and more neceſſary to thy well-being, than himſelf is; or elſe we conceit him falſe or fooliſh, as if he had undertaken a task of government too hard for him, as if he were grown weary of his labour, and muſt have ſome time to recruit his ſtrength, or as if he were unfaithful, not walking by rules of unerring goodneſs; or if we acknowledge him wiſe and able and faithful, yet it muſt then be a denyal of his gracious tenderneſs, which is as great as his power and wiſdom, and a perfection equal with any of the reſt. If his caring for us be a principal argument to move us to caſt our care upon him, as it is, 1 Pet. 5. 7. caſting all your care upon him, for he careth for you: Then if we caſt not our care upon him, it is a denial of his gracious care of us, this is to imagine him a tenderer governour of beaſts than men, as though our Saviour had ſpoke a palpable untruth, when he told us, not an hair of our heads doth fall without his leave; as if he regarded Sparrows only, and not his Children; or elſe it implies that God cannot mind us in a crowd of buſineſs in ſuch multitudes in the World, which he hath to take care of. But certainly, as the multitude of things doth not hinder his knowledge of them, ſo neither do they hinder his care. The arms of his goodneſs are as large to embrace all Creatures, as the eyes of his omniſcience are to behold them. From this root do all our fears of the power of men grow, Iſa. 51. 12, 13. who art thou that art afraid of a man that ſhall dye, &c. and forgetteſt the Lord thy Maker, that hath ſtretched forth the Heavens, &c. our forgetfulneſs at leaſt, if not a ſecret denial of God's power in the works of Creation and Providence, uſhers in diſtruſt of him, and that introduceth a fear of man. If they that know his name, will put their truſt in him, Pſal. 9. 10. for thou, Lord, haſt not forſaken them that ſeek thee; Then a diſtruſt of him diſcovers an ignorance and inconſideration of his name and his waies of working, and implies his forſaking of his Creature. He that truſts in any thing elſe beſides God, denies all the powerful operations of God, and conceives him not a ſtrength ſufficient for him, Pſal 52. 7. that man doth not make God his ſtrength, who truſts in the abundance of his riches. How groſs is it not to truſt God under the very ſence of his powerful goodneſs, but queſtion whether he can or will do this or that for us? When we will have jealouſies of him when he doth compaſs us round about with mercy, and encircle us with his beams, 'tis to queſtion whether the Summer Sun will warm me, though it ſhine directly upon me, and I feel the vigor of its beams upon my Body: much more baſe is this, then to diſtruſt him when we have no means: What doth this imply, but that he cares not what becomes of his Children, that no advantage can be expected from him, that his intentions towards us are not gracious even whiles we feel him?

7. Stoutneſs under God's afflicting or merciful hand, is a denyal or contempt of Providence. This was the aggravation of Belſhazzar's Sin, Dan. 5. 23. and the God in whoſe hand thy breath is, and whoſe are all thy waies, haſt thou not glorified; he glorified not God in the way of his providence, but was playing the Epicure, and was ſacrilegiouſly quaffing in the veſſels of the Temple when the City was beſieged; he ſeemed to dare the providence of God upon a preſumption that the City was impregnable by reaſon of Euphrates, and the proviſion they had within their walls, which, Xenophon ſaith, was enough for Twenty years, yet was taken that night when the hand-writing was. And by how much God's judgments have been more viſible to us, and upon ſome well known known by us, or related to us, ſo much the greater is the contempt of his providential government, as v. 22. and thou his Son Belſhazzar haſt not humbled thy heart, though thou knoweſt all this, &c. he had known God's judgments upon his Grandfather Nebuchadnezzar, a Domeſtick example of God's vindicating his government of the World, and yet went in the ſame ſteps, ſo Jer. 5. 3, 4. thou haſt conſumed them, but they have refuſed to receive correction, they have made their faces harder then a rock: what is the reaſon? the Prophet renders it, v. 4. they are fooliſh, for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God. Correction calls for ſubmiſſion, but thoſe like a Rock under God's hand, were correction-proof, they would not conſider the ways of God's Providence, and the manner of them; 'tis as if by our peeviſhneſs we would make God weary of afflicting us, which is the worſt caſe can happen. This is God's complaint of the ten Tribes, Hoſ. 7. 9. gray hairs are upon them, and they know it not, ſtrangers have devoured his ſtrength, &c. there was a conſumption of their ſtrength, the Aſſyrians and Egyptians to whom they gave gifts, had drained their treaſure, but they would not conſider God as the Author, or acknowledge whence their miſery came, they would not ſeek God for all this, v. 10. 'Tis like a mans picking a pocket, or cutting a Throat under the Gallows in contempt of Juſtice*; whereas good men are both affected with, and remember God's judgments. Eber called his Son Peleg, diviſion, becauſe in his daies the Earth was divided, that in the dayly ſight of the Sun he might remember that ſharp Providence in ſcattering of the Babel builders. Judgments affect us when they are before our eyes, as the Thunder and Plagues did Pharaoh; but when they are removed, men return to their beloved ways, as tho God had ſhot a way all his arrows, and was departed, to mind them no more. Take heed of this, 'tis a ſin highly provoking: God is ſo tender that his Providence ſhould be minded and improved, that a ſin of this nature he follows with his diſpleaſure in this life at leaſt, Iſa. 22. 12, 13. And in that day did the Lord God of Hoſts call to weeping and mourning, and behold joy, and gladneſs, eating Fleſh, and drinking Wine, let us eat and drink, for to morrow we ſhall die. When God in any judgment ſhews himſelf to be Lord God of Hoſts, and calls us to weeping, and we behave our ſelves jollily in ſpight of his government, it is a ſin he will remember, and bind the guilt upon us, v. 14. and it was revealed in my Ears by the Lord of Hoſts, ſurely this iniquity ſhall not be purged from you till you die.

* Jenkin.

8. Envy alſo is a denial of Providence. To be ſad at the temporal good, or the gifts of another, as counting him unworthy of them, it is a reflection upon the Author of thoſe gifts, an accuſing providence of an unjuſt or unwiſe diſtribution *. Since God may do what he will with his own; if our eye be evil, becauſe God is good, we intrench upon his Liberty, and deny him the diſpoſal of his own goods, as if God were but our Steward, and we his Lords. 'Tis a temper we are all ſubject to, Pſal. 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelf becauſe of evil doers, neither be thou envious againſt the workers of iniquity. 'Tis peculiarly the product of ſelf-love, which affects the principality in the World, and particularly affects the conduct of God in diſtributing his goods, that he muſt not give but to whom they pleaſe. It ariſeth indeed from a ſence of our wants; but the language of it is, God is unjuſt in his Providence to me, becauſe he beſtows not upon me that good which he gives to another. 'Tis ſuch a ſin that it ſeems to be a companion of our firſt parents pride, which was the cauſe of their fall. They envied God a felicity by himſelf, for they would be like him, they would be as Gods. Hence prehaps, the Jews ſay Cain denied the Providence of God, as envying his Brother, becauſe God accepted Abel's ſacrifice and not his. Jonah's paſſion aroſe from this pride, for fear he ſhould be accounted a falſe Prophet, whereupon he envies God the glory of his mercy, and the poor Ninivites the advantage of it, he would have God conform the way of his Providence to his pleaſure and reputation. Indeed it is to envy God the honour of his Providence in thoſe gifts or good things another poſſeſſes, whereby he is inſtrumental to glorifie God and advantage others. Thus we would direct God what inſtruments he ſhould employ, when no Artificer in his own Art would endure to be directed by any ignorant perſon what tools he ſhould uſe in his work.

* Cajetan. Sotmal. P. 28.

9. Impatience under croſs providences is a denial and contempt of God's government. Men quarrel with God's revealed will, and therefore no wonder that they quarrel with his providential will; whereby we deny him his right of governing, and ſlight his actual exerciſe of his right. As if God were accountable to us for his diſpenſations, and muſt have only a reſpect to us or our humor in his government, Job 18. 4. he tears himſelf in his anger, ſhall the Earth be forſaken for thee? and ſhall the rock be removed out of his place? Muſt God alter the ſcene of his affairs according to our model and platform? and becauſe he doth not obſerve our rules and methods, muſt we tear our ſelves in anger? This is a ſecret curſing of God, and flying in his face when we ſee providence ſo croſs, that there ſeems to be no help at any time either in Heaven or Earth, Iſa. 8. 21, 22. they ſhall fret themſelves and curſe their King and their God, and look upwards, and they ſhall look unto the Earth, and behold trouble and darkneſs. Take heed of fretting at God's management of things in the world, or thy own particular concerns; this may lead to a curſing of God, and is indeed an initial ſecret ſwelling againſt him, and curſing of him. Man is ambitious to become a God. Adam's poſterity have in one ſort or other imitated him. This

1. Is a wrong to the Soveraignty of Providence. 'Twas a good admonition of Luther's to Melancton when he was troubled much about the affairs of the Church, monendus eſt Philippus ut deſinat eſſe rector mundi. By this temper we uſurp God's place, and ſet our ſelves in his Throne, we invade his ſupremacy by deſiring every thing to be at our beck, and are diſpleaſed with him, becauſe he doth not put the reins of the worlds government into our hands. As if we would command his will, and become his Soveraigns. 'Tis a ſtriving with our maker for the ſuperintendency, when we will ſit Judge upon him, or cenſure his acts, and preſume to direct him. Iſa. 45. 9. Wo to him that ſtrives with his Maker, ſhall the clay ſay to him that faſhions it, what makeſt thou? or thy work, He hath no hands? How do men ſummon God to the bar of their intereſt, and expoſtulate with him about his works, why he did not order them thus and thus; and if he doth ſo, to tell him he hath no hand, no hand of Providence in the World? The deſign of that place is to ſtop ſuch peeviſhneſs and invaſions of God's right; I will not have my Soveraign Will diſputed, as if I were but the Creatures Servant; I am content you ſhould ask of me things to come, v. 11. and pray to me, but notwithſtanding yet to ſubmit to my pleaſure without a peeviſh endeavouring to wreſt the Soveraignty out of my hand, and pull the Crown from my head.

2. Tis a wrong to the goodneſs and righteouſneſs of Providence. 'Tis a charging God with ill management, and an implicit language, that if we were the Commanders of Providence, things ſhould be managed more juſtly and righteouſly; as it was Abſalom's pretence in wiſhing to be the King of Iſrael in David's ſtead, 2 Sam. 15. 4. If patience be a giving God the honour of his righteouſneſs in his judgments, Pſal. 119. 75. I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that thou in faithfulneſs haſt afflicted me. Impatience muſt be a charge againſt God for unrighteouſneſs in his judicial proceedings, and a ſaying the way of the Lord is not equal, Ezek. 18. 25. 'Tis implied in that complaint, Iſa. 58. 2, 3. They ask of me the ordinances of Juſtice, &c. wherefore have we faſted and thou ſeeſt not? wherefore have we afflicted our Souls, and thou takeſt no knowledge? We demand juſtice of thee, ſince thou doſt not ſeem to do that which is fit and righteous, in not regarding us in our ſuits, and not beſtowing that which we have faſted for. God governs the World according to his will, our murmuring implies that God's will is not the rule of righteouſneſs. We affront the care of God towards his Creatures, as if the products of our ſhallow reaſons were more beautiful and juſt than God's contrivances for us, who hath higher and more glorious ends in every thing, both for our ſelves and the World, of which we are members, and for his own Glory, to which we ought to ſubject our ſelves, when perhaps our projects tend immediately to gratifie ſome ſenſual or ſpiritual luſt in us. 'Tis the commendation the Holy Ghoſt gives of Job, Job. 1. 22. in all this Job ſinned not, neither charged God fooliſhly, as a Character peculiar to him, implying that moſt men in the World do, upon any emergency, charge God with their croſſes, as dealing unjuſtly with them, in inflicting puniſhment when they think they have deſerved rewards: Jeremiah is not innocent in this caſe, Jerem. 20. 7. O Lord, thou haſt deceived me, and I was deceived, in the ill ſucceſs of his prophecy, as though an immenſe goodneſs would, and a Soveraign power needed to deal in a fraudulent way with his creatures to bring his ends about.

3. 'Tis a wrong to the wiſdom of Providence. We would degrade his Omniſcience and Wildom, and ſway him by our fooliſh and purblind dictates; 'tis as if we would inſtruct him better in the management of the World, and direct him to a reformation of his methods, Job 40. 2. ſhall he that contends with the Almighty, inſtruct him? He that reproves God, let him anſwer it: 'Tis a reproving God, and reproofs imply a greater authority, or righteouſneſs, or wiſdom in the perſon reproving; we reprove God as if God ſhould have conſulted with us, and asked our advice; 'tis to take upon us to be God's counſellors, and to conclude the only wiſe God by our imperfect reaſon, Rom. 11. 34. Who hath been his Counſeller? 'Tis a ſecret boaſting of ſome excellency in our ſelves, as if God did not govern well, or we could govern better: Shall a ſilly paſſenger, that underſtands not the uſe of the compaſs, be angry that that the skilful Pilot will not ſteer the Veſſel according to his pleaſure? Muſt we give out our orders to God, as though the Counſels of infinite wiſdom muſt roul about according to the conceits of our fancy? Is not the language of our hearts in our fits of impatience, as prodigiouſly proud againſt God's Providence as the Speech of that monſter was againſt the creation, who ſaid if he had been by God at the Creation of the World, he could have directed him to a better platform? all this and much more is vertually in this ſin of impatience.

10. In charging our ſins and miſcarriages by them, upon Providence, in this we contemn it. Some think Cain doth ſo, Gen. 4. 9. am I my Brother's keeper? Thou art the keeper and governor of the World, why didſt thou not hinder me from killing my Brother? 'Tis certain the firſt man did ſo, Gen. 3. 12. the woman thou gaveſt to be with me, ſhe gave me of the tree; thy gift is the cauſe of my ſin and ruine. 'Tis as certain David laid the Sin of Uriah's murder at the door of Providence, 1 Sam. 11. 25. when he heard that Uriah was dead, the ſword, ſaith he, devours one as well as another. Man conjures up trouble to himſelf, when by his folly he brings himſelf into ſin, and from thence to miſery, and then his heart frets againſt the Lord, and layes the blame both of his ſin and following miſchiefs upon him, Pro. 19. 3. the fooliſhneſs of man perverts his way, and his heart frets againſt the Lord. There are many other wayes wherein we deny or ſlight Providence.

1. When we do things with a reſpect to the pleaſure of men, more than of God. As though God were careleſs both of himſelf and his own honour, and regarded not the principles and ends of our actions.

2. In vain boaſting and vaunting of our ſelves. As Benhadad would have ſuch a multitude of men in his army as that there ſhould not be duſt enough in Samaria to afford every man a handful; * wherein he ſwaggers with God, and vaunts as it he were the Governor of the World; yet this man with his numerous Hoſt was routed by a troop of Lacquies, v. 15, 20. they are called the young men of the Princes; ſuch is the folly of men againſt the orders of God, when they boaſt in their hearts that their houſe ſhall continue for ever *. * 2. King. 20. 10. * Pſal. 49. 11.

3. Oppreſſion. They ſlay the fatherleſs, and ſay, the God of Jacob ſhall not regard it *. Their denial of Providence was the cauſe of their oppreſſion of the poor, and where this is found in any, it is an argument it ariſeth principally from a like cauſe; this is alſo made the cauſe why they eat up God's people as they eat bread *. * Pſal. 94. 6, 7. * Pſal. 14. 1, 4.

4. Miſinterpretations of Providence.

Such curſed jealouſies had the Jews of God. Numb. 14. 3. and wherefore hath the Lord brought us into this land to fall by the ſword? were it not better for us to return into Egypt? As though God in that mighty deliverance had cheated them them with a deſign to deſtroy them in the wilderneſs, when one of thoſe plagues poured out upon Pharaoh being turned upon their heads, had deſtroyed them in Egypt. So fooliſh are they to think that God would ruine them upon dry Land, who might have drowned them as well as their enemies in the Red Sea: ſo unreaſonable is man in his diſputes againſt God.

5. In limiting providence. In bounding it to time, manner, and other circumſtances, as they did, Pſal. 78. 41. they limited the holy one of Iſrael, for they remembred not his hand. As though God muſt manage every thing according to the will of a ſimple Creature. It was a forgetfulneſs of Providence, at leaſt, that was the cauſe of it.

The Second Uſe is of Comfort. As the juſtice and righteouſneſs of God is the higheſt comfort to a good man, ſince the Evangelical diſpenſation: In that he hath to deal with a righteous God, who can as ſoon deny himſelf as his righteouſneſs. So it is none of the meaneſt comforts, that we acknowledge and worſhip that God, who exerciſeth himſelf in a conſtant government of the World, and leaves not any thing to the capriciouſneſs of that which we call fortune and chance. What ſatisfaction can any man in his ſober wits have to live in a World caſt off from all care of the Creator of it? Wiſdom without Providence would make any man mad, and the greateſt advantage would be to be a ſtupid and ſenſleſs fool: Can there be any worſe News told to men than this, that let them be as religious as they will, there is no eye above takes notice of it? What can be bitterer to a rational man than that God ſhould be careleſs of the World? What a door would be opened by it for all ſin in the wicked, and deſpair in the godly; 'Tis as great a matter of joy to the godly, that God reigns, as it is of terror to the wicked, Pſal. 97. 1. The Lord reigns, let the Earth rejoice, Pſal. 99. 1. The Lord reigns, let the people tremble.

*It was an excellent Speech of a Stoick, ἀλλ' ἐσὶ ζῆν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ καὶ τῷ θεῷ καὶ πᾶσι.

'Tis a comfort, That,

1. Man is a ſpecial object of Providence. God provides for all Creatures, even thoſe that are the works of his hands, much more for man, who is more peculiarly the work of his head, in whoſe Creation he took Counſel, Gen. 1. 26. let us make man in our Image, after our likeneſs. The work of his heart in being made according to his Image, and intended as a ſubordinate end of his whole Creation next to the principal, that of God's Glory, he is the preſerver of man and beaſt: of man principally, of beaſts in ſubſerviency to mans good, and preſervation.

2. Holy men, a more ſpecial object of it. God preſerves and provides for all things, and all perſons: But his eye is more peculiarly fixed upon thoſe that fear him. Pſal. 33. 18. behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy, ſo fixed, as if he had no regard to any thing elſe. If God hath a care of man created after his own Image, tho his Image be depraved, much more of thoſe wherein his Image is reſtored. If God loves himſelf, he loves his Image and his works. A man loves the works which he hath made of ſome external matter, much more doth a Father love his Son, much more doth God love his own, and therefore will work their good, and diſpoſe of them well. God exerciſeth a ſpecial Providence over the actions of a good man, as well as his perſon, Pſal. 37. 23. the ſteps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, and he delighteth in his wayes; 'tis a ſpecial, becauſe a delightful Providence, he delights in his way; how highly may it cheer a man to be in covenant with that God, which rules the World, and hath all things at his beck, to be under not only the care of his wiſdom, but of his goodneſs? The Governour of the World, being ſuch an only friend, will do him no hurt, being ſuch an only Father will order all things to his good out of a Fatherly affection; he is the Worlds Soveraign, but a good mans Father: He rules the Heavens and the Earth, but he loves his holy ones. Other things are the objects of his Providence, and a good man is the end of it. For, his eyes run to and fro throughout the whole Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong for him whoſe heart is perfect toward him.

3. Hence

3. Hence it will follow, that the Spirits of good men have ſufficient grounds to bear up in their innocent ſufferings and ſtorms in the World; Innocent ſufferings, There is a righteous Governor, who orders all, and will reward them for their pains, as well as their ſervice, Heb. 6. 10. for God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love; there is one that preſides in the World, who ſees all their calamities, and cannot be miſtaken in their cauſe, who hath as much power and wiſdom, as will to help them. It would be an affliction indeed, if there were no ſoveraign power to whom they might make their moan in their diſtreſs, to whom they might eaſe their conſciences, if there were no Governor to whom they might offer up their petitions.

In the ſtorms they meet with in the world. How doth the preſence of a skilful Pilot in a weather-beaten Ship cheer the hearts of the fearful Paſſengers? What a dread would it be to them to have the veſſel wherein their lives and all are concerned, left to the fury of Winds and Waves, without an able hand to manage it? God hath a bridle to check the paſſions of men, to marſhal them according to his pleaſure; they are all but his inſtruments in the government, not the Lords of it: God can lay a Plot with more wiſdom for a good mans ſafety, than the Enemy can for his deſtruction; he can countermine their Plots with more power than they can execute them; he can out-wit their craft, over-power their ſtrength, and turn their deſigned cruelty againſt them, as a knife into their own breaſts.

4. Hence follows a certain ſecurity againſt a good mans want. If God take care of the hairs, the ornamental ſuperfluities, why ſhould we doubt his care of our neceſſary ſupply? If he be the guardian of our hairs which fall off without our ſence of their departure, ſhall he be careleſs of us when we are at a pinch for our all? Will God reach out his care to Beaſts, and deny it to his Children? What would you judge of that Father, who ſhould feed his Servants and ſtarve his Sons? He ſupplies his Enemies, and hath he no bowels for his Friends? The very unjuſt as well as the juſt are enlightened by his Sun, and refreſht by his rain, and ſhall he not have a Providence for thoſe that have a ſpecial intereſt in that Mediator, whoſe interpoſition kept up thoſe ſtanding mercies after our forfeiture of them by ſin? If he bleſs with thoſe bleſſings, thoſe who are the objects of his curſe, will he not bleſs thoſe that are in his ſpecial favour with them, ſo far as they may prove bleſſings to them? Pſal. 34. 10. the young lions do lack and ſuffer hunger, but they that ſeek the Lord, ſhall not want any good thing, v. 9. for there is no want to them that fear him. A good man ſhall have what he needs, not alwaies what he thinks he needs. Providence intends the ſupply of our neceſſities, not of our deſires; he will ſatisfie our wants, but not our wantonneſs. When a thing is not needful, a man cannot properly be ſaid to want it; when it is needful, a good man ſhall not be without it; what is not beſtowed upon us, may not be ſo beautiful at that time wherein we deſire it, for every thing is *beautiful in its ſeaſon. He that did not want God's kindneſs to renew him, ſhall never want God's kindneſs to ſupply him; his hand ſhall not be wanting to give, where his heart hath been ſo large in working. Others live that have an intereſt only in common Providence, but good men have Providence cabineted in a promiſe, and aſſured to them by a deed of covenant-conveyance; he was a provider before, he hath made himſelf now your Debtor. You might Pray for his providential care, before, with a common faith, now with a more ſpecial expoſtulation: For in his promiſe he hath given a good man the key of the Cheſt of his Providence, becauſe it is *the promiſe of this life and that which is to come; of this life not to our deſires, but neceſſities; of the life to come to both, wherein they ſhall have whatſoever they can want, and whatſoever they can deſire.

* Eccleſ. 9. 11.

* 1 Tim. 4. 8.

Again conſider, God doth exerciſe a more ſpecial Providence over men, as cloathed with miſerable circumſtances, and therefore among his other Titles, this is one, to be a helper of the Fatherleſs*. 'Tis the argument the Church uſed to expreſs her return to God, Hoſ. 14. 3. for in thee the fatherleſs find mercy. Now what greater comfort is there than this, that there is one preſides in the World, who is ſo wiſe he cannot be miſtaken, ſo faithful he cannot deceive,

* Pſal. 10. 14.

ceive, ſo pitiful he cannot neglect his people; and ſo powerful, that he can make ſtones even to be turned into bread, if he pleaſe?

Further, take this for a comfortable conſideration,

God doth not govern the World only by his will as an abſolute Monarch, but by his wiſdom and goodneſs as a tender Father. 'Tis not his greateſt pleaſure to ſhew his Soveraign power, or his unconceivable wiſdom, but his immenſe goodneſs, to which he makes the other attributes ſubſervient. What was God's end in creating, is his end in governing, which was the communication and diffuſion of his goodneſs; we may be ſure from hence, that God will do nothing but for the beſt, his wiſdom appointing it with the higheſt reaſon, and his goodneſs ordering it to the moſt gracious end; and becauſe he is the higheſt good, he doth not only will good, but the beſt good in every thing he acts.

What greater comfort can there be, than that we are under the care of an infallible unwearied and righteous Governor? infallible becauſe of his infinite wiſdom, unwearied becauſe of his incomprehenſible omnipotency, and righteous becauſe of his unbounded goodneſs and holineſs.

3. Uſe of Exhortation.

The duties ariſing from hence, will run as a thread through the web of our whole lives, and all the motions of them. This doctrine hath an influence upon our whole courſe, there is nothing we meet with, but is an act of Providence; and there is no act of Providence, but calls for ſome particular duty. Is there any good we want, we muſt ſeek it at his hands, we muſt depend upon him for it, we muſt preſcribe no methods to him, but leave the conduct of it to his own wiſdom. Is it a croſs Providence, and contrary to our deſires and expectations? Murmur not at it. Is it afflictive and troubleſom? Submit to it: Is it either good or bad, and preſent, we muſt ſtudy to underſtand it: Is it a good, and preſent? give God the Glory of it.

1. Seek every thing you need at the hands of God. 'Tis not only the skilfulneſs of the Pilot, but a favourable gale from Heaven, which muſt conduct the Ship to the intended port. As his Providence is the foundation, ſo it is the encouragement of all prayer. The end of the Lords prayer is, for thine is the Kingdom, the power and the Glory: the providential Kingdom belongs to God, Power he hath to manage it, and his Glory is the end of all; ſeek to him therefore for the exerciſe of his power in thy concerns, and for his directing them to his glory in his providential adminiſtrations. Every one of our daies, and both the mercy and the miſery of them depend upon him, Pro. 27. 1. thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth, but God foreſees all events; have recourſe therefore to his care for every dayes ſucceſs; what are our contrivances without the leave and bleſſing of Providence? Like the bubbles blown up from a nut-ſhell, eaſily broken by the next puff Our labour will be as fruitleſs as Peter's with all his toyl, and catch nothing, till God ſpeaks the word, and ſends the fiſh into our net *. The way of man is not in himſelf *. O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himſelf, it is not in man that walk's to direct his ſteps. Dangers are not within the reach of our eye to foreſee, nor within the compaſs of our power to prevent. Humane prudence may lay the platform, and God's power blaſt the execution, when it ſeems to be grown up neareſt to maturity. Hezekiah was happy in his affairs, becauſe he was aſſiſted by God; Ahaz unhappy, becauſe he is deſerted by God. If we would have a Clock go well, we muſt look chiefly to the motion of the chief Wheel; a failure in that makes an error in all the reſt: nothing can terminate its motion to our benefit without Providence. Coloured glaſs can reflect no beams without the Sun's light, nor fruits be ripened without its influence. Our dependance on God is greater than theirs on the Sun. God lets men play with their own wit and ſtrength, and come to the brink of execution of their deſigns, and then blows upon them, that they may know there is a God in the Earth. Pythagoras could ſay, it was γελοῖον a ridiculous thing, to ſeek that which is brave and virtuous any where elſe than of God *. Cyrus is a brave pattern, who is mentioned in Scripture, and repreſented by Xenophon calling upon God when he was firſt choſen General; and in his Speech to his Captains to encourage them to hope for a good ſucceſs ſucceſs of the expedition, tells them they might expect it, becauſe I have begun with God, which you know, ſaith he, is my cuſtom, not only when I attempt great matters, but alſo the τὰ μικρὰ things of leſſer concernment. The ſeeking of God ſhould be the prologue to all our affairs; we are enjoyned firſt to pray, and then determine, Job 22. 27. Thou ſhalt make thy prayer unto him, thou ſhalt alſo decree a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thee. The intereſſing Providence in our concerns, is the high way to ſucceſs. The reaſon we miſcarry, is becauſe we conſult not God, but determine without him; and thenwe have no reaſon to complain of him for not proſpering our way, when we never commended our affairs to his conduct. It hath been the practice of holy men. Nehemiah firſt petitioned God before he would uſe his intereſt in the Kings favour, Nehem. 2. 4. then the King ſaid unto me, for what doſt thou make requeſt? So I prayed to the God of Heaven, and I ſaid unto the King, &c. So Abraham's Steward puts up his requeſt to God, before he would put the buſineſs he came upon, in execution, Gen. 24. 12. David frequently in particular caſes. 1 Sam. 23. 9. 2 Sam. 2. 1. 2 Sam. 19. 23. God only doth what he pleaſes in Heaven and in Earth; He only can bleſs us, He only can blaſt us. Shall we be careleſs in any undertaking, whether we have his favour or no? 'Tis a ridiculous madneſs to reſolve to do any thing without God, without whoſe aſſiſting and preſerving of us, we had not been able to make that reſolution.

2. Truſt Providence. To truſt God when our Ware-houſes and Bags are full, and our Tables ſpread, is no hard thing; but to truſt him when our purſes are empty, but a handful of meal and a cruſe of Oil left, and all wayes of relief ſtopt, herein lies the wiſdom of a Chriſtians Grace. Yet none are exempted from this duty; all are bound to acknowledge their truſt in him by the dayly prayer for dayly bread; even thoſe that have it in their Cupboards as well as thoſe that want it; The greateſt Prince as well as the meaneſt beggar. Whatever your wants are, want not faith, and you cannot want ſupplies. 'Tis the want of this binds up his hand from doing great works for his Creatures: The more we truſt him, the more he concerns himſelf in our affairs. The more we truſt our ſelves, the more he delights to croſs us; for he hath denounced ſuch an one curſed that maketh Fleſh his arm *, though it be the beſt Fleſh in the World, becauſe it is a departing from the Lord. No wonder then that God departs from us, and carries away his bleſſing with him: while we truſt our ſelves, we do but trouble our ſelves, and know not how to reconcile our various reaſons for hopes and fears; but the committing our way to the Lord renders our minds calm and compoſed, Pro. 16. 3. commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed. Thou ſhalt have no more of thoſe quarrelling diſturbing thoughts, what the ſucceſs ſhall be. * Jer. 17. 5.

1. Truſt Providence in the greateſt extremities. He brings us into ſtraits, that he may ſee the exerciſe of our faith. Zeph. 3. 12. I will leave in the midſt of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they ſhall truſt in the name of the Lord. When we are moſt deſolate, we have moſt need of this exerciſe, and have the fitteſt ſeaſon to practiſe it: he is alwaies our refuge and our ſtrength, but in time of trouble a preſent help, Pſal. 46. 1. Daniel's new advancement by Belſhazzar but a day before the City was taken by the Enemy *, the King ſlain, and (no doubt) many of his Nobility, and thoſe that were neareſt in Authority with him, it being the intereſt of the Enemy to diſpatch them, was a danger; yet God by wayes not expreſſed, preſerved Daniel, and gave him favour with the Conqueror. God ſometimes leads his people into great dangers, that they may ſee and acknowledge his hand in their preſervation. Daniel had not had ſo ſignal an experience of God's care of him, had he been in the lower condition he was in before his new preferment. God's eye is alwaies upon them that fear him; not to keep diſtreſs from them, but to quicken them in it, and give them as it were a new life from the dead, Pſal 33. 18, 19. To deliver their Soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine. God brings us into ſtreights, that we may have more lively experiments of his tenderneſs in his ſeaſonable relief: If he be angry, he will repent himſelf for his Servants, when he ſees their power is gone; becauſe then the glory of his Providence is appropriated to himſelf, * Dan. 5. 29.

Deut. 32. 36, 39. See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no God with me: I kill, and I make alive. No Creature can have any pretence to ſhare in it; He delights thereby to blow up both our affections to him, and admirations of him, and ſtore up in us a treaſure of experiments to encourage our truſting in him in the like ſtreights. We ſhould therefore repoſe our ſelves in God in a deſart, as well as in the Cities: with as much faith among Savage beaſts, as in the beſt company of the moſt ſociable men *. And anſwer the greateſt ſtreight with Abraham's Speech to Iſaac, God will provide. For we have to do with a God who is bound up to no means, is at no expence in miraculous ſuccors, who delights to perfect his ſtrength in the Creatures weakneſs. We have to do with a God, who only knows what may further our good, and accordingly orders it; what may hinder it, and therefore prevents it. He can ſet all cauſes in ſuch a poſture, as ſhall conſpire together as one link to bring about ſucceſs, and make even contrary motions meet in one gracious end; as the Rivers which run from North and South, the contrary quarters of the World, agree in the ſurges of one Sea. Though providences may ſeem to croſs one another, they ſhall never croſs his word and promiſe, which he hath magnified above all his names. And his Providence is but a ſervant to his Truth.

2. Truſt it in the way of means. Though we are ſure God hath decreed the certain event of ſuch a thing, yet we muſt not encourage our idleneſs, but our diligence. Though Moſes was aſſured of the victory, when Amalek came armed againſt him, yet he commands Joſhua to draw up the valiant men into a body, himſelf goes to the Mount to pray, and is as diligent in the uſe of all means, as if he had been ignorant of God's purpoſe, and had rather ſuſpected the rout of his own than his Enemies forces. Neither doth Joſhua afterwards, though ſecured by promiſe in his conqueſt of Canaan, omit any part of the duty of a wiſe and watchful General; he ſends ſpies, diſciplines his forces, beſiegeth Cities, and contrives ſtratagems. Providence directs us by means; not to uſe them, is to tempt our Guardian; where it intends any great thing for our good, it opens a door, and puts ſuch circumſtances into our hands, as we may uſe without the breach of any Command, or the neglect of our own duty. God could have ſecured Chriſt from Herod's fury, by a miraculous ſtroke from Heaven upon his Enemy, but he orders Joſeph and Maries flight into Egypt as a means of his preſervation. God rebukes Moſes for praying, and not uſing the means in continuing the Peoples march, Exod. 14. 15. Wherefore crieſt thou unto me? ſpeak unto the Children of Iſrael, that they go forwards. To uſe means without reſpect to God, is proudly to contemn him; to depend upon God without the uſe of means, is irreligiouſly to tempt him; in both we abuſe his Providence. In the one we diſobey him in not uſing the means he hath appointed; in the other, preſumptuouſly impoſe upon him for the encouragement of our lazineſs. Diligence on our part, and the bleſſing on God's, Solomon joyns together, Pro. 10. 4. The hand of the diligent makes rich; but v. 22. The bleſſing of the Lord maketh rich. So Eccleſ. 9. 1. Our works are in the hand of God; our works, but Gods bleſſing; God's bleſſing, but not without our works. It was the practice of good men. Jacob wraſtles with God to divert his Brother's fury, yet ſends a Preſent to his Brother to appeaſe him *. David truſts in the name of the Lord his God in his duel with Goliah, but not without his ſling: Our labour ſhould rather be more vigorous than more faint, when we are aſſured of the bleſſing of Providence by the infallibility of the promiſe.

* Gen. 32. 9, 13.

3. Truſt Providence in the way of the precept. Let not any reliance upon an ordinary Providence induce you into any way contrary to the command. Daniel had many inducements from an appearance of Providence to eat the Kings meat, his neceſſity of compliance in his captivity, probability of preferment by learning the wiſdom of the Countrey, whereby he might both have advanced himſelf, and aſſiſted his Countrey-men, the greatneſs of the conſideration for a Captive to be fed from the Kings Table, the ingratitude he might be accuſed of for deſpiſing ſo kind a treatment; but none of theſe things moved him againſt a command, becauſe the Law of God forbad it, he would not eat of the King's meat. Daniel might have argued, I may wind my my ſelf in to the King's favour, do the Church of God a great ſervice by my intereſt in him, which may be daſht in pieces by my refuſal of this kindneſs; but none of theſe things wrought upon him. No Providences wherein we have ſeeming circumſtances of glorifying God, muſt lead us out of the way of duty; this is to rob God one way, to pay him another. God brought Daniel's ends about, he finds favour with the Govenour, his requeſt is granted, the ſucceſs is anſwerable, and all thoſe ends attained, which he might in a ſinful way by an ill conſtruction of Providence have propoſed to himſelf, all which he might have miſſed of, had he run on in a carnal manner: This, this is the way to ſucceſs, Pſal. 37. 5. Commit thy way unto the Lord, truſt alſo in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſs. Commit thy way to the guidance of his Providence, with an obedience to his precept, and relyance on his promiſe, and refer all ſucceſs in it to God. If we ſet up our golden Calfs made of our own ear-rings, our wit and ſtrength and carnal prudence, be cauſe God ſeems to neglect us, our fate may be the ſame with theirs, and the very duſt of our demoliſht Calf may be abitter Spice in our drink, as it was in theirs.

3. Truſt him ſolely without preſcribing any methods to him; Leave him to his wiſe choice, wait upon him becauſe he is a God of judgement *, who goes judiciouſly to work, and can beſt time the executions of his will. The wiſe God obſerves particular periods of time for doing his great works. John 2. 4. my hour is not yet come, woman, what have I to do with thee? Which man is no competent judge of: I will do this Miracle, but the ſeaſon is not yet come wherein I will be moſt beautiful. God hath as much wiſdom to pitch the time of performance of his promiſe, as he hath mercy at firſt to make it. How preſumptuous would it be for the ſhallow world, a thing worſe than nothing, and vanity, to preſcribe rules to the Creator? Much more for a ſingle perſon, a lirtle Atome of duſt, infinitely worſe than nothing, and vanity, to do it. Since we had no hand in Creating the world or our ſelves, let us not preſume to direct God in the government of it, Job 38. 4. Where waſt thou when I laid the foundation of the Earth, declare if thou haſt underſtanding? Would it not be a diſparagement to God to ſtoop to thy fooliſh deſires? yea, would you not your ſelves have a lower conceit of him, if he ſhould degrade his wiſdom to the wrong biaſs of your blind reaſon?

* Iſa. 30. 18.

Thirdly, Submit to Providence. 'Tis Gods right to govern the World, and diſpoſe of his Creature; 'tis his Glory in Heaven to do what he will *; let us not by our unſubmiſſive carriage deprive him of the ſame glory on earth; he brings to paſs his will by wayes the Creature cannot underſtand. 'Tis the wiſeſt ſpeech in the medley of fooleries, the Turkiſh Alcoran *. We muſt walk by the rule of reaſon which God hath placed in us for our guide; yet if Providence brings to paſs any other event contrary to our rational expectations, becauſe it is a clear evidence of his will, we muſt acquieſce. As when a Traveller hath two wayes to come to his journeys end, the one ſafe, and the other dangerous, reaſon perſwades him to chuſe the ſafeſt way, wherein he falls among thieves; now having uſed his reaſon, which in that caſe was to be his director, he muſt acquieſce: Gods Providence bringeth forth an event, which he could not without violence to his reaſon avoid. And therefore it is a great vanity, when a man hath reſolved the moſt probable way in a buſineſs, and fails in it, to torment himſelf; becauſe though our conſultations depend upon our ſelves, yet the iſſues of them are ſolely in the hand of God. It concerns us therefore to ſubmit to Gods diſpoſal of us and our affairs, ſince nothing can come to paſs but by the will of God effecting it, or permitting it. If the fall of a Sparrow is not without his Will *, much leſs can the greater events which befall men, the nobler Creatures, be without the ſame concurrence of Gods pleaſure; therefore ſubmit: For,

* Pſal. 115. 3. But our God is in the Heaven: he hath done whatſoever he pleaſed. * Deus triumphat in ſua cauſa, &c.

* Math. 10. 29.

1. Whatſoever God doth, he doth wiſely. His acts are not ſudden and raſh, but acts of Counſel; not taken up upon the preſent poſture of things, but the reſolves of Eternity. As he his the hiegheſt wiſdom, ſo all his acts reliſh of it, and he guides is will by counſel, Eph. 1. 11. [Who worketh all things after the Counſel of his own will]. If God took Counſel in Creating the World, much more in laying a platform of government, much more in the act of government; for men can frame models of government, that can never reduce them into practice. Now God being infinitely wiſe, and his will infinitely good, it muſt needs be that goodneſs and wiſdom are the rules whereby he directs himſelf in his actions in the world. And what greater motive can there be to perſwade our ſubmiſſion, than Wiſdom and Goodneſs tranſacting all things? Gods counſel being the firmeſt, as well as the wiſeſt, it is a folly both ways to reſiſt it.

2. God diſcovers his mind to us by Providences. Every work of God being the reſult of his Counſel; when we ſee it actually brought forth into the World, what elſe doth it diſcover to us, but that Counſel and will of his? Every ſingle Providence hath a language wherein Gods mind is ſignified, much more a train and contexture of them, Luk. 7. 22. Tell John what things you have ſeen and heard, how that the blind ſee, the Lame walk, the Lepers are cleanſed, the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed to life, to the poor the Goſpel is preached. Our Saviour informs John's Diſciples from acts of Providence, he gives him no other anſwer, but turns him over to interpret and conſtrue his works in the caſe. Providence therefore muſt not be reſiſted, when Gods mind in it is diſcovered: 'Tis diſingenuous to act againſt his pleaſure and manifeſt mind; 'tis the Devils ſin. Aaron when he loſt his two Sons, in ſo judicial a manner by Fire from Heaven, yet held his peace *; becauſe God had declared his mind poſitively, I will be glorified. 'Tis dangerous to reſiſt the mind of God, for the word of his Providence ſhall proſper in ſpight of men and Devils, Iſa. 55. 11. My word that goes forth of my mouth, ſhall not return unto me void; it ſhall proſper in the thing whereto I ſent it; and therefore a reſiſting of it is termed θεομαχεῖν, a fighting againſt God by Gamaliel, no great friend to the Church, Acts. 5. 38, 39.

* Levit. 10. 1, 2, 3.

4. Murmur not at Providence. Though we do not clearly reſiſt it, if there be a repining ſubmiſſion, it is a partial oppoſition to the Will of God. We might as well murmur at God's creation, as at his Providence; for that is as arbitrary as this; he is under no Law but his own righteous will: we ſhould therefore leave the government of the world to God's wiſdom, as we acknowledge the frame of it to be an act of his power. If God ſhould manage his wayes according to our preſcriptions, what ſattisfaction would God have? what ſatisfaction would the World have? He might be unjuſt to himſelf, and unjuſt to others. Your own complaints would not be ſtilled, when you ſhould feel the ſmart of your own Counſels; yet if they were, what ſatisfaction could there be to the complaints of others, whoſe intereſts and therefore judgments and deſires lye croſs to yours? Man is a croſs Creature. The Iſraelites exclaimed to God againſt Pharaoh, and when the Scene was changed, they did no leſs murmur againſt Moſes in the wilderneſs. They were as troubleſome when they were delivered, as when they were afflicted. In Egypt they would have their liberty, and in the Wilderneſs their ſtomachs turn, and they long for the Onyons and Garlick, though attended with their former ſlavery. Let God govern the World according to his own Wiſdom and Will, till all mankind can agree in one method to offer to him, and that I think will never be, though the World ſhould laſt for ever. Murmur not therefore; whatſoever is done in the World, is the work of a wiſe Agent, who acts for the perfection of the whole univerſe; and why ſhould I murmur at that which promotes the common happineſs and perfection, that being better and more deſirable, than the perfection of any one particular perſon? Muſt a Lutineſt break all his ſtrings becauſe one is out of tune? And muſt God change his courſe becauſe things are out of order with one man, though in regard of divine Providence things are not out of order in themſelves, or without any care, for God is a God of order? This temper will hinder our prayers; with what face can we pray to that God whoſe wiſdom we thus repine at? If God doth exerciſe a Providence in the World, why do we murmur? if he doth not take care of thoſe things, why do we pray to him? 'tis a contradiction. It alſo hinders us from giving God the glory, and our ſelves the comfortable ſight of his Providence. God may have taken ſomething from us, which is the matter of our ſorrow, and give another thing to us, which might be the matter of our joy. Jacob loſt a joint, and got a bleſſing *: What advantage can it be to murmur? Can all your cryes ſtop the motions of the Heavens, when a ſtorm reaches you? Can your your clamours make the clouds move the faſter, or perſwade the ſhowers from drenching us? Murmuring at any afflictive Providence, is the way to make the Rod ſmarter in itſelf, and ſharper to us.

5. Study Providence. 'Tis a part of Atheiſm not to think the acts of God in the World worth our ſerious thoughts. And if you would know the meaning of his adminiſtrations, grow up in the fear of God. Pſal. 25. 14. The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him. God is highly angry with thoſe that mind him not, Pſal. 28. 5. becauſe they regard not the operation of his hands, he ſhall deſtroy them, and not build them up: He ſhall utterly root them out.

1. Study Providence univerſally. The darkeſt; God brings order out of the Worlds confuſion, even as he framed a beautiful Heaven and Earth out of a rude Maſs. The terribleſt; theſe offer ſome thing worth our obſervation; the dreadful Providence of God makes Sodom an example to after ages. Jude 7. They are ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire, &c. The ſmalleſt; God is a wiſe Agent, and ſo the leaſt of his actions are ſignificant. There is nothing ſuperfluous in thoſe acts we account the meaneſt; for to act vainly and lightly, argues imperfection, which cannot be attributed to God. The wiſdom of God may be much ſeen in thoſe Providence the blind World counts ſmall; as a little picture is oft times of more value, and hath more of the workman's ſkill than a larger which an ignorant perſon might prize at a higher rate; the Lilies, Flowers, Sparrows, our Saviour raiſes excellent obſervations from.

2. Regularly. By the word; compare Providence and the promiſe together; God's manner of adminiſtrations, and the meaning of them is underſtood by the word, Pſal. 77. 13. Thy way, O God, is in the Sanctuary. By faith; we many times correct our ſence by reaſon, when we look through a blew or green glaſs, and ſee all things blew or green; though our ſenſe repreſents them ſo, yet our reaſon diſcovers the miſtake; Why ſhould we not correct reaſon by faith? Indeed our purblind reaſon ſtands in as much need of a regulation by faith, as our deceitful ſence doth of a regulation by reaſon. We may often obſerve in the Goſpel, that the holy Ghoſt taking notice of the particular circumſtances in the bringing Chriſt into the World, and in the courſe of his life, often hath thoſe expreſſions, as it was written, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. There is not a Providence happens in the World, but there are ſome general rules in the Word, whereby we may apprehend the meaning of it. From God's former work diſcovered in his word, we may trace his preſent foot-ſteps: Obſerve the timings of Providence wherein the beauty of it appears, ſince God hath made every thing beautiful in its time.

3. Intirely. View them in their connexion. A harſh touch ſingle would not be pleaſing, but may rarely affect the conſort: The Providences of God bear a juſt proportion to one another, and are beautiful in their intire Scheme; but when regarded apart, we ſhall come far ſhort of a delightful underſtanding of them. As in a piece of Arras folded up, and afterwards particularly opened, we ſee the hand or foot of a man, the branch of a tree; or if we look on the outſide, we ſee nothing but knots and threads, and uncouth ſhapes that we know not what to make of; but when it is fully opened, and we have the whole Webb before us, we ſee what Hiſtories and pleaſing characters are interwoven in it. View them in their end; there is no true judgment to be made of a thing in motion, unleſs we have a right proſpect of the end to which it tends. Many things which may ſeem terrible in their motion, may be exellent in their end. Providence is crowned by the end of it. Aſaph was much troubled about the proſperity of the wicked, and affliction of the Godly, but he was well ſatisfied when he underſtood their end, which was the end of Providence too, Pſal. 73. 16, 17. When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me, until I went into the Sanctuary, then underſtood I their end. Moſes his Rod was a Serpent in its motion upon the ground; but when taken up, it was a Rod again to work miracles. God ſet us a pattern for this in the Creation. He views the Creatures as they came into being, and pronounced them them good, he takes a review of them afterward in their whole frame, and the ſubordination of them to one another, and the ends he had deſtined them to, and then pronounceth them very good; The merciful Providences of God if ſingly looked upon, will appear good, but if reviewed in the whole web, and the end of them, will commence very good in our apprehenſions.

4. Calmly. Take heed of paſſion in this ſtudy, that is a miſt before the eye of the mind; ſeveral pleaſures alſo diſturb and ſtifle the nobler operation of the intellective part, and all improving thoughts of Gods Providence, Iſa. 5. 12. And the Harp, and the Viol, and Wine, are in their feaſts, but they regard not the work of the Lord, nor conſider the operations of his hands; All thoughts of them are choaked by the pleaſures of ſenſe. Paſſions and ſenſual pleaſures, are like flying Clouds in the night, interpoſing themſelves between the ſtars and our eyes, that we cannot obſerve the motions of them. Turbulent paſſions, or Swiniſh pleaſures prevailing, obſcure the Providence of God. Our own humour and intereſt we often make the meaſures of our judgment of Providence: Shimei, when Abſalom rebels againſt his Father, looks no further than his own intereſt, and therefore interprets it as a judgment of God in revenging the houſe of Saul, 2 Sam. 16. 7, 8 The Lord hath returned upon thee all the blood of the houſe of Saul, in whoſe ſtead thou haſt reigned. Therefore the Spirit of God takes particular notice that he was of the houſe of Saul, v. 5. when indeed this judgment was quite another thing, for David's ſin in the matter of Vriah was written in the forehead of it.

5. Seriouſly. 'Tis not an eaſie work; for the cauſes of things are hid as the ſeminal virtues in plants, not viſible till they manifeſt themſelves. Providence is God's Lanthorn in many affairs; if we do not follow it cloſe, we may be left in the dark, and loſe our way. With much Prayer, For we cannot of our ſelves find out the reaſon of them; being ſhallow Creatures, we cannot find our thoſe infinite wiſe methods God obſerves in the managing of them; but if we ſeriouſly ſet to work, and ſeek God in it, God may inform us, and make them intelligible to us. Though a man may not be able of himſelf to find out the frame and motions of an Engine, yet when the Artificer hath explained the work, diſcovered the intent of the Fabrick, it may be eaſily underſtood; If it be dark, whilſt you ſeriouſly muſe on it, God may ſend forth a light into you, and give you an underſtanding of it, Mat. 1. 20. Joſeph thought of thoſe things; and whilſt he thought on them, The Angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream; God made them known to him. The Iſraelites ſaw God's acts in the bulk of them, but Moſes ſaw his way and the manner how he wrought them, Pſal. 103. 7. He made known his wayes unto Moſes, his acts unto the Children of Iſrael. Moſes had more converſe with God than they, and and therefore was admitted into his ſecrets.

6. Holily. With a deſign to conform to that duty Providence calls for. Our motions ſhould be according to the Providence of God, when we underſtand the intent of them. There is a call of Providence, Iſa. 22. 12. In that day the Lord called to weeping and mourning; Sometimes to ſorrow, ſometimes to joy. If it be a Providence to diſcover our ſin, let us comply with it by humiliation; if it be to further our grace, ſuit it by lively and freſh actings. As the ſap in plants deſcends with the Sun's declination, and aſcends at the return of the Sun from the Tropick; there are ſeveral graces to be exerciſed upon ſeveral acts of Providence; either publick to the Church and Nation, or particular to our own perſons. Sometimes faith, ſometimes joy, ſometimes patience, ſometimes ſorrow for ſin. There are ſpiritual leſſons in every Providence, for it doth not only offer ſomething to be underſtood, but ſome things to be practiſed, Mark 10. 15. A Child is brought to Chriſt, and Chriſt from thence teaches them a leſſon of humility. Luk. 13. 1, 2, 3. When Chriſt diſcourſes of that ſad Providence of the blood of the Galileans, and the Tower of Siloa, he puts them upon the exerciſe of repentance. The Ruler enquired the time when his Son began to recover, that his faith in Chriſt might be confirmed, for upon that circumſtance it did much hang; and in doubtful caſes after a ſerious ſtudy of it, and thou knoweſt not which way to determine, conſider what makes moſt for God's glory and thy ſpiritual good, for that is the end of all: Let us therefore ſtudy Providence; not as Childre n do Hiſtories, to know what men were in the World, or to pleaſe their fancy only; but as wiſe men, to underſtand the motions of States, and the intrigues of Councels; to enrich them with a knowledge whereby they might be ſerviceable to their Countrey. So let us enquire into the Providence of God, to underſtand the mind of God, the intereſt of the Church, the wiſdom and kindneſs of God, and our own duty in comformity thereunto.

6. Aſcribe the Glory of every Providence to God. Abraham's Steward petitioned God at the beginning of his buſineſs, Gen. 24. 12. and he bleſſes God at the ſucceſs of it, ver. 26, 27. We muſt not thank the tools which are uſed in the making an engine, and aſcribe unto them what we owe to the Workmans skill: Man is but the inſtrument, God's Wiſdom is the Artiſt. Let us therefore return the Glory of all where it is moſt rightly placed: We may ſee the difference between Rachel and Leah in this reſpect, when Rachel had a Son by her maid Bilhah, ſhe aſcribes it to God's care, and calls his name Dan, which ſignifies judging, Gen. 30. 6. God hath judged me, and heard my voice. That the very Name might put her in remembrance of the kindneſs of God in anſwering her prayer. And the next Naphali, ſhe eſteems as the fruit of prayer, verſ. 8. Whereas Leah takes no notice of God, but vaunts of the multitude of her Children, ver. 11. behold a troop comes. She impoſeth the name of Gad upon them, which alſo ſignifies fortune or good luck. And the next Aſher, verſ. 13. which is fortunate or bleſſed. And we find Leah of the ſame mind afterward, verſ. 17. It is ſaid God hearkned unto her, ſo that her Son Iſſachar was an anſwer of Prayer; but ſhe aſcribes it to a lower cauſe which had moved God; becauſe ſhe had given her maid to her Husband, verſ. 18. Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but to thy name be the Glory.

Doct. 2. All the motions of Providence in the World are ultimately for the good of the Church; of thoſe whoſe heart is perfect towards him. Providence follows the rule of Scripture. Whatſoever was written, was written for the Churches comfort *. Whatſoever is acted in order to any thing written, is acted for the Churches good. All the Providences of God in the World are conformable to his declarations in his word. All former Providences were ultimately in order to the bringing a Mediator into the World, and for the glory of him; then ſurely all the Providences of God ſhall be in order to the perfecting the Glory of Chriſt in that myſtical body, whereof Chriſt is head, and wherein his affection and his Glory are ſo much concerned. See the Proof of this by a Scripture or two. Pſal. 25. 10. All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto ſuch as keep his Covenant and his Teſtimonies. Not one path, but [all] the works and motions; not one particular act or paſſage of providence, but the whole tract of his proceedings; not only thoſe which are more ſmooth and pleaſant, but thoſe which are more rugged and bitter. All [mercy and truth] ſutable to that affection he bears in his heart to them, and ſutable to the declaration of that affection he hath made in his promiſe. There is a contexture and a friendly connexion of kindneſs and faithfulneſs in every one of them. They both kiſs and embrace each other in every motion of God towards them. As mercy made the Covenant, ſo truth ſhall perform it. And there ſhall be as much mercy as truth in all Gods actings towards thoſe that keep it, Rom. 8. 28. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe; [we know] we do not conjecture or gueſs ſo, but we have an infallible aſſurance of it. [All things] even the moſt frightful, and ſo thoſe that have in reſpect of ſenſe, nothing but Gall and Wormwood in them; [work together] they all conſpire with an admirable harmony and unanimous conſent for a Chriſtians good. One particular act may ſeem to work to the harm of the Church, as one particular act may work to the good of wicked men: but the whole ſeries and frame of things combine together for the good of thoſe that are affectionate to him. Both the Lance that makes us bleed, and the plaiſter which refreſheth the Wounds. Both the griping purges, and the warming Cordials dials combine together for the Patients cure [to them who are called according to his purpoſe.] Here the Apoſtle renders a reaſon of this poſition; becauſe they are called not only in the general amongſt the reſt of the world, to whom the Goſpel comes; but they are ſuch that were in Gods purpoſe and counſel from Eternity to ſave, and therefore reſolved to encline their will to Faith in Chriſt. Therefore all his other Counſels about the affairs of the world ſhall be for their good. Another reaſon of this, the Apoſtle intimates, verſ. 27. The Spirit makes interceſſion for the Saints according to the will of God. The interceſſions of the Spirit, which are alſo according to Gods will and purpoſe, will not be fruitleſs in the main end, which both the interceſſions of the Spirit and purpoſe of God, and the will and deſire of the Saints, do aim at, which is their good. Indeed where any is the object of this grand purpoſe of God, he is the object of God's infinite and innumerable thoughts, Pſal. 40. 5. Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works which thou haſt done, and thy thoughts which are to us ward, they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee; If I would declare and ſpeak of them, they are more than can be numbred. The Pſalmiſt ſeems to intimate, that in all the wonderful works which God hath done, his thoughts are toward his people. He thinks of them in all his actions; and thoſe thoughts are infinite, and cannot be numbered, and reckoned up by any Creature. He ſeems to reſtrain the thoughts of God towards his people in all thoſe works of wonder which he doth in the World, and which others are the Subjects of: But his thoughts, or purpoſes, and intentions in all (for the word ſignifies purpoſes too) are chiefly, next to his own glory, directed toward his people, thoſe that truſt in him, which verſ. 4. he had pronounced bleſſed. They run in his mind as if his heart was ſet upon them, and none but them.

Here I ſhall premiſe two things as the ground-work of what follows.

1. God certainly in all his actions has ſome end, that is without queſtion, becauſe he is a wiſe Agent; to act vainly and lightly, is an evidence of imperfection, which cannot be aſcribed to the only wiſe God. The Wheels of Pro-
* Ezek. 1.18. vidence are full of Eyes *. There is motion, and a knowledge of the end of that motion. And Jeſus Chriſt, who is Gods Deputy in the providential govern-
* Revel. 5. 6. ment, hath Seven Eyes, as well as Seven Horns *. A perfect ſtrength, and a perfect knowledge how to uſe that ſtrength, and to what end to uſe it. Seven being the number of perfection in Scripture.

2. That certainly is Gods end which his heart is moſt ſet upon, and that which is laſt in execution. What doth God do at the folding up of the World, but perfect his people, and welcome them into Glory? Therefore God principally next to himſelf loves his Church. The whole Earth is his, but the Church is his treaſure, Exod. 19. 5. If you will keep my Covenant, then ſhall you be a peculiar treaſure unto me above all people, for all the Earth is mine; Segullah ſuch a treaſure, that a Man, a King will intruſt in no hands but his own; all the Earth is mine, is not a reaſon why the Church was his treaſure, but an incentive of thankfulneſs, that when the whole Earth was his, and lay before him, and there were many people that he might have choſen and loved before them, yet he pitched upon them to make them his choiceſt treaſure. And when the bleſſed God hath pitched upon a people, and made them his treaſure, what he doth for them is with his whole heart, and with his whole Soul, Jer. 32. 41, 42. ſpeaking of making an everlaſting Covenant, he adds, yea I will rejoyce over them to do them good, &c. aſſuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole Soul. As though God minded nothing elſe but thoſe people he had made an everlaſting Covenant with; which is the higheſt ſecurity, and moſt pregnant expreſſion of his affection that can be given to any; not to give them a parcel or moiety of his heart, but the whole infinite intire piece, and to engage it all with the greateſt delight in doing good to them. That infinite heart of God, and all the contrivances and workings of it, center in the Churches welfare. The world is a Wilderneſs, but the Church is a Garden. If he water the Wilderneſs, will he not much more dreſs his Garden? If the flights of Birds be obſerved by him, ſhall not alſo the particular concernments

He hath a repoſitory for them, and all that belong to them; He hath a Book of Life for their Names *, a book of Record for their members *, a Note-book for their Speeches, Mal. 3. 16. A book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord; And a book of Providence for their preſervation, Exod. 32. 32. I. The World.

II. Gifts and common graces of men in the World.

III. Angels.

I. The World. The whole World was made and ordained for the good of the Church, next to the glory of God. This will appear in three things. First.

1. The continuance of the World is for their ſakes. God would have deſtroyed the World becauſe of the ignorance and wickedneſs of it, before this time, but he overlooked it all, and had reſpect to the times of Chriſt, and the publiſhing faith in him, and repentance, Act. 17. 30. And the times of this ignorance God winked at, God overlooked *, he looked not ſo upon them, as to be provoked to deſtroy the World; but his eyes were fixed on the times of Chriſtianity; therefore would not take notice in the extremity of his juſtice of the wickedneſs of thoſe foregoing ages. Believers are the Salt of the Earth *. which makes the World ſavoury to God, and keeps it from corrupting. 'Tis meant not only of the Apoſtles, but of Chriſts Diſciples, of all Chriſtians, for to them was that Sermon made, v. 1. If the Salt have loſt his ſavour, if the Salt be corrupted, and Chriſtianity overthrown in the World, wherewith ſhall the World be ſalted? how can it be kept from corruption? If they that perſecuted the Prophets before you in Judea, (which is ſometimes called the Earth in Scripture) cannot reliſh you, and find nothing grateful to their Palates in your Doctrine and Converſation, wherewith ſhall they be ſalted? How ſhall they be preſerved from corruption? The Land will be good for nothing but to be given as a prey to the Romans to be trod under their feet, as being caſt out of Gods protection. They are the foundation of the world, Pro. 10. 25. the righteous are an everlaſting foundation. Maimonides underſtands it thus, that the World ſtands for the righteous ſakes. When God had Noah and his Family lodged in the Ark, he cares not what deluge and deſtruction he brings upon the reſt of the World. When he had conducted Lot out of Sodom, he brings down that dreadful ſtorm of fire. He cares for no place, no nor for the whole World, any longer than whilſt his People are there, or he hath ſome to bring in, in time. For the meaneſt believer is of more worth than a World; therefore when God hath gathered all together, he will ſet fire upon this frame of the Creation: For what was the end of Chriſts coming and dying, but to gather all things together in one? Eph. 1. 10. That in the diſpenſation of the fulneſs of time he might gather together in one all things in Chriſt. When Chriſt hath ſummed up all together, he hath attained his end. And to what purpoſe then can we imagine God ſhould continue the World any longer? for his delight is not ſimply in the World, but in the Saints there. Pſal. 16. 3. But to the Saints that are in the Earth, in whom is all my delight; not in the Earth, but in the Saints there, which are the only excellent things in it, which Chriſt ſpeaks (of whom that Pſalm is meant) who knew well what was the object of his Fathers pleaſure. The ſweet ſavour God ſmelt in Noah's ſacrifice, was the occaſion of God's declaration for the Worlds ſtanding, Gen. 8. 21. and the Lord ſaid in his heart, I will not curſe the ground any more for mans ſake. That he would no more ſmite it with a totally deſtroying judgment. It was his reſpect to Chriſt repreſented in that ſacrifice, and to the faith and grace of Noah the ſacrificer. What ſavour could an infinitely pure Spirit ſmell in the blood and flames of beaſts?

2. The courſe of natural things is for the good of the Church, or particular members of it. God makes articles of agreement with the Beaſts and Fowls, whoſe nature is raging and ravenous, and binds them in ſure bonds for the performance of thoſe articles, Hoſea 2. 18. And in that day will I make a Covenant for them with the Beaſts of the field, and with the fowls Heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground, and will make them to lye down ſafely. As upon our ſin God can arm them againſt us; ſo upon our obedience he can make them ſerviceable even againſt their Natures; as if he had made a Covenant with them, and they had both the reaſon and virtue to obſerve it I do not remember any inſtance in Scripture, that God went out of the uſual tract of his Providence, and acted in an extraordinary manner, but where his people were one way or other concerned. It was for Joſhua's and the Iſraelites ſake that the Sun was arreſted to ſtand ſtill in the Valley of Ajalon, that they might have light enough to defeat their Enemies, and purſue their victory *. The Sea ſhall, againſt its natural courſe, ſtand in heaps like walls of Braſs to aſſiſt the Iſraelites eſcape *. The fire is reſtrained in the operation of its nature, even whilſt it retains its burning quality, when the lives of the three valiant believing Children are in danger. The mouths of Lyons are muzled, when the ſafety of his beloved Daniel is concerned *. And the ſhadow goes back upon the Dyal for Hezekiah's ſake *. When God would at any time deliver his people, He can muſter up Lightnings and Thunders for their aſſiſtance *; He can draw all the Regiments of Heaven into Battel-array, and arm the Stars to fight againſt Siſera, when Iſraels condition needs it; and make even the loweſt Creatures to liſt themſelves as Auxiliaries in the ſervice. God hath not a diſpleaſure with ſenſleſs Creatures, neither is tranſported with ſtrains of fury againſt ſuch objects, when he alters their natural courſe. Hab. 3. 8. Was the Lord diſpleaſed againſt the Rivers? was thy wrath againſt the Sea, that thou didſt ride upon thy horſes and chariots of ſalvation? No, but he made thoſe Creatures the Horſes and Chariots to ſpeed aſſiſtance and ſalvation to his people, which the Pſalmiſt elegantly deſcribes, Pſal. 114. All Creatures are his Hoſt; and that God that created them, hath ſtill the Soveraign command over them, and can imbodie them in an Army to ſerve his purpoſe for the deliverance of his people, as he did againſt Pharaoh.

* Dan. 6. 22.

3. The intereſt of Nations is ordered as is moſt for the Churches good. He orders both the courſe of natural things, and of civil affairs, for their intereſt. He alters the ſtate of things, and changeth Governours and Governments for the ſake of his people. For theſe cauſes God ſent Eliſha to Crown Jehu King, 2 King. 9. 6, 7. I have anointed thee King over the people, the Lord, &c. that I may avenge the blood of my Servants the Prophets, and the blood of all the Servants of the Lord at the hand of Jezabel. For the ſakes of the Godly in that Nation, and the revenging the blood of the Prophets which had been ſhed, was he raiſed up by the Lord. He ſent ſuch judgments upon Egypt, that it was as much the intereſt of that Nation to let Iſrael go, as it was before to keep them their vaſſals. God orders the intereſt and affairs of Nations for thoſe ends; and according to this diſpoſition of affairs, Chriſt times his interceſſions for his Church. The Angels had been ſent out to view the ſtate of the World, and found it in peace, Zach. 1. 11. behold, all the earth ſits ſtill, and is at reſt; there had been Wars in Artaxerxes and Xerxes his time, but in the time of Darius, that part of the World had an univerſal peace, which was the fitteſt time for the reſtoration of the Jews, and building the Temple; becauſe it could not be built, but by the Kings coſt, whoſe treaſure in the time of War was expended another way; nor would it conſiſt with their policy to reſtore the Jews to their Government at ſuch a time when they had Wars with the Neighbour-parts of Egypt. See how God orders the ſtate of the World in ſubſerviency to his gracious intentions towards his Church. The time of the Jewiſh captivity was now out, according to the promiſe of God, and God gives that part of the World a general peace, that the reſtauration of the Jews, and the rebuilding of the Temple might be facilitated, and the truth of his promiſe in their deliverance accompliſhed. Upon the news of this general peace in that part of the World, Chriſt expoſtulates with God for the reſtauration of Jeruſalem, verſ. 12. How long, O Lord, wilt thou not have mercy on Jeruſalem, and on the Cities of Judah, againſt which thou haſt had indignation theſe threeſcore and ten years? The time of the Captivity determined by God, was now expired. The firſt reformation in Germany was back'd by Reaſons of State as it was then altered; it being the intereſt of many Princes of that Countrey to countenance Luther's Doctrine, for the putting a ſtop to the growing greatneſs of Charles the fifth, who had evident deſigns to enſlave them. I might mention many more, only by the way let me adviſe thoſe that have an inclination to read hiſtories of former tranſactions, to which men naturally are addicted, to make this your end, to obſerve the ſtrange Providences of God in the World, and how admirably he hath made them ſubſervient to the intereſt of the Church; which will be the moſt profitable way of reading them, whereby they will not only ſatisfie your curioſity, but eſtabliſh your Chriſtianity. Calvin underſtands that place, Deut. 32. 8. He ſets the bounds of the people according to the number of the Children of Iſrael, that in the whole ordering of the ſtate of the World, God propoſeth this as his end, to conſult for the good of his people, and his care extends to the reſt only in order to them; and though they are but a ſmall number, yet he orders his whole Government of the Worlds affairs as may beſt tend to their Salvation. Therefore God ſets the people bounds, or enlargeth them according as they may be ſerviceable one way or other to this end. And the reaſon is rendered, v. 9. For the Lords portion is his people, and Jacob is the Lot of his inheritance. Therefore God orders all the reſt of the World in ſubſerviency to the maintaining and improving his portion and inheritance.

2. As the World, ſo the gifts and common graces of men in the World are for the good of the Church, which is a great argument for providence in general; ſince there is nothing ſo conſiderable in government as the diſpoſing of places to men according to their particular endowments and abilities for them. And the beſtowing ſuch gifts upon men, is none of the meaneſt arguments for Gods providential Government of the World. As, Secondly.

1. The gifts of good men. The gifts conferred upon Paul were depoſited in him, not only to be poſſeſſed by him, but uſed and laid out for the good of the Church, Col. 1. 25. Whereof I am made a Miniſter according to the diſpenſation of God which is given to me for you: The manifeſtation of the Spirit to any man is given to profit withal, 1 Cor. 12. 7. And this is the great end for which men ſhould ſeek to excel, viz. for the edifying of the Church, 1 Cor. 14. 12. For as much as you are zealous of Spiritual gifts, ſeek that you may excel to the edifying of the Church.

2. The gifts and common graces of bad men. There is ſomething that is amiable in men, though they have not grace. As in Stones, Plants and Flowers, though they have not ſenſe, there is ſomething grateful in them, as colour, and ſmell, &c. And all thoſe things that are lovely in men, are for the Churches good, the beſt life, and the worſt death, things preſent, let who will be the poſſeſſor, all things between Life and Death are for the good of Believers, becauſe they are Chriſts, 1 Cor. 3. 22. Whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, or the World, i. e. [Whether the gifts of the prime lights in the Church, or the common gifts of the world] are all yours, and ye are Chriſts, and Chriſt is Gods. God is the diſpenſer of them, Chriſt is the Governour of them, and all for your ſakes. As the medicinal qualities of waters are not for the good of themſelves, but the accommodation of the indigencies of men. By the common works of the Spirit God doth keep men from the evil of the World. For it cannot be ſuppoſed, that the Spirit, whoſe miſſion is principally for the Church, ſhould give ſuch gifts out of love to men which hate him, and are not the objects of his eternal purpoſe; but he hath ſome other ends in doing it, which is the advantage of his Church and People: And this God cauſes by the preaching of the Goſpel, which when it works gracious works in ſome, produceth common works in others for the good of thoſe gracious ones. As a ſeed of corn hath ſtraw husks and Chaff come up with it, which are ſhelters to that little ſeed which lies in the midſt; ſo in the preaching of the Goſpel there are ſome husks come up among natural men, which God makes to be ſhelters to the Church, as thoſe common works, and reſtraining men through the knowledge of Chriſt. God gives gifts to them, not out of love to them, but love to his Church. As Nurſes of great mens Children are fed with better meat than the other Servants, not out of any particular perſonal reſpect to them, but to their office, that the milk whereby the Child is nouriſhed, may be the ſweeter and wholſomer; were it not for that Relation, ſhe muſt be content with the Diet allowed to the reſt of the Servants. Some ſtinking plants may have medicinal virtues, which the Phyſician extracts for the cure of a diſeaſe, and flings the reſt upon the Dunghil. God beſtows ſuch qualities upon men otherwiſe unſavoury to him, which he draws forth upon ſeveral occaſions for the good of thoſe that are more peculiarly under his care, and then caſts them away. Theſe gifts are indeed the ruine of bad men, becauſe of their pride; but the Churches advantage in regard of their excellency, and are often as profitable to others, as dangerous to themſelves. As all that good which is in plants and animals, is for the good of man; ſo all the gifts of natural men are for the Churches good, for they are for that end as the principal, next the glory of God; becauſe every inferior thing is ordained to ſomething ſuperior as its end. Plants are ordained for the nouriſhment of Beaſts, and both Plants and Beaſts, for Men. The inferior men for the ſervice of higher, and all for the community; yet ſtill there is a higher end beyond thoſe, viz. the Glory of God, to which they are ultimately ordained, which is ſo connected with the Churches good, that what ſerves one, ſerves the other.

3. Angels, the top Creatures in the Creation, are ordered for the good of the Church. If the Stars are not Cyphers in the World only to be gaz'd upon, but have their influences both upon Plants and Animals; As the Sun in impregnating the Earth, and enlivening the Plants, and aſſiſting the growth of fruits for the good of mankind: If the Stars have thoſe natural influences upon the ſenſible world, the Angels which are the morning Stars, have no leſs intereſt as inſtruments in the government of it. The Heathens had ſuch a notion of Demons working thoſe things which were done in the World, but according to the will and order of the ſupream God. The Angels are called watchers, Dan. 4. 13. a Watcher, and an holy one, verſ. 17. this is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones: they watch for Gods orders, and watch for Gods honour, and the Churches good. There are orders of ſtate among them, for we read of their decree; 'tis called their decree miniſterially, as they execute it; approbativè as they ſubſcribe to the equity and goodneſs of it. As the Saints are ſaid to judge the World, not authoritativè, as in commiſſion with Chriſt, but as they approve of Chriſts ſentence. They ſeem to requeſt thoſe things of God which may make for his glory; and they decree among themſelves what is fit to be preſented to God in order to his glory. They cannot endure that men ſhould trample upon Gods authority, deſpoil him of his right, and tread down his inheritance; and therefore they ſend ſuch requeſts to God to act ſo as men may acknowledg him and his government, to the intent that the living may know that the moſt high rules in the Kingdoms of men. Their care therefore muſt be for the Church, ſince God rules all things in order to that, and ſince that is Gods portion and inheritance; ſo that as they have a care of Gods glory, they muſt alſo have a care of Gods portion, and his peculiar treaſure. The inward part of the Temple was to be adorned with Cherubims, to note the ſpecial attendance of the Holy Angels in the aſſemblies of the Saints: As evil Angels plot againſt the Church, ſo good Angels project for it. Though in the Scripture we find Angels ſometimes employed in affairs of common Providence, and doing good to them that are not of the Church; as one is ſent to comfort Hagar, and relieve Iſhmael upon his cry, though he had ſcoffed at Iſaac the heir of the covenant, when he was in Abraham's Family *; yet for the moſt part they were employed in the concerns of ſome of his ſpecial Servants. Angels thruſt Lot out of Sodom *. An Angel ſtopt the Lyons mouths when Daniel was in the Den, Dan. 6. 18. My God hath ſent his Angel, and hath ſhut the Lyons mouths. God emploies Angels in the preſerving and ruining of Empires, which is clear in the prophecy of Daniel, and ſome underſtand Iſa. 10. 34. And Lebanon ſhall fall by a mighty one, of an Angel. As the Soul ſends forth a multitude of Spirits ſwiftly into the nerves for the ſupply of the loweſt member, which runs thither upon the leaſt motion: So do the Angels which are Gods Miniſters, run at the appointment of God, and are employed in all the wheels of Providence. The Spirit of the living Creatures was in the wheels of Providence *.

* Gen. 21. 17.

* Gen. 19. 25, 16.

* Ezek. 1. 20.

1. The higheſt orders among them are not exempted from being officers for the Church. Though they are called Gods Angels in reſpect of their immediate attendance on God; yet they are called mans Angels in reſpect of the ſervice they do for them, Matth. 18. 10. Their Angels do alwaies behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven. They are not the ordinary ſort of Angels only which attend upon thoſe little ones, upon young converts, humble Souls, thoſe little ones in the Kingdom of Heaven; but they are the higheſt Courtiers there, ſuch as ſee the face of God, and ſtand before him. A King hath many Servants, but not every Servant, only the chief of the Nobility, ſtand before him; ſo they are not Angels of the meaneſt order and rank in Heaven, that are ordered to attend the loweſt Chriſtian. The Apoſtle makes no doubt of this, Heb. 1. 14. are they not all miniſtring Spirits [there is no queſtion but they are] ſent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of Salvation? He aſſerts confidently that not one of them is blotted out of the Liſt for this employment. Are they not all? none are exempted from the ſervice of God, ſo none are exempted from the end of that ſervice, which is the good of Believers. They are Gods ſervants, but for the Churches good, for them which ſhall be heirs, [are they not all?] it is irrational to deny it. And they are ſent forth, every one of them hath his commiſſion ſign'd by God for this purpoſe, and not only for the Church in general, but for every member in particular [for the heirs of Salvation.] And not only for them which are already called and enrolled, but for them who ſhall be called, whoſe names are written in the Book of Gods election [who ſhall be heirs.] And they are not only faintly ſent, as if they might go if they will, but they have a ſtrict charge to look after them well, not in one or two of their works, or ways, but in all, Pſal. 91. 11. He ſhall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy wayes, to bear thee up in their hands, leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone; they are to uſe all their ſtrength to this purpoſe, to bear them up in their hands. As the elder Children are appointed by Parents to have a care of the younger in their works and motions, and to uſe both their wiſdom and ſtrength for them. The Angels are a guard to ſecure them here, and at laſt to convey them to their Fathers houſe, Luk. 16. 22. when a man is in favour with a Prince, all the Courtiers will be obſervant of him.

2. Armies of them are employed upon this occaſion. There are great multitudes of them, as Bildad ſpeaks, Job 25. 3. Is there any number of his armies? that is, of his Angels: when Joel ſpeaks of the heathens gathering together; thither, ſaith he, Lord, cauſe thy mighty ones to come down *. A whole ſquadron of them ſhall attend upon a gracious man according to the circumſtances he is involved in. Gen. 32. 1, 2. And Jacob went on his way, and the Angels of God met him; and when Jacob ſaw them, he ſaid this is Gods hoſt. Regiments of Angels, enough to make up an Army (for ſo Jacob terms them) met him upon the way to ſecure his Brother Eſau, and to encourage him in his journey. So ſome interpret, 2 Sam. 5. 24. the ſound of a going in the tops of the mulberry-trees. The ſign of the marching of a Brigade of Angels, with the Lord, in the head of them, for the diſcomfiture of David's Enemies; then ſhall the Lord go out

3. Chriſt hath the government of them to this end for his Church. Angels are all put in ſubjection to him, Heb. 2. 7, 8. In that he put all in ſubjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. He is exalted above all principality and power, God hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the Church, Eph. 1. 21, 22. all things, even principalities and powers are put under his feet, to be commiſſioned and influenced by him for the good of his Church *; they are ordered by the Spirit of Chriſt to this purpoſe, Zach. 1. 10. Thoſe are they whom the Lord hath ſent to walk to and fro through the Earth. They are his faithful meſſengers diſpatcht into the World by him, as ſcouts and ſpies to take notice of the ſtate of the World, and to give him intelligence, and an exact account of affairs, and v. 11. they give an account to Chriſt. Chriſt is the Head and General of them, Col 2. 10. They are his Hoſt, alwaies in a warlike poſture, with Chriſt in the Head of them, Zac. 1. 8. upon their Horſes, which notes readineſs to move and ſpeed in motion: And as an Hoſt they are ſaid to pitch their tents round about them that fear him; and are in a continual conflict with the evil Angels to prevent their deſigns in the behalf of Chriſt, whom they acknowledge as their head by their worſhip of him *. Chriſt orders them to take care to ſeal his Servants in the foreheads, that they may be preſerved in the ſtorms which ſhall happen in the World at the time of the ruine of the Romiſh Papacy, Revel. 7. 2, 3. An Angel comes that had the ſeal of the living God (commiſſion of God) ſaying, hurt not the Earth, nor the Sea, nor the trees, till we have ſealed the Servants of our God in the foreheads.

* Ezek. 1. 12. Whither the Spirit was to go, they went.

* Heb. 1. 6.

4. The great actions which have been done in the World, or ſhall be done for the Church, are performed by them. Angels were ſent as expreſſes by God with his great decrees concerning the revolutions of times *. An Angel was ſent to Daniel with the meſſage of a Redeemer, and the cleareſt prophecy of Chriſt, which the Jews are not able to anſwer to this day, which they moſt ſtartle at: Part of the diſcovery of the Revelation to John, which is as a ſtanding Almanack to the Church, was made us by an Angel *. And when by the courſe of time thoſe turnings are to happen in the World, the Angels muſt have their ſhare of ſervice in them. The Trumpets are ſounded by Angels, and the Vials which are filled with the cauſes of ſuch alterations, are poured out by the hands of Angels. Some indeed by the Angels there mentioned, underſtand the viſible inſtruments of reformation, not excluding the Angels who are the inviſible Miniſters in the affairs of the World *.

5. They engage in this work for the Church with delight, They act as Gods Miniſters in his Providence with a unanimous conſent ‡. So that they perform their office with the ſame ſwiftneſs, and with the ſame affection, without emulation, to go one before another, which makes many actions ſucceed ill among men; but they go hand in hand. They do it with affection; both in reſpect of the kind diſpoſition of their natures, and as they are fellow-members of the ſame body, for they are parts of the Church, and of the Heavenly Jeruſalem, Heb 12. 22. Ye are come to the Heavenly Jeruſalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general aſſembly and Church of the firſt born, and therefore act out of affection to that which is a part of their body, as well as out of obedience to their head. They do it in reſpect of their own improvement too, and increaſe of their knowledge (which is the deſire of all intellectual Creatures.) For they compleat their underſtandings by the ſight of the methods of infinite wiſdom in the perfecting his gracious deſigns. And it is Gods intent that they ſhould grow in the knowledge of his great myſtery by their employment, Eph. 3. 10. To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in Heavenly places might be known by the church the mani fold wiſdom of God, i. e. By the gracious works of God towards the Church, and in the behalf of it, for the ſecurity and growth of the Church, and in the executions of thoſe decrees which as inſtruments they are imployed in. For I do not underſtand, how it can be meant of the knowledge of Chriſt, for that they know more than the Church below can acquaint them with; for without queſtion they have a clear inſight into the offices of Chriſt who is the Head, and whom they are ordered to worſhip. They underſtand the aim of his death, and reſurrection, and can better explain the dark predictions of Scripture, than purblind man can. But by obſerving the Methods which God uſes in the accompliſhment of them, they become more intelligent, and commence Maſters of knowledg in a higher degree, which it is probable is one reaſon of their joy, when they ſee Gods infinite Wiſdom and Grace in the converſion of a ſinner; without affection to them, and their employment about them, they could not rejoice ſo much: And their rejoicing in their firſt bringing in to God, argues their joy in all their employments, which concerns their welfare.

2. As all good things, ſo all bad things are ordered by providence for the good of the Church. That which in its own nature is an injury, by Gods ordering puts on the nature of a mercy; and what is poyſon in it ſelf, by the Almighty art becoms a Soveraign medicine. Are Gods diſpenſations in their own nature deſtructive? That wiſe Phyſician knows how to make poyſons work the effect of purges: Are they ſharp? It is to humble and purge the Church? As ſhadows ſerve to ſet out the pictures, ſo the darkeſt paſſages of Providence are made by God to commend the beauty of thoſe glorious things he works for his Church. We may ſee this in Secondly.

1. Bad perſons. As,

1. The Devil. God manageth him for his own glory, and the ſtrengthning of Believers *. The Devils deſired to enter into the herd of ſwine, with an intent, probably, not only to deſtroy the ſwine, but to incenſe the Gadarens againſt him, out of whom they had been caſt, to do him ſome conſiderable miſchief. But what is the iſſue? As they diſcover their malice, ſo they inhance the value of Chriſts kindneſs to the diſtreſſed man, whom he had freed from this tyranny: Hereby alſo was the Law of God juſtified, in commanding the Jews to abſtain from Swines Fleſh, which the Gadarens, being Apoſtate Jews, had broken; he magnified his own power in the routing ſuch a number of unclean Spirits, which had not been ſo conſpicuous in the turning them out of one man, had not this regiment diſcovered themſelves among the Swine, and brought ſuch a loſs upon the Gadarens; whereby as they ſhewed their own ſtrength and malice, ſo they diſcovered occaſionally the greatneſs of Chriſts charity, and his power over them; ſo that in granting the malicious petition of this exaſperated Legion, the Law of God is juſtified, our Saviours love glorified, his power manifeſted. And a foundation laid for the gaining Proſelytes in that Country (to which purpoſe he left the man he had cured *.) and to ſtrengthen the faith of thoſe poor Believers, which then followed him. God makes uſe of the Devils by the Soveraignty of Providence, to bring about ends unknown to themſelves for all their wiſdom. The malice of the Devil againſt Job hath rendered him a ſtanding miracle of patience for ever. They are the rulers of the darkneſs of this World *. Not of the light of the World; they are the rulers of the wicked, and the ſcullions of the Saints, to ſcour and cleanſe them. They are the rulers of the World, but ſubordinate to ſerve the Providence of God; wherein God declares his wiſdom by ſerving himſelf of the worſt of his Enemies. The Devil thought he had brought a total deſtruction upon mankind, when he perſwaded our firſt Parents to eat of the forbidden fruit; but the only wiſe God ordered it to bring about a greater glory to himſelf, and a more firm ſtability to his people, in introducing an everlaſting covenant which could not be broken, and eſtabliſhing their happineſs upon ſurer terms than it was ſetled in Paradiſe. And afterwards in filling the heart of Judas to betray Chriſt, and the hearts of the Jews to crucifie him. Even by that way whereby he thought to hinder the good of mankind, he occaſionally promotes their perpetual redemption: And I do not

* Math. 8. 31, 32.

* Luk. 8. 39.

* Eph. 6. 12.

not much queſtion but thoſe very principles which the Devil had diſtilled into the Gentile World, of ſhedding humane blood in ſacrifices, for expiation of guilt; and the Gods converſing with men in humane wayes, and the imagination of the intereceſſion of Dæmons for them; the firſt out of rage againſt mankind, and both that and the other to induce them to Idolatry, might facilitate the entertainment of Chriſt as the great expiatory ſacrifice, and the receiving of him as the Son of God, though in an humane ſhape, and the belief of his interceſſion. God over-reaches the Devil, and makes him inſtrumental for good, where he deſigns hurt and miſchief.

2. Wicked men. All the wicked in the midſt of the Church are for the good of it, either for the exerciſe of their grace, or ſecurity of their perſons, or intereſt, Pro. 16. 7. When a mans ways pleaſe the Lord, He will make his enemies to be at peace with him. Sometimes he will incline their hearts intentionally to favour, or order even their actions againſt them to procure their peace, contrary to their intentions. Sometimes God makes them his Sword to cut his people, ſometimes Phyſick to purge them, ſometimes Fire to melt and refine them, ſometimes Hedges to preſerve them, ſometimes a ranſom to redeem them *. A Traveller makes uſe of the mettle of a head-ſtrong Horſe to carry him to his journeys end. That wind which would overturn a little Boat, the ſkilful Pilot makes uſe of to drive his Ship into the Harbour, and the Husbandman to cleanſe his Corn from the Chaff. Though the ends of the workers, viz. God and wicked men, are different; yet the end of the work is but one, which is ordered by Gods Soveraign pleaſure. It was promiſed in the promiſe of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, Gen. 9. 27. God ſhall enlarge Japhet, and he ſhall dwell in the tents of Shem, and Canaan ſhall be his ſervant. God ſhall allure Japhet, the Gentiles of Europe, to dwell in the tents of Shem, and Canaan the head of the curſed poſterity, ſhall be Servants to the Church beſide their will, and ſometimes againſt it, by an over-ruling hand. And Chriſt hath bought them to be his Servants, 2 Pet. 2. 1. denying the Lord that bought them, and therefore hath the diſpoſing of them, whether they voluntarily give up themſelves to him or no. He is a Lord by purchaſe over them, who own him not as a Saviour. The hatred of the Churches enemies ſometimes conduceth more to her good, than the affections of all her worldly Friends. Now this appears,

Helvicus contra Judæos.

1. In furthering the Goſpel. The Jews, who ſpeak not of Chriſt among themſelves, but with opprobrious terms, have been the exact preſervers of the Old Teſtament, even to the very number of the letters; wherein Chriſtians have ſufficient to confirm them in the belief of Chriſts being the Meſſiah, and unanſwerable arguments againſt their adverſaries; Whereupon St. Auſtin terms them capſarios Eccleſiæ, ſuch that carry the Books of the Children of great men after them to School. When the Authority of the Revelation was anciently queſtioned, the Church of Rome was inſtrumental to keep it in the number of the Canonical books, not thinking they ſhould find their own Church ſo plainly Deciphered in it, to be the Mother of abominations. To this we may refer the action of Ptolemy Philadelphus King of Egypt, in cauſing the Scripture to be tranſlated about three hundred years before the coming of Chriſt; through which the Nations * might better diſcern (as it were through a proſpective glaſs) the new Star of Jacob which was ſhortly to ariſe: No doubt but many of the Gentiles by comparing the old Scripture-Prophecies, which they now could read in the Greek language, might be more eaſily induced to an embracing the Goſpel, and ackno wledging Chriſt to be the Meſſiah, when it came to be divulged among them. Herod is the cauſe of the conſultation about the place of Chriſts birth; not for any good-will he had to him, whom he intended to murther, but God makes uſe of this to clear up the truth of the prophecy concerning Bethlehem, the place of his birth, Mat. 5. 6. Out of thee ſhall come a Governour that ſhall rule my people Iſrael And they certainly were not very good, who preached Chriſt out of envy, and propagated the Goſpel, wherein Paul rejoyced not in their ſin, but in the providential fruit of it, Phil. 1. 15, 18. Some indeed preach Chriſt

Jakſon vol. 1. Fol. 62.

even of envy and ſtrife; what then! Notwithſtanding every way, whether in pretence or truth, Chriſt is preached, and I therein do rejoyce, yea, and will rejoyce.

2. In furthering the temporal good of the Church;

1. In its preſervation. Wicked men are often ſerviceable to the Church, as the filthy Raven was to holy Elijah, or as the Lyon which would have devoured Sampſon, is a ſtore-houſe to provide him food; for in his hunger he finds a table ſpread in the belly of his Enemy. Pharaoh's deſign was to deſtroy Iſrael, and the Daughter of that irreconcilable Enemy, is directed by God to preſerve Moſes, who was to be the ruine of her family, the deſtruction of the Egyptian glory, and the Deliverer of the Church. She ſaves him out of charity, and God out of a wiſe deſign; She by his Education in the Egyptian learning, fits him for the Court, and God for the deliverance of his Church. Egypt had corn to relieve firſt Abraham *, afterward Jacob in a time of famine; the family wherein the Church of God was only then bound up. Herod lies in wait for Chriſts deſtruction, and Egypt, the moſt Idolatrous Country in the World, and an ancient Enemy to Gods Church, affords him ſhelter. God makes Moab to hide his out-caſts, and be their covert from the face of the ſpoiler *. Some think, Gods deſign in ſending Jonah to Nineveh, to work ſo remarkable a change by repentance, was to ſoften ſome of their hearts, and the hearts of their poſterity, to deal more tenderly with thoſe gracious Iſraelites, who in the captivity of the ten Tribes, ſome years after, ſhould be their gueſts. God making thereby proviſion for his own people in that common judgment which ſhould come upon the Nation. This God doth ſometimes by reviving the law of nature, and the common ſentiments of Religion in the hearts of natural men; whereby their own conſciences bearing witneſs to the innocency and excellency of the Church of God, put them upon thoughts for its ſecurity. Sometimes it is above their own Sphere, and beſides their own intentions. The Whale which ſwallowed Jonah, intended him as a morſel to quell his hunger, but proves his ſecurity, and diſgorgeth him upon the ſhoar: They underſtand their own aim, but not the deſign of God. The Leech that ſucks the Patients blood, knows not the Chyrurgeons deſign, who uſeth it for the cure of a diſeaſe. Sometimes their rage proves their own ruine, and the Churches ſafety; as the Leech burſts it ſelf ſometimes, and ſaves the Patient. The very Earth, whereby is meant the carnal world, is ſaid to help the Woman, the Church, by ſwallowing up the flood which the Dragon caſts out of his mouth againſt her *. Juſt as the old rags were the inſtruments whereby Jeremiah was drawn out of the Dungeon.

* Gen. 12. 12.

* Iſa. 16. 3. 4.

* Revel. 12. 16.

2. In the advancement of the Church, or perſons eminent. Abner had a Plot for bringing Iſrael to David's Scepter, which concurred both with Gods purpoſe and promiſes, but ſprung from an ill cauſe, a diſdain to be checked by Iſhboſheth, though his King, for an unjuſtifiable act, for having too much familiarity with one of Sauls Concubines *. And from this animoſity he contrives the depoſing of Iſhboſheth, and the exaltation of David; yet diſſembles the ground, and pretends the promiſe of God to David, v. 18. For the Lord hath ſpoken of David, by the hand of my ſervant David I will ſave my people Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines. He is the firſt Engine that moves in this buſineſs, and by him and his correſpendents after his death, v. 17. the buſineſs is brought about by Gods over-ruling hand, wherein Gods promiſe is accompliſhed, and David a type of Chriſt, and the great Champion for the Church againſt its enemies round about, is advanced. Very remarkable is the advancement of Mordecai, in order to the advancing the Jews as well as preſerving them, when the necks of all the viſible Church God had in the World, were upon the block. Haman ignorantly is the cauſe of this preferment of Mordecai, and at that time too, when he came to petition for his death, Eſther 6. 4. He was come to ſpeak to the King to hang Mordecai upon the Gallows which he had prepared for him: The King asks him, what ſhould be done to the man whom the King delights to honour, v. 16. He imagaineth that the Kings queſtion did reſpect himſelf, lays out a Scheme of what honour he was ambitious of, v. 8, 9. which was by the King deſigned for Mordecai, and Haman made the Herald to proclaim him: Here Haman, not only a wicked man in himſelf, but the greateſt Enemy Mordecai and the whole Church of God had, is made unwittingly an inſtrument to exalt Mordecai, and in him the whole Church of God.

3. In enriching the Church, or ſome perſons in it, whereby it may become more ſerviceable to God. How wonderful was it, that when the Iſraelites were abominated by the Egyptians, God ſhould ſo order their hearts, that the Egyptians ſhould lend them Gold and Jewels *, and diſmiſs them with wealth as well as ſafety; and not ſo much as one perſon moleſt them, till they arrived at the Red Sea? The very gain and honour of the Enemies is ſometimes conſecrated to the Lord of the whole Earth, Micah 4. 13. Ariſe and threſh, oh Daughter of Sion, I will make thy horn Iron, and thou ſhalt beat in pieces many people, and I will conſecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their ſubſtance to the Lord of the whole Earth: This was when many Nations were gathered againſt Sion, v. 11. the wealth of the Sinner is laid up for the juſt, Pro. 13. 22. And God ſometimes makes the wicked unwittingly to themſelves, in their carking, be the factors for good men, into whoſe lap Providence pours the fruit of their labour. God gave Cyrus the ſpoils of Babylon, and the treaſures of Cræſus, to enable him to furniſh the Jews with materials for building the Temple, Iſa. 45. 3, 4. and I will give thee the treaſure of darkneſs, and hidden riches of ſecret places, (ſpeaking of Cyrus) that thou mayeſt know, that I the Lord which call thee by thy Name, am the God of Iſrael, for Jacob my Servants ſake, &c. That he might acknowledge him the God of Iſrael, and lay his wealth out in the ſervice of God, and the ſervice of Jacob his ſervant.

* Exod. 12. 35, 36.

Iſa. 45. 3, 4.

2. As bad perſons, ſo bad things are ordered to the good of the Church, whether they be ſinful evils, or afflictive.

1. Sin.

1. A mans own ſin. Oneſimus runs from his Maſter, and finds a ſpiritual Father; his being a runnagate, is the occaſion of his being a convert. By flying from his Maſter, he becomes a Brother in the Lord *. What Joſeph's brethern ſinfully intended for revenge againſt their brother, and ſecurity from their Fathers checks, (who acquainted Jacob with their miſcarriages) God ordered for the preſervation of them who were the only viſible Church in the World. Their ſin againſt their Brother, contrary both to their intentions and expectations, became the means of their ſafety. God makes the remainders of ſin in a good man, an occaſion to exerciſe his grace, diſcover his ſtrength, and ſhew his loyalty to God.

* Phil. 10. 12, 16.

2. Other mens ſins. That might be in Sarah but a heady paſſion, for hearing her Son mocked by Iſhmael, that made her ſo deſirous to have the bondwoman and her firſt ſon thruſt out *; but God makes uſe of it to make a ſeparation between Iſaac the heir of the Covenant, and Iſhmael, that he might not be corrupted by any evil example from him: God orders Abraham to hearken to her voice, becauſe in Iſaac his ſeed ſhould be called *: And the revengeful threatning of Eſau was the occaſion of Jacob's flight, whereby he was hindred from marrying with any of the people of the Land, by whom he might have been induced to Idolatry *. Why ſhould we miſtruſt that God that can make uſe of the Luſts of men to bring about his own gracious purpoſes?

* Gen. 21. 10.

* ver. 12.

* Gen. 27. 43, 46.

2. Commotions in the World. There is the eye of God, that eye which runs to and fro throughout the whole Earth in the Wheels of worldly motions, even in the moſt dreadful Providences in the World, that ſtare upon men with a grim countenance *. All the overturnings in the World are ſubſervient to the Churches intereſt, though they are not viſibly ſo, unleſs diligently attended *. God orders the confuſions of the World, and is in the midſt of the tumults of the people, Pſal. 29. 10, 11. The Lord ſits upon the floud, yea, the Lord ſits King for ever, the Lord will give ſtrength to his people, the Lord will bleſs his people with peace. He ſits upon the floud as a Charioteer in his Chariot, guiding it with holy and merciful intentions to his people, to give give them both ſtrength and peace in the midſt of them, and as the iſſue of them. By Water and Floods is frequently meant tumults and confuſions in the World. If it were not ſo, why ſhould our Saviour encourage his Diſciples and all their Succeſſors in the ſame profeſſion, to lift up their heads when they hear of wars, if their redemption * were not deſigned by God in them? they are all teſtimonies of the nearer approaches of Chriſt in power and glory to judge the Earth, and glorifie his people. Gods great end in the ſhaking of Nations, is the performing thoſe gracious promiſes to his Church which yet remain unaccompliſht: Theſe earthquakes in the World, will bring Heaven to the Church. The great revolutions in the Eaſtern part of the world, the ruine of the Babilonian Empire, the erecting the Perſian, and all the means whereby it was brought about, God ordered, God foretold, God directed for Jacobs ſervice. Cyrus led by ambition, levies an army againſt Babylon; yet though he was a ravenous Bird, he was to execute the Counſel of God, Iſa. 46. 11. calling a ravenous bird from the eaſt, the man that executeth my Counſel, to be an inſtrument for the delivery of the captiv'd Jews, and the reſtorer of the ruin'd Temple. He had called him out by name to make a great revolution of the World. He foretold by his Prophet Iſaiah many years before, the means he ſhould uſe in the ſiege of Babylon to attain the victory, the very dividing Euphrates, which was the great confidence of the Babylonian, Iſa. 44. 27. that ſay to the deep be dry, and I will dry up the rivers; whereby it was as it were dried up for them to paſs over the very opening of the gates, Iſa 45. 1. and the gates ſhall not be ſhut; the Babylonians in a preſumptuous ſecurity had left them open, thinking it impoſſible the City could be taken, becauſe of the River Euphrates, I will go before thee, and make the crooked places ſtraight; and what was the end of that great revolution and motion in that part of the World? See Iſa. 45. 4. For Jacob my Servants ſake, and Iſrael mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: This prophecy was, when Jeruſalem and the Temple were ſtanding. God caſts about long before his people needs, for their welfare in the great revolutions and changes of the World. In Iſa. 44. 28. that ſaith of Cyrus, he is my Shepherd, and ſhall perform all my pleaſure, even ſaying to Jeruſalem, thou ſhalt be built; and to the Temple, thy foundation ſhall be laid. Cyrus had no knowledge of this end of God, though thou haſt not known me, Iſa. 45, 4, 5. twice repeated. Cyrus did not know God, neither did he know Gods end; he acts his own purpoſes, and is acted by God to higher purpoſes than he underſtood. In all the ſiftings of Nations, and ſifting the Church among the Nations, as Corn is ſifted in a Sieve, God deſigns not the deſtruction of his people, but the cleanſing them, the ſeparating the flower from the bran.

* Ezek. 1. 18. their wings were dreadful, and their wings were full of eyes.

* Broughton on Revel. 13. Sect. 177.

* Luk. 21. 25 26, 27, 28.

3. Deſtroying judgments, yea, and the very curſes ſometimes are turned into bleſſings.

Deſtroying judgments. The deſolation of the Jews was not only in order to the fulfilling Gods truth in his threatnings, but uſeful for the great Goſpel deſign; the fall of the Jews was the calling of the Gentiles, Rom. 11. 11, 12. Through their fall Salvation is come unto the Gentiles: And alſo their fall and diſperſion among the Gentiles, was propheſied of as the occaſion of their return to God, Ezek. 20. 36, 37. like as I pleaded with your Fathers in the Wilderneſs, ſo will I plead with you, and cauſe you to paſs under the rod, and bring you into the bond of the covenant; when they are in the Wilderneſs of Captivity, then God ſhall plead with them, and make them to paſs under the rod of propriety, and bring them into Covenant. The like alſo is propheſied of that Captivity of the ten Tribes to this day not known where they are, Hoſ. 2. 14. The time of Gods ſpeaking kindly to her, ſhould be in the Wilderneſs, and then I will give her the valley of Achor for a door of hope. No queſtion but God hath performed his promiſe, and brought many of the poſterity of the ten Tribes into the Church among the Maſs of the Gentiles, among whom they were diſperſed.

* Gen. 49. 7. Curſed be their anger for it was fierce: and their wrath, for it was cruel. I will divide them in Jacob, and ſcatter them in Iſrael.

Curſes ſometimes, as God orders them, prove bleſſings. The curſe of inſpir'd Jacob upon Levi *, was the advantage both of Levi and the Iſraelites; that they they were dispersed among the several Tribes without any universal cohabitation as the rest, was a curse: But that they should be the instructors of the people in the matters of the Law, was an honour God put upon the head of that Tribe, and a publick blessing to the people.

4. Divisions in the Church. One would think this of all other things should shake the foundation of it; yet God orders even these to the good of the Church. Paul and Barnabas, two great Apostles, fell out *. The contention comes to be very sharp, a thing naturally of very ill consequence, in two of the prime guides of Christianity, and at the laying the first foundation of it; but the Gospel gains ground: One sails to Cyprus, and the other travels into Syria. Perhaps had not this quarrel been between them, and they thus disjoynted from one another, some of those poor Souls had never, or at least not so soon, have heard of the Gospel-mercy.

* Acts 15. 36, 37, 38, 39, &c.

5. Persecutions. These naturally tend to the dissolution and utter extirpation of it, but God orders them otherwise. God doth often lay the Scene of his amazing Providences in very dismal afflictions: As the Limner first puts on the dusky colours, on which he intends to draw the portraiture of some illustrious beauty. The Oppression of Israel immediately before their Deliverance, was the dusky colour whereupon God drew those gracious lines of their Salvation from Egypt, the pattern of all the after Deliverances of the Church in all Ages, and a Type of our Spiritual Redemption by Christ. The Humiliation, Persecution and Death of the Son of God, was the dusky colour upon which God drew that amazing piece of Divine Love and Wisdome in mans salvation, which the eyes of Saints and Angels will be fix'd on with ravishing admirations to all Eternity. All Afflictions in the World, which God doth exercise the Church with, are parts of his Providence, and like mournful Notes in Musick, which make the melody of the Tune more pleasant, and set off those sweeter Aires which follow upon them. Afflictions here, cause the joys of Heaven to appear more glorious in the eyes of glorified Saints. The Persecutions of the Martyrs did but heighten their Graces, send them to the place of Rest, and enlarge their Robes of Glory. God many times saves his People by sufferings, and brings them to the shore upon the planks of a broken ship, and makes that which was the occasion of their loss, to be a means of their safety: they sometimes evidence that which they would destroy. Herods Murdering the Children to destoy him that was born King of the Jews, made his Birth more Conspicuous in the World: snuffing the Candle makes it burn the clearer.

They sometimes make,

1. To the improvement of the Church. One of the sorest Judgments God brought upon the Jewish Church, is expressly asserted by God to be for their good; Jer. 24. 5. speaking of the Captiv'd Jews, Whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good. The Chaldeans had over-run their Land, carried them Captives, made them Slaves, destroyed the Temple; yet God tells them this was for their good, when there was no present appearance of any good in it. It should be good in respect of Gods Favour towards them, which retired to return with the greater force; ver. 6. I will set mine eyes upon them for good, I will build them, and not pull them down: God will give them a more durable settlement. In respect also of that frame of heart they should have toward God; their knowledge of him, and cleaving to him. ver. 7. I will give them a heart to know me, and they shall return to me with their whole heart: God had but a moyety of their hearts before, but then he should have the whole. And indeed it was remarkably for their good; for they who before were addicted to Idolatry, were never guilty of the same sin after: And God kept them from being drawn away to it by the example and solicitiation of those among whom they were. The Church grows by tears, and withers by smiles. Gods Vine thrives the better for pruning. God makes our Persecutions fit us for that for which we are persecuted. As Saul by his persecution of David for the Title God had given him to the Kingdom, made him fitter to succeed him in the Throne, and manage the Government. God

uſes perſecutors as lances, which whiles they wound us, let out the purulent and oppreſſive matter; and makes them inſtruments of his Providence to work out his Peoples Happineſs, and thus makes the very wrath of man to be an occaſion of his Peoples Praiſe; Pſal. 76. 10. The wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee. God doth in this as a Father deals with his Son, ſends him to a ſharp ſchool, that he may be Trained up in Learning.

2. In the increaſe of the Church. The Jews Crucified our Saviour to diminiſh the multitude of his followers, and by this means the number is increaſed. The whole World runs after him by that means they uſed to ſtop their Courſe; which Chriſt fore-told, that when he was lifted up he ſhould draw all men after him; And that a grain of Corn brings not forth more ſeed, unleſs it be caſt into the ground, and dye.

1. In the increaſe of it within its own bounds. When the Iſraelites were moſt oppreſt in Egypt, the more they multiplied *. When the Dragons fury did moſt ſwell againſt the Woman, ſhe brought forth a Man-child *. When the Roman Empire was at the higheſt, and was moſt enflam'd with Anger againſt the Chriſtians: When the Learning of the Philoſophers, the Witchcrafts of Hereticks, the Power of the Emperors, and the Strength of the whole World was ſet againſt them, the Chriſtians grew more flouriſhing and numerous by thoſe very means which were uſed to deſtroy them. Not only a new ſucceſſion of Saints ſprung up from the Martyrs Aſhes, but their Flames were the occaſion of warming ſome ſo much with a Heavenly fire, that ſome Perſecutors have become Preachers. Their very bonds for the Truth have ſometimes a ſeminal Vertue in them to beget men to Faith in Chriſt. Phil. 1. 12. The things which have happened unto me, have fallen out rather to the furtherance of the Goſpel.

* Rev. 12. 1, 3, 4.

2. In the increaſe of it in other parts. Pauls Priſon made his Preaching Famous in Rome, and was an occaſion of bringing Chriſtianity into Nero's Court, that Monſter of Mankind *; one might have looked for Saints in Hell as ſoon; his bonds were as great a confirmation of the Truth of his Doctrine, as his Eloquence. When Saul made havock of the Church, and by that ſtorm diſperſed the Chriſtians, they like ſo many grains of Corn ſcattered in ſeveral parts of a greater Field, produced the greater Harveſt Acts 8. 3, 4. Therefore they that were ſcattered abroad, went every where preaching the Word. As Clouds ſcattered by the Winds, they Rain'd down the Goſpel in ſeveral Quarters. The Jews when ſcattered in their ſeveral flights, did ſcatter among the Heathen the Notions of the true Religion. When they ſhall go down to Egypt to ſecure themſelves from Senacheribs Invaſion, they ſhall be a means to make many Converts among that Idolatrous Nation. Iſa 19 18. In that day (the day of the Jews Trouble) ſhall five Cities in the land of Egypt ſpeak the Language of Canaan, and ſwear to the Lord of Hoſts: ſo one expounds it, but I rather think it meant of the times of the Goſpel. The flight of the Iſraelites ſhall be the occaſion of ſome Egyptians Converſion. A poor Slave in Naamans Family was an occaſion both of the cure of his Body, and of that of his Soul; 2 Kings 5. 2, 3, 17. So much for the firſt Reaſon, drawn from an enumeration of things.

* Phil. 1. 13. Phil. 4. 22.

2. Reaſon; To prove that all Providence is for the good of the Church; is, Becauſe God hath ſometimes preferred Mercy to the Church, and Care of it, above his own concernments of Juſtice. He values his Mercy to them, above his Juſtice upon his Enemies. He conſults their ſafety before he brings ruin upon the Wicked whoſe ſins are full. He firſt prepared the Ark for Noah, and ſees him lodged in it, before he begins to ſhower down deſtruction upon the World. He hath ſometimes puniſhed a Nation more for their Offences againſt his People, than their Sins againſt himſelf. Amalek was guilty of many Idolatries and other ſins againſt God; but God chargeth none of them upon them, but their malicious hindring the Iſraelites in their March to Canaan, 1 Sam. 15. 2. Thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, I remember that which Amalek did to Iſrael, how he laid wait for him in the way when he came up from Egypt. He ſhews his love to them, and how much he values them, that when he is acting Juſtice, and pouring out Secondly.

his Wrath, when he is (as it were) cutting and ſlaſhing on all ſides, and is in fury with wicked Men, he hath nothing but ſweetneſs and tenderneſs towards his own. Amos 9. 9, 10. in the ſifting of Iſrael and the Nations, Not the leaſt grain ſhall fall upon the earth. All the ſinners of my people ſhall dye by the ſword. While he thunders out his Fury upon wicked Men, he hath his Eyes upon the leaſt grain of the true Iſrael. What would it be for God, when he is raiſing the Glory of his Juſtice upon the People that have provoked him, not to regard the concernments of this, or that, or many ſincere Souls, but put no ſtop to his Fury? Yet he doth, not a grain ſhall periſh. He is more deſirous to hear of the preſervation and welfare of a few Righteous, than of the juſt puniſhment of the Wicked wherein his Juſtice is glorioufly intereſſed. The Man clothed with Linnen, that was to mark the Mourners, return'd to God, and gave an account that he had done according to his Command *; the other five, which were to kill, returned not to give any account of their ſevere and ſharp proceedings. The Angels that held the four Winds of the Earth, Rev. 7. 1. which ſome underſtand of Wars and Commotions in the World for the overthrow of the Romiſh power, were ordered not to let the Winds go, till the ſervants of God were ſealed in their Foreheads.

* Ezek. 9. 11.

3. Reaſon; God takes particular notice of the meaneſt of his people, and nightily condeſcends to them, much more of the church. 'Tis ſtrange to conſider that the Scripture mentions none of thoſe great Potentates among the Heathen, but either as they were inſtruments of his Peoples good, or executioners of his Juſtice upon them, or ſubjects of his Peoples Triumph. Cyrus and Darius are mentioned as their friends; Nebuchadnezzar, and Senacherib, and others, as Gods inſtruments in ſcourging them.* Chedorlaomer and the other Kings with him, as they were the ſubiects of Abrahams Valour and Triumph. He takes no notice of the Names of any in his Word, but upon ſuch Accounts: Cyrus and Nebuchadnezzar had done, no doubt, many actions before, but none taken notice of but thoſe: But he takes notice of the meaneſt wherein was Grace, and the meaneſt of their concerns and actions *. He mentions in his Word Jacob's Flocks, &c. things of no great moment; the actions, ſpeeches, geſtures of his People, to ſhew how his Providence wrought for them, and how much he is concern'd in the leaſt of their Affairs. But the great Empires of the World, their Original and Progreſs, and the magnified Founders of them, he ſpeaks not of, but as they have ſome relation or other to his People. As we love to uſe the names of our Friends, ſo doth God love the relliſh of the names of his ſervants. The name of Noah is repeated ſeveral times, as the Jews obſerve *. The Spirit of God loves the very mention of their names: he delights to dwell upon the Catalogue of their names. The Scripture uſes to reckon the Genealogies of wicked Men in ſhort characters. Cains Generation is numbred in haſte, as if God had no care at all of them *, he puts them off with a kind of &c. But he inſiſts much upon the Generation of the Godly. Seths Poſterity are written in a large ſcroul, and more legible hand *, with the number of the years which they lived; which in Cains Poſterity there is no notice taken of. His whole Reſpect, his Heart, his Eye, his All is fixed upon them. And Chriſt himſelf ſtands more aſtoniſhed, and wondring at the Faith of the Centurian, the importunity of the canaanitiſh Woman; condeſcends to them to grant them what they would have. You never find him taking notice of the Learning of the Rabbies, the Magnificence of Herod, or the glorious Building of the Temple. See how condeſcending God is, to work a Miracle for the ſupport and ſtrengthning of a weak Faith, and the peeviſh diſtruſt of his People. Gideons Faith was weak, yet how compaſſionate is God towards him *, in ordering his Providence as Gideon would have it, without upbraiding him; juſt as a tender Mother cheriſhes a weak Child? And this Miracle was in order to the Churches Deliverance from a preſent oppreſſive Enemy. Certainly when we find God taking care and ordering even the very Pins, Snuffers and Baſins of the Temple, the place of his Worſhip, as well as the more ſtately Ornaments of it; we may ſay, doth his Care extend to the meaneſt Utenſils in his Temple, and not much more to the Worſhippers in it? Doth he give order for for the Candlesticks, and will he not have much more care of the lights in them? His care to the least, implies his care of the greatest too. In a building, the little stones must be well laid, as well as the greatest. Every Believer is a stone in the Spiritual building.

4. Reason, God reveals often to his people what he will do in the World, as if he seemed to ask their advice, and therefore surely all his Providences shall work for their good. God would not surely acquaint them, and advise with them what he should do, did he intend to do any thing to their hurt. There is not any thing in the heart of Christ wherein the Church is concerned, but he doth reveal it to them, John 15. 5. I have called you friends; for all things I have heard of my Father, I have made known to you; he discovered all to them, the ends of his coming, his Fathers love, his death and resurrection, what he would do after his ascension, the progress of his affairs, and the glory of Heaven, and the end of all. John must be the Pen-man of the Revelation, which concerned the future state of the Church in all ages. Joseph must know the interpretation of dreams in order to the Churches preservation. Moses must be acquainted with Gods methods in the Israelties deliverance, with the Egyptians ruine. Daniel must know the future state of the Eastern parts of the World; he must know the turnings of the times, and the end of the World. 'Tis to Noah, and none else, that he immediately discovers his intended destruction of the World. And all those revelations ended in his peoples advantage; nay, he doth not only reveal, but, as it were, consult with him in his affairs. God doth as it were unbosom himself to Abraham, as one friend to another, as it were, adviseth with him concerning his intention on Sodom, Gen. 18. 17. And the Lord said, shall I hide from Abraham the thing which I do? i. e. I will by no means do it, it will not consist with my Love and Friendship to him, to hide any thing from him. And see the reason of it, v. 18. Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty Nation, and all the Nations of the Earth shall be blessed in him. It was first his great affection to him, because he had advanced him, and promised that a mighty Nation should spring out of his Loyns. And he had not withheld from him the secret of giving the Messias, which was a universal blessing, and so many ages were to run out, before it was to be accomplisht; he had discovered to him his acts of mercy, and therefore would not hide from him his acts of justice; he would know his mind in it, and what he thought of it. And you know the story, how God regulated himself by Abraham's prayer, and denyed him nothing, till Abraham left off suing any more. It would make one conjecture, that if Abraham had proceeded farther, he had quite diverted the judgment from Sodom. And when the Israelites had provoked God by a Golden Calf, he would not do any thing against them, till he had consulted Moses, and therefore lays the whole case before him, and seeks to take him off from pleading with the Lord, and promising to make of him a great Nation *, and in such terms, that one would wonder at. Now therefore let me alone; As if God did fear Moses's interposition would prevent him, and dissuade him from it. Do not you stand in the way; my wrath will cool, if you interpose your self; as much as to say, God could not do it, unless Moses gave his consent: Moses would not be quiet, but pleads the Providences of God which had been all for him, the promise of God made to Abraham concerning them. And he would not leave, till God repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his People, v. 14. If Angels, as Calvin saith, are Gods Counsellors in Heaven, Believers are (as it were) his Counsellors on Earth.

Dan. 10. 11, 19, 20.

* Exod. 32. 9, 10. and the Lord said to Moses, I have seen this people, and behold it is a stiff-necked people: now therefore let me alone that my wrath may wax hot against them.

5. God has given the choicest things he hath to his people; He hath given his Law. The Church is the Sphere wherein the light of the Gospel is fixed, and wherein it shines, from whence its beams do dart out to others. Isa. 2. 3. out of Sion shall go forth the Law. The oracles of God, the great things of the Law, as it is phrased, Hosea 8. 12. his Covenant, and the counsel of his will, are intrusted with the Church. Now this being a mercy which exceeds all other things in the World, is therefore comprehensive of all other, as the greater comprehends the lesser. And the Psalmist considers it as the top-top ſtone of all bleſſings; for after ſumming up the Providences of God, he ſhews how God had diſtinguiſhed Jacob by more eminent marks of his favour, Pſal. 147. 19, 20. He ſhews his word to Jacob, his ſtatutes and his judgments unto Iſrael, he hath not dealt ſo with any Nation; he hath not left ſo rich a Legacy to any, or given any ſo much of his heart. Others are ordered by the word of his power (for that is meant by word in the foregoing verſe); but Jacob hath the word of his grace too. And this being the choiceſt piece of affection which God hath ſhewed to the Church, implies the making all leſſer Providences ſubſervient to it. The Church, wherein God hath laid up his Goſpel, and thoſe Souls which are as the Ark, wherein God hath depoſited his Law, ſhall be ſhadowed with the wings of his merciful Providence, in a perpetual ſucceſſion of all true bleſſings. All the Providences of God are to preſerve his Law in the World; his ſevereſt judgments are to quicken up the Law of nature in men that know no other, and the Law of his Goſpel in men that ſit under it. And he hath given Chriſt to his Church, and thereby hath given an earneſt, that ſtill their good ſhall be promoted: 'Tis not to be thought, that God will ſpare any thing elſe, when he hath given them his Son.

1. All the providence of God is for the glorifying his grace in Chriſt. The whole Oeconomy or diſpenſation of the fulneſs of time, to the latter ages of the world, is for the gathering all things together in him, Eph. 1. 10. that in the diſpenſation of the fulneſs of time he might gather together in one all things in Chriſt, both which are in Heaven, and which are on Earth, even in him. In him as their head. This was the deſign in all his diſpenſations, both before his coming, and ſince, ever ſince the promiſe made to Adam, though it be more manifeſt in the latter Age. This the Apoſtle repreſents as the main purpoſe of God, v. 9. This was the myſtery of his will, which accordingly to his good pleaſure he had purpoſed in himſelf, that is, purpoſed in himſelf as a thing he was mightily pleaſed with; and ver. 11. ſaith he, he works all things after, or κατὰ, according to the counſel of his own will, or of that purpoſe which he had purpoſed in himſelf, to gather all things in one, in Chriſt. All the things that God acts, are referred to this as their end, and ordered by this Counſel as their rule. As it was the deſign of Gods Providence to make way for Chriſts entrance into the World, and all the prophecies in the old Teſtament tended to the diſcovery of it; ſo ſince the coming of Chriſt, the end of all is to advance him in reſpect of his headſhip, Eph. 1. 22, 23. and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulneſs of him that fills all in all. God would advance Chriſt to the higheſt pitch, v. 21. far above all principality and power, both in this World, and in the World to come; and there is ſtill a fulneſs wanting to Chriſt to compleat him, not any perſonal fulneſs, but a fulneſs belonging to him as Head, which is the advancement God deſigns him. He is already advanced above all principality and power. He is already given as a Head to the Church; but the compleatneſs of it is not till all his members be perfected, to which all his providences in the World doth ultimately tend: Therefore if the deſign of God be to honour Chriſt, and if the ſpiritual happineſs of the Church be part of that Glory and Fulneſs of Chriſt, it muſt needs be carried on by God, elſe he will want part of his compleatneſs as a Head: But this ſhall not be wanting, ſince, as all things are ſquared according to that Counſel of glorifying Chriſt as Head, ſo all things are acted for believers by that power whereby he raiſed Chriſt from the grave to be their Head, which power is the Copy according to which all acts which reſpect the Church, are framed, v. 19. and what is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to us ward, who believe according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Chriſt when he raiſed him up from the dead. God intended the good of the Church, in this very act of glorifying Chriſt, for he is made the head over all things to the Church. As if God then had preſcribed him that order, that the glory he gave him ſhould be alſo managed for the Churches intereſt: Chriſt is Lord of the reſt of the World, First.

but Head of the Church: All things are under his feet, but are not his members; He is Head over all things to the Church, and therefore to every member of the Church, the leaſt as well as the greateſt; and to the whole Church, even that part of it which is on Earth, as well as that part which is in Heaven, who are compleated This Church is the fulneſs of Chriſt; he would be bodyleſs without it: therefore ſince Chriſt will be a head without a body, if the Church be not preſerved; in order to the preſervation of it, all things muſt neceſſarily concur by the wiſe diſpoſal of affairs. Therefore ſince they are travelling to be where their head is, he having the government of the World, will make all things contribute aſſiſtance to them in their journey; that Chriſt may have that compleatneſs of glory, which God intends him, he expreſly tells his Father, John 17. 10. that he is glorifyed in his people *. And at the ſound of the ſeventh Trumpet, the Kingdoms of this world are to become the Kingdoms of the Lord and of his Chriſt, and he ſhall reign for ever and ever *. Now ſince all the motions in the World, are, that the Kingdoms of the World may become the Kingdoms of his Chriſt, peculiarly his, as being anointed King by him: It muſt needs be, that all things muſt be ſubſervient one time or other to this end, wherein the good of his people doth conſiſt; otherwiſe they would not bleſs God ſo highly for it as they do *. We give thee thanks, O Lord God almighty, becauſe thou haſt taken to thee thy great power, and haſt reigned. And where there is a reſiſtance of this glory of Chriſt, it is a natural effect of that decree whereby Chriſt is conſtituted King, that the reſiſters ſhould be broken in pieces, and daſht like a Potters veſſel, Pſal 2. 6, 9. and the iſſue of all is the bleſſedneſs of thoſe that put their truſt in him, v. 12. The care that God hath of Chriſt and the Church in the types of them, ſeems to be equal. The Ark, which was a type of Chriſt, and the Table of ſhew-bread a figure of the church, had three coverings; whereas all the reſt of the Veſſels, &c. belonging to the ceremonial part, had but two *, On the Ark there was the vail and covering of badgers skins, and a coverings of blew: On the Table of ſhew-bread there was a cloath of Blew, a cloth of Scarlet, and a covering of badgers skins. God orders as much for the ſecurity of the Church, as for the ſecurity of Chriſt; therefore the ſame things that tend to the glorifying of Chriſt, ſhall tend to the advantage of the Church.

* John 17. 10. And I am glorifyed in them.
* Revel. 11. 15.
* Revel. 11. 17.
* Numb. 4. 5, 6, 7, 8.

2. God hath given the power of the providential adminiſtration of things to Chriſt to this very end, for the good of the Church. If God hath conſtituted him Head over all things to the Church, can there be any doubt but that he will manage the Government for that which is the principal end of his Government, which he hath ſhed his Blood for, and which is chiefly intended by God who appointed him?

1. All power of government is given to Chriſt, Math 11. 27. All things are delivered to me of my Father. And the Father judges no man, but hath committed all judgment to the ſon, Joh. 5. 22. that is, the whole Governmet and Adminiſtration of Affairs. 'Tis not to be underſtood of the laſt Judgment, for then it would be a limitation of that Word all; not that the Father lays aſide all care of things, but as the Father diſcovers himſelf only in him, ſo he governs things only by him. All this power was committed to him upon his interpoſition after the Fall of Man. He was made Lord and Chriſt, that is, anointed by God to the Government of the World. For upon the Fall, God as a Rector, had overturned all. Man could not with any Comfort have treated with the Father, had not Chriſt ſtept in and pleaded for the Creation, whereupon God commits all judgment to the Son, that he might temper it. It was by Chriſt as a covenanting Mediator, that the Earth was eſtabliſhed *. He had this Government Anciently, and it was confirmed to him upon his death; Heb. 1. 3. Who being the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, and upholding all things by the word of his power. Calvin underſtands the firſt word not only of the Deity of Chriſt, but of the diſcovery the Father made of himſelf in and through him as Mediator. The latter words ſome underſtand both of his Providential and Mediatory Kingdom: by the word of his power; this, ſay ſome, is referred to the Father, whoſe image Chriſt is, as acting by a delegated Authority and Commiſſion from his Father: others, to Chriſt; as, that

Chriſt upholds or bears up all things by his own powerful word. Calvin thinks both may be taken, but embraceth the ſecond as being more generally received.

I may offer, whether it may not be meant alſo, of the powerful interpoſition of Chriſt as Mediator; whoſe intereſt in God was ſo great, that he kept up the World by his powerful Interceſſion, when all was forfeited; and God put it, upon that interpoſition, into his hands, as heir of all things; (who having a hand with him in Creation, underſtood both the Rights of God, and the Duty of the Creature) upon the condition of purging ſin by his Death, which he did, and thereupon went to Heaven to take Poſſeſſion of the Government, at the right hand of God; ſate down, took his ſeat at the right hand of the Majeſty on high, as due to him by Covenant and Articles agreed on between them. I know nothing at preſent againſt ſuch an interpretation of the words; but I will not contend about it. All this honour was confirm'd unto him upon his Death. For having perform'd the Condition requiſite on his part, God deputes him and intruſts him with the Government of things, that he might order all things ſo, as to ſee the full travel of his Soul.

2. All this power was intended by God for this End, the good of the Church. As God appointed Chriſt a Prieſt for his Church to ſacrifice for them, a Prophet to teach them; ſo the other Office of King is conferred upon him for the ſame end, the advantage of the Church. God acquaints us of this End, aimed at by him, in the Promiſe of the Government to him, Jer. 33. 15, 16. In thoſe dayes, and at that time, will I cauſe the branch of righteouſneſs to grow up to David, and he ſhall execute judgment and righteouſneſs in the land; what is the end? In thoſe dayes ſhall Judah be ſaved, and Jeruſalem ſhall dwell ſafely. He ſhould execute Judgment, that is, Adminiſter the Government for the ſalvation of Judah, and ſecurity of Jeruſalem. It was his Office both to build the Temple, and to bear the Glory, and to Rule upon his Throne; to be a Prieſt upon his Throne, to Rule as King and Prieſt, Zach. 6. 12, 13. He ſhall build the temple of the Lord, even he ſhall build the temple of the Lord. The erecting a Church is the ſole work of Chriſt by Gods appointment. And he was to bear up the Glory of it. He ſhould rule to this End, for the Counſel of peace ſhall be between them both. If by [both] be meant, the Lord, and the Man whoſe name is the Branch; it then chiefly aims at our Reconciliation, as wrought by Covenant between them. If by [both] be meant the two Offices of King and Prieſt, and that the counſel of Peace be between them; it will extend to all the Bleſſings of the Church, to the good and glory of the Church, which is the fruit of his Kingly, as well as the firſt Reconciliation was the fruit of his Prieſtly Office. By Peace, in Scripture, is meant the confluence of all Bleſſings; ſo that the intent of God in beſtowing thoſe Offices upon Chriſt, and ſo great a Rule, was for the good and advantage of that Church or Temple, which he appointed him only to build. And in Iſaiah 11. 9 where the prophecy of the Government of Chriſt is, the End is expreſt to be, that none ſhould hurt or deſtroy in all his holy mountain. And certainly, ſince God ſet him at his right hand, and confirm'd this power unto him, after he had purged our ſins; it was certainly out of the high value God had for him, and therefore muſt be the intent of God, that he ſhould govern all things in reference to the deſign of that Death, and for the good of thoſe whoſe ſins he had by himſelf purged. For the poſſeſſing this Government, was the very end why Chriſt died and roſe again; Rom. 14. 9. For to this end Chriſt both died, and roſe, and revived, that he might be Lord both of dead and living. If this were Chriſts End in dying and riſing, it was his Fathers End too, who appointed him to Death, and raiſed him by his mighty power. And ſince he was delivered for our offences, and roſe again for our juſtification, Rom. 4. 25. The Government he is inveſted with, being Lord of the dead and of the living, muſt be for the ſakes of thoſe for whom he was delivered, and for whom he roſe. His Regal power, which was one end of his Death, cannot croſs the other main end, the conſtituting a Church, and carrying on the good of them that believe. The Government, being in the hands not of God as Creator, but in and through the hands of a Mediator, and that Mediator which both died and roſe again peculiarly for them; therefore it cannot in the leaſt be for their hurt, but advantage. The whole management of Chriſts Kingly Office in relation to the Church, is preſcrib'd unto Chriſt by God. God reveals to him what ſhall be done in the World, what acts he ſhall perform for the Church, and gives him a Hiſtory of all that was to be done upon the ſtage, together with an order to communicate it unto his Servants, Revel. 1. 1. The Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, which God gave unto him, to ſhew unto his Servants [to be communicated to the whole Church] things that muſt ſhortly come to paſs. Whether this Revelation was made to the humane nature of Chriſt at his incarnation, as Tirinus thinks, or rather upon his aſcenſion, is not material; The whole Scheme of what was to be done in the World, is revealed here by God to Chriſt: And you find all the motions in the World relating to the Church, and the end of all is the good of the Heavenly Jeruſalem.

3. All power thus given, and intended for this end, is actually adminiſtred by Chriſt for this end. Chriſt as the head of the Church, doth like a natural head; It never ſees, nor hears, nor exerciſeth any act of ſence only for it ſelf, but for the good of the whole Body: The eye watches for the body, the Tongue ſpeaks for it, the underſtanding contrives for it; every part of the head is active for the whole Body. Now Chriſt as head is more bound to act for the Church militant, than for the Church triumphant; becauſe the greateſt part of his work for the Church triumphant, viz. the bringing them to Heaven, is already performed. And they are above the reach of all things in the World, and all the actions and motions in the World cannot touch or diſorder them. But the command of God concerning the other part behind, is not yet performed; and even they are the members of Chriſt, as well as thoſe in Heaven. The Apoſtle*. ſeems to refer both Chriſts creation, and the preſervation of things, to this title of headſhip. All things were created by him; and for him, and by him all things conſiſt, and he is the head of the body the Church, and therefore the conſervation and government of all things ſhall be ſubſervient to the Church, which is the body of this governing Head. The chief ſeat of Chriſts Soveraignty is the Church, Pſal. 2. 6. yet have I ſet my King upon my holy hill of Sion: And he ſtands upon Mount Sion, Rev. 14. 1. The Church is the proper Seat and Metropolis of his Empire, the Royal Chamber of this Great King. All the conqueſts of Princes redound to the advantage of that place, where they fix their Reſidence. He is King of the World, but for the ſake of Sion. Chriſt did manage this charge anciently for his People; when Joſhuah had paſſed over Jordan, and firſt entred upon the conqueſt of Canaan, he ſees a man over againſt him with a ſword drawn in his hand; Joſhua 5. 13, 14. And Joſhua ſaid unto him, Art thou for us, or for our adverſaries? And he ſaid, Nay, but as Captain of the hoſts of the Lord am I now come. This was Chriſt, that came armed for his People, according to his charge, as their Captain and General. It was not an Angel, becauſe Joſhua worſhipped him, ver. 14. An Angel did not uſe to receive any Worſhip from Men; and he accepts the Worſhip, and commands him to looſe his ſhoe from his foot, for the place whereon he ſtood was holy; ver. 15. And the ſame Perſon, Joſh. 6. 2. is called Jehovah; and there he gives him orders how he ſhould manage his War. Chriſt came here to direct his People in their concerns; He employs his Wiſdom for his Church, as well as his other excellencies. He is called a Counſellor *; 'tis one of the great Letters in his Name: and this, as the reſt there mentioned, hath a relation to the Church. For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given. And the firſt uſe he makes of his Power, after the confirmation of it to us, upon his Reſurrection, is for the Church; Matth. 28. 18. All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth; all Authoritative Power over Angels, and the affairs of the World; Go you therefore and teach all Nations, baptizing them, &c. and lo, I am with you alwayes, even unto the end of the World. He commands the Apoſtles to gather a Church among all Nations; and doth, by Vertue of this Authority committed to him, promiſe his Preſence with them, in all ſuch ſervices they ſhould do to this End, even to the end of the World. He promiſes his Spirit and his Providential Preſence; as his power ſhould endure to the end of the World, ſo the exerciſe of it for this End ſhould run Parallel with the continuance of it; There ſhould be no alteration or change in this great end of his, as long as the World laſts. How can Chriſt be with them, and that to the end of the World, if all the parts of his Providential government were not ordered to ſerve this end, the good of the Church? for the Church is the fulneſs of him that fills all in all, Eph. 1. 23. that fills all in all places, all in all actions and motions; for the good of his Church, which is his body.

* Iſa. 9. 6.

Thirdly. 3. God in the Church diſcovers the glory of all his attributes. 'Tis in a mans houſe, where his riches and ſtate is ſeen: 'Tis in the Church God makes himſelf known in his excellency more than in all the World beſides. Pſal. 76. 1. In Judah is God known, his name is great in Iſrael, in Salem alſo is his Tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Sion. 'Tis in his Church he doth manifeſt his power: 'Tis called therefore a glorious high Throne, Jer. 17. 12. a glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our Sanctuary. Kings uſe to diſplay all their Glory and Majeſty upon their Thrones; in this ſenſe Heaven is called Gods Throne, Iſa. 60. 1. becauſe the proſpect of the Heavens affords us diſcoveries of the wiſdom and power of God, more than in any other viſible thing, both in their eſſence, magnitude and motion: So is there a greater diſcovery of Gods attributes in the Church (which is alſo ſtiled Heaven in Scripture) than in the whole World beſides: There it is that the Angels look to learn more of the Wiſdom of God than they underſtood before *. 'Tis there the day of his power dawns, Pſal. 110. 3. 'Tis there his Saints ſee his power and his glory, Pſal. 63. 2. the Sanctuary is called the firmament of his power, Pſal. 150. 1. The glory of Gods attributes is centered in Chriſt in a higher manner than in the creation; and in that workdid excel themſelves in what they had done in the framing of the World; and the Church being the glory of Chriſt, all thoſe attributes which are glorifyed in Chriſt, do in and through him ſhine forth more clearly upon the Church, than upon any other part of the World. He ſtyles himſelf their Creator, as much as the creator of the whole frame of Heaven and Earth, Iſa. 43. 15. I am the Lord, your holy one, the Creator of Iſrael, your King. As though all the attributes of God, his power in creation, his holineſs in redemption, were deſigned for none elſe but them. And indeed by virtue of the covenant they are to be ſo; for if God be their God, then all of God is theirs. What wiſdom, power, ſufficiency, grace, and kindneſs he hath, is principally for them. If God be their God, it is in their concerns he will glorify himſelf as a God, in the manifeſtation of his perfections. This cannot be without the ordering all Providences for their advantage.

* Eph. 3. 10.

Fourthly. 4. There is a peculiar relation of God and Chriſt to the Church; upon which account this Doctrine muſt needs be true. God is ſet out in all relations to manifeſt his great care of his people. He is a Father to provide for them *. A Mother to ſuckle them *. Chriſt is a Husband to love and protect them *. A Brother to counſel them *. And when all theſe Relations meet in one and the ſame perſon, the reſult of it muſt be very ſtrong. Any one relation where there is affection, is a great ſecurity; but here all the relations are twiſted together with the higheſt affections of them in God to the Church. A Father will order all for the good of his Child; a Mother for her Infant; a Husband for his Wife; and one kind Brother for another; So doth God for his People; and whatſoever thoſe Relations bind Men to on Earth, in reſpect of Care, Love and Faithfulneſs, that is God to his Church. The Church hath the Relation to God, which none in the World have beſides. They are his Jewels, therefore he will keep them; they are his Children, therefore he will ſpare them *. They ſhall have protection from him as they are his Jewels, and Compaſſion from him as they are his Sons. The Church is Chriſts Fleſh, as dear to him as our fleſh is to us; as much his, as our fleſh is ours. Eph. 5. 29. No man hates his own fleſh, but nouriſheth it, as Chriſt doth his Church. No man can have a higher value for his own fleſh, than Chriſt hath for his Church. The Church, as Tertullian ſpeaks, is nothing elſe but Chriſtus explicatus *; and as conſidered

* Iſa. 68. 5. Iſa 49. 15. * Eph. 5. 29. * John 20. 17

ſidered in Union with Chriſt, is called Chriſt ; 1 Cor. 12. 12. 'Tis the Apple of his eye, Zac. 2.8. A tender and beloved part. The Church is Chriſts Spouſe ; the contract is made, the Eſpouſals ſhall be at the laſt Day. The Members are pick'd out one by one to be preſented to the Lamb at laſt as a Glorious Bride for him, Rev. 21. 2.

And all Gods dealings with them in the World, are but preparations of them for that State. Upon the making of the Match, God promiſes a communion of Goods; Hoſ 2. 20. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulneſs, which is a fruit of Marriage, the Wife being inveſted in her Husbands Eſtate. When God hath given the blood of his Son for the Church, he will not deny her the ſervice of the creatures, but Joynture her in that as one part of her Dowry. In that day will I hear the heavens, &c. ver. 21. In what day ? in the day of betrothing, in the day of the Evangelical Adminiſtration ; when the contract ſhall be made between me and my church. Heavens, Earth, Corn, Wine and Oil ; the voice and motions of all creatures are for Jezreel, which ſignifies the ſeed of God. This great Prince he hath a care of all his ſubjects, ſo more peculiarly of his Spouſe and Princeſs, which is his ſeed too ; and all creatures ſhall be her Servants. This Fatherly Relation and affection is ſtrong and pure, not as the love which acts an ambitious man to Ambition, or a covetous man to Wealth; which reſpects nothing but the graſping and poſſeſſing the Objects they dote upon ; and have nothing of love for the Objects themſelves; therefore deſerves not the name of Love. But it is the love of a Father, whoſe love is pure towards his children; He ſeeks their good as his own.

Conſider theſe two things.

1. God hath a peculiar love to this very Relation, and often mentions it with delight, as if he loved to hear the ſound of it in his own Lips : Cant. 8. 12. My vineyard which is mine, is before me. Me, my, mine. The Church is always under his Eye, ſeated in his affection ; and God is pleaſed with his propriety in them. God never calls the World, my World, though he created it ; ſometimes he ſaith, the Earth is mine, but it is either to check the preſumptions of Men, who aſcribe that to themſelves which is due to the firſt Cauſe ; Or to encourage his People in the expectation of Deliverance, becauſe all things in the Earth are at his beck ; Or to ſhew his own ſufficiency, without the ſervices of his people ; as when he ſaith, the Earth is mine and the fulneſs thereof : but it is never mentioned in ſuch a way, as to diſcover any pleaſure he hath in the Relation between him and it, ſimply conſidered ; but my Vineyard, my People, my Children, my Jewels, my Sanctuary, very often. So much doth God eſteem his Propriety in them.

2. This Relation is prevalent with God in the higheſt Emergencies and Diſtreſſes of his People. The very conſideration that they are his People, kindles his affection, and enlivens his Strength for them. Iſa. 63. 8. And he ſaid, Surely they are my people, children that will not lye; ſo he was their ſaviour. God is brought in, as one that had heard the cries of his Church, and had not been moved ; but when he recollects himſelf, and conſiders that they were his People, and that he was in a ſpecial manner related to them, he became their Saviour ; He could no longer bear it, but ſtirs up himſelf to relieve them. Nay, it hath ſo ſtrong an influence upon him, that if this Note be often ſounded in his Ears, it doth as it were change his Voice ; and when he ſeems to have a mind to caſt them off, he cannot. When Iſrael had offended by erecting and worſhipping a golden Calf, he calls them no more his People, but Moſes People ; Exod. 32. 7. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Go, get thee down; for thy people which thou broughteſt out of the land of Egypt have corrupted themſelves. As though God had not been concerned in this Miraculous Conduct out of Egypt ; And ver. 9. this people; as if he had had no intereſt in them, but particularizes them with Diſdain. God had here diſcarded them, and turn'd them over upon Moſes's hands, as if he would have no longer any thing to do with them ; but Moſes in Prayer turns them upon God again, and would not own them as his, but pleads that they were God's proper Goods ; ver. 11. Lord, why doth thy wrath wax hot againſt thy people, which thou haſt brought forth out of the land of Egypt? And ver. 12. again, thy People; and God at laſt reſumes his former Notes, ver. 14. And the Lord repented him of the evil he thought to do unto his people. Now they are Gods People again; the repetition of this Relation, is a powerful Rhetorique to perſwade him to own them again, which he had Caſhiered and turned off.

Fifthly. 5. The whole intereſt of God in the world lies in his church and people. He ſees little of himſelf in any part of the corrupted World, but only in them. 'Tis in the Church he hath put his Name; 'Tis there he ſees his Image, and therefore places his love there: and ſhall all this ſignifie nothing? Shall the Governour of the World let things go contrary to his own intereſt? They are like to him in that which is one of his greateſt perfections, viz. his Holineſs; which gives him a greater intereſt in them. 'Tis his Intereſt that is oppoſed, by an oppoſition to the Church. All the hatred any bear, it grows from the inward root of enmity againſt God himſelf; Pſal. 44. 22. Yea, for thy ſake are we killed all the day long. God ſurely will concern himſelf in the Churches intereſt, ſince it is his own. His Intereſt lies,

* Iſa. 19. laſt. * Dut 32. 9. 1. In the Perſons of his People. 'Tis his Inheritance*. It is his Portion*. Deut. 32. 9. The Lords portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. Every part of an inheritance, and a portion, doth as particularly belong to the owner, as the whole. Every part of the ground which belongs to the Inheritance, is the Heirs, as well as the whole Field. He will not ſuffer the World which is but the work of his hands, to lay waſte his Church, which is his proper inheritance. 'Tis his Treaſure, and where a mans treaſure is, there is his heart; and where Gods Treaſure is, there is Gods heart.

2. In the ſervices and actions of the Church. If the Church ſhould be deſtroyed, whom hath God to love and imitate him, and to ſhew forth his Glory? If the Candleſtick is broken, what is fit to hold out the light to the World? He hath none in the World beſides, that do intentionally mind his Honour, that take pleaſure in glorifying his Name, and writing after his Copy, and obſerving his Works. And will it ſtand with his intereſt to govern things contrary to theirs, which is really his own?

When God had made the World, and pronounced it good, what would it have ſignified, if he had not brought in man as his Rent-gatherer, and the Collector of his Tribute, to return it to him? And what would Man ſignifie? ſince the corrupted World embezzles that which is Gods Right, and turns it to its own uſe; if God had not ſome honeſt Stewards, who faithfully act for him, and give him the Glory of his Works? And God will ſpare them as a man ſpares his own Son that ſerves him. God hath no voluntary ſervice in the World but from them; therefore he is more intereſſed in their good, than in the good of the whole World beſides. The ſervices of the Church, are all the delight God hath in the World; Hoſ. 9. 10. I found Iſrael like grapes in the wilderneſs, I ſaw your fathers as the firſt ripe in the fig-tree at her firſt time. They are as the refreſhing Wine and Grapes, as the delicious fruit of the firſt ripe Figs; wherewith a weary Traveller recruits his Spirits after a long and tyring journey. And God hath a greater delight in the fruit he receives from the Church, than in it ſimply as it is his inheritance; for no inheritance is valued but for the fruit and revenue it yields; and therefore God orders all his blackeſt Providences in the World, like dark clouds, to be the watering-pots of this his Garden; that the Fruit and Flowers of it may be brought to maturity, which yield him ſo much pleaſure and honour. God only is acknowledged by them and in them, as the Jews were bound to acknowledge God the Author of their mercies, by preſenting the firſt fruits of their increaſe to God. And Believers are called ſo, Rev. 4. 4. Theſe were redeemed from among men, being the firſt fruits to God and the Lamb. 'Tis by and in them that God hath the acknowledgment of all his mercies and bleſſings to the World.

6. It

6. It cannot be but all the providences of God ſhall work to the good of his Church, if we conſider the affections of God.

1. His love. What hath God in the World as an object to beſtow his affections upon, and communicate the rayes of his love unto, ſince he created it, but his Church? The men of the World hate him: He can ſee nothing amiable in them; for what was firſt lovely, they have defaced and blotted out; but the Church hath Gods comlineſs put upon her, Ezek. 16. 14. it was perfect through my comlineſs which I had put upon thee, ſaith the Lord God; and he did not lay thoſe glorious colours upon her, to manage his government, or any part of it againſt her, to deface her. Beſides their lovelineſs which is conferred upon them by God, they have a love to God, and no man will act againſt thoſe whom he thinks to be his friends. God being purus actus, there being nothing but purity and activity in God, his love muſt be the pureſt and higheſt love, the moſt vigorous and glowing: As fire, which ſets all other Bodies, ſo this all other powers in the World in motion for them. God cannot love them, but he muſt wiſh all good to them, and do all good for them; for his love is not a lazy love, but hath its raptures and tenderneſs, and his affection is twiſted with his Almighty Power to work that good for them, which in their preſent condition in the World they are capable of. Now it is certain, God loves his Church: For,

1. He carries them in his hand, and that not in a looſe manner to be caſt out, but they are engraven upon the palms of his hands, that he cannot open his hand to beſtow a bleſſing upon any perſon, but the picture of his Church doth dart in his eye. God alludes to the Rings wherein men engrave the image of thoſe that are dear to them. And the Jews did in their captivity engrave the Effigies of their City Jeruſalem upon their Rings, that they might not forget it*. If his eye be alway upon the Church, his thoughts can never be off it in all his works.

*. Iſa. 49. 16.
* Sanctius in Iſa. 49. 16.

2. He loves the very gates and outworks. Pſal. 87. 2. the Lord loveth the gates of Sion. He loves a Cottage where a Church is, more than the ſtately Palaces of Princes. The gates were the places where they conſulted together, and gave judgment upon affairs: God loved the aſſemblies of his Saints, becauſe of the truths revealed, the ordinances adminiſtered, the worſhip preſented to him.

3. Nay, one Saint is more valued by him than the whole World of the wicked. God is the God of all Creatures, but peculiarly the God of Abraham, and of his ſeed: One Abraham is more deeply rooted in his heart, than all the World; and he doth more entitle himſelf the God of Abraham, than the God of the whole World; for in that ſtyle he ſpeaks to Iſaac, Gen. 26. 24. I am the God of Abraham thy Father, much more the God of Iſrael; The God of the whole Church, of which Abraham was but a member, though the Father of the faithful, and a Feoffee of the Covenant. God hath a greater value for one ſincere Soul, than for a whole City. He ſaves a Lot, and burns a Sodom: Yea, than for a whole World; he drowns a World, and reſerves a Noah: He ſecures his Jewels, whilſt he flings away the pebbles.

4. He loves them ſo, that he overlooks their crabbed and perverſe miſconſtructions of his providence. When the Iſraelites had jealous thoughts of him, and of Moſes his inſtrument, when they ſaw that mighty Egyptian Army juſt at their heels, and themſelves cooped up between Mountains, Forts and Waters, God doth not upon this provoking murmuring, draw up his cloudy Pillar to Heaven, but puts it in the rear of them, when before it had marched in the van*, and wedgeth himſelf in between them, and Pharaoh's enraged hoſt, to ſhew, that they ſhould as ſoon ſheath their ſwords in his heart, as in their bowels; and if they could ſtrike them, it ſhould be through his own Deity, which was the higheſt expreſſion of his affection: And though they often murmured againſt his Providence after they were landed on the ſhore, yet he left them not to ſhift for themſelves, but bore them all the way in his arms, as a Father doth his Child*; and bare them like an Eagle upon his Wings *. And God loves them magnificently and royally, Hoſ. 14. 4. I will love them freely *, without any doubting, without any reluctancy. I will love thee without any repugnancy in my heart, to draw me back from thee, for mine anger is turned away, as the ſtreams of a River quite another way. Now all this conſidered, can the Governour of the World, the King of Saints, act any thing againſt his own affections? Yea, will he not make all things ſubſervient to them whom he loves?

* was

* Deut. 1. 13.
* Deut. 32.11.
* Hoſea. 14.4. נדבה Sept. ὁμολόγως

2. His Delight. See what an inundation of ſweetning joy there was in him, for which he had not Terms of Expreſſion to ſuit the narrow apprehenſions of Men; Zeph 3. 17. The Lord thy God in the midſt of thee is mighty, he will ſave, he will rejoyce over thee with joy, he will reſt in his love, he will joy over thee with ſinging. He ſeems in his expreſſion to know no meaſure of his delight in the Church, and no end of it; I will rejoyce over thee with joy. Joy ſparkles up freſh after joy: 'Tis his reſt where his Soul and all that is within him centers it ſelf with infinite contentment. Joy over thee with ſinging; A Joy that bloſſoms into Triumph. Never had any ſuch charming tranſports in the Company of any he moſt affected, as God hath in his Church; he doth ſo delight in the Graces of his People, that he delights to mention them. He twice mentions Enochs walking with him *. And certainly God cannot but delight in it more than in the World, becauſe it is a fruit of greater pains than the creation of the World. The World was created in the ſpace of ſix daies by a Word; the Erecting a Church hath coſt God more Pains and Time. Before the Church of the Jews could be ſettled, he hath both a conteſt with the Peeviſhneſs of his People, and the Malice of their Enemies. And his own Son muſt bleed and dye, before the Church of the Gentiles could be fixed. Men delight in that which hath coſt them much Pains, and a great Price. God hath been at too much pains, and Chriſt at too great Price, to have ſmall delight in the Church; will he then let wild Beaſts break the Hedges, and tread down the fruit of it? ſhall not all things be ordered to the good of that which is the Object of his greateſt delight in the World?

* Gen. 9.22., 24.

Seventhly. 7. The preſence of God in his Church will make all Providences tend to the good of it.

It would be an idle uſeleſs Preſence, if it were not operative for their good. The Lord is there, is the very name of the Goſpel-Church *; what would it ſignifie if it were a uſeleſs Preſence? Chriſt ſtands upon Mount Sion, his Throne is in the Church, when the great things in the World ſhall be acted for the Ruine of Antichriſt *. Gods Preſence in his Church, is the Glory and Defence of it; As the preſence of the King is the Glory of the Court. Zach. 2. 5. For I, ſaith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midſt of her. His preſence is a Covenant-preſence. Iſa. 41. 10. Fear not, I am with thee; be not diſmayed, for I am thy God: whence follows Strength, Help and Support; I will ſtrengthen thee, yea, I will help thee, yea, I will uphold thee, with the right hand of my Righteouſneſs: that is, with my righteous Power, with my power engaged to thee in a Righteous Covenant. His Preſence and Providence in the World, is in a way of Abſolute Dominion; but in his Church in a way of Federal Relation. He is the God of Iſrael, and God to Iſrael, or for Iſrael *; yea, and a God in the midſt of Iſrael. Every one of them ſufficient engagements to protect Iſrael, and provide for Iſrael, and govern every thing for Iſraels good. God is under an Oath to do good to Iſrael; will he violate his Oath? tear his Seal? break his Covenant, who never broke his League with any of his people yet?

* 1 Chro. 17.24.

Eighthly. 8. The Prayers of the Church have a mighty force with God to this end. God is * entitled entitled a God hearing Prayer, and what prayers should God hear, if not the prayers of his Church, which aim at Gods Glory in their own good? Though the prayers of the Church may in some particulars fail, yet in general they do not; because they submit their desires to the Will of God, which always works what is best for them.

When God would do any mighty work in the World, he stirs up his people to pray for it; and their prayers by his own appointment have a mighty influence upon the Government of the World: For when they come before him in behalf of the Church in general, he doth indulge them a greater liberty and boldness, and as it were a kind of Authority over him, than upon other occasions of their own: Isa. 45. 11. Thus saith the Lord, the holy one of Israel, and his maker, Ask of me things to come, concerning my sons, and concerning the work of mine hands command you me. God would be more positively, confidently and familiarly dealt with, about the concerns of his Sons, though they were things to come to pass in after Ages. And indeed the prayers of the Church have a powerful and invisible Efficacy on the great actions and overturnings which are in the World. The Being of the World is maintained by them from sinking, according to the Jews saying, sine stationibus non subsisteret mundus; (standing in prayer was their usual prayer-gesture) And that they have actually such a force is evident, Rev. 8. 3, 4. An Angel hath a golden Censer with Incense, to offer it with the prayers of the Saints, upon the Altar which was before the Throne. And ver. 5. the Censer wherein their prayers were offered, was filled with the fire of the Altar, and cast into the Earth; and there were Voices, Thundrings, Lightnings, and Earthquakes. When the prayers of the Saints were offered to God, and ascended up before him, that is (were very pleasing to him:) The issue is, the Angel fills the Censer with fire of the Altar, and thereby causes great commotions and alterations in the world; signifying that the great changes of the World are an answer unto those prayers which are offered unto God; for fire is taken from that altar upon which they were offered, and flung into the world. And it must needs be that the prayers of the Church should have an influence on the government of the World.

1. Because God hath a mighty delight in the prayers of his people. The prayer of the upright is his delight, and he loves to hear the Churches voice, Cant. 2. 14. O my dove, let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice, [Chaldee] thy voice is sweet in prayer. In the times of the Gospel God promises that the offerings of Judah and Jerusalem should be pleasant to him, Mal. 3. 4. When Christ shall sit as a refiner, v. 5. what is the issue of those prayers? v. 5. I will come near to you to judgment, and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, &c. Prayer awakes Providence to judge the Enemies of the Church: A Parent delights, not in the bare crying, or the voice of his child simply considered in it self, but in the significations and effects of it. He delights in the matter of their prayers, it being so agreable to his own heart and will, and in the sence they have of the sufferings of the whole body.

2. Because Prayer is nothing else but a pleading of Gods promises. Unto this they are directed by that Spirit which knows the mind of God, and marshals their petitions according to his will. Now as God turns his own decrees and purposes concerning his Church into promises to them, so the Church turns those promises into Prayers for them: So that promises being for the good of the Church, and there being an exact harmony between those promises and the Churches prayers, all those Providences which are the issue of those promises, and the answer of the Churches prayers must needs be for the Churches good.

3. Because there are united supplications and pleadings both in Heaven and Earth; all the hands of the whole Family in Heaven and Earth are concerned in their petitions.

1. Chriſt intercedes for the Church, who alwaies deſires mercy and deliverance for them in the appointed time, Zech. 1. 12. How long wilt thou not have mercy on Jeruſalem? and the iſſue is alwaies gracious: For, v. 13. God anſwers him with good and comfortable words; and thereupon Carpenters are raiſed to cut off the horns which had ſcattered Judah, v. 20.

2. Angels in all probability plead for the Church, as we have already heard: 'Tis likely they offer and preſent that to God which makes for his glory, and that is the good of the Church. Angels ſurely deſire that which their Head doth, which is * deſcribed as one of their own Order, and called an Angel. Do they rejoyce at the repentance of a ſinner, and do they not likewiſe triumph at the happineſs of the Church, which is part of that Family they are of? And we know, that the greatneſs of our joy is ſuted to the mercies of our deſires; where our joy is moſt triumphant, it implies that our deſires before were moſt vehement.

* Zech. 1. 12.

3. Glorifyed Saints are not ſurely behind. The rich man in the Parable deſired his Friend on Earth might not come into that place of torment *. If there be ſo much charity in Hell, can there be leſs in Heaven? If he deſired it, that by the preſence of his companions in ſin, his own torments might not be increaſed; Do not the Saints in Heaven deſire the preſence of the whole Church, that their happineſs in that of the whole body may be compleated? If the Head Chriſt be not compleat without the body, the members of the body cannot be compleat without one another. The Souls of them that were ſlain for the word of God, cry under the Altar for vengeance on them that dwell on the Earth, as Revel. 6. 9, and 10. How long, O Lord holy and true, doſt thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the Earth? Will not their kindneſs to their fellow members, be as ſtrong as their juſtice? And their love for the good of their friends draw out their prayers as well as their deſire of vengeance on their Enemies? Why may they not as well pray for us, as we praiſe God for them? Had they not ſome likeneſs to their great Maſter whilſt they were on Earth, and ſhall they not be more like to him now they are in Heaven, and behold his face, and feel all the ſtirrings of his heart? And if they have no ſence at all of the Churches ſufferings, how ſhall they be like to him who hath? As their bodies ſhall be like the glorious body of Chriſt at the reſurrection, are not their Souls now like his glorious Soul, merciful, and compaſſionate, and ſympathizing in all the afflictions of the Church? and can this be without ſome breathings for a full compleating of the Churches freedom? are ſuch deſires and pleas any hinderance to their preſent happineſs? 'Tis ſo far from that, that it doth rather further their glory, which cannot be compleat, as the glory of Chriſt, as head, is not mounted to the higheſt pitch of glory, till his myſtical body be all gathered in and lodged with him. If it be thus, will God do any thing prejudicial to the Church, and contrary to the combin'd deſires of all thoſe that are ſo near him? If God doth ſometimes ſtir up himſelf upon the ſupplication of one man, and grant an order upon his petition according to his mind; and if the prayers of one faithful Moſes, or Elias, or Samuel have ſuch a kind of Almighty power in them, much more is the joynt force of ſo many prayers twiſted together.

* Luk. 16. 28.

Uſe. 1. For information. Is it ſo that all Providence is for the good of the Church? Then,

1. God will alwaies have a Church in the world, he will have ſome to ſerve him. The whole courſe of his Providence being deſigned for it; As long as the world, which is the object of his Providence, doth endure, he will have a Church. God would otherwiſe loſe the end of the motion of his eyes *, the operation of his providence, ſince it is to ſhew himſelf ſtrong for the Church and every member of it. As long as the candle and light of the Goſpel burns and ſhines, God will have a candleſtick to ſet the candle in *. His great deſign in making a World, was not to have Sun, Moon and Stars, but a Church, a company of men that might bear his mark, and honour him, to whom he might might ſpeak, and extend his grace abroad, which he was ſo full of within. As a Limner, who would draw an exellent draught, draws his deſign in the midſt of the cloth, and fills the void places with clouds, and landskips, and other fancies at his pleaſure, which communicate ſome beauty and luſtre to the work: But that was not the principal deſign of the Workman. That Redeemer which bears the Church upon his heart, will create a ſtability for it; 'tis a part of his Prieſtly Office to have a care of the Lamps: 'Tis one of his Titles to be he that walks in the midſt of the Seven Golden Candleſticks *. Prieſts under the Law were to look to the great Candleſtick in the Temple, ſupply the Lamps with Oyl, and make them clean *. The Church indeed may be eclips'd, but not extinguiſhed; if it be not conſpicuous on the mountain, yet it ſhall be hid in the Wilderneſs. There ſhall be ſprinklings of profeſſors among all people. God will leaven the places where they are, into Chriſtianity, and cauſe them to fructify and grow up in purity and glory: And the remnant of Jacob ſhall be in the midſt of many people, as a dew from the Lord, as the ſhowers upon the graſs, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the Sons of men. It tarries not for man. It attends not the power of man, the precepts of man, or inventions of man; but whoſe deſcent is from Heaven, and is carried on not by humane power, but by the divine Spirit and Providence: It ſhall be firmer than all worldly power, and the ſtrongeſt Kings, Iſa. 2. 2. And the mountain of the Lords houſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains, and ſhall be exalted above the hills. Above Mountains and Hills, to which ſometimes the powers of the World are compared, Zach. 4. 7. That Providence which gave the Church at firſt a footing in the World upon a weak foundation to outward appearance, in ſpight of Men and Devils will preſerve it, and not ſuffer it to be blown up, he will ſhadow the Church with his wings in a perpetual ſucceſſion of the choiceſt mercies.

2: God will in the greateſt exigences, find out means for the protection of his Church. This will be till his Providence be at an end. When God hath removed one inſtrument of his Churches protection, he hath his choice of others, whom he can raiſe and ſpirit for his work. When thoſe upon whom the Churches hopes hang, are taken off, he can raiſe things that are unlikely, to ſupply the place. As the Luteniſt accidentally had a Graſshopper leapt upon his inſtrument, to ſupply by its noiſe the place of a ſtring which had newly crackt, whereby his Muſick was continued without interruption. God can Spirit men againſt their own natural fears. It was very improbable, that Nicodemus, one of a fearful diſpoſition, who came to our Saviour by night for fear of the Jews, ſhould have the courage to aſſert his cauſe in the face of a whole Councel of Phariſees, contriving his death, and at preſent blunt the edge of their malice, though we read of none at that time in the counſel to ſecond him *: The holy Ghoſt takes particular notice that it was he that came to Jeſus by night.

* Joh. 7. 50, 51.

Joſeph of Arimathea, whoſe name we meet not with in the Catalogue of any of our Diſciples, till the time of his death, and then he appears boldly to beg the body of Jeſus of Pilate. God will never want inſtruments for the preſerving that Church, which he owns as his. 'Tis obſerved by ſome, that God ſo ordered it, that the ſame day that Pelagius, the great poyſoner of the Chriſtian Doctrine was born in Brittain, Auſtin the moſt famous defender of the truth was born in Africk; That the horn, which puſhed the truth, ſhould no ſooner appear, but the Carpenter to cut it off, ſhould be provided too. As it is obſerved where poyſons grow, Antidotes grow near them by the indulgent proviſion of the God of Nature

As there is the Wiſdom of the Serpent againſt the Church, ſo there is the Wiſdom of God for it. Gods Goodneſs upon his Church in former Ages is not all laid out: He hath his Stores ſtill, neither is his Wiſdom non-pluſt, nor his Power weakned; neither is he, nor can he be weary of his care.

3. The Church ſhall in the end prove Victorious againſt all its adverſaries, or Providence muſt miſs of its Aim. The Church is compared to an Olive Tree, Hoſ. 14. 6. in reſpect of Beauty, his Beauty ſhall be as the Olive Tree. It is ſo alſo in reſpect of Victory. Olive Branches were uſed in Triumph. God is on the Churches ſide, and he is ſtronger than the ſtrongeſt, and wiſer than the wiſeſt, and higher than the higheſt. Jeſus Chriſt is the Churches Head and General: Chriſt the Head watcheth for the good of the Church, the Body. He muſt be deſtroyed before the Church can. There is a mighty Arm, which though it may for a time ſeem withered, will in the end be ſtretched out, and get it ſelf the Victory. Whilſt Chriſt is in the Ship, it may be toſſed, but it ſhall not be ſunk. It may be beaten down, but like a Ball to rebound the higher. The young Tree that is ſhaken by the wind, may loſe ſome leaves, and ſome fruit too, but the root gets greater ſtrength and ſtrikes it ſelf deeper into the Earth, and makes the Branches more capable of a rich return of Fruit the following year. The Churches Stature is compared to a Palm-Tree * which cannot be depreſt by the weights which hang upon it, but riſeth the higher. God uſes the ſame method in the Churches, as in Chriſts advancement. Our Saviours Death was neceſſary to his Glory *, And the Churches affliction ſometimes to its exaltation. A Nation may loſe ſome Battels, and yet be Victorious: The Church may have many a croſs, but in the end will ſurmount all difficulties. Though Judgments and Apoſtacies may be great in a Nation, yet God will have a care of his own Plants *. There ſhall be a tenth; It ſhall return, the Holy Seed ſhall be the ſubſtance thereof: As a Tree in Winter which ſeems dead, but its juyce ſhall revive into rich and generous Bloſſoms. The Ark ſhall float above the waters. Babylon ſhall fall, the Lamb ſhall ſtand upon Mount Sion. Men may as well ſtop the riſing of the Sun in its mounting to the Meridian, Bridle in the Tyde of the Ocean, as hinder the Current of an Almighty Providence.

4. The intereſt of Nations is to bear a reſpect to the Church, and countenance the Worſhip of God in it. This is to concur with Gods main end, and imitate him in his Providential Adminiſtrations. Gods People, (whatever their Enemies ſuggeſt to the contrary) are a Bleſſing in the midſt of a Land *; their intereſt is greater than the intereſt of all the World beſides; though they be but a handful, their fruit ſhall ſhake like Lebanon *. The neglect of Religion is the Ruine of Nations. 'Tis obſerved that Cyrus was ſlain in the War in Scithia, a little after he neglected the building of the Temple of Hieruſalem which he had begun. Thoſe Perſian Kings Reigned the longeſt, that favoured the Jews in that and their other juſt requeſts. God honoured or Diſgraced them as they were kind or cruel to his People. And when any act for the good of his People, they ſhall not be without their Reward. When Cyrus ſhould let the Jewiſh Captives go free without Ranſom, he ſhould be no loſer by it. God would give him the labour of Egypt, the Merchandize of Ethiopia, and the ſtrength of the Sabeans into his hand for the price of his Peoples Delivery *. Thoſe Nations which ſhould favour them in the times of their Perſecutions and Flights, and give them ſhelter in their Countreys, ſhould thrive and proſper by the bleſſing of God upon them. If Moab give entertainment to the flying Iſraelites in the time of the Invaſion of Salmanaſſer; God will preſerve their Land that the Spoyler ſhall not enter into the Confines of it, and they ſhall have Kings and Judges under the Protection of the Houſe of David; i. e. under the Kings of Iſrael (as ſome underſtand it *) Saints are the Guardians of the places where they live, their Prayers have a greater influence than the wiſeſt Counſels, or the mightieſt Force *. And Eliſha cried, my Father, my Father, the Chariot of Iſrael, and the Hroſmen thereof. The Chaldee paraphraſeth thus. Thou art better to Iſrael by thy Prayers than Chariots and Horſmen. This is the Elogy of one ſingle Prophet, what influence then hath the whole Church of God in a place? The whole World is the better for the Church of God. The Chaldee Paraphraſe hath a notion upon that, Pſalm. 22. 3. But thou art holy, oh thou that inhabiteſt the Praiſes of Iſrael: Thou that eſtabliſheſt the World for the Praiſes of Iſrael. God hath nothing to do in the World but the ſaving his People: When that is once done, he will put an end to this Frame of things: When he hath hath gathered his Wheat into his Garner, he will burn up the Chaff. His People are the Spirit and Quinteſſence of the World: When this is extracted, the reſt are flung upon the Dunghill, as a Caput Mortuum.

5. We may ſee hence the ground of moſt of the Judgments in the World. Men by their rage againſt the Church, will not acknowledg God's Government of the World for the Churches good: Therefore the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 59. 13. Conſume them in wrath, conſume them that they may not be, and let them know that God rules in Jacob unto the ends of the earth. The Church is the Seat of his Government, and from thence he extends it to the uttermoſt parts of the Earth. In Jacob he rules, and for the ſake of Jacob he orders his Government to the ends of the Earth: The not acknowledging this, brings wrathful Conſumptions upon men: And it is alſo the end of his Judgments, to make men know it. 'Tis likely enough the four Kings * might have gone clear away with all their Booty, had not they laid their fingers upon Lot: But when they would pack him up among the reſt, they did but ſollicite their own Ruine, and arm the Almighty God againſt them. God did not think any of the People worth the mention, verſe 11. only Lot a righteous perſon, verſe 12. he is named as having Gods eye only upon him. And when Abraham returns from the Victory, v. 16. the reſt of the delivered Captives are mentioned in the bulk, Lot only in particular, as though all that had been done, had been done by God only for Lots ſake. They might have preſerved the whole Prey to themſelves, had it not been for this Jewel too precious in Gods accompt for their Cuſtody. And the fearful Curſe that God pronounced againſt the Ammonite and Moabite, that they ſhould not come into the Congregation for ten Generations, though any of them turned Proſelytes, was becauſe they came not out with ſo much as Bread and Water to meet the Iſraelites, and becauſe they hired Balaam to Curſe them. The utter waſting of Nations and Kingdoms, is becauſe they will not ſerve the intereſt of God in his People. Iſa. 60. 12. For the Nation and Kingdom that will not ſerve thee, ſhall periſh; yea thoſe Nations ſhall be utterly waſted: God will bring an utter Conſumption upon thoſe people that refuſe to love them, much more upon thoſe that hate them.

Deut. 23. 3, 4.

6. What eſteem then ſhould there be of the Godly in the World? The Providence of God, being chiefly for the good of his people, cannot well fall upon them, but ſome drops will fall upon thoſe involved with them in a common intereſt. When the Corn and Wine, and Oyl hear Jezreel (the Seed of God) and the Earth hears the Corn, and the Heavens hear the Earth, and God hears the Heavens *: When their ſupplications come up to the great Superintendent of the World, many of the Wicked will fare the better for that Providence which is given only in anſwer to Jezreels Prayer: God cauſes his Son to ſhine upon the unjuſt, upon them, not for their ſakes. When Nebuchannezzar iſſued out that unjuſt order for the ſlaying the Chaldeans for not performing an impoſſible command in telling him the Dream he had forgoten, Daniel was ſought out to undergo the ſame fate: Yet by his Wiſdom God bends the heart of Arioch the Executioner of this Decree, to ſtay his hand. Daniel goes to the King, God ſtayes Nebuchnezzars Fury, and moves his heart to give them time. The Providence is chiefly intended for the preſervation of Daniel and his Godly Companions, but the reſt of the wiſe men have the benefit of it. As the water with which a man waters his choiceſt Plants and Flowers in his Garden is intended only for them, yet ſome falling off from thoſe Flowers, refreſheth the Weeds that grow under them. If God had not had ſuch flowers as Daniel and his Companions, the Weeds in Chaldea had been plucked up. Yet the ungrateful World takes no notice of the benefits they receive from this Salt of the Earth, which preſerves them, and to whom they are all ſo much beholding. Lot had been the occaſion of reſtoring Zoar from Captivity, as I mentioned before, for the inhabitants of that City were engaged with thoſe of Sodom in the Fight againſt the four Kings; And the King of Bela, the ſame is Zoar. And perhaps were carried Captives with the reſt of their Neighbours: And it had been ſaved from the Flames which fell upon Sodom meerly by Lots prayer, Gen. 19. 21. See, I have accepted thee concerning this thing, that I will not overthrow this City for the which thou haſt ſpoken; yet he found them a ſurly people, and was requited with a rude reception notwithſtanding his kindneſs, verſe 13. He went up out of Zoar, for he feared to dwell in Zoar: It was not likely he was ſo diſtruſtful of God, that he ſhould overthrow it, when he had abſolutely promiſed him the contrary: Therefore moſt likely for ſome churliſh threatnings from them. Nay, Sodom it ſelf was beholding to him for a ſmall reſpite of the Judgment intended againſt them. For God tells him he could do nothing till he were come thither *. And it was ſo, for Lot was entered into Zoar before a drop of Brimſtone and Fire was rained down upon Sodom * Then the Lord rained upon Sodom; when? when Lot was entered into Zoar. This good the Wicked World get by Gods People, is ſo evident, that ſometimes wicked men cannot but take notice of it. Laban, a ſelfiſh Idolater, was ſenſible of it, Gen. 30. 27. I have found by experience that the Lord hath bleſſed me for thy ſake. It was a Leſſon ſo legible, that he might have learned it ſooner than in fourteen years. The Church is the chief object of preſervation, wicked men are preſerved for their ſakes; as Dung is preſerved, not for its own ſake, but for the manuring a fruitful field, and Thorns in the Hedge are preſerved for the Gardens ſake.

* Ver. 23, 24.

7. 'Tis then a very fooliſh thing for any to contend againſt the welfare of Gods People. 'Tis to ſtrive againſt an Almighty and unwearied Providence. Men may indeed ſometimes be ſuffered by God for holy ends to have their Wills, in ſome meaſure, upon the Church, but not altogether: They muſt firſt depoſe him from his Throne, blind his eyes, or hold his Arm. 'Tis as fooliſh as if a worm ſhould deſign to dig down a Mountain, or Chaff to Martial it ſelf in Battel-Array againſt the Wind, or for a poor Flye to ſtop the motion of a Milſtone.

1. 'Tis fooliſh, Becauſe it is exceeding ſinful. What is done againſt the Church is rather done againſt God than againſt it. Since all her Conſtitution, Worſhip, Obſervances, are directed to God as their ultimate end; ſo that to endeavour to deſtroy the Church, is to deny God a Worſhip, deprive him of his Sanctuary, break open his Houſe, Raviſh his Spouſe, cut off Chriſt's Body, rob him of his Jewels, and will be ſo interpreted by God at the laſt, upon the ſcanning of things. If the Church be Gods houſe, the Enemies ſhall anſwer for every Invaſion, every forcible Entry, for the breaking down the Gates and Bars of it, God will ſue them at laſt for dilapidations.

2. Very unſucceſsfull. Shall God be afraid of the multitudes and power of Men? No more than a lyon, or a young lyon roaring after his prey, when a multitude of Sheperds are called forth againſt them, ſhall he be afraid of their voice, or abaſe himſelf for their noiſe *. Noiſe and Clamor is all they can do, and that not long: The fierceneſs of the Lyon quickly ſcatters them. The Aſſociations, and mens girding themſelves againſt the Church, is but a preparation to their own Ruine, Iſa. 8. 9. Aſſociate your ſelves together oh ye people, and ye ſhall be broken in pieces, three times repeated. Your Counſels, ſaith he, ſhall not ſtand againſt that preſence of God that is with us, For God is with us.

* Iſa. 31. 4.

3. It is very deſtructive too. God will not alway be ſtill and refrain himſelf: he ſeems to do ſo for a while; but when he doth ariſe, he will deſtroy and devour at once *, he will make but one morſel of them. When God is angry with his people, and gives them into the hands of men to execute his Juſtice upon them, and puniſh them, he will even puniſh thoſe enemies for their Cruelty, and going beyond their Commiſſion, in ſatisfying their own immoderate Paſſions upon them. Upon this account God threatens Babylon, Iſa. 47. 6. I was wroth with my people, I have polluted mine Inheritance, and given them into thy hand, thou didſt ſhew them no mercy; whereupon God threatens them afterwards, &c. ſo Zach. 1. 15. God was ſore diſpleaſed with the Heathen; for when he was but a little diſpleaſed with his people, they helped forward the affliction.

Iſa. 42. 14.

Uſe. 2. Is for Comfort.

If

If all the Providence of God be for the good the Church: If his eyes run to and fro to ſhew himſelf ſtrong for them, it affords matter of great comfort. His Providence is continual for them *, he hath ſeven pipes to convey kindneſs to them, as well as ſeven Lamps whereby to diſcern their ſtreights. His Providence is as vaſt as his Omniſcience: The number of Pipes belonging to the Candleſtick of the Church is exact according to the number of Lamps. The Churches miſery cannot be hid from Gods eye, let it be in what part of the Earth ſoever, for his eyes run to and fro throughout the whole Earth, and his ſight excites his ſtrength. Upon the ſight of their diſtreſſed condition, he watches only for the fitteſt opportunity to ſhew himſelf ſtrong for them. And when that opportunity comes, he is ſpeedy in the Deliverance of them, Pſal. 18. 10. He rode upon a Cherub and did flye, yea, he did flye upon the wings of the wind. He doth not only ride upon a Cherub, but flye. His wings are nothing but wind, which hath the quickeſt and ſtrongeſt motion, which moves the greateſt bodies, and turns down all before it. What is for the good of the whole, hath an influence upon every Member of the Body

* Zech. 4. 2.

1. 'Tis comfort in Duties and ſpecial Services. Nothing ſhall be wanting for encouragement to Duty, and ſucceſs in it, when God calls any to it, ſince all his Providence is for the good of the Church. Let there be but ſincerity on our parts, in our attempts of ſervice upon Gods call, and we need not fear a want of Providence on God's part: God never calls any to ſerve his Church in any ſtation, but he doth both ſpirit and encourage them. God hath in his common Providence ſuited the nature of every Creature to that place in which he hath ſet it in the World; and will he not much more in his ſpecial Providence ſuit every one to that place he calls them to, for the ſervice of his Church! He did not forſake Chriſt in redeeming his Church, neither will he forſake any in aſſiſting his Church. When Joſeph of Arimathea would boldly demand the body of our Saviour, Providence made the way plain before him, he meets with no check, neither from Pilate nor the Prieſts *.

Mat. 27. 58. Mark 15. 43.

2. In meaneſt and loweſt. 'Tis one and the ſame God that rules the affairs of the whole World, of the Church and of every particular Member of it. As it is the ſame Soul that informs the whole Body, the meaneſt Member as well as that which is moſt excellent. Not the meaneſt ſincere Chriſtian, but is under Gods eye for good. The Spirit acts and animates every Member in the Church, the weakeſt as well as the moſt towring Chriſtian. Baruch was but the Prophet Jeremy's Amanuenſis or Scribe, and Servant to Jeremy (who was no great man in the World himſelf) yet God takes notice ſo of his Service, that he would particularly provide for him, and commands Jeremy in a way of Prophecy to tell him as much, Jer. 45. 5. I will bring evil upon all fleſh, but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey, whitherſoever thou goeſt.

3. In the greateſt Judgments upon others. In an Epidemical Judgment upon the whole Nation of the Jews, God would have a ſpecial care of Baruch. If he ſhould caſt his people far off among the Heathen, and ſcatter them among the Countries, yet even there he would be a little Sanctuary unto them. His own preſence ſhould ſupply the want of a Temple, ſo he is pleaſed to expreſs himſelf *. But how is it poſſible the great God can be but a little Sanctuary? His eye is upon them to ſee their danger, and his hand upon them to ſecure them from it. His promiſe ſhall ſhield them, and his Wings ſhall cover them *. While he hath indignation, he hath a ſecret Chamber for their ſecurity *. An Almighty ſhadow, under which they may abide *. In times of the moſt devouring danger, he hath a Seal to ſet upon their foreheads as a mark of his ſpecial Protection. We never have ſo much experience of Gods care and ſtrength, as in times of Trouble, Pſal. 37. 39. He is their ſtrength in time of Trouble He is a friend who is as able as willing, and as willing as able to help them, whoſe watchfulneſs over them is as much above their apprehenſion as it is above their merits.

4. In

4. In the greatest extremities wherein his people may be, there are promises of comfort*. Both in overflowing waters, and scorching fires, he will be with them. His Providence shall attend his Promise, and his truth shall be their Shield and Buckler, Psal. 91. 4. That surely is a sufficient support; Christ thought it so, when he only said to his disciples, *'tis I, be not afraid. What though there be a Storm, a darkness and trouble, 'tis I am he. The darkness of the night troubles not the Pilot whilst he hath his Compass to steer by. If all his Providences be for the good of them that fear him, he can never want means to bring them out of trouble, because he is always actually exercised in governing that which is for their good; and till he sees it fit to deliver them, he will be with them. Great Mercies succeed the sharpest Afflictions*. When there should be a voice of trembling, and men with their hands upon their Loins as women in Travel, and paleness in their faces, from the excess of their fears: In that day God would break the Yoak from them, and they should serve the Lord their God, and David their King. Though the night be never so dark, yet it is certain the Sun will rise and disperse its light next morning, and one time or other shew its self in its brightness: We have no reason to despond in great extremities, since he can think us into safety, Psal. 40. 17. Lord think on me; much more look us into it; his thoughts and his eyes move together.

* Isa. 43. 2.

* Jer. 30. 5, 6, 7. &c.

5. In fear of wants. The power of the Governour of the World cannot be doubted. His love, as little as it seems, since it hath moved him to prepare Heaven to entertain his people at the end of their Journey, it will not be wanting to provide accommodation for them upon the way, since all things both good and bad are at his beck, and under the government of his gracious Wisdom. His eyes run to and fro through the whole Earth, not only to defend them in dangers, but supply them in wants: for his strength is shewed both ways. Doth he providentially regard them that have no respect for him, and will he not employ his power for, and extend his care to them that adore and love him, and keep up his honour in the World? He will not surely be regardless of the afflictions of his Creatures. His people are not only his Creatures, but his new Creatures, their bodies are not only created by him, but redeemed by his Son. The purchase of the Redeemer is joyned to the Providence of the Creator. If he took care of you when he might have damned you for your Sins, will he not much more since you are Believers in Christ. And he cannot damn you Believing, unless he renounce his Sons Mediation and his own Promise. A natural man provides for his own, much more a Righteous man, Prov. 19. 22. A good man leaves an Inheritance to his children, much more the God of Righteousness, a God who hath his eye always upon them. His eye will affect his heart, and his heart spirit the hand of his Power to relieve. He hath prepared of his goodness for the poor. Psalm 68. 10.

6. 'Tis comfort in the low estate of the Church at any time. Gods eye is upon his Church, even whilst he seems to have forsaken them. If he seem to be departed, it is but in some other part of the Earth, to shew himself strong for them; where ever his eye is fixed in any part of the World, his Church hath his heart, and his Churches relief is his end. Though the Church may sometimes lye among the Pots, in a dirty condition, yet there is a time of Resurrection when God will restore it to its true glory, and make it as white as a Dove with its Silver wings*: The Sun is not alway obscured by a thick Cloud, but will be freed from the darkness of it. *God will judge his people, and repent himself concerning his servants: 'Tis a comfort to God to deliver his people, and he will do it in such a Season when it shall be most comfortable, to his Glory, and their Hearts. The very name Hierusalem, some derive from Jireh, Salem, God will provide in Salem. The new Jerusalem is the title given to Gods Church, Rev. 1. and is still the object of his Providence, and he will provide for it at a pinch, Gen. 22. 14. Jehovah Jireh, God will raise up the honour and beauty of his Church: Great men shall be servants to it, and employ their strength for it when God shall have mercy on it*: Yea, the Learning and Knowledg of the World shall contribute to the building of it, v. 13. The glory of Lebanon ſhall come unto thee, the firr tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautifie the place of my ſanctuary. It ſhall be called the city of the Lord, the Sion of the holy one of Iſrael, that ſhe may know that the Lord is her Saviour, and her Redeemer the mighty one of Jacob. As Chriſt roſe in his Natural, ſo he will in his Spiritual Body. If Chriſt when dead could not be kept from Riſing, Chriſt now living ſhall not be hindered from raiſing and helping his Church. His own Glory is linked with his Peoples ſecurity; and though he may not be moved for any thing in them becauſe of their ſinfulneſs, he will for his own name, becauſe of its Excellency *. Ezek. 36. 22. I do not this, for your ſakes, O houſe of Iſrael, but for my holy names ſake. As ſorrows encreaſed upon the Iſraelites, the nearer their Deliverance approached. * Ezek. 36.

Becauſe this Method of God is the greateſt ſtartling even to good men, let us conſider this a little; that God doth, and why God doth leave his Church to extremities before he doth deliver it.

Take the reſolution of this in ſome propoſitions.

1. 'Tis indeed Gods uſual method to leave the Church to extremity before he doth command help. You never heard of any eminent Deliverance of the Church but was uſhered in by ſome amazing diſtreſs. The Iſraelites were not ſaved till they were put in between Sea, Hills and Forts, that their Deſtruction was inevitable unleſs Heaven relieved them. Pharaoh reſolves to have his will, and God reſolves to have his; but he lets him come with his whole Force and open mouth at the Iſraelites backs, and then makes the Waters his Sepulcher. Conſtantine the man-child in the Revelation, was preceded by Dioclesian the ſharpeſt Perſecutor. When his People are at a loſs, 'tis his uſual time to do his greateſt works for them; God had promiſed Chriſt many ages, and yet no appearance of him; ſtill Promiſe after promiſe, and no performance, Pſal. 40. 8. It was then [lo I come] yet many hundred years rowl'd away, and no ſight of him yet. Captivity and Affliction, and no Redeemer; but when the World was over-run with Idolatry, the Jews oppreſſed by the Romans, the Scepter departed from Judah, Herod an Edomite, and ſtranger King, and ſcarce any Faith left, then, then he comes. The World will be in much the like caſe at his next coming, Luke 18. 8. When the Son of man comes, ſhall he find faith in the earth? there ſhall be faintings, deſpondency, unbelief of his promiſe, as though he had caſt off all care of his Churches concerns. 'Tis not meant of a Juſtifying Faith, but a Faith in that particular promiſe of his coming. The Faith of the Iſraelites muſt needs begin to flag, when they ſaw their Males murdered by the Egyptians; could they believe the Propagation of the Seed of Abraham, when murder took off the Infants, and Labour and Age would in time, the old ones? Whilſt their Children were preſerved, the Promiſe might eaſily be believed. But conſider, this was but juſt before their deliverance; like a violent Criſis before Recovery. He doth then judge his people, and repent himſelf for his ſervants, when he ſees their power is gone, and there is none ſhut up or left *: He doth ſo for the wicked many times, when the affliction of Idolatrous Iſrael was bitter, when there was not any ſhut up, nor any left, nor any helper for Iſrael, then he ſaved them by the hand of Jeroboam the Son of Joaſh *. He doth ſo with private perſons; Peter might have been delivered by God's Power out of Priſon, when he was firſt ſent thither, but God thought it fitteſt for him to lie in Chains, and free him but the night before his intended Execution *. Lot had his goods rifled, and carried away Captive, before God ſtirred up Abraham to reſcue him. When the hand of the wicked lies heavieſt upon the heads of the Righteous, and wrings the moſt mournful ſighs from them; when they are needy, and the wicked ſecurely puffing at them, as though they had brought them to ſo low a condition as to blow them away with a blaſt, now ſaith God will I ariſe, Pſal. 12. 5. For the oppreſſion of the poor, for the ſighing of the needy, now will I ariſe ſaith the Lord, I will ſet him at ſafety from him that puffeth at him. Now, this is the time I watched for, as fitteſt for my own Glory and their ſafety. Then God diſappoints them, when they ſeem to have got to the Goal with the Ball at their foot. * Deut. 32. 36. *2 Kings 14. 26, 27. * Acts 12 6, 7.

Secondly. God hereby doth glorify himſelf. He then diſcovers that there is nothing too high for his power to check, nothing too ſubtil for his Wiſdom to diſappoint, nothing too low for his love to embrace. That is the ſeaſon wherein his Mercy will be moſt prized, his Power moſt admired, his Wiſdom moſt adored, and his Juſtice moſt cleared. God lets the concerns of his Church go backward, that he may bring them on with more Glory to himſelf, and ſatisfaction to his Creature. God will divide the benefit and the honour between himſelf and the Creature: He will have the whole Glory, and his creature ſhall have the ſenſible advantage. They ſhall enjoy Salvation, there is their benefit; but not by ſword or bow, but by the Lord their God *. Saved they ſhould be, but in ſuch a way wherein the honour of God might moſt appear without any mixture of the Creature.

* Hoſ. 1. 7.

1. God glorifies his Power. His eyes run to and fro to ſhew himſelf ſtrong. He will then pitch upon ſuch a ſeaſon, when his ſtrength may appear moſt illuſtrious, and none elſe have any pretence to claim an equal ſtrength with him. A time of extremity is the fitteſt opportunity for this. When his power cannot be clouded by any interpoſitions of the creature for challenging a ſhare in it. The greater the malice againſt the Church, the weaker the Churches ability to help it ſelf, the more glorious is the power of God magnified in deliverance; little dangers are not ſo ſuitable for the triumph of an Infinite ſtrength. As God let Chriſt lye three dayes in the Grave, that his Reſurrection might be known to be the fruit of a Divine power; for the ſame end he lets his myſtical Body lye in the ſame condition. Had God brought Iſrael out of Egypt in the time of the Kings that were friends to them from a kindly remembrance of Joſeph, there had been no character of a Divine Power, tho there had been of a Divine truth apparent in the caſe; but he ſet apart that time for their deliverance, when he was to conteſt with the mightieſt oppoſition from the whole Body of the Egyptian Nation, who had forgot Joſeph their great Benefactor. Had not the Diſciples been in a great Storm, ready to be caſt away, and Chriſt aſleep, till they were in extremity, they had not ſeen ſuch * viſible marks of the extenſiveneſs of their Maſters power. When the hearts of the ſtrong men fainted, when the Aſſyrians would not hear the Embaſſadors of Peace, when they had broke their former Covenant, reſolved to invade the Land; when their Calamity and deſpair had arreſted all their hopes, now, when all things are in ſuch a deplorable ſtate, will I riſe ſaith the Lord, now will I be exalted; now will I liſt up my ſelf. God was not aſleep or unconcerned, but he ſate ſtill watching for ſuch a ſeaſon; Now, is three times repeated. The Pſalmiſt gives us a Record of this in his particular caſe. When the waters of his affliction were many, the Enemy ſtrong, and too ſtrong for him, their ſtrength edged with an intenſe hatred, then God appears to be his ſtay, and prevents them in the day of his Calamity, Pſal. 18. 16, 17, 18. God lets his Enemies be too ſtrong for him, that he might appear his only ſtay, without any mixture of Davids ſtrength in the caſe. When the Jews thruſt Chriſt out of Nazareth, led him to the Brow of the Hill, and were ready to caſt him down, then, and not till then, he frees himſelf out of their hands, and diſappoints the effects of their rage. As Chriſt dealt thus for himſelf, ſo he deals for his Church in all Ages.

* Iſa. 33. 7, 8, &c.

2. God glorifies his Wiſdom. His eyes run to and fro throughout the whole earth to ſhew himſelf ſtrong; 'tis not a bare ſtrength that God would ſhew, or ſuch a Power which we call in man a bruitiſh valour, without wit or skill; but to ſhew his ſtrength with his wiſdom, when all his other Attributes may be glorified with that of his Power. When all worldly helps are departed, we can as little aſcribe our ſecurity to our own wiſdom and induſtry, as to our own ſtrength and power. The Phyſitians skill is beſt evidenced in maſtering a deſperate Diſeaſe. He will bring the Counſels of the Heathen to nought *. He will let them counſel, he will let them deviſe and carry on their Counſels near to Execution, that he may ſhew, that as the ſtrength of Hell is no match for his Power, ſo the craft of Satan is no mate for his Wiſdom. But he raiſes the Trophies of his Wiſdom upon the ſubtil devices of his Enemies.

Iſa. 33. 10.

3. God

3. God glorifies his care and compassion When his people are neareſt cruſhing, God is neareſt preſerving. Gods Mercy is greateſt when his Saints Miſery is deepeſt; when Sion is as an outcaſt, it ſhall be taken into Gods protection, Jer. 30. 16, 17. I will heal thee of thy wounds, becauſe they called thee an Outcaſt, ſaying, this is Sion whom no man ſeeks after. When none ſtood up to plead for her, when her Lovers, ſhe depended on, had forgotten and forſaken her, when they thought her caſt out of the care of any creature, the Creator would take her up. When the ruine was inevitable as to man, their preſervation was moſt regarded by God. Had God ſtopped Pharaoh at his firſt March, by raiſing ſome Mutiny in his Army, his mercy to his people, as well as his power againſt his Enemies, had not been ſo conſpicuous. The more deſperate things are, the fitter ſubject for the advancement of Gods kindneſs. Had God conducted the Iſraelites through a rich and fruitful Country, it would have obſcured the glory of his care of them, which was more ſignal in directing them through a Barren Deſert, crowded with fiery Serpents, without Bread to nouriſh them, or Water to cool them, wherein he manifeſted himſelf to be both their Caterer and Phyſitian. Moſes was never more peculiarly under Gods protection, no not when he had the whole Guard of Iſrael about him in the Wilderneſs, than when his Mother had expoſed him to the River forlorn, in a pitched Ark, and forſaken by his Siſter, who ſtood aloof off to ſee how providence would conduct him. When Laban was poſſeſſed with Fury againſt Jacob, God countermands it, and iſſues out his own order to him, how he ſhould behave himſelf towards his Son *. God times his kindneſs, ſo that it may appear to be nothing elſe but Grace, Grace with a Witneſs; that his people may be able to underſtand the very particularities of it, Iſa. 30.18. therefore will the Lord wait that he may be gracious unto you: He leaves them therefore for a while to the will of their enemies, verſe 17. At the rebuke of five ſhall you flee, till you be left as a beacon upon the top of a mountain, and as an enſign upon a Hill: Never is Salvation ſweeter, and Mercy better reliſht, than when it ſnatcheth us out of the teeth of danger. God would have his mercy valued, and 'tis fit it ſhould. And when is a Calm more grateful than after the bittereſt Storm, attended with the higheſt deſpair? Gods mercy in ſparing Iſaac after the knife was at his throat, was more welcome and more delicious both to Father and Son, than if God had revealed his intent to Abraham in the three days Journey to the Mount Moriah. But God ſuſpending his Soul in bitterneſs all that time, prepared his heart for the valuation of that mercy. When humane help forſaketh us, God moſt embraceth us, Pſal. 27. 10. When my father and mother forſake me, then the Lord will take me up.

* Gen. 31.24, 29.

4. God glorifies his Righteouſneſs and Juſtice. There is a meaſure of wickedneſs God ſtays for, which will be an object of his Juſtice without exception. When the meaſure of a peoples Covetouſneſs is come, then their end is come, and God will fill them with men as with Caterpillers, and they ſhall lift up a ſhout againſt them *. Hereby God clears the Juſtice of his proceedings, that he exercited Patience ſo long; that things were come to that paſs, that either his People or his Enemies muſt be deſtroyed. As the caſe was with the Iſraelites, had not God marvellouſly appeared, every man of them had been cut off or reduced to Slavery. The Dye was caſt, either the Egyptians or Iſraelites muſt be defeated: either God muſt appear for his Church, or none would be left in the world to profeſs him. In ſuch a caſe the Juſtice of God is more unexceptionable. No man has any ſemblance for complaining of him; For he ſtruck not till the ſafety of his Adverſaries was inconſiſtent with his own Honor and Intereſt of the World. When men come to ſuch a height, as to ſlight and reſolve to break the laws of God, then is the time for the Honor of his Righteouſneſs in his own inſtitutions, to vex them in his ſore diſpleaſure, Pſal. 2. 3, 5. Then ſhall he ſpeak to them in his wrath, and vex them, &c. When? When they reſolve to caſt away his bands and cords from them, ver. 2. He is forced to raiſe them, when men make void his Law, and tread down the Honor of it; when they would not have God to have a ſtanding Law in the World, or a people to profeſs him, Pſal. 119. 126. 'Tis time for the Lord to work, for they have made void thy Law.

* Jer. 51.13,14.

When the Grapes of Wickedneſs are thus fully ripe, then is Gods time for the Rev. 14. 19, 20. honour of his Juſtice to caſt them into the Wine-preſs of his Wrath *. This is Gods ſet time when he may glorify, without any exception, his Juſtice in puniſhing his enemies ſins, his Wiſdom in defeating his enemies Plots, his Power in deſtroying his enemies ſtrength, and his Mercy in relieving his Peoples wants.

Thirdly, Such extremities, and deliverance in them, are moſt advantageous for his people.

1. It being a ſeaſon to improve and know their intereſt. Men do not uſually ſeek to God, or at leaſt ſo earneſtly, as when they are in diſtreſs; the time of the tempeſt was the time of the Diſciples praying to Chriſt: The Iſraelites, you ſcarce find them calling upon God but in times of danger and diſtreſs: hereby God doth incourage and give an argument for Prayer. The Pſalmiſt uſeth the extremity of the Church often as an Argument to move God to pity, Pſal. 123. 3. Have mercy upon us, O Lord, have mercy upon us, for we are exceedingly filled with contempt. We are glutted with contempt, as low as low can be, ſo Pſal. 44. 23, 24. Awake, why ſleepeſt thou, O Lord, ariſe, caſt us not off for ever, our ſoul is bowed to the duſt. That is the moſt ſucceſsful time for Prayer which is the time of the ſtirring of Gods Bowels. He hath been a ſtrength to the poor, a ſtrength to the needy in his diſtreſs, a refuge from the ſtorm, a ſhadow from the heat, when the blaſt of the terrible ones is as a ſtorm
* Iſa. 25. 1. againſt the wall *. They in ſuch a time find how conſiderable their intereſt is with God, when upon their Prayer they ſhall find relief ſuitable to every kind of danger they are in: The Spirit of Prayer upon the Church is but the Preſage of their Adverſaries ruin. When God ſeeks to deſtroy the Nations that come againſt Hieruſalem, he will pour upon the Inhabitants of it, a ſpiritof Grace and of Supplication, Zech. 12. 9. and in that day I will ſeek to deſtroy all the Nations that come againſt Jeruſalem, and I will pour upon the houſe of David and the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem the Spirit of grace and of ſupplication. This time of extremity, when all their hands fail, ſhould edge the Churches Prayers. Our great Interceſſor ſeems in this caſe to ſet us a pattern, Zech. 1. 12. O Lord of Hoſts, how long wilt thou not have mercy upon Jeruſalem? [אתה ſingle by it ſelf, not in an affix.] When all the Earth ſits ſtill and is at reſt, unconcerned in the affairs of thy Church, if thou wilt not have mercy on them in this ſtrait, who ſhall relieve them? none elſe have any mind to it; then iſſue out comfortable words to the Angel from the mouth of God. This is an advantage of extremity, it ſets Chriſt a pleading, and the Church on praying.

2. As a ſeaſon for acting Faith at preſent, and an encouragement of relyance upon him in future ſtreights. As a ſeaſon for acting Faith at preſent. Our Saviour lets Lazarus dye and ſtink in the Grave, before he raiſed him, that he might both confirm Faith in his Diſciples hearts, and ſettle it in the hearts of
* John 11. 15, 45. ſome of the Jews *. I am glad for your ſakes that I was not there, to the intent that ye may believe. What, let Lazarus die, one that he loved, one ſo ſtrongly pleaded for by two Siſters that he loved too, and ſollicited upon his friendſhip to relieve him? v. 3. Behold he whom thou loveſt is ſick; and our Saviour glad he was not there to prevent it? yes, not glad of Lazarus his extremity, nor of the Churches; But of the opportunity to give them greater ground of Faith and encouragement to truſt him. The Churches Faith is Gods Glory: He that hath many things to truſt to, is in ſuſpence which he ſhould take hold of: But when there is but one left, with what greedineſs will he claſp about that! God cuts down worldly props, that we might make him our ſtay. How will the Church in extremity recollect all the deliverances of it in former ages, and put them up in pleas to God, for a renewal of his wonted kindneſs, and new ſucceſſions of deliverance, whereby God gets the glory of his former work, and his Church the preſent comfort in renewing fiducial acts upon him? How doth Jehoſaphat put God in mind of his gracious aſſiſtance acted ſome ages before, when he was in a ſtreight, by the Invaſion of a powerful Army, 2 Chron. 20. 7. Art not thou our God that didſt drive out the Inhabitants of this Land before thy people Iſrael? v. 12. We know not what to do, but our eyes are upon thee: Never are the Churches eyes ſo fixed upon God; never Gods eyes ſo fixed upon the Church, as in times of their diſtreſs. Then there is a ſweet Communion with, and recounting of all their former friendſhips: The Church then throws it ſelf wholly upon God: Its proſperity is but like a troubled Sea, its diſtreſs is the time of its reſt. So Aſa, when aſſaulted by a million of men under Zerah the Ethiopian, how doth he throw himſelf and the whole weight of his concerns upon the hands of God, and makes his Cauſe Gods? 2 Chron. 14. 11. Help us, O Lord our God, for we reſt on thee, oh Lord, thou art our God, let not man prevail againſt thee. And there is an encouragement alſo in the deliverance for future Faith. It gives a ground for future Faith from the riches of the preſent experience; in ſuch diſtreſſes there is the higheſt experience of God, and hope is the fruit of experience; How apt are we to believe God in other ſtraits, when we have had aſſiſtance (like they that dream'd) come unexpectedly upon us. God overthrew Pharaho's Hoſt in the Red Sea, when they were upon the heels of the affrighted Iſraelites and ready to cruſh them, but God gave them to be meat to the people inhabiting the Wilderneſs *, as a ſtanding excellent diſh to feed their hopes for all future deliverances upon their truſt in God. And indeed that deliverance was an earneſt of their perpetual ſecurity, by ſpecial Providence in any ſucceeding trouble. And God often gives them a particular charge to remember that deliverance, with a practical remembrance, to ſtill their Fear, and ſupport their Faith, Deut. 7. 18. Thou ſhalt not be afraid of them, but ſhalt well remember what the Lord thy God did unto Pharaoh, and to all the Egyptians. He would have them remember it as a Covenant-mercy, what the Lord thy God did, thy God in Covenant, not what the Lord did barely by an arm of Power, but what he did by a vaſtneſs of affection, and as a God of truth and firmneſs in his Covenant.

Land

* Pſal. 74. 14.

3. In fitting them by the extremity for a holy reception of the mercy intended.

God keeps up the diſtreſs of his Church to expel ſelf-confidence. Truſt in earthly things are the great checks of Gods Kindneſs. We hardly forſake this temper till we are forſaken by all thoſe things we confide in. Times of extremity make us more humble; and humility, like the Plow, fits us for the ſeed of mercy. The Gardners digging up the clods is but to prepare the earth for the receiving and nouriſhing ſome excellent Plants he intends to put into its Womb. There is a certain ſet time for Gods great actions. He lets the powers of darkneſs have their hour, and God will take his hour, Pſal. 102. 13. Thou ſhalt ariſe and have mercy upon Sion, for the time to favour her, yea the ſet time is come. He hath a ſet time for the diſcovery of his mercy, and he will not ſtay a jot beyond it. What is this time? v. 9, &c. When they eat aſhes like bread, and mingle their drink with weeping. When they are moſt humble, and when the ſervants of God have more affection to the Church. When their humble and ardent affections are ſtrong, even to the ruine and rubbiſh of it; when they have a mighty deſire and longing for the reparation of it, as the Jews in Captivity had for the very duſt of the Temple, v. 14. For thy ſervants take pleaſure in her ſtones, and favour the duſt thereof. For, there notes it to be a reaſon why the ſet-time was judged by them to be come. This is Gods ſet time when the Church is moſt believing, moſt humble, moſt affectionate to Gods intereſt in it, and moſt ſincere. Without Faith we are not fit to deſire mercy; without humility we are not fit to receive it, without affection we are not fit to value it, without ſincerity we are not fit to emprove it. Times of extremity contribute to the growth and exerciſe of thoſe qualifications.

4. In ſecuring them againſt future ſtreights. For Gods diſappointing Enemies when they think themſelves ſure of all, is the higheſt diſcouragement to them, and thoſe of the like temper, to renew the like attempts; but if they do, it is an evidence they ſhall meet with the like ſucceſs; 'Tis the higheſt vexation to ſee their projects diverted, when they have lighted their match, and are ready to give fire. Men may better take notice how God loves his people when, when he apprehends their adverſaries in the very Pinacle of their Pride, and flings them down from the Mount of their hopes. It doth not only daſh the preſent deſigns, but diſhearten future attempts. The Egyptians after their overthrow at the Red Sea, never attempted to diſturb them in their journey in the Wilderneſs. It was a Bridle to all their enemies, except Amalek, upon whoſe Country they travelled in the Wilderneſs, when it was the intereſt of State in all thoſe Nations to rout that ſwarm of People that muſt have ſome Seat to dwell in; and every Nation might juſtly fear to be diſpoſſeſſed by them; yet we read of no League among thoſe Nations bordering upon the Wilderneſs, ſuch a terror did God ſtrike into them by that relief he gave his People in their extremity at the Red Sea; whereby he provided for their future ſecurity in their whole Journey. It was this melted the hearts of the Gibeonites, one of the Nations of Canaan, and brought them to a ſubmiſſion to Joſhua, as the ſentiment of all their Neighbours, Joſh. 9. 9. We are come becauſe of the name of the Lord thy God, for we have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. And for this and other reaſons it may be, that the times before the Churches laſt deliverance ſhall be ſharper than any before; which our Saviour intimates, Mat. 24. 21. For then there ſhall be great tribulation, ſuch as was not ſince the beginning of the world, no nor ever ſhall be. In Diſcourſing his Diſciples of the troubles at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which was a type of the trouble preceding the end of the World, he adds a diſcourſe of what ſhall be at the end of the World, in the laſt attempt of the enemies of the Church; for ver. 29. he ſaith, immediately after the tribulation of thoſe days, he ſpeaks of his coming in the Clouds of Heaven with great power and glory. And alſo in the Revelation, Rev. 16. 18. And there was a great earthquake, ſuch as was not ſince men were upon the earth, ſo mighty an earthquake, and ſo great. This perhaps at the pouring out of the ſeventh Vial, may concern the Chriſtian Church as well as the Antichriſtian Party. But the reaſon why it may be ſharper juſt before that laſt deliverance, than it was in former ages, may be becauſe it is the laſt effort the enemy ſhall make; the laſt demonſtration of Gods power and wiſdom for, and care of his Church, and of Juſtice upon his enemies in ſuch caſes. The laſt ſeaſon for their multiplying their cries, and acting their Faith for ſuch a concern.

3. Uſe of Exhortation.

If it be ſo, that the Providence of God is chiefly deſigned for the good of the Church:

Firſt, Fear not the enemies of the Church. 'Tis a wrong to God. Fear of Man is always attended with a forgetfulneſs of God, Iſa. 51. 12, 13. I, even I am he that comforteth you, who art thou that art affraid of a man that ſhall dye, and of the ſon of man that ſhall be made as graſs, and forgetteſt the Lord thy maker, who hath ſtretched forth the Heavens, &c. 'Tis to value the power of graſs above the power of the Creator, as though that had more ability to hurt, than God to help. As if men were as ſtrong as Mountains, and God as weak as a Bulruſh. 'Tis a wrong to his truth; hath he not comforted you in his Promiſe? What Creature ſhould then deject you? 'Tis a wrong to his Mercy; Is he not the Lord thy maker? Calvin refers this to Regeneration, and not Creation. Hath he not renewed you by his Spirit? and will he not protect you by his ſtrength? and that you may not queſtion his power, look up to the Heavens which he hath ſtretched out, and the foundations of the Earth which he hath laid: And is that Arm which hath done ſuch mighty works, too weak to defend that work which is choicer in his eye than either the extended Heaven, or the eſtabliſhed Earth? We vilifie God, and defile his glory, when our fear of mans power ſtifles our Faith in God, Iſa 8. 12, 13. Neither fear you their fear, nor be affraid, ſanctifie the Lord of Hoſts himſelf, and let him be your fear. Let the wicked fear the Aſſyrians, and engage in confederacies againſt them; but let your eyes be lifted up to me and my Providence. God will either turn away the mouth of the Cannon from the Church, or arm it againſt the ſhot. Either preſerve it from a danger, protect it in it, or ſanctifie it to the Church, and who need fear a Sword in a Fathers hand?

1. Will

1. Will you fear man, who have a God to secure you? The Church belongs to God, not to man, as a just propriety. Isa. 43. 1. Fear not, for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by my name: thou art mine, when thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, &c. Thou art mine, not mans. Thou art mine, I am thine. I will be with thee as thine, I will secure thee as mine. Is my creating, is my forming, is my redeeming thee to no purpose? I will not secure you from trouble; but surely my redemption of you, the propriety I have in you, should secure you from fears in those troubles. None shall hurt you whilst I have power to defend you. God with us, if well considered and believed, is sufficient to still those fears which have the greatest outward objects for their encouragement, Psal. 27. 1. The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid. If God be our strength to support us, why should the weakness of dust and ashes scare us? Alliance to great men, and Protection of Princes, prop up mens hearts against the fears of others; and shall alliance to God be of a weaker efficacy? A * Heathen could so argue, that knew nothing of Redemption. Let the Counsels of Enemies be crafty *, yet they consult against Gods hidden ones, hidden by God whilst Plotted against by men: who would fear the stratagems of men, whilst protected in an impregnable Tower? God hides, when men are ready to seize the Prey. How did the Angel protect a sincere trembling Lot against the invasion of a whole City, and secured his person whilst he blinded his enemies eyes that they could not find the door. Instruments cannot design more maliciously, than Christ watches over them affectionately. Christ hath his Eye to see your works and danger where Satan hath his Throne.

* Arram. in Epist. lib. 1. c. 9.

Rev. 2. 13.

2. Will you fear men, who have a God to watch over their motions? What Counsels can prevail where God intends to over-rule their resolves? There is no place so close as to keep private resolutions from his knowledge. This was the thought of those States-men against whom the Prophet Isaiah thunders, Isa. 29. 15, 16. Wo unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark; surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potters clay. Their Counsels were as well known to him as the Potters Clay is to the Potter, which he can either frame into a vessel, or fling away into the Mass from whence he took it. God hath not despoyled himself of his Government; nor will devolve his right upon any men to dispose of his concerns. When men think to act so secretly, as though they framed themselves, as though Gods eye were not upon them; He will watch and trace all their Motions, and make them insignificant to their purposes. Satan himself, the slyest and subtilest agent, is too open to God to hide his Counsels from him. Never fear man till the whole combined Policies of Hell can controul the resolves of Heaven. Till God wants Omniscience to dive into their secrets, skill to defeat their Counsels, and an arm to abate their power.

3. Will you fear men or devils who have a God to restrain them?

The great Dragon and General of the Serpents Seed is under a binding-power, who can bind him not only a thousand years, but a thousand Ages *. Have his Seed more force to resist Almightiness, than their Captain? The Prophet speaking of the Assyrians threatning Jerusalem, and the confusion in some Cities for fear of them, Yet, saith he, he shall remain at Nob, a City of the Levites, not far from Jerusalem; where he might have a full prospect of the City. He shall but shake his hand, he shall not gripe it in his Talons; He shall shew his teeth, but not bite, snarl but not worry, Isa. 10. 32. God will let out so much of the enemies wrath, as may answer his gracious ends to the Church in purging of them, but the remainder of Wrath, which remains in their hearts for the Churches Destruction, he will restrain *. As a Physitian weighs out so much as may curb the Disease, not kill the patient. The Chain of Providence controuls the Power of Satan, when it doth not change his desires. The Egyptians Will against the Israelites was strong, but his power was weak. Might and Power is only in the hand of God, who Reigns over all, 1 Chron. 29. 12. And God will exert so much of Power to bridle the inclinations of Nature in the the wicked for the good of his People. He will give them ſo much liberty as may ſerve his holy purpoſes, but not ſo much as ſhall prejudice the Churches ſtanding. A Staff is not capable of giving a ſmart blow without the force of the hand that holds it. Wicked men are no more than a ſtaff in Gods hand, Pſal. 10. 5. The Rod of my Anger, the Staff in their hand is my indignation; he can either ſtrike with it, or break it in pieces. The Staff is ſtill in the hand of God, and can do no more than what his merciful Arm moves it to; as he can reſtrain it, ſo he can divert it. What ſhould we fear thoſe whoſe hearts are in Gods hands, whoſe enmity is under Gods reſtraint, who can change their fury into favour, or at leaſt bridle it as he doth the Waves of the Sea? No Enemies ſhot can exceed Gods Commiſſion. God often laughs when men Plot, and diſappoints when they begin to act. Sometimes he makes them act contrary to their intentions. Balaam comes to curſe the People, and God turns his tongue to bleſs them, which if guided by his own heart, would have poured out execrations upon them *. God puts the words into his mouth, but not in his heart, verſe 5. and makes him bleſs that which his heart hates.

* Numb. 23. 7, 8.

4. Will you fear them who have a God to ruin them? Though the Beaſt in the Revelations hath ſeven heads, a reaching Wiſdom; and ten horns, a mighty power *, (both the numbers of ſeven, and ten, being numbers of perfection in Scripture) yet with all his Wiſdom and Strength he ſhall tumble down to Deſtruction, they can no more reſiſt Gods power, than bluſtring Winds or raging Waves can croſs his Will. When the enemies of the Church are in Combination, like Thorns full of prickles folded together, then ſhall they be conſumed like ſtubble that is dry, Nahum 1. 10. God loves to defeat Pride, Exod. 18. 11. In the thing wherein they dealt proudly, he was above them. God waits but the time of their ſwelling to make them burſt. Abſalom kills his Brother, withdraws the people from their obedience to the King, ſtirs them up to revolt, enters Jeruſalem in his Fathers abſence, polutes his Concubines, engages in deſigns againſt his life, raiſeth an Army againſt him, who would not ſay David was in extremity, and Abſalom alone proſpering in his deſigns? but when Abſalom comes to open force, God ariſes, an Oak catches him, his Mule forſakes him, and Joab diſpatches him. Senacherib had proſpered in his Conqueſt of Judea, taken many ſtrong Towns, laid ſiege to Jeruſalem, ſollicites the People to revolt, blaſphemes the God of Heaven, and then an Angel comes and makes a dreadful ſlaughter in a night, and he returning to his own Countrey is killed by his own Sons *. Gods Arrows ſhall never miſs their mark, and he hath more than one to ſtrike into the hearts of his enemies, Pſal. 18. 14. He ſent out his arrows and ſcattered them. What reaſon then to fear even multitudes, who can never be too ſtrong for that God who gave them that little ſtrength they have!

Secondly, The ſecond Duty to which we are exhorted. If all Gods Providences tend to the good of his Church and People,

2. Then cenſure not God in his dark Providences. As we are often too haſty in our deſires for mercy, and are not content to ſtay Gods time; ſo we are too haſty in making conſtructions of Providence, and will not ſtay Gods leiſure of informing us. When God ſeems at the beginning of every Providence to ſpeak the ſame language as Chriſt did to Peter in waſhing his feet, John 13. 7. What I do, thou knoweſt not now, but thou ſhalt know hereafter: The Inſtruments are viſible, the action ſenſible, but the inward meaning ſtill lies obſcured from our view. We are too ſhort ſighted to apprehend and judge of Gods Works: Man cannot underſtand his own way *; much leſs the ways of an infinite God. Gods Judgments are a great deep *, we may ſooner fathom the deepeſt part in the Sea, underſtand all the turnings of thoſe ſubterranean paſſages, lave out the Ocean with a ſpoon, or ſuck in, into our Bellies, that great maſs of waters, than underſtand the ways of God with our ſhallow brains. He makes darkneſs his Pavilion: He is ſometimes very obſcure in his ways. Neither the greatneſs of his Means, nor the wiſdom of his workings, can be fully apprehended by men. We have ſence to feel the effects, but not heads to underſtand the reaſons and methods of the Divine Government. Eccleſ. 3. 11. No man can find out the work that God makes from the begining to the end. Though a man may ſee the beginning of Gods works, yet is he able to walk underſtandingly along with Divine Wiſdom in every ſtep it takes? will he not loſe the tract often before it comes to an end? 'Tis not the face, but the back-parts of Providence which we behold; why then ſhould we uſurp an authority beyond our ability, and make our ſelves Gods Judges; as if infinite Wiſdom and Power were bounded within the narrow compaſs of our purblind Reaſons? His ways are beyond our tracing, and his Councils too high for our ſhort meaſures. Since therefore God ſatisfies the Righteouſneſs of his own Will, let us ſubmit our curioſity to his Wiſdom, and forbear our Cenſures of that exact righteouſneſs and ſuperlative wiſdom which we cannot comprehend.

1. Therefore, Firſt fix this in your minds, that God is Righteous, Wiſe and good in every thing. Good, therefore nothing can be hurtful to his People: Righteous, therefore nothing Unjuſt. Wiſe, therefore nothing in vain; our injurious thoughts of him make us ſo uncharitable towards him, and greater Cenſurers of his righteous ways, than we are of mens wicked actions. Clouds and Darkneſs are about him: our eye cannot pierce through his darkneſs, or ſee the frame of his counſels, yet let theſe Principles be kept as the Center, that Righteouſneſs and Judgment are the habitation of his throne *. He is righteous in his darkneſs, wiſe in his cloudineſs; though his Judgments are unſearchable to us, and his ways paſt finding out by our moſt induſtrious inquiſitions; and a depth of knowledge and wiſdom there is in them, too deep for us to meaſure *. God was always Righteous, Wiſe, and Good, he is the ſame ſtill: Though the motions of the Planets be contrary, yet the Sphere where they are fixed, the natures wherewith they were created, are the ſame ſtill. Though the Providences of God have various motions, yet the Spring of his Counſel, the Rule of his Goodneſs, the Eye of his Wiſdom, the Arm of his Power are not altered: He acts by the ſame Rule, diſpoſeth by the ſame Wiſdom, orders according to the ſame Righteouſneſs; he is unchangeable in the midſt of the changeable effects of Providence. The Sun is the ſame body, which admits of no inward alteration, keeps exactly its own motion, though its appearances are ſometimes ruddy, ſometimes clear, its heat ſometimes more faint, at another time more ſcorching; its diſtance ſometimes nearer, ſometimes farther off. He muſt be very ignorant that thinks the objects upon which we look through a Priſme or Trigonal glaſs, change their colours as often as they are repreſented ſo, in the various turnings of the Glaſs. You ſee the undulations and wavings of a Chain which hangs prependicularly, one part moves this way, and another that way, but the hand that holds it, or the beam to which it is faſtned, is firm and ſteddy.

* Rom 9. 33.

2. Diſtinguiſh between preparations to the main work, and the perfection of the work; between the motions of Gods eyes, and the diſcovery of his ſtrength, his eyes move before his power. The neglect of this was the cauſe of the Iſraelites uncharitable Cenſures of the kindneſs of God: they interpret Gods reducing them into the Straits near the Red Sea, a deſign for their deſtruction, which was but the preparation for their compleat deliverance, in a way moſt glorious to God, and moſt comfortable and advantagious to themſelves.

He that knows not the uſe of the Grape, would fooliſhly cenſure a man who ſhould fling them into a Winepreſs, and ſqueeze them into maſh, which is but a preparation of them to afford that generous liquor which was the end of their growth. God treads his Grapes in a Wine-preſs to draw from thence a delicate Wine, and preſerve the juyce for his own uſe, which would elſe wither upon the ſtalk, and dry up to nothing. We judge not the Husbandman angry with his ground for tearing it with his Plow; nor cenſure an Artificer for hewing his Stones, or beating his Iron, but expect patiently the iſſue of the deſign. Why ſhould we not pay the ſame reſpect to God which we do to men in their Arts; ſince we are leſs capable of being Judges of his incomprehenſible Wiſdom, than of the skill of our fellow-creatures? God in his croſs Providences prepares the Church for fruitfulneſs whilſt he Plows it. He may ſeem to be digging up the Bowels of the Church, while he is only preparing to lay the foundation in Sion for the raiſing a noble ſtructure; and in what ſhape ſoever he appear in his preparations, he will in his perfection of it appear in glory, Pſal. 102. 16. When the Lord ſhall build up Sion, he ſhall appear in glory, and evidence that he was reſtoring, whilſt we thought him deſtroying; and healing, whilſt we thought him wounding. As God hath ſetled a gradual Progreſs in his works of Creation, ſo by degrees he brings his everlaſting Counſels to perfection. The ſeaſons of the year are not jumbled together, but orderly ſucceed one another, and the coldneſs of the Winter is but a preparation for a ſeaſonable Spring, and a Summer Harveſt. We do not unrighteouſly accuſe God of diſorder in his common works, why ſhould we do it in his ſpecial works of Providence? Do we diſparage the Muſitians skill for the jarring and unintelligible touches in the tuning the Inſtrument, but rather wait for the Leſſon he intends to play? If we ſtay for Gods fuller Touches of this great Inſtrument of the World in the way of his Providence, it will, like Davids Harp, chaſe away that evil Spirit from us which is now too apt to cenſure him.

3. Fix not your eye only upon the ſenſible operations of providence, but the ultimate end. As in a Watch the various wheels have different motions, yet all ſubſervient to one end, to tell the true hour of the day, and the motion of the Sun; ſo are all the Providences of God. Should any have been preſerved in the Deluge upon ſome high Mountain, who had not known the deſign of the Ark, and had ſeen it floating upon ſuch a Maſs of Waters, he would have judged the People in it in a deplorable condition, and have concluded that it would have broke againſt the Mountain, or been overturned by the Waves; yet that was Noah's preſervative. Had any of us been with Chriſt, and acknowledged him the Saviour of the World, and yet ſeen him Crucified in ſuch a manner by men, and judged only by that, what wiſe and what juſt conſtructions ſhould we have made of that Providence? much the ſame as ſome of his Diſciples did, Luke 24. 21. We truſted that it had been he which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael. But the whole deſign is ſpoiled, we were fools, and he an Impoſtor. Yet this which ſeemed to be the ruine of Redemption, was the neceſſary high way to it by Gods conſtitution. No other way was it to be procured, ver. 26. Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to have entred into his Glory? His entrance into glory to perfect our Salvation, was the end of the ſenſible ſuffering wherein he laid the foundation; as they charge Chriſt with impoſture, not conſidering the end, ſo do we God with unrighteouſneſs, when we conſider not his aim. The end both beautifies and crowns the work; The remarks of Gods Glory in the Creation are better drawn from the ends of the Creatures, and their joynt ſubſerviency to them, than from any one ſingle piece of the Creation. We muſt not only conſider the preſent end, but the remote end, becauſe God in his Providence towards his Church hath his end for after times. God acts for ends at a great diſtance from us, which may not be compleated till we are dead and rotten. How can we judge of that which reſpects a thing ſo remote from us, unleſs we view it in that Relation? Gods aims in former Providences were things to come, his aims in preſent Providences are things to come. As the matter of the Churches Prayers, ſo the objects of Gods Providences are things to come, Iſa. 45. 11. Ask me of things to come, concerning my ſons. The matter of their Prayers then were, that God would order all things for the coming of the Meſſiah. The matter of the Churches Prayer now is, that God would order all things for the prefecting the Meſſiah in his myſtical Body. The whole frame of Providence is for one intire deſign. 'Tis one intire Book with ſeven Seals *. The beginning of a Book as well as the middle hath relation to the end. The deſign of Gods Book of Providence is but one in all the ſeven Seals and periods of time.

Logick we are to make our concluſions from the way of Providence; as in the reading Scripture, if we take not the whole Period, we may make not only non-ſenſe, but blaſphemy, as in that of the Pſalmiſt, Thou art not a God that hath pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. If a man ſhould read only, thou art not a God, and make a full ſtop there, it would be Blaſphemy; but reading the whole verſe, it is excellent ſence, and an honourable declaration of Gods holineſs. Such Errors will be committed in reading the Books of Providence, if we fix our eyes only in one place, and make a full ſtop where God hath not made any. We judge not of a Picture by the firſt draught, but the laſt lines; not by one ſhadow or colour, but by the whole compoſure. The Wiſdom of God is beſt judged of by the view of the harmony of Providence. The ſingle threads of Providence may ſeem very weak, or knotty and uneven, and ſeem to adminiſter juſt occaſion of cenſure; but will it not as much raiſe the admiration to ſee them all woven into a curious piece of branched work? Conſider therefore Gods ways of working, but fully judge nothing, till the concluſion, for that is to judge before the time. Judge not then of Providence at the firſt appearance, God may ſo loſe the glory of his work, and you the comfort. Burges of Juſtification, part 2. Serm. 2. P. 12

Thirdly. The third Duty. Inquire into providence, and interpret all publick providences by this Rule. We muſt ſearch into it, though we are not able to find out all the reaſons of it. What can be a braver ſtudy than that which is the object of Gods eternal counſel? We are conformed to God in our Wills when we have the ſame ends in our motions; and we are conformed to God in our underſtandings when we have the ſame object of our thoughts; ſome Providences have their interpretation written in their foreheads, we may run and read; ſuch as his ſignal Judgments in the World, which expreſs the very ſin for which they are inflicted; others are wrapt up in a harder ſhell, and more covers, and therefore more labour to reach the kernel; ſome are too high for our knowledge, none for our enquiry. 'Tis our duty to ſeek after God, though we can never arrive to a perfect knowledg of him. Job 11. 7. canſt thou by ſearching find out God? canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? He prohibits not the ſearching, though he aſſerts the impoſſibility of finding him out to perfection. What hath God given us faculties for, but to ſearch after him? and we muſt not do it to ſatisfie our curioſity, but to encreaſe our knowledge, and conſequently our admiration of his wiſe and powerful care. Diligence muſt be uſed too. Our firſt thoughts about things of concernment, are uſually confuſed; ſo are our firſt ſights of Providence. Providence is a great deep, deep things are not ſeen without ſtooping down. We muſt παρακυψαι as the Angels do when they ſearch into the things of the Goſpel *. But let this aim of God at the good of his Church be the rule of your interpertation. Without this Compaſs to ſteer our judgments by, we may both loſe and rack our ſelves in the Wilderneſs of Providence, and fortify our natural Atheiſm and Ignorance inſtead of our Faith. I muſt confeſs the ſtudy of Providence is in ſome reſpect more difficult than in the former Ages of the World, becauſe God ſeems to manage things in the Church more by his Wiſdom than Power, which is not ſo intelligible by man as the ſenſible effects of his ſtrength. That Attribute he manifeſted moſt in Miraculous ways, and the viſible Miniſtry of Angels, as we read in Scripture-ſtories; now he employs his Wiſdom more in ordering ſecond cauſes in ordinary ways to his own high, merciful, and juſt ends. Yet ſince the diſcovering of Chriſt, God hath given us a rule whereby we may diſcern much of his Wiſdom in the knowledge of his end, as the knowledge of Chriſt removes the Veil from the Scripture in our reading of it *. The ſame Vail remains in the reading of the Old Teſtament, which Veil is done away in Chriſt, (which Veil is ſtill upon the Jews) and makes us underſtand thoſe parts of the Old Teſtament, which otherwiſe would be utterly obſcure; ſo in the reading the Books of Providence, the knowledg of this end of God in them, will help us to underſtand the meaning of that which otherwiſe would non-plus the Reaſon of man. He that knows the end of one that is making a Watch, will not wonder at his framing ſmall wheels, and filing little pins; but he that underſtands nothing of the deſign, would count it ridiculous for a man ſo to trifle away his time. Without the knowledge of this end, we ſhall expoſe our ſelves to miſerable miſtakes. As Plutarch miſtook the cauſe of the ceaſing of Oracles, aſcribing it to the change of the nature of the Soil, not affording thoſe exhalations as formerly; or the death of the Demons which gave thoſe Oracles. He had judged otherwiſe, had he known or believed the riſing of a Higher Power, the Son of Righteouſneſs in the World, who impoſed ſilence upon thoſe Angels of darkneſs; the moſt famous Oracles in the World ceaſing about the time of Chriſt. To imagine to interpret the motions of Providence without a knowledge of Chriſt and the deſign of God for his Church, is as vain as to imagine we can paint a ſound, or underſtand a colour by our ſmell; Correct Senſe by Reaſon in this work, and Reaſon by Faith. To what end hath God preſcribed Faith to ſuccour us in the weakneſs of Reaſon, if it had been capable to underſtand his ways without it, and if we make no uſe of it upon ſuch occaſions?

Fourthly, A fourth Duty. Conſider the former providences God hath wrought for the church in the paſt ages. Let him not loſe the preſent glory of his paſt works, Pſal. 102. 18. This ſhall be written for the generation to come, and the people which ſhall be created ſhall praiſe the Lord. Even for that work of his which is written to be done in former Ages. God loves to have his former works read and pleaded. 'Tis a keeping a ſtanding praiſe of him in the World. We have had the benefit of them, it is fit God ſhould have the glory of them from us, as well as from thoſe who immediately injoyed them. Our good was bound up in every former preſervation of the Church. If the Candleſtick had been broken, where had the Candle been? Had the Church been deſtroyed, how could the Goſpel have been tranſmitted to us? let the Duty we owe to Gods Glory engage us to a conſideration of them; and the benefit we have had by them alſo incite us; we uſually forget not things that are ſtrange, nor things that are profitable; His works of old have been works of Wonder in themſelves, and profitable to us. To what end are the Praiſes of God diſcovered to the Generations to come, but that they ſhould reflect thoſe Praiſes to Heaven again, and convey them down to the Generations following? Pſal. 78. 4. Shewing to the generation to come the praiſes of the Lord.

1. This will help us in our inquiries in preſent providences.

There is a beautiful connexion between former and latter Providences; they are but ſeveral links of one Chain. The Principle and end is the ſame; That God from whence they come, that Chriſt to which they tend, is the ſame yeſterday to day and for ever. What God doth now, is but a Copy of what he pourtrayed in his word as done in former ages; There are the ſame goodneſs, the ſame deſign in both. The Births of Providence are all of a like temper and diſpoſition. We cannot miſs of the underſtanding of them, if we compare them with the ancient Copies: For God is in the Generation of the Righteous, the ſame God ſtill. God is the ſame, his ends are the ſame, the events will be the ſame.

2. It will ſupport our Faith. The reaſon of our diffidence of God in the cauſe of the Church, is the forgetfulneſs of his former appearances for her. O! if we did remember his former goodneſs, we ſhould not be ſo ready to doubt of his future care. This was the Pſalmiſts care in his deſpondencies, and in his overwhelming troubles of ſpirit, Pſal. 77. 9. Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger ſhut up his tender mercies? but verſe 10. He concludes it his infirmity, and reſolves upon a review of the Records of Gods ancient works for his People, and the years of the righe hand of the moſt High; theſe times wherein he declared his Power and his glory, and ſo proceeds to the top of all their deliverances, viz. that out of Egypt. Doth Gods Wiſdom decay? or his Power grow feeble? Is not his Intereſt the ſame? Is he not a God ſtill like himſelf? Is not his glory as dear to him as before? Hath he caſt off his affection to his own name? Why ſhould not he then do the ſame works, ſince he hath the ſame concern? God himſelf to encourage us calls them to our remembrance, Iſa. 50. 2. Is my hand ſhortned that I cannot redeem, or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I do dry up the ſea, I make the Rivers a Wilderneſs, Wilderneſs, &c. Am not I the ſame God that dried up the Sea, that wrought thoſe ancient wonders which amaz'd the World? What doth your diſtruſt ſignifie but the impair of my Power? Rouſe up your ſelves to a conſideration of them! And thence gather freſh ſupplies to ſtrengthen you in your preſent dependence upon me! He puts us in mind of them, becauſe we are apt to forget them. Gen. 15. 6. When it is ſaid Abraham believed in the Lord, and it was accounted to him for righteouſneſs; God anſwered him, v. 7. I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, keep up thy Faith, and to that end, remember what I did for thee before in calling thee! caſt thy eye upon that place whence I delivered thee! either from the Idolatries of the place, or the perſecution he was in for the true Worſhip of God. And as God puts him in mind of his Mercy he had ſhewn to him before for the encouragement of his Faith; ſo the people of God have made uſe of them to this end. Goliah's Sword was counted by David the fitteſt for his defence in his flight, becauſe it had been a Monument of Gods former deliverance of him, 1 Sam. 21. 9. When he asks for a Sword or Spear, Abimelech ſaid, the ſword of Goliah whom thou ſleweſt, is here; and David ſaid, there is none like that, give it me. How haſty he catches at it! There is none like that Sword that hath ſo ſignal a mercy writ upon it. That very Sword will not only defend me againſt my enemies, but guard my Faith againſt thoſe Temptations that would invade it. This encouragement of Faith and Hope is the end of God in his tranſmiſſion of the Records of his former Providences to us, Pſal. 78. 6, 7. That the generation to come might know them, and declare them to their children; From one Poſterity to another, that they might ſet their hope in God.

3. It will enliven our Prayer.

'Tis a mighty Plea in Prayer. How often doth David urge it? Thou haſt been my help, thou haſt delivered my Soul from Death, wilt thou not deliver my feet from falling? but in the Churches concerns too, 1 Chron. 16. 11, 12. Seek the Lord and his ſtrength, ſeek his face continually: remember the marvellous works that he hath done. A reflection upon what God hath done, ſhould be enjoyned with our deſires of what we would have God to do for us. When Moſes was praying upon the top, while Iſrael was fighting with Amalek at the foot of the hill; he had the Rod of God in his hand, Exod. 17. 9. That miraculous Rod which had amazed Pharaoh, whoſe motion ſummoned all the Plagues upon them. That Rod which had ſplit the Sea for their paſſage, broached the Rock for their thirſt, and had been inſtrumental in many Miracles: certainly Moſes ſhewed this rod to God, and pleaded all thoſe wonderful deliverances God had wrought inſtrumentally by it. No doubt but he carried it with him to ſhew to God for a Plea, as well as to the Iſraelites to ſpirit their Reſolutions againſt their Enemies.

4. It will prevent much Sin.

A forgetfulneſs of his former works is one cauſe of our preſent Provocations. It was ſo in the caſe of the Iſraelites ſin, Pſal. 106. 7. They remembred not the multitude of his mercies, but provoked thee at the ſea, even at the red ſea: they had loſt the memory of ſo many Miracles in Egypt, and which aggravated their Sin, they provoked him at the Sea, at the red ſea; they provoked him under a preſent indigency, as well as againſt former mercy: they provoked him in that place of ſtreights where all the powers on Earth could not have relieved them, had Heaven neglected them. The Provocation you may ſee, Exod. 14. 11, 12. which ſprang from a forgetfulneſs of his kindneſs ſo lately ſhewed to them. How apt are we to forget old Mercies, when we are ſo naturally apt to blot out of our memories mercies newly received? If this were well conſidered by men, it would prevent their enterprizes againſt the Church, and conſequently their ſhame and ruine. Are there Records of any who have hardened themſelves againſt God and proſpered *. How might in that reflection be ſeen the fruſtrations of Counſels, diſgracing of attempts, ſhowers of Fury and Vengeance from Heaven upon the heads of ſuch? The reaſon why the wonderful works of God were to be made known to poſterity, was, that they might not be as their Fathers, a Stubborn and Rebellious Generation * of men. If they did conſider thoſe tranſactions of God in and for his Church, they could no more think to

ſtop the breath of perpetual powerful Providence, than to bridle in a Storm, or ſtop the motion of the Sun. To conclude this: Gods Providential Judgements are to be remembred: though they are for the puniſhment of the age that feel them, they are alſo for the inſtruction of the age which ſucceeds them; tell מרר number, be as exact as in your Accounts, wherein you take notice of every number, minute, and cipher. The works of Providence as well as the Doctrine of God, are parts of a Childs Catechiſm, they are to keep up the conſideration of them in themſelves, and hand them in inſtruction to their Children.

Times of trouble ſhould be times of confidence; fixedneſs of heart on God would prevent fears of heart. Pſal. 112. 7. He ſhall not be afraid of evil tydings, his heart is fixed; how? truſting in the Lord: his heart is eſtabliſhed, they ſhall not be moved. Otherwiſe without it we ſhall be as light as a Cock moved with every blaſt of evil tydings, our hopes will ſwim or ſink according to the news we hear. Providence would ſeem to ſleep, unleſs Faith and Prayer awakened it. The Diſciples had but little Faith in their Maſters account, yet that little Faith awakened him in a Storm, and he relieved them. Unbelief doth only diſcourage God from ſhewing his power in taking our parts. Every one will walk in the name of his God, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever, Micah 4. 5. Heathens will truſt in their Idols, and ſhall not we in that God that lives for ever? Have we any reaſon to have a leſs eſteem of our confidence in God, than Heathens had of and in their Idols? we ſhould do our duty, which is Faith and Hope, and leave God to do his work, which is mercy and kindneſs. By unbelief we deny his Providence, diſparage his Wiſdom, and ſtrip him of his Power; we have none elſe to truſt, no creature can order any thing for the Churches good without Gods commiſſion and direction; what ſhould we truſt him for? for that wherein his glory is concerned, which is more worth to him than all the World beſides. Truſt him moſt when inſtruments fail. God takes them off ſometime, to ſhew that he needs not any, and to have our confidence rightly placed on him, which ſtaggered before between him and the Creature.

1. All the godly formerly did act Faith on a leſs foundation. The godly Patriarchs who lived eight or nine hundred years, depended upon Providence that long time, and ſhall not we for ſeventy years, the uſual term of mans life! They had Promiſes to ſupport them, we have not only the ſame Promiſe, but the Performances of them too. They had Providences, we have the ſame and more, all upon Record in Scripture, all ſince the Canon of Scripture was cloſed; whatſoever God hath remarkably done for his people in all ages. Adam had but one Promiſe, and but little experience of Gods Providence, yet no doubt truſted in him. We have a multitude of Promiſes, not only pronounced, but ſealed, confirmed by many repetitions, which are freſh obligations laid by God upon himſelf. The experience of all the Providences of God towards his Church for above five thouſand years; and ſhall our Faith ſtagger when upon us are come the ends of the World? doth it become us to have our Obligations to Faith ſo ſtrong, and our Exerciſe of it ſo weak? The promiſe of Chriſt * that a Virgin ſhould bring forth a Son, was thought by God a ſufficient ſecurity to ſupport their confidence in him againſt the fury of their enemies; It being a greater wonder that a Virgin without loſs of her Virginity ſhould bring forth a Son, than the routing of an Hoſt of Enemies. Is not then the performance of this Gods actual ſending his Son to us through the Womb of a Virgin, a higher ground of confidence for the Churches ſucceſs in every thing elſe, than barely the Promiſe could be? All creatures in danger have a natural confidence in God, He is the confidence of all the ends of the earth; but the Churches confidence may be more firmly placed in him, becauſe he is particularly the God of their Salvation, Pſal. 65. 5. By terrible things, in righteouſneſs, wilt thou anſwer us, O God of our ſalvation, who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth.

* Iſa. 7. 14.

2. It is

2. 'Tis your only way to have mercy for the Church, and for our ſelves.

If he take pleaſure in them that hope in his mercy, as it is in Pſal. 147. 11. He will take pleaſure to relieve them, He will ſtrengthen the bars of their gates, verſe 13. If he take pleaſure in them that hope in his mercy, then the ſtronger and more lively their hope is, the more intenſe is Gods pleaſure in them. If they do not hope in his Mercy, he hath no pleaſure in them, and no delight to them. He hath a goodneſs laid up for them that fear him, and he will lay it out too for them that truſt in him, Pſal. 31. 15. O how great is thy goodneſs which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee, which thou haſt wrought for them that truſt in thee before the ſons of men? 'Tis laid up for all that fear him, but it is wrought for them that truſt in him. It is manifeſted upon ſpecial acts of truſt and relyance, and wrought before the ſons of men. Thoſe that own God publickly in a way of relyance, God will own them publickly in a way of kindneſs. Faith is the key that unlocks the Cabinet of ſpecial Providence. Thoſe eyes which move about all the World, are fixed upon thoſe that truſt in him, Pſal. 33. 18. The eye of the Lord is upon them that hope in his mercy.

The ſixth Duty. Wait upon God in the way of his providence. Wait upon him as he is a faithful Creator *, much more ſince the title of being our Redeemer is added to that of our Creator, which ſtrengthens his Relation to us. Not to wait, diſparageth his care, bounds his power, or reflects upon his Wiſdom, as if he had ſtript himſelf of his immenſe goodneſs, and forgot both his Promiſe and his People; as if he had cancelled the Covenant, and given up his whole intereſt to the Luſts of men. Wait in the ſaddeſt appearances; the hour of Chriſts death was diſmal in the World, and darkneſs upon the Earth; A Miraculous Eclipſe of the Sun taken notice of by the very Heathens; yet were we never nearer to happineſs than in that dreadful time when our Saviour was moſt dyed in his own Blood. The Sanguine Complexion of the Evening-ſky, is a preſage of a fair ſucceeding Morning; ſo many times is the red Veſture of the Church.

* 1 Pet. 4. 19.

1. Wait upon him obedientially.

Commit your ſouls to God, but in well doing *. Uſe no indirect means; a contempt of the precept cannot conſiſt with Faith in either Promiſe or Providence. The obeying part is ours, the governing part is Gods, Prov. 23. 17. Let not thine heart envy Sinners; but be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long; for ſurely there is an end, and thine expectation ſhall not be cut off. God will govern all the day, but we muſt fear him all the day. When fear on our part attends Government on Gods part, there will be an end of our carnal fears, and a good iſſue of our hopes. The greateſt deliverances of his Church have been when his People has ſtood ſtill. Exod. 14. 13. As that deliverance was a type of all future, and a ground of Faith; ſo the carriage God enjoyned was a rule to his People in all future ſtraits. 'Tis againſt the Laws of Gods Government for thoſe liſted in his Service to ſtir without order. The Law is our ſtanding-Rule of Duty. Providence cannot be a ſtanding viſible Rule, becauſe of the variety and ſeeming croſsneſs of it ſometimes to our apprehenſions. Do not preſume to lead God, but be led by him: 'Tis our ſafety to follow him, 'tis our ſin and danger to preſume to be his Directors. We may loſe our ſelves when we are our own blind guides, and fall into a ditch; but when we follow God, he hath wiſdom to foreſee the Precipices we may ſtumble into, and goodneſs to divert us from them. By interpoſing carnal devices, men may prehaps have their ends, but with little comfort, perhaps much bitterneſs to themſelves. Jacob by his haſty uſing his own and his mothers ſinful project for the Bleſſing, got it indeed, but a croſs too, for he was a man of Sorrows all his days. By waiting in Gods way, we ſhall have our ends with more ſweetneſs, becauſe purely a fruit of Gods care and goodneſs.

* 1 Pet. 4. 19.

2. Wait patiently. How often are our Spirits troubled about future events, and are affraid of the evil which threatens us, as if we were in pain for God, and in doubt of his wiſe Conduct? Think not Gods time too long. He waits as much for a fit opportunity to ſhew his Mercy, as you can wait for the enjoyment of it, Iſa. 13. 18. Therefore will the Lord wait that he may be gracious unto you; bleſſed are all they that wait for him. 'Tis a part of our bleſſedneſs to wait for God, ſince it is a part of Gods kindneſs to wait for a fit ſeaſon to be gracious to us. 'Tis not for us to preſcribe Rules to God, but follow the Rules he preſcribes to us. He hath freely made his Promiſe, let him be Maſter of his own time to make it good. He will ſhew as much Wiſdom in accompliſhing, as he did Mercy in declaring it. God can do things in a moment, but it is his wiſdom to take time, that his People may have time to exerciſe their truſt, their hope, and their patience. He will take time in the ways of his Providence, as well as he did in the works of Creation. He allotted ſix days to that which he could have framed in a minute. He is Judge of what is needful for us, and when it is needful for us. If God ſhould give us that, which is a mercy in its own nature, many times when we deſire it, it might not be a mercy. If we will truſt the skill of his Wiſdom for the beſt ſeaſon, it cannot but be a mercy, for he will give it us with his own glory, and grace wrapt up in it, which will make it ſweeter to himſelf when his Wiſdom is honoured, and ſweeter to us when our good is promoted. Gods methods appear in the end both wiſer and better than our frames. Infinite goodneſs aims more at our welfare, than our ſhallow ſelf-love; and infinite wiſdom can conduct things to our welfare better than our ſhort-ſighted skill. He that knows all the moments of time, knows beſt how to time his actions. As God ſtaid for a fulneſs of time to bring the great Redemption by Chriſt into the World, ſo he ſtays for a fulneſs of time to bring all the great conſequences and appendices of it unto his Church. Every thing is beautiful in his time. In its own time; In Gods time, not in ours *, &c.

* Eccleſ. 3.11.

3. Wait conſtantly. Though the Wheels of Providence ſeem ſometimes to ſtand ſtill *, and God ſeems to put a period to the care of his Church, yet let not us neglect our Duty. Wait a while, and the Wheels will be put upon their former rolling. Some particular paſſages of Providence may trouble us for a while, but in the iſſue God may anſwer our deſires above our expectations, and thereby confute our fears. His Providences are ſometimes like Rivers that run under ground, out of ſight, but will riſe again with a delightful Stream, with ſome new Medicinal quality, contracted from the Earth by the way. Joſeph a Priſoner waits upon God for his Liberty, and God gives him freedom with preferment. God can bring about his Peoples ſafety by unexpected ways. Who would have imagined before, that his own Dream ſhould make him a Captive, and Pharaoh's Dream make him a Favourite? The chief Butler remembers him not till he was in an exigencie, and the divining skill of the Wiſe men of Egypt confounded. Joſeph loſt nothing by waiting upon God, who made ſo many circumſtances concur to promote his Honour. Wait therefore upon him in the ſoreſt afflictions. The Church is only afflicted in Mercy, but the Enemies of it are pulled up by the roots, Jer. 30. 11. I am with thee to ſave thee; though I make a full end of the Nations whither I have ſcattered thee, yet I will not make a full end of thee, but I will correct thee in meaſure. God deals with his People as a Father, who corrects to reform, not to deſtroy; but with his enemies he deals as a Judge. God's Providence, like Moſes his Rod, may ſeem ſometimes a devouring Serpent, but it is to convince the Egyptians, and deliver the Iſraelites.

* Ezek. 1. 21

4. Wait in the uſe of lawful means for preſervation; Not to uſe means, is to ſlight his Providence; not to truſt it. It ſeems not to conſiſt with the wiſdom of God to order things always ſo, as to be neceſſitated to put forth an extraordinary power in things which his creatures by a common Providence can naturally accompliſh. God ſaves by natural means; when they will not ſerve the turn, he will ſave by ſupernatural. God choſe an Ark to preſerve Noah in. He did not want ſupernatural means for his preſervation. He might have catched him up in a Cloud, and continued him there till the drying of the waters. Noah doth not diſpute the buſineſs with God, but prepares an Ark according to his order, and he was righteous in his obedience as well as in his truſt. God would not preſerve our Saviour by a Miracle, when ordinary means means would ſerve the turn. He commands Joſeph by his Angel to flee into Egypt with the Child *. Joſeph deſires not God to preſerve him by an extraordinary power to ſave his pains of travelling; he ſubmits to Gods order, and God quickly clears the way for his return. Indeed ſometimes the wheels of Providence are lifted up from the Earth, and do not go in the ordinary tracts *; but Miracles muſt be left to Gods Pleaſure, for us to deſire them is to tempt our great Governor.

* Mat. 2. 13.

* Ezek. 1. 19.

'Tis an encouragement that our Suit in this caſe will not be denied. The deſire of welfare is conformable to his Counſel, which ſhall ſtand notwithſtanding the Devices of men. His Counſel in particular concerns of men ſhall ſtand, much more is the ſtability of his Counſel for the Church. He is a God hearing Prayer in a way of common Providence, and a God hearing Prayer in a way of ſpecial attention, Pſal. 61. 1. Hear my cry, O God, attend unto my prayer. David deſires that God would hear him, as more particularly concerned in his caſe. He is ſo in the concerns of his Church; will he hear an Iſhmael crying for himſelf, and young Lyons roaring for their Prey, and ſtop his Ears to the voice of his own Spirit in his People, pleading for the Church, dearer to him than the whole maſs of Nature? We have greater Arguments to uſe than in any other caſe. The Relation the Church hath to God; The affection God hath to the Church. Lazarus whom thou loveſt is ſick, was Martha's argument to Chriſt. What greater encouragement to our Petitions, than Gods affection, than Gods Relation? God loves to have our affection comply with his; God loves others the better for ſoliciting its welfare. Moſes had the greateſt manifeſtation of Gods Love after he had prayed for the Iſraelites *, though in a caſe of ſin, and preſently after in Exod. 33. 11. God ſpeaks with him face to face as a man ſpeaks to his friend; and in the ſame chapter, and the beginning of Exod. 34. God ſhews him his glory as much as he was capable to bear. Daniel was a great Petitioner for the Church *. He was Gods great favourite upon that account, and had the cleareſt and higheſt Revelations made to him of the courſe of Prov. 19. 21.

Prov. 19. 21.

* Exod. 32. 32

* Dan. 9. 3, 21. Dan. 10 2, 3.

The eighth Duty. When you receive any mercy for the Church in anſwer of Prayer, give God the glory of it.

The variety of his Providences gives us matter for new ſongs and compoſitions. What Volleys of joyful ſhouts? what Hallelujahs to God do we find upon the Ruin of Antichriſt, Rev 19. 1,2,3. God calls for Praiſe out of the Throne, verſe. 5. and the Church returns it, verſe 6, 7. 'Tis God rides upon the Cherub, 'tis God that ſits upon the wings of the Wind, 'tis God who is in all Inſtruments to quicken their motions, and direct them to their ſcope.

Pſal. 18. 10.

The ninth Duty. Imitate God in his affection to the Church.

Chriſt did what he did for the good of his Church: God doth what he doth for the advantage of the Church. Let the ſame mind be in us that was in Chriſt; let the ſame end be ours which is the end of God. Thus we ſhall be like our Creator, thus we ſhall be like our Governor, thus we ſhall be like our Redeemer. Men take it kindly from others that love thoſe they have a reſpect for. God loves all that love his People, and bleſſes them that bleſs them, Gen. 12. 3. I will bleſs them that bleſs thee, and curſe them that curſe thee.

The tenth Duty. Look after ſincerity before God.

'Tis for the ſecurity of ſuch that God ſhews himſelf ſtrong. No man that fully believes and underſtands this Doctrine, but ſhould be glad to be of that happy Society, that Aſſembly of the firſt born, who are under the care of a watchful eye, and the mighty power of the God of the whole Earth. When God choſe Iſrael, the very ſtrangers ſhould for their own Intereſt joyn with them *. And to ſuch as take hold of his covenant he promiſes to give a name in his houſe that ſhall not be cut off *. Yea, even to the ſons of the ſtrangers that ſhould joyn themſelves to the Lord. v. 6. Let this encourage us to Chriſtianity. God never encouraged men to be Chriſtians by Promiſes of Worldly greatneſs, but by Promiſes of a conſtant care of them for their happineſs, by Promiſes of making all things work together for their good. If God will ſhew himſelf ſtrong for thoſe that are perfect in heart towards him, then he hath no ſtrength for thoſe that are unſound and falſe in heart towards him. No man hath an intereſt in his ſpecial Providence without Faith. The Power, Knowledg, Wiſdom of God, are all ſet againſt him. Though the whole World be in commotions, the Earth be removed, and the Mountains caſt into the depths of the Sea, there is no ground of fear to Faith; but what Buckler againſt them hath Unbelief and Hypocriſie? What ſecurity againſt Wrath can Riches give you? What defence againſt his power can your Potſherd ſtrength afford you? It was not for Jobs wealth that God made his boaſts of him, but for his ſincerity, Job 1. 8. Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man? And for the want of this he loaths a World. Labour therefore for ſincerity towards God; beg it of God. Get the evidence of it, and preſerve it:

FINIS.

THE NECESSITY OF REGENERATION.

John III. 3.

Jesus answered, and said unto him, Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

Verse 5. Jesus answered, Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

THESE words contain the Foundation of all Practical Religion here, and Happiness hereafter. 'Tis the principal Doctrine Christ, as a Prophet, came to teach; and as a King, to work in the heart. 'Tis an answer to Nicodemus his Complement, who came to him with some veneration of him. His description is in ver. 1. There was a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews. 1. By his profession, or sect, A Pharisee. 2. His name, Nicodemus. 3. His quality, A Ruler of the Jews; ἄρχων, a Prince, one of the great Sanhedrin, who had the supreme power in all Affairs which concerned Religion, even under the Roman Government. His coming to Christ is described ver. 2. The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him. Where we have (1.) The time of his coming, by night. (2.) The manner of coming, and speaking to him; with reverence, Rabbi, a Title of Honour. He comes to Christ; therefore is to be commended: He comes by night; hath some failure in his respect to Christ, afraid publickly to own him. Nicodemus was one of the number which believed Christ for his Miracles, John 2. 23. He comes hereupon to discourse with him about Divine things. He acknowledges him a Prophet sent by God. The reason of his acknowledgment, is the consideration of his Miracles, which manifested a Divine Power, both in the greatness and multitude of them. For he knew that God would not set the Seal of his power to one that had not his Commission. Miracles are the Credential Letters, to signifie the Divine Authority of any person sent upon any new dispensation by God.

Observe,

1. God doth not force any man's belief, but gives such undeniable evidences of his will and mind, that not to believe, is flat contradiction to him. When he sent Moses to deliver, and give a new Law to the Israelites, he attended him with a miraculous power, to testifie it to be his will, That what Moses delivered, should be entertained. So it was with our Saviour, and in the Primitive times, at the first promulgation of the Gospel in several places. But when a Doctrine is setled, and a Church established, God forbears those extraordinary works, as he did the ram-ing down Manna after the Iſraelites entrance into Canaan, where they might have proviſion in an ordinary way of Providence; and they had Miracles afterward in a more ſcanty meaſure, now and then. We have now rational ways to introduce us to a belief of the Chriſtian Doctrine. And tho there are no ſenſible Miracles, as before; yet there hath been in all Ages, and is ſtill a Miracle kept up in the World, greater than any wrought by Chriſt upon the bodies of Men: And that is the converſion of many obſtinate ſinners, and ſubduing them on a ſudden; which in Chriſts accompt, was the chiefeſt Miracle he wrought when he was upon the Earth *: Go your way, and tell John what things you have ſeen and heard; how that the blind ſee, the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed, to the poor the goſpel is preached. Chriſt had cured many in their ſight; but he added in the end of the enumeration, To the poor the goſpel is preached. The poor are Evangeliz'd, brought into a Goſpel-frame, a renewed ſtate for the Kingdom of Heaven, which is greater than the raiſing a man from a natural death, to a natural life.

* Luke 7.22. Πτωχοὶ εὐαγγελίζονται.

Nicodemus comes by night. He is fond of his own Honour, loth to impair it by a free and open confeſſion. He was a Maſter in Iſrael. Had he come by day, his Reputation had ſuffered in the Vulgar Opinion, who might well wonder, that he, a Phariſee of a profound knowledg, ſhould come to receive inſtruction from the Son of a Carpenter, a man deſpiſed by his Fellows of the Sanhedrin. Yet he comes, tho by night.

Obſerve,

1. 'Tis a hard matter for us to perform a duty we are convinced of, without a flaw in it. Nicodemus is convinced by the Miracles, of Chriſt's Divine Authority; but he forbears an open acknowledgment of him. He creeps to him in the night, unwilling to be ſeen with him in the day. If Chriſt were not a Prophet, why ſhould he be acknowledged at all? If a Prophet, why not in the day as well as in the night? Strange! not to conſult him in the day, whom he confeſſeth to have his Commiſſion from God! How weak is the Faith of the beſt at firſt! How ſtaggering between Chriſt and ſelf!

2. Our own Reputation will be apt to mix it ſelf in our religious ſervices. Tis his fear of the loſs of this, makes him chuſe the darkneſs. This greateſt piece of Old Adam in us, will be riſing in various forms, when we are in the moſt ſpiritual exerciſes. What a conteſt is there between Religion and Reputation! He was willing to gratifie the one, but not diſpleaſe the other.

3. Ambition is the great hinderance of a thorough converſion. Nicodemus had a mind to ſpeak to Chriſt, but his Reputation bears too much ſway in him againſt a thorough giving up himſelf to him. He was aſhamed to be taken notice of in this little Addreſs he made, John 5. 44. How can ye believe that receive honour one of another, and ſeek not the honour which comes from God only?

4. Men may have a high eſteem of Chriſt, yet not ſuch an eſteem as amounts to a ſaving faith. Nicodemus acknowledges him a Teacher, and that ſent from God; but not the Teacher, the great Prophet Moſes had ſpoken of, Deut. 18. 15. He confeſſeth him a Prophet, but not the Meſſiah. Look to your eſtimations of Chriſt: See whether they be ſupreme, ſuperlative, the Saviour, the Mediator, the Lord and King.

5. Convictions may be a long time, before any appearance of converſion. If we conſider Nicodemus here, only as one convinced of the Divine Authority of Chriſt, and not a thorough Convert at this time; For he ſeems by his queſtions, ver. 4. and 9. to be rather a Malecontent, than a Convert: Yet the Seed then ſown by our Saviour's Diſcourſe, ſprung up at laſt in Fruit. He doth upon a ſignal occaſion, plead Chriſt's Cauſe before a Council of Phariſees, probably the great Sanhedrin, yet but faintly, John 7. 50, 51. Doth our law judg any man before it hears him, and knows what he doth? Before, he would have no witneſs of his coming to Chriſt. Here he takes his part, as he might have done any mans, upon a common Principle of Juſtice and Equity, That he ſhould not be condemned before he was heard. But there is more generous Fruit afterwards, where he joins with Joſeph of Arimathea, in doing honour openly to our Saviours crucified body, John 19. 39. And there came alſo Nicodemus (which at the firſt came to Jeſus by night), and brought a mixture of mirrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight. What Grace he had, ſeems to be in a long ſleep, but is very vigorous upon its awaking.

6. True Grace doth one time or other, diſcover it ſelf moſt contrary to that, which was the natural crime before. In both theſe places, Fear had been his ſin. 'Tis now over-matcht by confidence. The Holy Ghoſt takes notice of it; which at the firſt came to Jeſus by night. He came by night before, now he comes by day. He, and another never named before, Joſeph of Arimathea, who being poſſeſſed with the ſame paſſion of Fear, was a Diſciple in ſecret, John 19. 38. Being a diſciple of Jeſus, but ſecretly, for fear of the Jews; own him publickly at his Death; when thoſe that had been familiar with him in his Life, forſook him. Chriſt will make timerous Hares to own his Cauſe, when thoſe that think themſelves couragious Lions, turn their backs upon him.

Paul had the moſt tranſcendent affection to the Church, who before was guilty of the ſmarteſt perſecution. And Peter, after the coming of the Spirit, was as couragious, as before he was cowardly in his Maſters Cauſe.

We have ſeen the Phariſee. Let us conſider our Saviours Anſwer, ver. 3. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God.

Some think that Nicodemus ask'd a Queſtion which is not expreſt, but may be gathered out of Chriſt's Anſwer; and ſeems to be this, What was requiſite to a man's entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven? Whereupon Chriſt tells him, that there was a neceſſity of being born again. Others think that Nicodemus ask'd no Queſtion; and that theſe words are a very proper reply to Nicodemus.

1. Chriſt anſwers not his complement, but uſeth his Authority acknowledged by Nicodemus, of a Teacher, to inform him. Since you acknowledg my Commiſſion from God to be a Teacher, I will teach you what I have to declare. The great deſign of my coming, is to bring men to the Kingdom of God: And the great means to that, is a new Birth, which can only fit you for Evangelical Truths here, and eternal Happineſs hereafter. He acknowledges Chriſt to be a Teacher; and Chriſt in his reply, would teach him how to become a Chriſtian.

2. Chriſt frames his anſwer according to the Phariſee's corruption. Nicodemus came by night, out of love to his Credit, that might be impaired by his coming in the day-time. What would the people think? Surely this Man, and the reſt of his Tribe, are not ſo knowing as they pretend to be, ſince he comes to Jeſus to be taught: And out of fear of the Phariſees, who thereby might be offended.

Chriſt's anſwer therefore very well ſuits him: You muſt become a new man, if you would have acquaintance with Evangelical Myſteries. Away with your old Notions, and Phariſaical Pride. Deny your Honour, Credit, and whatſoever partakes of the name of ſelf. A legal frame, and a Phariſaical righteouſneſs, will not advance you to the Kingdom of God. The Jews were proud of being Abraham's children, and thought the Gates of Heaven could not be ſhut againſt any of that relation.

John had touched them before for this, Mat. 3. 9. And think not to ſay within your ſelves, we have Abraham to our father. Chriſt doth tacitly here do the ſame, and puts him in mind of another Birth, and the falſeneſs and deceitfulneſs of his bottom of legal righteouſneſs.

3. Chriſt frames his anſwer according to his weakneſs and ignorance. Nicodemus acknowledged him a Teacher, not the Meſſiah. Chriſt would bring him to the knowledg of Himſelf as the Meſſiah. Chriſt therefore by his anſwer, would lift up his thoughts higher; and puts him in mind of the Kingdom of God, which the Jews in their common diſcourſe, ſignified the Kingdom of the Meſſiah by, and have intituled it in Ages ſince, the Kingdom of God, and the Kingdom of Heaven. So that Chriſt would bring him to the knowledg of himſelf, as the Meſſiah, not only as an extraordinary Prophet.

Obſerve from the relation of this to Nicodemus his ſpeech:

1. We ſhall gain nothing by our applaudings and praiſes of Chriſt, without a renewed nature. Nicodemus comes with much reverence; gives Chriſt the Title of Rabbi; confeſſeth him to be ſent of God; owns the Divinity of his Miracles. Chriſt doth not complement him again; takes no notice of his civility; but falls roundly to his work; acquaints him with the neceſſity of Regeneration, without which he could not ſee the Kingdom of God, for all his fine praiſes of him. A glavering reverential Religion, is inſignificant with Chriſt. A new Birth, a likeneſs to Chriſt in Nature, a conformity to him, is accounted by Chriſt an higher eſtimation of him, than all external applauſes given to him.

2. No natural priviledg under Heaven, can entitle us to the Kingdom of grace or glory. 'Tis not our carnal traduction from the beſt man. 'Tis no natural birth, with the choiceſt Priviledges, gives us a right to either of them. Not the honour of having the Law from Gods own mouth; the glory of an outward Covenant; the Treaſure of the Oracles of God; the Seal of Circumciſion born in the body, that can inſtate this Nicodemus into this felicity. 'Tis a birth of a higher ſtrain, from an higher principle, a change of nature, and a removal from the old ſtock.

See how ſtrangely Nicodemus replies upon this Diſcourſe of our Saviour. How ſtrangely aſtoniſhed is this great Ruler in Iſrael, at the Doctrine which is abſolutely neceſſary to an entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven! ver. 4. Nicodemus ſaith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter a ſecond time into his mothers womb, and be born? What a childiſh conception hath he of this moſt heavenly Doctrine! Can ſuch an ancient man as I, return to my firſt Principles? dig a way into my Mothers Womb? 'Tis ſtrange, that Nicodemus, being a Phariſee, and ſo well vers'd in Scripture, ſhould be ſo ignorant, or at leaſt, guilty of ſo much inadvertency, as not to think of that place, Ezek. 36. and other places, which ſpeak of a new heart, and an heart of fleſh. He might have conſidered the deſign of the legal purifications, which were to repreſent the inward holineſs which ought to be in the perſons ſo purified. Yet he hears him diſcourſe, but doth not comprehend him. His carnal Notion bears ſway againſt ſpiritual Truths.

Obſerve,

1. A man may have great knowledg in the letter of the Scripture, and yet not underſtand the neceſſary, and ſaving Doctrines in it. The Doctrine of Regeneration was laid down in the whole Old Teſtament, tho not in that term. Let us take heed how we read the Scriptures: not to trouble our heads with needleſs and curious queſtions, but with the main Myſteries of Religion. What could all Nicodemus his knowledg profit him, if it had been ten thouſand times more, without the knowledg of this Doctrine, and the experience of it?

2. Nothing is more an enemy to the ſaving knowledg of Goſpel-myſteries, than a priding our ſelves in head-knowledg. Nicodemus his coming by night, was not only from Fear, but Pride; that he might not be thought ignorant by the People. Humble men have the ſoundeſt knowledg: The meek will he teach his way, Pſal. 25. 9.

3. How low was the intereſt of God in the world at that time? How had ignorance and error, thruſt the knowledg of God out of other parts of the World, when it languiſhed ſo much in the Church! How ſimple muſt the poor people be, when the Students in Scripture were no wiſer! 'Tis a thing to be bewailed amongſt us, That wrangling knowledg hath almoſt thruſt out ſpiritual. And when Chriſtians meet, their Diſcourſes are more about unneceſſary Diſputes, than theſe ſaving Myſteries of Chriſtianity, which might produce Elevations of Heart to Heaven.

To this Exception of Nicodemus, Chriſt makes his Reply: Where obſerve,

1. A freſh aſſertion of it, with an explanation, ver. 5. Jeſus anſwered, Verily, verily I ſay unto thee, except a man be born of water, and of the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. In the Third Verſe, Chriſt lays down the Neceſſity of the new Birth. In ver. 5. the neceſſity of the Cauſe; except a man be born of water, and of the ſpirit. In the firſt ſpeech, he lays down the Doctrine: in this he explains the Principle, and manner of it; to remove his falſe apprehenſions, wherein he might mean the tranſmigration of Souls, which ſeems to be an Opinion amongſt the Jews.

2. A Reaſon to back it, ver. 6. That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh: and that which is born of the ſpirit, is ſpirit: That which is born of the Fleſh, is Fleſh, and can be no more by that Principle: for the Effect cannot be better than the Cauſe: But that which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit; i. e. hath a ſpiritual Nature.

Fleſh is taken for Man corrupted, Gen. 6. 3. For he alſo is fleſh: degenerate into Fleſh: grown a meer ſenſual creature by the loſs of Original Righteouſneſs: For upon the parting of Original Righteouſneſs, the Soul of Man was as a Body without life; a ſpiritual Carcaſs; as the Body is without a Soul.

Fleſh ſignifies the whole Nature, as in that place, Mat. 16. 17. Fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, &c. The Incarnation of the Son of God, which is the foundation of all Evangelical Adminiſtrations, is above the ſphear of Nature to diſcover. Man in his natural Generation, is but meer Nature, and cannot apprehend, cannot enjoy that which is only apprehenſible and enjoyable by a ſpiritual Nature: But Man regenerated by the Spirit, is ſpiritual, and is advanced above meer Fleſh; for he is made partaker of the Divine Nature. So that Chriſt's Argument runs thus; No Fleſh can enter into the Kingdom of God: But every man naturally is Fleſh, unleſs born again of the Spirit: Therefore no man, unleſs born again of the Spirit, can enter into the Kingdom of God. If you could enter into your Mothers Womb, and be born again, the matter would not be mended with you: you would ſtill be but Fleſh, and rather worſe than better. Therefore that is not the Birth that I mean; for the impediment would be as ſtrong in you as before.

Theſe Two Verſes are an Anſwer to Nicodemus his Objection. Nicodemus underſtands it of a carnal Birth. No, no, ſaith Chriſt, it is a ſpiritual Birth I intend; One that is wholly Divine and Heavenly. That which you mean, brings a man into the light of the World: That which I mean, brings a man out of the World, into the light of Grace. That forms the fleſh to an Earthly life: this forms the ſoul to an Heavenly. That makes you the Son of Man; this the Son of God. Daille Sermon in ce. lieu.

All the difficulty lies in ver. 5. in that expreſſion of water, &c. Some, as the Papiſts, underſtand it of the elementary Water of Baptiſm; and from this place, exclude all children dying without Baptiſm, from ſalvation. Others underſtand it of a Metaphorical Water, whereof Chriſt ſpeaks, John 4. 14. ——the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall be in him a well of water, ſpringing up into everlaſting life.

Let us firſt ſee, why by Water cannot be meant the Baptiſmal Water.

Regeneration is the Myſtery and ſenſe of that ſacred Ceremony. 'Tis indeed ſignified, repreſented, and ſealed in Baptiſm: How, and in what ſenſe is not my preſent work. Daille Sermon in ce. lieu.

1. 'Tis ſtrange, that when all agree, that the birth here ſpoken of, is ſpiritual and metaphorical, that the water here ſhould be natural.

2. None could be ſaved, unleſs baptized, if this were meant of Baptiſm. As if theſe words, John 6. 53. Except you eat the fleſh of the ſon of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; were meant of the Supper, none could be ſaved unleſs they did partake of it. Whereas Chriſt lays not the ſtreſs upon Baptiſm, but upon Faith, Mark 16. 16. He that believeth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved; but he that believeth not, ſhall be damned. He doth not ſay, He that is not baptized ſhall be damned; but he lays damnation wholly upon the want of Faith. Many have been ſaved without Baptiſm, none without Faith. It is true to ſay, He that doth not believe, ſhall be damned; but it is not true to ſay, He that is not baptized, ſhall be damned. Chriſt ſaid the firſt, but not the ſecond; tho his diſcourſe had obliged him to ſay ſo, had it been true, or had he meant this ſpeech to Nicodemus, of baptiſmal Water. The Spirit is not tied to Baptiſm, but he may act out of the Sacraments as well as in them. Underſtand this of the bare want of Baptiſm, not of the contempt, or wilful neglect of it. If it were meant of Baptiſm, it was true then, that none could be ſaved without it. How did the Thief upon the Croſs, enter into Paradiſe, which Chriſt promiſed him? So that one may enter into Heaven without Baptiſm by Water, tho not without the Baptiſm of the ſpirit.

3. Baptiſm was not then inſtituted as a ſtanding Sacrament in the Chriſtian Church. The Inſtitution of it, we find not till after Chriſts Reſurrection, Mat. 28. 19. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them. And it is not likely Chriſt would diſcourſe to Nicodemus of the Neceſſity of an Inſtitution that was not yet expreſly appointed by him, and which he did not appoint till after his Reſurrection. For he diſcourſeth of that which was of preſent neceſſity. And if this were meant of Baptiſm, and of that abſolute neceſſity the Papiſts would lay upon it from theſe words, then all that died before the Inſtitution of Baptiſm by our Saviour, unbaptized, could not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, tho believing. Can any thing be neceſſary before the precept for it be given? It could not be neceſſary before, as a means, becauſe it is not a natural, but an inſtituted means. It muſt be therefore neceſſary by virtue of a command: Therefore not abſolutely neceſſary before the command, and at the time Chriſt ſpoke theſe words. Some ſay, that Chriſt meant it not of an abſolute neceſſity at that time, but that it ſhould be ſo after his Death*. That is to give our Saviour the lye; for he ſpake it of the preſent time, ſome years before his Death. Beſides, it wrongs the Goodneſs of our Saviour (if he had meant it of baptiſm), to defer the Inſtitution of it ſo long after, when it was at preſent neceſſary for Nicodemus his ſalvation. It wrongs his Wiſdom too, to ſpeak of that to be at preſent neceſſary, which was not in being, nor would be till after his death.

* Bellarm. de Sacram. Baptiſm. lib. 1. cap. 5, 6.

4. 'Tis ſtrange, that our Saviour ſhould ſpeak to Nicodemus of the neceſſity of Baptiſm, before he had informed him of the myſteries of the Goſpel, whereof 'tis a Seal. To ſpeak of the Seal, before he ſpeaks of that which is to be ſealed by it, is not congruous. For the Sacraments being founded upon the Doctrine on which they depend, to begin by a Sacrament the inſtruction of a Man, is to begin a building by the Tiles and Rafters, before you lay a Foundation: and againſt the order expreſt by our Saviour to the Apoſtles, which puts teaching before baptizing, and was alway practiſed in the primitive times, and is to this day in all Chriſtian Churches, to the adult and grown up. As Circumciſion was amongſt the Jews, not adminiſtred to any Proſelyte before his turning Proſelyte, and inſtruction in thoſe Laws he was to obſerve: and then, and not till then, his children had a right to Circumciſion.

5. Thoſe that underſtand it of the baptiſmal Water, and ſo make that of abſolute neceſſity, do by another aſſertion accuſe their own expoſition of a falſity. For they ſay, that the Baptiſm of Blood ſupplies the want of that of Water: And that if either Infants, or adult perſons be hurried away to a Stake, or Gibbet, or kill'd for the Chriſtian Cauſe, they are certainly ſaved: Which cannot be, if the Baptiſm of Water were to be underſtood in this place, and ſo abſolutely neceſſary. 'Tis Water that is expreſt, and Blood is not Water. One of theſe Aſſertions muſt be falſe. A Martyr dying unbaptized, muſt be damned, and cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, if this place be meant of the Water of Baptiſm.

6. It may alſo be obſerved, that Chriſt in the progreſs of his Diſcourſe, makes no more mention of Water, but of the Spirit [that which is born of the ſpirit, is ſpirit]: not born of Water and the Spirit, which had been very neceſſary, if Water had been of an equal neceſſity with the Spirit to the new Birth. And ſince Chriſt mentions it poſitively, That he that is born of the ſpirit, is ſpirit, will it be ſaid, That if any be born of the Spirit, without Water, he is ſtill but Fleſh?

Water then here is to be taken myſtically. Some by Water underſtand the whole Doctrine of the Goſpel: As the Waters mentioned through the whole 47*th* of Ezekiel, ſignifie the Doctrine of the Goſpel. To drop, in Scripture, ſignifies to teach *, Ezek. 20. 46. Drop thy word toward the ſouth. Others by Water, underſtand derſtand the Grace of Regeneration as the Principle, the Spirit as the Cauſe, as Titus 3.5,6. He hath ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. What waſhing he means, is expreſt in the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt; that is, that renewing which is wholly ſpiritual, as proceeding from the Spirit of God, whence this Grace doth flow.

By Water, and the Spirit, are ſignified one and the ſame thing; the ſimilitude of Water, ſhewing the cleanſing and generating vertue of the Spirit; As Fire and the Spirit are put together *, to ſignifie the refining quality the Spirit hath (as fire hath to ſeparate the Droſs from the good Metal): Fire, and the Spirit; i. e. a Spirit of Fire, of the force and efficacy of Fire. * Mat. 3. 11.

This Water is the ſame which God had promiſed, Iſa. 44. 3. I will pour water upon him that is thirſty: and Ezek. 36. 25. Then will I ſprinkle clean water upon you: and ver. 27. I will put my ſpirit within you. He there explains Water to be the Spirit, I will pour my ſpirit upon thy ſeed. And in Ezekiel he joyns Water and the Spirit; i. e. the Water of my Spirit, or my Spiritual Water; my Goſpel-Grace. And Iſa. 41. 18, 19. God ſpeaks of the admirable fruitfulneſs of this Water. This ſhall renew you, and make you fructifie in the Kingdom of my Son, where none ſhall be received, who is not born of this Divine Principle.

Now our Saviour having to do with a Phariſee, who was acquainted with thoſe Oracles, to make him underſtand this Truth, uſes thoſe words which the Prophets had uſed, and ranks them in the ſame order; firſt Water, then the Spirit; that the latter might clear the ſenſe and nature of the former, to hinder Nicodemus from imagining that to be a natural Water, which was ſpiritual and myſtical. Water and the Spirit, ſignifies the Water of the Spirit, or a ſpiritual Water; as 1 Theſ. 1. 5. Our goſpel came not unto you in word only, but in power, and in the holy ghoſt; that is, in the power of the Holy Ghoſt.

The Spirit is compared to Water, in reſpect of its generative Vertue. No fruitful plant but is produced by moiſture. Water contains in it the Seeds of all things. It was from Water and the Earth, that all things in the lower World were in the firſt Creation produced. Water is put here, as exegetical of the effect of the Spirit; Water being the Cauſe of Generation by its moiſture, uniting the parts together.

Our Saviour in both places uſeth an aſſeveration, Verily, verily; which is ſpoken,

1. To ſhew the infallible neceſſity of it; the certainty of the Propoſition.

2. To urge a ſpecial attention; Men preſs thoſe things in diſcourſe, which they would have retained.

'Tis to be believed, becauſe of its neceſſity; 'tis to be conſidered, becauſe of its excellency.

Born again], Ἄνωθεν, ſignifies properly from above: But ſometimes it is taken for again. Nicodemus underſtands it ſo by his Reply, of entring again into his Mothers Womb, and not of a Heavenly Birth. Grotius in loc.

Man was born in Nature: he muſt be born in Grace. He was born of the firſt Adam: he muſt be born of the ſecond Adam. 'Tis expreſt in Scripture by various terms: a Reſurrection to Life, a quickning, a New Creation, the New Man, the Inward Man, a dying to the World. 'Tis indeed a putting off the Old Man, the Principles and Paſſions, the corrupt Notions and Affections which we derive from Adam, to devote our ſelves to God, to live to Chriſt, to walk in newneſs of Life.

The Kingdom of God], which is ſometimes taken (1.) for the Kingdom of Glory. (2.) 'Tis ſometimes taken for the Goſpel-ſtate. And the ſame thing is ſignified by the Kingdom of God, and the Kingdom of Heaven. What is called by Matthew the Kingdom of Heaven *, is called by Mark, relating the ſame ſtory, the Kingdom of God ||: And the Goſpel is called the Goſpel of the Kingdom of God *. 'Tis called the Kingdom of God, * Mat. 4. 17. || Mark 1. 15. * Mark 1. 14.

1. Becauſe it ſets up the Rule and Government of God in the World, above the Devil's. The Devil had been ſo long the God of the World, that the Intereſt of God ſeem'd to be over-matcht by a multitude of unclean Spirits, and abominable Idols; and the true God was not known to be the Governor of it. The Goſpel diſcovers the true Governor of the World, and ſets up his Rule and Authority.

Mat. 6. 33. the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, are put together.

2. It ſets up the Righteouſneſs of God, above a legal and fleſhly Righteouſneſs, much in vogue among Jews and Gentiles; but they were wholly ignorant of the Righteouſneſs of God, Rom. 10. 3.

3. This Kingdom is fram'd and ſet up by the Son of God. The other Kingdom, under the Law, was ſetled by God, but by the hand of Moſes, a Man. This is adminiſtred by him through his Spirit, his Vicegerent. His Royalty did not ſo eminently appear, as in the times of the Goſpel.

The Father appoints the Goſpel-ſtate in his Wiſdom, the Son lays the Foundation of it in his Blood, the Spirit carries it on in the World by his Power.

4. In reſpect of the Service; 'Tis high and heavenly; a ſerving God in Spirit. The Service under the legal Adminiſtration, was carnal: the Service under the Goſpel-Adminiſtration is more ſpiritual, and ſo more ſuitable to the perfections of God.

* Col. 1. 13. 5. In the end and iſſue of it. 'Tis a tranſlating us into the Kingdom of Chriſt*. The legal Ceremonies could not fit Men of themſelves for Glory: they could not make the comers thereunto perfect: But this Kingdom of Grace prepares us for the Kingdom of Glory.

Cannot ſee the Kingdom of God]. In ver. 5. he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. He cannot,

1. By reaſon of Gods appointment.

2. In the nature of the thing it ſelf. He hath no fitneſs for Heaven, or Heavenly Myſteries.

See]. Seeing is taken ſometimes for enjoying: Not a bare ſight, but fruition, John 3. 36. He that believes not the Son, ſhall not ſee life; that is, ſhall not enjoy life: And Heb. 12. 14. Without holineſs, no man ſhall ſee the Lord: They may ſee him in his pronouncing the Sentence; but ſhall not ſee him in a way of glorious enjoyment of him.

To have a communion with Chriſt in a Goſpel-ſtate; to have an enjoyment of Chriſt in eternal Glory, 'tis neceſſary we be ſtript of the corruption of our firſt Nature, and be cloathed with another by the Spirit of God.

Obſerve in the Verſe,

1. The Infallibility of the Propoſition; Verily, verily.
2. The Neceſſity of Regeneration; except.
3. The Extenſion of it in regard of the Subject:
   1. Subjectum quod recipit: Man; i.e. every Man.
   2. Subjectum in quo recipitur: Man; i. e. the whole Man, every Faculty.
4. The Excellency of it implied: They cannot ſee the kingdom of God. If he be born again, he ſhall enjoy the Kingdom of God.

Doct. Regeneration of the Soul, is of abſolute neceſſity to a Goſpel and glorious ſtate.

By Regeneration, I mean not a Relative, but a real change of the Subject, wrought in the complexion and Inclinations of the Soul. As in the reſtoring of Health, there is a change made in the Temper and Humors of the Body.

As Mankind was changed in Adam, from what they were by a ſtate of Creation; ſo men muſt be changed in Chriſt, from what they were in a ſtate of corruption. As that change was not only relative, but real, and the relative firſt introduced by the real; ſo muſt this. The Relation of a child of Wrath, was founded upon the ſin committed. Without a real change, there can be no relative. Being in Chriſt, as freed from condemnation, is alway attended with a walking in the Spirit; and walking is not before living. For the better underſtanding this Point, I ſhall lay down,

1. Propoſitions concerning the Neceſſity of it.
2. I ſhall ſhew, that it is neceſſary.

1. To

1. To a Goſpel-ſtate.
   1. To the performance of Goſpel-Duties.
   2. To the enjoyment of Goſpel-Priviledges.
2. To a ſtate of Glory.

1. Propoſitions concerning the Neceſſity of it.

1. There are but Two ſtates; one ſaving, the other damning; a ſtate of ſin, and a ſtate of righteouſneſs; and all men are included in one of them. All men are divided into Two Ranks. In regard of their Principle, ſome are in the fleſh, ſome in the ſpirit *. In regard of their obedience, ſome walk after the fleſh, ſome after the ſpirit ‖: Some are ſlaves to the fleſh, others are led by the ſpirit: ſome live only to ſelf, ſome live to God. In regard of the exerciſe of their Minds, their nobler Faculty; ſome mind the things of the fleſh, others the things of the ſpirit *: Some ſwiniſhly wallow in ſin, others place the delights of their ſpirits upon better and higher Objects.

* Rom. 8. 8, 9.
* Rom. 8. 5.

The Scripture mentions no other. A ſtate of Enmity, wherein men have their inclinations contrary to God. A ſtate of Friendſhip and Fellowſhip, wherein men walk before God unto all well-pleaſing, and would not willingly have an inward motion ſwerve from his will. One is called light, the other darkneſs, Eph. 5. 8. You were ſometimes darkneſs, but now are you light: One, the children of Wrath; the other children of God. There is no Medium between them: Every man is in one of theſe ſtates. All Believers, from the bruiſed Reed, to the talleſt Cedar; from the ſmoaking Flax on Earth, to the flaming Lamp in Heaven; from Thomas, that would not believe without ſeeing; to Abraham, who would believe without ſtaggering, all are in a ſtate of Life. And all from the moſt beautiful Moraliſt, to the moſt venomous Toad in Nature's Field; from the young man in the Goſpel, who was not far from the Kingdom of Heaven, to Judas, who was in the very bottom of Hell; all are in a ſtate of Death. Meer Nature, tho never ſo curiouſly garniſhed, can place a man no higher. Faith, tho with many infirmities, puts us in a ſtate of Amity: Unbelief, tho with many Moralities, continues us in a ſtate of Enmity. All men are either the Object of Gods delight, or of his abomination. The higheſt endowments of men remaining in corrupted Nature, cannot pleaſe him. The delight of God then, ſuppoſeth ſome real change in the Object, which is the ground of that delight: For God is wiſe in his delight, and could not be pleaſed with any thing which were not fit for his complacency. Since Original Nature in a man, cannot diſpleaſe God, unleſs it be changed by ſome Fault, becauſe it was his own work; ſo our preſent Nature cannot pleaſe God, unleſs it be changed by ſome Grace, tho it be otherwiſe never ſo highly dignified. Whatſoever grows up from the Old Adam, is the Fruit of the Fleſh: Whatſoever grows up by the New Adam, in us, is the Off-ſpring of the Spirit; and upon One of theſe Two ſtocks, all men in the World are ſet. Since therefore one is utterly deſtructive, and cannot pleaſe God, tho never ſo well garniſht (for being utterly contrary to him, it cannot be approved by him) the other is abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation.

Rom. 8. 8. So then they that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God.

2. 'Tis neceſſary upon the account of the Fall of man, and the conſequents of it. In Adam we died, 1 Cor. 15. 22. As in Adam all died: therefore in Adam we ſinned, Rom. 5. 19. By one mans diſobedience, many were made ſinners. Man cannot be ſuppoſed to ſin in Adam, unleſs ſome Covenant had intervened between God and Adam *, whence there did ariſe in the whole Humane Nature a Debt, of having righteouſneſs transfus'd from the firſt Parent to all his Poſterity: The want of this Grace, wherein his Poſterity are conceiv'd, is a privation, and a crime which was voluntary in the Root and Head. This privation of righteouſneſs muſt be removed. The inſtitution of God ſtands firm, That Adam, and his Poſterity ſhould have a pure righteouſneſs. 'Tis not for the Honour of God to enjoyn it ſo ſtrictly at firſt, and to have no regard to it afterwards. Now this privation of righteouſneſs, and the unrighteouſneſs which hath taken place in the Sons of Adam, cannot be removed without the infuſion of Grace. For without this Grace, he would alway want righteouſneſs, and yet be alway under der an Obligation to have it: He would be under deſires of happineſs; but without it, under an impoſſibility of attaining it.

Were there an indifferency in the ſoul of man; were it an abraſa Tabula, the writing of moral Precepts upon it, by good Education, would ſway it to walk in the paths of Vertue, as an ill Education doth caſt it into the ways of this is not ſo; For take Two, let them have the ſame ways of Education, the ſame Precepts inſtilled into them, as Eſau and Jacob had by their Father, who were equally taught; yet how different were their Lives? Eſau's bad, Jacob's not without flaws. Education had not the power to root corruption out of both; no, nor out of any man in the World, without a higher Principle. There is ſome powerful Principle in the ſoul, which leads it into by-paths, contrary to thoſe wholſome Rules inſtilled into it. Hence ariſeth a neceſſity of ſome other Principle to be put into the heart, to over-ſway this corrupt Byas. Man goes aſtray from the Womb, as it is in Pſal. 58. 3. The wicked are eſtranged from the womb; they go aſtray as ſoon as they be born. There muſt be ſomething to rectifie him, and expel this wandring Humor.

By the Fall of man there was contracted,

1. An unfitneſs to any thing that is good. Man is ſo immers'd in wrong Notions of things, that he cannot judg fully of what is good, Tit. 1. 16. to every good work reprobate. The ſtate of Nature, or the Old Man, is deſcribed, Eph. 4. 22. to be corrupt, according to deceitful luſts. Deceitful, ſeducing us from God, drawing us into perdition, by repreſenting Evil under the notion of Good; which evidenceth our Underſtandings to be unfit to judg without a new illumination; inward and ſpiritual luſts, which are moſt deceitful, being accounted brave and generous motions. Luſts or deſires, which ſhew the corruption of the will by ill Habits: Luſt and ſin is the meer compoſition of corrupted Nature; the whole Man is ſtuft with polluting principles, and filthy appetites.

What was preternatural to man in a ſtate of Innocency, became natural to him after his depraved ſtate. He is carnal, ſold under ſin *. The Spring being already out of order, cannot make the motion otherwiſe than depraved: As when a Clock is out of order, it is natural to that preſent condition of it, to give falſe intelligence of the hour of the day: and it cannot do otherwiſe, till the Wheels and Weights be rectified. Our end was actively to glorifie God in the ſervice of him, and obedience to him: But ſince man is fallen into this univerſal decay of his Faculties, and made unfit to anſwer this end; there is a neceſſity he ſhould be made over again, and created upon a better foundation, that ſome Principle ſhould be in him, to oppoſe this univerſal depravation, enlighten his Underſtanding, mollifie his heart, and reduce his Affections to their due order and object.

* Rom. 7. 14.

2. Not only an unfitneſs, but unwillingneſs to that which is good. We have not thoſe affections to Vertue, as we have to Vice. Are not our Lives, for the moſt part, voluntarily ridiculous? Had we a full uſe of Reaſon, we ſhould judg them ſo. We think little of God; and when we do think of him, it is with reluctancy. This cannot be our Original ſtate: For ſurely, God being infinitely good, never let man come out of his hands with this actual unwillingneſs to acknowledg and ſerve him; as the Apoſtle ſaith in the caſe of the Galatians Errors, Gal. 5. 8. This perſwaſion comes not of him which calls you. This unwillingneſs comes not from him that created you. How much therefore do we need a reſtoring-principle in us! We naturally fulfil the deſires, or θελήματα of the fleſh *. There is then a neceſſity of ſome other principle in us, to make us fulfil the will of God, ſince we were created for God, not for the Fleſh. We can no more be voluntarily ſerviceable to God, while that ſerpentine Nature, and devilliſh Habit remains in us, than we can ſuppoſe the Devil can be willing to glorifie God, while the Nature he contracted by his fall, abides powerful in him. 'Tis as much as to ſay, That a man can be willing againſt his will. Nature and Will muſt be changed, or we for ever remain in this ſtate.

* Eph. 2. 3.

Man is born a wild aſſes colt *. No beaſt more wild and brutiſh than Man in his natural birth; and like to remain in his wild and wilful Nature without grace: a new birth can only put off the wildneſs of the firſt.

* Job 11. 12.

3. Not

3. Not only unfitneſs and unwillingneſs, but inability to good. A ſtrange force there is in a natural man, which hurries him, even againſt ſome touches of his will, to evil.

How early do men diſcover an affection to Vice! How greedily do they embrace it, notwithſtanding rebukes from Superiors, good exhortations from Friends, with the concurrence of the Vote of Conſcience, giving its Amen to thoſe diſſwaſions! and yet carried againſt all thoſe Arguments, deceived by ſin, ſlain by ſin, ſold under it *. This is the miſerable ſtate of every ſon of Nature. * Rom. 7. 11, 14.

Do we not find, that men ſometime wrapt up in retirement, in conſideration of the excellency of Vertue, are ſo wrought upon by their ſolitary Meditations, that they think themſelves able to withſtand the ſtrongeſt invaſion of any temptation? Yet we ſee oftentimes, that when a pleaſing temptation offers it ſelf, tho there be a conflict between Reaſon and Appetite, at length all the conſiderations and dictates of Reaſon are laid aſide; the former Idea's laid aſleep, and that committed which their own Reaſon told them was baſe and ſordid. So that there is ſomething neceſſary, beſide conſideration and reſolution, to the full cure of man.

No privation can be removed, but by the introduction of another form: As when a man is blind, that blindneſs which is a privation of ſight, cannot be removed, without bringing in a power of ſeeing again. Original ſin is a privation of Original righteouſneſs, and an introduction of corrupt principles, which cannot be removed, but by ſome powerful principle contrary to it. Since the inability upon the Earth, by reaſon of the Curſe, to bring forth its Fruits in ſuch a manner as it did, when man was in the ſtate of Innocency, the nature of it muſt be changed to reduce it to its original fruitfulneſs. So muſt Man, ſince a general defilement from Adam hath ſeiz'd upon him, be altered, before he can bring forth fruit to God *. We muſt be united to Chriſt, engrafted upon another ſtock, and partake of the power of his Reſurrection: Without this, we may bring forth Fruit, but not Fruit to God. There is as utter an impoſſibility in a man, to anſwer the end of his creation, without righteouſneſs, as for a man to act without life, or act ſtrongly without health and ſtrength. 'Tis a contradiction, to think a man can act righteouſly without righteouſneſs: For without it, he hath not the being of a man; that is, man in ſuch a capacity, for thoſe ends for which his creation intended him. * Rom. 7. 4.

Well then, ſince there is an unfitneſs, unwillingneſs, inability in a man, to anſwer his end, there is a neceſſity of a new life, a new nature, a new righteouſneſs: There is a neceſſity for his happineſs, that he ſhould be brought back to God, live to God, be a Son of God: and this cannot be without Regeneration: For how can he be brought back to God, without a principle of ſpiritual motion? How can he live to God, that hath no ſpiritual life? How can he be fit to be a Son of God, who is of a bruitiſh and diabolical nature?

3. Hence it follows, That it is univerſally neceſſary. Neceſſary for all men. Our Saviour knows none without this Mark: There muſt be a change in the Soul, 2 Cor. 5. 17. Therefore if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature. There muſt be the habitation of the Spirit, Rom. 8. 9. If any man have not the ſpirit of Chriſt, he is none of his. There muſt be a crucifixion, not only of the corrupt affections of the Fleſh, but of the Fleſh it ſelf, Gal. 5. 24. They that are Chriſts, have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts. Prop. 3.

The old Nature muſt be killed, with all its attendants. There's no Sonſhip to God without likeneſs; no relation of a child of God, without a child-like Nature. Let a man be of whatſoever quality in the World, never ſo high, never ſo low; of whatſoever age, of whatſoever moral endowments; except a man, every man, &c.

And ſimply neceſſary. Our Saviour doth not ſay, he is in danger not to ſee the Kingdom of God, or he may come ſhort of it; but he ſhall not, he cannot. There's no poſſible way but this, for any man; no other door to creep in at, but by that of a new birth: Salvation cannot be attained without it; and damnation will certainly be the iſſue of the want of it. As there is no other name under Heaven, by which we can be ſaved, but by the Name of Jeſus Chriſt; ſo there is no other way under Heaven, wherein we can be ſaved, but by the birth of the Spirit.

'Tis neceſſary therefore in all places, in all profeſſions: 'Tis not neceſſary only in Europe, and not in Africa. Let a man be what he will, in any place under Heaven, he muſt have a Jeſus to ſave him, and an Holy Ghoſt to change him: 'Tis one and the ſame Spirit acts in all, and produceth the ſame qualities in all: Let mens Religion and Profeſſions be what they will (men are apt to pleaſe themſelves with this and that Profeſſion and Opinion; but) there is no ſalvation in any Profeſſion, or any kind of Opinion, but by Regeneration. 'Tis not neceſſary our Underſtandings ſhould be all of one ſize, that our Opinions ſhould all meet in uniformity; but it is neceſſary we ſhould all have one ſpiritual Nature. 'Tis as neceſſary to the being of a good man, that he ſhould be ſpiritual, as to the being of a man, that he ſhould be rational; tho there is a great latitude and variety in the degrees of men in Grace, as well as their Reaſons: Some are of little Faith, ſome of great Faith; ſome babes in Chriſt, ſome ſtrong men. 'Tis not neceſſary all ſhould be as ſtrong as Abraham; but it is ſimply neceſſary all ſhould be new born, as Abraham: No Age, no Time excludes it.

1. Righteouſneſs was neceſſary before the Fall. The new birth is but the beginning of our reſtauration to that ſtate we had before the Fall. Adam could not have been happy without being innocent. The holineſs of God could not create an impure creature. Without it God could take no pleaſure in his work.

2. After the Fall it was neceſſary; continually neceſſary from the firſt moment of the Fall. This work of Regeneration, is included in the firſt Promiſe, Gen. 3. 15. I will put enmity between thee and the woman, between thy ſeed and her ſeed. Naturally we have a mighty Friendſhip to Satan, a Friendſhip to his Works, tho not to his Perſon. But if any man had intereſt in that promiſe, he muſt exchange that Friendſhip for an Enmity.

If Jeſus Chriſt, who is principally meant by this Seed of the Woman, had an enmity to Satan, then all Chriſts Seed muſt be poſſeſſed with the ſame Spirit. For when the Seed of the Woman was to break the Serpents head, it was neceſſary that thoſe that would enjoy the Fruit of that Conqueſt, ſhould be enemies to the Nature of the Devil, and the Works of the Devil; otherwiſe they could not join with that intereſt which overthrows him. 'Tis unreaſonable to think the Head ſhould have an enmity, and the Members an amity: and we cannot have an enmity to that which is the ſame with our Nature, without a change of diſpoſition. 'Tis not a verbal enmity that is here meant: While we pretend to hate him, we may do his pleaſure; and Satan is never troubled to be pretendedly hated, and really obeyed. As wicked men do the will of God's purpoſe, while they oppoſe the will of his precept; ſo they do the Devil's will many times, while they think they croſs it. There muſt be a contrary Nature to Satan, before there can be an enmity. That fooliſh Appetite, affected Senſuality, Indulgence to the Fleſh, the cauſe of our firſt Friendſhip with Satan, muſt be changed into divine deſires, affection to heavenly things, a mortification of the Fleſh, before a man can part with this Friendſhip. There muſt be a change in the conformity of the Soul to the Nature of the Devil, before an enmity againſt him can be raiſed. We are never enemies to thoſe that encourage us in what we affect. His Nature can never be altered by reaſon of the Curſe of God upon him: Therefore ours muſt, if ever the League be broken. In Iſa. 65. 25. it is ſaid, The wolf and the lamb ſhall feed together, and the lion ſhall eat ſtraw like an ox, and duſt ſhall be the ſerpents meat. The Nature of men may be changed by the Goſpel; but Duſt ſhall always be the Serpents meat. The ſaving ſome by Water in the Deluge, was a figure of this inward Baptiſm, which is the anſwer of a good conſcience towards God, 1 Pet. 3. 20, 21. As the old World was ſo corrupt, that all muſt be waſhed away before it could be reſtored; ſo is the little World of man: The Cloud and Sea through which the Iſraelites paſſed, ſignified this, as the Apoſtle informs us *. Whereupon ſome think, there were ſome ſprinklings of the Water upon them, as they ſtood like Two Walls, to favour their paſſage.

* 1 Cor. 10. 2. And were all baptized unto Moſes in the cloud and the ſea.

3. Neceſſary in the time of the Law. By the Moral Law, this renewing was implied in the Firſt Command, of not having any other Gods before him *. We cannot ſuppoſe that Command only limited to a not ſerving an outward Image. Is not the ſetting up Self, our own Reaſons, our own Wills, and bowing down to them, them, and ſerving them, as much a wrong to God, as the bowing down to a ſenſleſs Image? nay, worſe than the adoring of an Image, ſince that is ſenſleſs; but our Wills corrupt, and are no more fit to be our God, than an Image is fit to be a repreſentation of him. So that in the ſpiritual part of the Command, this muſt be included, to acknowledg nothing as the Rule of Perfection, but God; to ſet our ſelves no other patterns of Conformity, but God; which the Apoſtle phraſeth a being new created after God *. * Eph. 4. 24.

If all Idolatry were forbidden, then that which is inward, as well as that which is outward. If we were to have no other Gods before him, then we were to prefer nothing inwardly before him; we were to make him our pattern, and be conformed to him; which we cannot, without another Nature than that we had by corruption.

Upon this are thoſe Scriptures founded which ſpeak of covetouſneſs to be Idolatry *; that if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him ||: he doth not love God. * Col. 3. 5. || 1 John 2. 15.

Now the preferring Self before God, is the eſſential part of the corrupt Nature; Therefore all men by the Law of Nature (which is the ſame with the Moral Law), and the Jews, to whom this Law was given, were bound to have another Nature than that which was derived from Adam, which eſſentially conſiſted in the making our ſelves our God. Self-eſteem, ſelf-dependance, ſelf-willedneſs, is denying affection and ſubjection to God.

By the Ceremonial Law more plainly. Their duty was not terminated in an external obſervance of the types and ſhadows under the Law; but a heart-work God intended to ſignifie to them in all thoſe legal Ceremonies. As Sacrifices ſignified a neceſſity of expiation of ſin; ſo their legal Waſhings repreſented to them a neceſſity of Regeneration.

Therefore God is ſaid not to require the Sacrifices of Beaſts, Pſal. 40. 6. Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire (that is, Sacrifices of Beaſts), burnt-offerings and ſin-offerings haſt thou not required; viz. as the ultimate Object of his pleaſure; but as repreſentations of Chriſt, the great ſacrifice. So neither did he command Circumciſion, and other legal purifications, for any thing in themſelves, or any thing they could work, further than upon the body; but to ſignifie unto them, an inward work upon the heart. Hence they are ſaid not to be commanded by God, Jer. 7. 22, 23. For I ſpake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or ſacrifices; but this thing commanded I them, ſaying, Obey my voice: That is, God did not principally require theſe, as the things which did terminate his will and pleaſure; but an obedience to him, and walking with him, which cannot be, without an agreement of Nature: For how can two walk together, unleſs they be agreed *? Hence God ſpeaks ſo often to them of the circumciſion of the heart ||; and promiſes this circumciſion of the heart, Deut. 36. 6. And the Lord thy God will circumciſe thy heart, and the heart of thy ſeed, &c. And Paul expreſly ſaith, Rom. 2. 28, 29. that he was not a Jew; that is, a ſpiritual Jew, one of the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, who had the circumciſion that was outward in the fleſh; but he that had that of the heart. * Amos 3. 3. || Deut. 10. 16.

So among us, many confide in Baptiſm, which ſignifieth nothing to men grown up, without an inward renewal, and Baptiſm of the heart, no more than outward circumciſion did to them.

4. The obligation upon us is ſtill the ſame *. The Covenant made with Adam, was made perpetually with him for all his Poſterity: Therefore all his Poſterity by that Covenant, were perpetually obliged to a perfect righteouſneſs. If God had made this Covenant with Adam, That he ſhould tranſfuſe this original righteouſneſs to his Poſterity only for ſuch a time, then indeed after the expiration of the Term, the Obligation had ceaſed, and none had been bound to have it, as a Debt required by God: The Fault of wanting it, had been removed, without any infuſion of Grace; becauſe the time being expired, and ſo the Obligation ceaſing, it had not been a Fault to want it: neither could Adam's Poſterity have been charged with his ſin, becauſe the want of righteouſneſs, after the expiration of the time fixt, had not been a ſin: But becauſe there was no time fixt; * Suarez de grat. Tom. 2. lib. 7. cap. 23. Numb. 3, 4.

fixt, but that it was perpetually of force, as to righteouſneſs, which was the main intent of it, we ſtill remain under the Obligation of having a righteous Nature.

Now God ſeeing the impoſſibility of anſwering this Obligation in our own perſons, by our own ſtrength, appoints a way whereby we may anſwer it in a Second Head, not nulling the former Covenant as to the eſſential part of it, which was a righteous Nature; but mitigating it; as the Chancery nulls not the Common Law, but ſweetens the ſeverity of it.

This latter Covenant, is called an everlaſting Covenant. Not that the obligation of the other to righteouſneſs, is ceaſed, but tranſmitted to another Head; which Head cannot poſſibly fail, as our former did, who hath both a perfect righteouſneſs in himſelf, and hath undertook for a perfect righteouſneſs in his people, which he is able to accompliſh, and to that purpoſe begins it here, and perfects it hereafter. To this purpoſe the Scripture ſpeaks of the everlaſtingneſs of the Covenant, Pſal. 89. 28. My covenant ſhall ſtand faſt with him; that is, with Chriſt: And if his people ſin, as he expreſſeth it afterwards, yet my loving kindneſs will I not utterly take from him. In this reſpect Chriſt is called the covenant of the people, Iſa. 42. 6. I will give thee for a covenant of the people. And the end of placing David, his Servant, over his People, is not to give way to licentiouſneſs and unrighteouſneſs, and maintain men in an hoſtile Nature againſt God; but that they might walk in his judgments, and obſerve his ſtatutes, Jer. 37. 24. And that everlaſting covenant of peace he would make with them, is in order to ſanctifie them, Jer. 37. 26, 28. compared together. When God would make a Covenant of peace with them, an everlaſting Covenant, it was to ſet his Sanctuary among them, and to let the Heathen know, that the Lord did ſanctifie Iſrael. And the end of the Covenant, is to put his law into the inward parts, Jer. 31. 33.

Chriſt undertook to keep up the honour of God, which was violated by the breach of that Covenant, to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs *. This Obligation our Second Head entered into for us; and in him we are compleat, even as our head, and as the head of all principality and power ‖, who hath undertaken for our perfect righteouſneſs; of our Perſons, by his own righteouſneſs; of our Nature, by inherent righteouſneſs; as it follows, ver. 11, &c. In whom you are circumciſed with the circumciſion made without hands, in putting off the body of the ſins of the fleſh, &c. This Obligation ſtill remains upon our head, and upon us in him; and to him we are to have recourſe for a full anſwering of it. And this cannot be anſwered without a new birth here, which ends in a perfection hereafter. And Chriſt by a plain Precept, hath made it abſolutely neceſſary now to all under the Goſpel-Adminiſtration.

So that no Age, no Time, no Adminiſtration, excludes it. It was as neceſſary to Adam, the firſt man, as to the laſt that ſhall be born: For being by Nature ſpiritually dead, there muſt be a reſtauration to a ſpiritual life, if ever any be happy. God is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living. What was alway neceſſary, is abſolutely neceſſary, and admits of no exception. And therefore the removal of the the Diabolical Nature, is indiſpenſable to him, and to us, ſince we are all the Poſterity of Adam, and the Inheritors of his corruption. How can any in any Age, enjoy an infinite holy God, without being changed from their impurity?

Prop. 4. 4. Hence it follows, That it is ſo neceſſary, that it is not conceivable by any man in his right wits, how God can make any man happy without it. It is not for us, poor ſhallow creatures, to diſpute what God can, and what God cannot do; what God may do by his abſolute power: But yet it ſeems a contradiction, and it is not intelligible by us, how God can make a man happy without Regeneration.

What ſemblance of Reaſon can be given, that any one who is a ſlave of Satan, a child of Wrath by Nature, can be made the Son and Friend of God, without an expulſion of that Nature which rendred him criminal, and reſtoring that in ſome degree which renders him innocent?

Without habitual Grace, ſin is not taken away: And as long as a man remains under under ſin, how he can be capable of any communion with God, I underſtand not. For he cannot be at one and the ſame time under God's greateſt Wrath, and his higheſt Love. How is it poſſible, that one can have an enjoyment of eternal Life, who hath nothing in him, but a relation to eternal Death?

God made man's Nature fit for his communion: Man made himſelf unfit by guilt and filth. This unfitneſs muſt be removed by Regeneration, before this Priviledg man had by Creation, can be reſtored. Not that this reſtored righteouſneſs, is the cauſe of our communion with God in happineſs; but a neceſſary requiſite to it. No doubt, but God might have reſtored this righteouſneſs, without admitting man to a converſe with him, if there had been no Covenant made to that purpoſe. That God may give Grace without Glory, is intelligible; but to admit a man to communion with him in Glory, without Grace, is not intelligible.

1. 'Tis not agreeable to Gods holineſs, to make any an Inhabitant of Heaven, and converſe freely with him, in a way of intimate love, without ſuch a qualification of Grace, Pſal. 11. 7. The righteous Lord loves righteouſneſs; his countenance doth behold the upright. He muſt therefore hate iniquity, and cannot love an unrighteous Nature, becauſe of his love to righteouſneſs; his countenance beholds the upright; he looks upon him with a ſmiling eye: and therefore he cannot favourably look upon an unrighteous perſon. So that this neceſſity is not founded only in the command of God, that we ſhould be renewed; but in the very Nature of the thing; becauſe God, in regard of his holineſs, cannot converſe with an impure creature. God muſt change his Nature, or the ſinners Nature muſt be changed. There can be no friendly communion between two of different Natures, without the change of one of them into the likeneſs of the other. Wolves and Sheep, Darkneſs and Light, can never agree. God cannot love a ſinner, as a ſinner, becauſe he hates impurity by a neceſſity of Nature, as well as a choice of Will. 'Tis as impoſſible for him to love it, as to ceaſe to be holy.

This change cannot be then on God's part: It muſt therefore be on man's part. It muſt therefore be by Grace, whereby the ſinner may be made fit for converſe with God; Since God cannot embrace a ſinner in his deareſt affections, without a quality in the ſinner ſuitable to himſelf. All converſe is founded upon a likeneſs in Nature and Diſpoſition. It is by Grace only, that the ſinner is made capable of converſe with God.

2. 'Tis not agreeable to Gods wiſdom. Is it congruous to the Wiſdom of God, to let a man be his child, and the child of the Devil at the ſame time? Is it fit to admit him to the relation of a Son of God, who retains the enmity of his Nature againſt God; to make any man happy with the diſhonour of his Laws, ſince he is not ſubject to the Law of God, neither will be; one that cannot bear him, but abhors his honour, and the apprehenſions of his holineſs?

Man naturally hath riſings of heart againſt God; looks upon him under ſome dreadful Notion; hath an utter averſion from him: Alienation and enmity are inſeparable, Col. 1. 21: You who were ſometimes alienated, and enemies in your minds. It doth not conſiſt with the Wiſdom of God, to make any man happy againſt his will: God therefore firſt changeth the temper of the will, by his powerful Grace, thereby making him willing, and by degrees fitting him for happineſs with him.

'Tis not fit corruption ſhould inherit incorruption, or impurity be admitted to an undefiled Inheritance: And therefore God brings none thither, which are not firſt begotten by him to a lively hope, by the Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the Dead, 1 Pet. 1. 3, 4. Which according to his mercy, hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in heaven for you. It cannot be honourable for the Wiſdom of God, to give a right to eternal life, to one that continues a child of the Devil; and beſtow his love upon one that reſolves to give his own heart to ſin and Satan.

This

This which I have now diſcourſed, is founded upon mens natural Notions in their right Reaſon. But if we look into the Scripture, 'tis certain there is no other way but this; a man without a new birth, can have no right to happineſs, by any Covenant of God, by any Truth of God, by any Purchaſe of Chriſt. God never promiſed happineſs without it; Chriſt never purchaſed it for any one without a new Nature. No Example is there extant of any perſon God hath made happy, without this alteration: nor in the ſtricteſt enquiries can we conceive any other way poſſible: Therefore if there be any one preſent, that hath hopes to enjoy everlaſting happineſs without Regeneration, he expects that which God never yet beſtowed upon any, and which, according to our underſtanding, God cannot, without wrong to his Holineſs and Wiſdom, confer upon any perſon. I beſeech you therefore, let none of you build your hopes upon ſuch vain Foundations: you muſt be holy, or you ſhall never ſee God to your comfort:

Prop. 5. 5. 'Tis ſo neceſſary, that the coming and ſufferings of our Lord and Saviour, would ſeem inſignificant without it. That this Regeneration was a main end of his coming, is evident by his making this one of the main Doctrines, he was as a Prophet, and Teacher ſent from God, to make known to the World, it being the firſt he taught Nicodamus. Jeſus Chriſt came to glorifie God, and to glorifie himſelf in redeeming a People. And what glory can we conceive God hath; what glory can Chriſt have, if there be no Characteriſtical difference between his People and the World? And what difference can there be, but in a change of Nature and Temper, as the foundation whence all other differences do reſult? Sheep and Goats differ in Nature.

The righteouſneſs which is given through our Mediator, is the ſame in the Eſſentials, and reſpects it bears to God, as we had at firſt. And his Threefold Office, of King, Prieſt, and Prophet, is in order to it; his Prieſtly, to reconcile, and bring us to God, his Prophetical, to teach us the way; and his Kingly, to work in us thoſe qualifications, and beſtow that comely Garb upon us, that was neceſſay to fit us for our former converſe. Our ſecond Adam would not be like the firſt, if he failed in this great work of conveying his righteous Nature to us, as Adam was to convey his Original righteouſneſs to his Poſterity. As that was to be conveyed by carnal Generation; ſo the righteous Nature of the ſecond Adam, is to be tranſmitted to us by ſpiritual Regeneration. In this reſpect, renewed men are called his Seed, and counted to him for a Generation; as Pſal. 22. 30. A ſeed לארנן ſhall ſerve him; it ſhall be accounted to the Lord for a generation; to Chriſt: It ſhall be accounted as much the Generation of Chriſt, as the reſt are the Generation of Adam; as if they had proceeded out of his loins, as Mankind did out of Adam's. As God looks upon Believers as righteous through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as if it were their own; ſo he accounts them as if they were the Generation of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf.

1. Chriſt came to ſave from ſin. Salvation from ſin, was more his work, than barely ſalvation from Hell, Mat. 1. 21. He ſhall ſave his people from their ſins. From ſin, as the Cauſe; from Hell, as the Conſequent. If from ſin, was it only from the guilt of ſin, and to leave the ſinful Nature unchanged? Was it only to take off puniſhment, and not to prepare for Glory? It would have been then but the moiety of Redemption, and not honourable for ſo great a Saviour. Can you imagine, that the Death of Jeſus Chriſt, being neceſſary for the recovery of a ſinner, was appointed for an incompleat work, to remit man's ſin, and continue the inſolency of his Nature againſt God? It was not his end, only to ſave us from Wrath to come, but to ſave us from the procuring-cauſe of that Wrath; not forcibly and violently to ſave us, but in methods congruous to the honour of God's Wiſdom and Holineſs: and therefore to purifie us, Tit. 2. 14. to redeem us from all iniquity, all parts of it, by puriſying unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works; that we might have a holy Nature, whereby we might perform holy actions, and be as zealous of good works, and the honour of God, as we had been of bad works, and to bring diſhonour to him.

It was alſo the end of his Reſurrection, to quicken us to a newneſs of life, Col. 2. 12, 13.

12, 13. Eph. 2. 5, 6. If any man, without a new Nature, could ſet foot into Heaven, a great intendment of the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt would be inſignificant.

Chriſt came to take away ſin, the guilt by his Death, the filth by his Spirit, given us as the purchaſe of that Death. In taking away ſin, he takes away alſo the ſinful Nature.

2. Chriſt came to deſtroy the works of the Devil, 1 John 3. 8. For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might deſtroy the works of the Devil. Theſe works are Two; Sin, and the Miſery conſequent upon it. Upon the deſtruction of ſin, neceſſarily follows the diſſolution of the other which was knit with it. If the ſinful Nature were not taken away, the Devil's Works would not wholly be deſtroyed; or if the ſinful Nature were taken away, and a righteous Nature not planted in the ſtead of it, he would ſtill have his ends againſt God, in depriving God of the glory he ought to have from the creature: And the creature could not give God the glory he was deſigned by his creation to return, unleſs ſome Nature were implanted in him, whereby he might be enabled to do it.

Would it then be for the honour of this great Redeemer, to come ſhort of his end againſt Satan, to let all the Trophies of Satan remain in the errors of the Underſtanding, perverſity of the Will, diſorder of the Affections, and confuſion of the whole Soul? Or if our Saviour had only removed theſe, how had the works of the Devil been deſtroyed, if we had lain open to his aſſaults, and been liable the next moment to be brought into the ſame condition? which ſurely would have been, were not a righteous and divine Nature beſtowed upon the Creature.

3. Chriſt came to bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 18. For Chriſt alſo hath once ſuffered for ſins, the juſt for the unjuſt, that he might bring us to God. Was it to bring us to God with all our pollutions, which were the cauſe God caſt us off? No; but to bring us in ſuch a garb, as that we might be fit to converſe with him. Can we be ſo without a new Nature, and a ſpiritual likeneſs to God? Would that man who would bring another to a Prince to introduce him into favour, bring him into his preſence in a ſlovenly and ſordid habit, ſuch a garb which he knew was hateful to the Prince? Neither will our Saviour, nor can he bring ſinners in ſuch a plight to God; becauſe it is more contrary to the Nature of Gods holineſs to have communion with ſuch, than it is contrary to the Nature of Light, to have communion with Darkneſs *. Can it be thought, that Chriſt ſhould come to ſet Humane Nature right with God, without a change of that Principle which cauſed the firſt revolt from God? Beſides, ſince the coming of Chriſt was to pleaſe God, and to glorifie him in all his Attributes, as well as to ſave us; how can God be pleaſed with the effects of Chriſt's Death, if he brought the creature to him, without any change of Nature, but with its former enmity and pollution? Will you ſay his mercy would be glorified? How can that be, without a wrong to his Purity, and a provocation to his Juſtice? Suppoſe ſuch a diſpute were in God, would not Holineſs, Wiſdom, Juſtice, joyned together, over-vote Mercy?

* 1 John 1. 5, 6, 7.

But ſince there can be no ſuch Diſpute, how can we conceive that Mercy, an infinite Perfection in God, can deſire any thing to the prejudice of the honour of his Holineſs, Juſtice, and Wiſdom?

Well then: if we expect happineſs without a renewed Nature, we would make Chriſt a Miniſter of ſin, as well as of righteouſneſs *. As there is a juſtification by him, ſo his intent was to plant a living Principle in us, whereby we might be enabled to live to him. It is in vain then, to think to find any benefit by the Death of Chriſt, without a new Nature, any more than from God without it.

6. The end of the Spirits coming, manifeſts it to be neceſſary. We are ſaid therefore to be ſaved by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy ghoſt *. As God by his Spirit, moving upon the face of the Waters, created the World; ſo God by his Spirit, moving upon the face of the Soul, new creates all the Faculties of it. Can the coming of Chriſt, and the coming of the Spirit, the moſt ſignal Favours of God to Mankind, be intended for no other end, than to convey to us the mercy of God, with the diſhonour of his holineſs; to change our Miſery without changing our Nature, and putting us in a capacity both to glorifie God, and enjoy him? To what purpoſe doth the Spirit come, if not to renew? Whatſoever was the Office of the Spirit, cannot be ſuppoſed to be exerciſed without this foundation. Can there be any Seal of the Spirit, without ſome impreſſion made upon the Soul like to the Spirit, which is the Seal whereby we are ſealed? Can he witneſs to us, that we are the children of God, if there be no Principle in us ſuitable to God, as a Father; no child-like frame? Is the Spirit only to bring things to remembrance for a bare ſpeculation, without any operative effect? Is he to help us in prayer? How can that be, without giving us firſt a ſenſe of what we need, and a praying heart? And how can we have a praying heart, till our Natures, ſo averſe from God, and his Worſhip, be changed? He is a *quickning Spirit, 2 Cor. 3. 6. the ſpirit gives life. How can that be, while we lye rotting in our former Death? 'Tis a Spirit of holineſs. Can he dwell in a Soul that hath an unholy Nature? Tho he find men ſo at his firſt coming, would he not quickly be weary of his houſe, if it continued ſo? He comes to change our old Nature, not to encourage it. What fruits of the Spirit could appear, without the change of the Nature of the Soil?

* Rom. 1. 4. 1 Theſ. 4. 8.

Prop. 7. 7. From all this it follows, That this new birth is neceſſary in every part of the ſoul. There's not a Faculty but is corrupted; and therefore not a Faculty but muſt be reſtored. Not a wheel, nor a pin in all this Clock of the heart, but is out of frame: Not one part wherein ſin and Satan have not left the marks of their feet, Tit. 1. 15. Their mind and conſcience is defiled. 'Tis clearer to a regenerate ſoul, that it is ſo, ſince by the light of Grace he diſcerns a filth in every Faculty. The more knowledg of God he hath, the more he diſcovers his ignorance; the more love to God, the more he finds, and is aſhamed of his enmity: And tho in our imperfect Regeneration here, Grace and Sin are in every part of the Soul, as Wine and Water mingled together, are in every part of the Veſſel; yet every Faculty is in part renewed: And Grace and Sin lye not ſo hudled together, but that the ſoul can diſtinguiſh them, and be able to ſay, This is Grace; this is part of the new Adam; and this is ſin, and part of the old Adam in me.

Becauſe there was an univerſal depravation by the Fall, Regeneration muſt anſwer it in its extenſiveneſs in every Faculty. Otherwiſe it is not the birth of the man, but of one part only. 'Tis but a new piece, not a new creature. This, or that Faculty may be ſaid to be new, not the Soul, not the Man. We are all over bemired by the puddle of ſin; and we muſt be all over waſhed by the Water of Grace. A whole Sanctification is the proper Fruit of Reconciliation, 2 Theſ. 5. 23. The God of peace ſanctifie you wholly. Reconciliation was of the whole man; ſo muſt Regeneration. Sin hath rooted it ſelf in every part; Ignorance and Error in our Underſtandings; Pride, and Self-love, and Enmity in our Wills; all muſt be unrooted by a new grace, and the Triumphs of ſin ſpoiled by a new birth.

Prop. 8. 8. 'Tis ſo neceſſary, that even the dim eye of natural Reaſon, has been apprehenſive of ſome need of it. And therefore 'tis a wonder, that there ſhould be a need of preſſing it upon men under the light of the Goſpel. Thoſe Doctrines that are purely intellectual, and ſupernatural, are not ſo eaſily apprehended by men, as having no footing in Reaſon, whereby Reaſon is rendred more unpliable to conſent to them. But thoſe Doctrines that tend to the Reformation of man, carry a greater conviction, as having ſome Notion of a depravation, which give them ſome countenance in the minds of men, tho not in their Affection. Men cannot conceive any notion of God's Greatneſs, Majeſty, and Holineſs, but they muſt alſo conceive ſomething neceſſary to an enjoyment of him (wherein their Felicity conſiſts), beſides thoſe natural Principles which they find in themſelves. Natural Reaſon muſt needs aſſent to this, that there muſt be ſome other complexion of the Soul, to fit us for a converſe with ſo pure a Majeſty. The wiſer ſort of Heathens did ſee themſelves out of frame: the tumult and diſorder in their Faculties, could not but be ſenſible to them. They found the flights of their Souls too weak for their vaſt deſires: They acknowledged the wings of it to be clipt, and that they they never came ſo out of the hands of God: That therefore there was a neceſſity of ſome Reſtorative above the art of man, to compleat the work. And I think I have read of one of them that ſhould ſay, That there could not be a Reformation, unleſs God would take fleſh. They had the work of the Law written in their hearts *: They knew ſuch works were to be done: they found themſelves unable to do them. Whence would follow, that there muſt be ſome other Principle to enable them, than what they had by Nature. To this purpoſe they invented their purgative Vertues; and by thoſe, and other means, hoped to arrive to an ὁμοίωσις τῦ θεῦ, which they much talked of, as neceſſary to a converſe with God. As they were ſenſible of their guilt, and therefore had Sacrifices for the expiation of that; ſo they were ſenſible of their filth, and had their purifications and waſhings for the cleanſing of that. Hence it was, that they admired thoſe men that acted in a higher ſphear of Moral Vertue and Moderation than others. Some of them have acknowledged the Malady, but deſpaired of a Remedy, judging it above the power of Nature to cure. Certainly that which the wiſeſt Heathens, in the darkneſs of Nature, without knowledg either of Law or Goſpel, have counted neceſſary; and ſince it is ſeconded by ſo plain a declaration of our Saviour, muſt be indiſputably neceſſary *. Plato in ſeveral places ſaith, That there was a certain divine principle in our minds at firſt; but that it was aboliſht, and God would again renew, and form the Soul with a kind of Divinity.

* Rom. 2. 15.

* Ficinus in Dionyſ. de divin. nom. cap. 12.

How vain then are men, how inexcuſably fooliſh, to neglect both the light of the Goſpel, and that of Reaſon too! that ſpend not one hour, one minute in a ſerious conſideration of it, and enquiry after it! in ſlighting their own Reaſon, as well as the expreſs declaration of Jeſus Chriſt! Oh that men were ſenſible of this which is of ſo great concernment to them.

2. I come to ſhew that Regeneration is neceſſary.

1. 'Tis neceſſary to a Goſpel-ſtate.

1. Nothing can exiſt in any ſtate of being, without a proper form. That which hath not the form of a thing, is not a thing of the ſame ſpecies. He cannot be a man, that wants a rational form of a man, a ſoul. And how can any man be a Chriſtian, without that which doth eſſentially conſtitute a Chriſtian? We can no more be Chriſtians, without a Chriſtian Nature, than a man can be a man without Humane Nature. Grace only gives being to a Chriſtian, and conſtitutes him ſo, 1 Cor. 15. 10. By the grace of God, I am what I am: and his grace which was beſtowed on me, was not in vain, but I laboured more abundantly than they all. Grace there, is meant of habitual Grace, becauſe he ſpeaks of his labour, as the Fruit of it. In bodily life, Brutes go beyond us; in the vigor of ſenſes, greatneſs of ſtrength, temperance, natural affection. In Reaſon, and Moral Vertues, many Heathens have excelled us. There is ſomething elſe then neceſſary for the conſtitution of a Chriſtian, and that is, Chriſts living in him by a new forming of his Soul by his Spirit. As the body lives by the ſoul, which diſtributes Natural, Vital, and Animal Spirits to every part of the body, for the performance of its ſeveral Functions; ſo the ſoul lives by Grace, which diffuſeth its vigor to every part, the underſtanding, will, and affections.

2. There's no ſuitableneſs to a Goſpel-ſtate, and Government, without it. In all changes of Government in the World, there is a change in the whole ſtate of Affairs, in thoſe that are the inſtruments of Government, in the principles of thoſe that ſubmit to the Government. After the Fall of man, God ſet up a new mode of Government. All Judgment was committed to the Son, John 5. 22. For the Father judges no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son. Ver. 27. And hath given him authority to execute judgment. The whole adminiſtration of Affairs is put into his hand: Not excluding the Father, who ſtill gave out his Orders in the Goverment; wherefore he ſaith, ver. 30. I can of my ſelf do nothing; as I hear, I judg. There muſt be therefore ſome agreement between the frame of this Government, and the Subjects of it. As there is a new Adam, a new Covenant, a new Prieſthood, a new Spirit; ſo there muſt be a new Heart, new Compacts, new Offerings, new Reſolutions. New Adminiſtrations, and old Services, can no more be pieced together, than new Cloth, and old Garments. The Goſpel-ſtate of the Church, is called a new Heaven, and a new Earth. Man is by the inclinations of his corrupt Nature, obedient to the Law of ſin. There muſt be a cure and change of thoſe inclinations, to make them tend to an obſervance of the Orders of this new Government, and an hearty obſervation of it, 2 Cor. 5. 17. Old things are paſt away, behold all things are become new, and all things are of God (ſo they were before), but now in a new manner and frame; and this is the Reaſon rendred, why every man in Chriſt muſt be a new creature.

3. All the Subjects of this Government, have been brought in this way, not one excepted. Tho God hath choſen ſome that he would bleſs for ever under this Evangelical Government, yet notwithſtanding the purpoſe of God, they are in as great unfitneſs for this ſtate, as the worſt of men, till God exerting his power, faſhions them to be Veſſels of Honour to himſelf. 'Tis not Gods choice of any man, which puts any man into a Goſpel-ſtate, without the operation of the Spirit, renewing the mind, and fitting him for it. All that were deſigned by Gods eternal purpoſe, were to be brought in by this way of the new birth, as 2 Theſ. 2. 13. God hath from the beginning choſen you to ſalvation, through ſanctification of the ſpirit, and belief of the truth. And by this they were fortified againſt all thoſe workings of the myſtery of iniquity, againſt the Government of Chriſt, and the ſtate of the Goſpel, which would be damnable and deſtructive to many: for he had ſpoken of that before, upon which occaſion he brings this in. A choſen generation, a holy nation, a peculiar people, are joyned together *. Peculiar they could not be, unleſs they had ſomething of an intrinſick value in them above others, and a peculiar fitneſs for ſpecial ſervice, and to offer ſpiritual Sacrifices; therefore called alſo a Royal Prieſthood.

* 1 Pet. 2. 9.

4. The end of the particular inſtitutions, of initiation, or admiſſion, under the Two different adminiſtrations of this Government, was to ſignifie this: of Circumciſion under the Law, and Baptiſm under the Goſpel. Both ſignified the corruption and filthineſs of Nature, and the neceſſity of the circumciſion of the Heart, and the purification of Nature. Hence Baptiſm is called the laver of Regeneration, Tit. 3. 5. *. many underſtanding it of Baptiſm. Not that theſe did confer this new Nature in a Phyſical way, or that it was alway conferred in the adminiſtration of them; but the neceſſity of having this, was alway ſignified by them. Therefore one of the Jews, againſt the Opinion of his Country-men, ſaith abſolutely, 'Tis a madneſs to think that thoſe Ceremonies, under their adminiſtration, were appointed only for the purification of the body, without that of the ſoul. And Rom. 2. 29. ſaith the Apoſtle, He is a Jew which is one inwardly, and circumciſion is that of the heart in the ſpirit. So that partaking of Baptiſm, and being intruſted with the Oracles of God, make a man no more a Chriſtian, than circumciſion, &c. did make a man a Jew. He is only a Chriſtian that hath a Chriſtian Nature: The neceſſity of this Nature was evidenced and ſignified both by the one, and by the other.

* Rom. 6. 4. Baptiſm ſignifies our burial with Chriſt, and our reſurrection to walk in newneſs of life. Maimond. more Nevoch. part 2. ch. 33.

In every ſtate there are duties to be performed, and priviledges to be enjoyed. So likewiſe in the Goſpel-ſtate. Without a new birth, we cannot perform the one, or be capable of the other.

1. 'Tis neceſſary to the performance of Goſpel-duties.

1. There can be no preparation to any ſervice without it. Man's Soul at firſt, could make a ſpiritual muſick to God, till the fleſh diſorder'd the ſtrings: and no muſick can be made, till the Spirit puts the Inſtrument in tune again. In Jeſus Chriſt we are created to good works *: Therefore no preparation can be before the new creation, no more than there was a preparation in the matter, without form, and void, to become a World. What Evangelical duties can be performed without an Evangelical impreſſion, without the forming of Chriſt, and the Doctrine of Chriſt in the heart; not only in the notion, but the operative and penetrating power of it? The heart muſt be firſt moulded, and caſt into the frame of the Doctrine of the Goſpel, before it can obey it; as Rom. 6. 17. But ye have obeyed from the heart, that form of doctrine which was delivered unto you; or, unto which you were delivered. The Mould wherein a thing is caſt, makes it fit for for the Operation for which it is intended. The Ship that wants any material thing in its make, cannot ſail well, will not obey the directions of the Pilot; and he that wants Grace, will be carried away with the breath of every Sin and Temptation. All the motions and roulings naturally in ways of duty by other principles, cannot make an aptitude to divine Services, no more than a thouſand times flinging up a ſtone into the air, can produce any natural fitneſs in it for ſuch an elevation, any more than it had at firſt, which was none at all. Where ſhould we have any preparation? It cannot be from Adam; he died a ſpiritual death by his ſin, and had no natural fitneſs for any ſpiritual ſervice; and therefore cannot convey by Nature more to his poſterity than what he had by Nature. What grace he had afterwards, was beſtowed upon his Perſon, not upon the Nature which was to be tranſmitted to his Poſterity.

2. Therefore we cannot act any Evangelical ſervice without a new nature. If we have no natural preparation, we can have no natural action. The Law muſt be written in our hearts, before it be formed into the life, Jer. 31. 33, 34. I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. 'Tis then, and then only, that we have a practical and affectionate knowledg of God: And they ſhall know me from the leaſt unto the greateſt. Reſtauration to a ſupernatural Life, muſt be, before there can be ſupernatural Actions; a juſt Nature, before a juſt Walk; as Hoſea 14. 9. The juſt ſhall walk in them; that is, in the ways of God. The motion of the creature, is not the cauſe, but the effect of life: The Evangelical ſervice, is not the cauſe of righteouſneſs, but the effect. We cannot walk in one Commandment of God, till the law be written in our inward parts *. Thoſe that have not a new heart, cannot walk in Gods Statutes. We can never anſwer the terms of the Covenant, without a new Nature. For,

1. No act can tranſcend the principle of it. There is a certainty in this Rule; That the elevation of an inferior Nature to the acts of a ſuperior Nature, cannot be, without ſome inward participation of that ſuperior Nature. The Operation of every thing, follows the Nature of the thing. A Beaſt cannot act like a Man, without partaking of the Nature of a Man; nor a Man act like an Angel, without partaking of the Angelical Nature. How then can a Man act Divinely, without a participation of the Divine Nature? Duties of a ſupernatural ſtrain, as Evangelick Duties are, require a ſupernatural frame of Spirit. Nothing can exceed the bounds of its Nature; for then it ſhould exceed it ſelf in acting. Whatſoever ſervice therefore doth proceed from meer Nature, cannot amount to a Goſpel-ſervice, becauſe it comes not from a Goſpel-principle. We cannot believe without a habit of Faith, nor love without a habit of Love: For this only renders us able to perform ſuch acts. Juſtification is neceſſary to our ſtate, as well as Regeneration: But Regeneration ſeems to be more neceſſary to our Duties, than the former; this principally to the performance of them; the other to the acceptance of them.

2. The Nature doth always tincture the Fruit of it. Our Saviour, by his Interrogation, implies an impoſſibility, That thoſe that are evil, ſhould ſpeak good things, Mat. 12. 34. Oh generation of vipers, how can you being evil, ſpeak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaks. The very hiſſings of a Viper, proceed from the malice of its Nature. As the Root is, ſo is all the Fruit. From one Seed many grains ariſe, yet all partake of the Nature of that Seed. Streams partake of the quality of the Fountain. If the Seed, Root, and Fountain be good, ſo is whatſoever ſprings from them. There is not one righteous man by Nature, neither Jew nor Gentile, all are concluded under ſin, Rom. 3. 10. There is none righteous, no, not one; none that underſtands and ſeeks God, &c. He adds not one, twice; he exempts none: not one righteous by Nature; not one righteous action by Nature: none that doth good, no, not one. He applies it to all Mankind. A poyſonous Nature can produce nothing but poyſonous Fruit. Our actions ſmell as rank as Nature it ſelf. Whatſoever riſeth from thence, tho never ſo ſpecious, and well coloured, is evil, and unprofitable. If therefore we would produce good Fruit, we muſt have a new Root, Seed, and Spring. Our ſowr Nature muſt be changed into a ſweetneſs and purity. If the Vine be empty, the Fruit will be ſo too, Hoſea 10. 1. Ephraim is an empty vine; he brings forth fruit to himſelf, or, equal to himſelf *. Unleſs the Tree be good, the Fruit can never be generous, Mat. 7. 17, 18. Neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. We muſt have the Spirit, before we can bring forth the Fruits of the Spirit. All good ſervices are related to this, as effects to their cauſe. So that what a man doth by an act of Reaſon, and natural Conſcience, and good Education, if his Underſtanding, and Conſcience, remain wholly under their natural pollution, the ſervice is not good, becauſe the ſoul is corrupt: much leſs are thoſe ſervices good, which are the Fruit only of humour. How the ſoul can be habitually ſinful, and yet the acts flowing from it, be good, is not eaſily conceivable; 'tis againſt the ſtream of natural Obſervation. 'Tis true indeed, that a man that is habituated to one kind of ſin, may do an action that receives no tincture from that particular habit, becauſe it doth not proceed from it: as a Drunkard gives an Alms; His giving Alms hath no infection inherent from that particular habit of Drunkenneſs; but from the Nature, which is wholly corrupt, it hath: Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one *. Who can bring a clean ſervice out of a miry heart? Not one man in the World. We cannot therefore perform any Evangelical ſervice, if thoſe Foundations be conſidered.

1. Not ſpiritually, becauſe we are fleſh. God muſt be worſhipped in ſpirit *; in a ſpiritual manner, with ſpiritual frames. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of walking in the ſpirit, ‖; and praying in the holy ghoſt *. None can act ſpiritually, but thoſe that are born of the ſpirit: And no action is ſpiritual, but what proceeds from a renewed Principle. The moſt glittering, and refined fleſh, is but fleſh in a higher ſphere of fleſh: Therefore whatſoever ſprings up from that Principle, is fleſhly, upon the former Foundation, That nothing can riſe higher than its Nature. You may as well expect to gather Grapes of Thorns, as ſpiritual Duties from carnal hearts, Mat. 7. 16. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thiſtles? If a natural man cannot receive, and cannot know the things of God, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned *, how ſhould he perform the duties belonging to God, ſince they are ſpiritually to be performed? We are naturally more averſe to motions upon our wills, than to the illuminations of our minds. An Appetite for knowledg, and a flight from God, being both the Fruits of Adam's Fall, who was both curious to know, as God, and fearing to approach to God after his Fall. There may be ſome ſervices in natural men, which may look like ſpiritual; but in the Principle they are not ſo. Many acts are done by irrational creatures, which look like rational acts. As the order among Bees, like the acts of States-men, regulating a Commonwealth; their carrying Gravel in their Fangs, to poiſe them in a ſtorm, and hinder them from being carried away by the violence of the Wind; yet theſe are not rational acts, becauſe they proceed not from Reaſon, but from a natural inſtinct put into them by God, the ſupreme Governor. So that as no action of an Ape, tho like the action of a man, can be ſaid to be a humane act; ſo no action of an unregenerate man, tho like a ſpiritual action, can be called ſpiritual, becauſe it proceeds not from a ſpiritual Principle, but from a contrary one paramount in him. And all actions have their true denomination from the Principle whence they flow. They may be Fruits of Morality, and Fruits of Conſcience, but not ſpiritual Fruits which God requires.

* John 4. 44.

‖ Phil. 3. 3. which worſhip, &c. Gal. 5. 16.

* Jude 20.

* 1 Cor. 2. 14.

Well then: we muſt be firſt built up a ſpiritual houſe, we muſt be a Prieſthood, before we can offer ſpiritual ſacrifice *. We muſt have the powerful operation of the Holy Ghoſt in us, before we can have a tincture of the Holy Ghoſt upon our ſervices. In all humane acts, we ſhould act as rational creatures: In all religious acts, as ſpiritual creatures. Now as a man cannot act rationally, without Reaſon; ſo neither can we act ſpiritually, without a Divine Spirit in us. We are indeed to ſerve God, and worſhip him as men: Therefore rational acts are due to God in worſhip, and we are conſtituted in the rank of rational beings to that purpoſe. But ſince our Minds are defiled, they muſt be purified; ſince our Underſtandings are darkned, they muſt be enlightned. There muſt be a Grace infuſed, a Lamp ſet up, a ſpiritual awakening, and invigorating our Reaſons, and Wills, before we can worſhip God, as God, in a ſpiritual manner.

* 1 Pet. 2. 5.

2. We

2. We cannot perform any Evangelical ſervice, vitally, becauſe we are dead. Our ſervices muſt be living ſervices, if in any wiſe they be ſuitable to a living God. The Apoſtle wiſhes us, Rom. 12. 1. to preſent our bodies a living ſacrifice. He doth not mean only our bodies, conſiſting of fleſh and bones, or a natural life; but he names the body, as being the inſtrument of motion and ſervice, or it may be, Synecdoche partis pro toto, a part for the whole. Preſent your ſelves as a ſacrifice conſecrated to God, and living to him, and as living by him.

Upon the loſs of Original righteouſneſs, another form, or principle, was introduced, called in Scripture, fleſh, and a body of death. Hence by Nature we are ſaid to be dead *; and all our works before repentance, are dead works ‖: And theſe works have no true beauty in them, with whatſoever gloſs they may appear to a natural eye. A dead body may have ſomething of the features and beauty of a living; but 'tis but the beauty of a Carcaſs, not of a Man. A Statue, by the Stone-cutter's art, and the Painter's skill, may be made very comely; yet 'tis but a Statue ſtill; where is the life? Such ſervices are but the works of Art, as Flowers painted on the Wall, with curious Colours; but where is the vegetative Principle? Since man therefore is ſpiritually dead, he cannot perform a living ſervice. As a natural death doth incapacitate for natural actions; ſo a ſpiritual death muſt incapacitate for ſpiritual actions: Otherwiſe in what ſenſe can it be called a death, if a man in a ſtate of Nature were as capable of performing ſpiritual actions, as one in a ſtate of Grace? No vital act can be exerciſed without a vital principle. As Adam could not ſtir to perform any action, tho his body was framed and perfected, till God breathed into him a living ſoul; ſo neither can we ſtir ſpiritually, till God breathe into us a living Grace. Spiritual motions can no more be without a ſpiritual life, than bodily motions can be without an enlivening ſoul. The living, the living, they ſhall praiſe thee: And Pſalm 80. and 18. Quicken us, and we will call upon thy name. There can be no living praiſe, nor no living prayer, without a renewed heart. If it be one effect of the Blood of Chriſt, to purge our conſciences from dead works, to ſerve the living God, as Heb. 9. 14. then it is clear, That till our Conſciences are purged from dead works, we cannot ſerve the living God: For what ſuitableneſs can there be between a living God, and dead ſervices? Is a putrified rank Carcaſs, a fit Preſent for a King; or a man full of running ſores and boils over his whole body, fit to ſerve in a Princes Chamber? Our beſt ſervices, without a new Nature, tho they may appear varniſht and glittering to man, yet in the ſight of God they have no life, no ſubſtance, but ſtinking rotten duſt, becauſe coming from a dead and rotten heart.

Well then, we muſt be born again: 'Tis not a dead Nature, nor a dead Faith, can produce living Fruit for God. We may as well read without eyes, walk without legs, act without life, as perform any ſervice to God without a new Nature; no, we cannot perform the leaſt: A dead man can no more move his finger, than his whole body.

3. Not graciouſly, becauſe we are corrupt. By the ſame Reaſon that we are to ſpeak with grace *, and to ſing with grace in our hearts to the Lord ‖; we are to do every other duty with an exerciſe of grace to God: And without grace, our praiſes are but hollowings, our prayers but howlings, as the Scripture terms them, Hoſea 7. 14. They have not cried to me with their hearts, when they howled upon their beds. How can there be an exerciſe of that which is not? The skill of the Muſician cannot diſcover it ſelf, till the Inſtrument be made tunable. The heart muſt be ſtrung with Grace by the Spirit, before that Spirit can touch the ſtrings, to make harmony to God in a Goſpel-ſervice. Our Tempers muſt be changed, our Hearts fitted, before we can make melody to God. The principal beauty and glory of a duty, lies in the internal workings of the heart: and how can that heart work graciouſly, that hath nothing of God, and his Grace in it? 'Tis ſaid, Folly is bound up in the heart of a child *. So is corruption in the heart of a man, like poyſon in a bundle of ſtuff. It is entred into the very compoſition of us. A law of ſin is predominant in a natural man *, which doth influence all his actions. (Strong habits will intereſt themſelves in all that we go about): and all a man's ſervices are regulated by it: for he hath no other Law in his mind, to check the motions of it,

* Col. 4. 6.

* Prov. 22. 15.
* Rom. 7. 23.

and to ſcent his duties, whereby they may carry a pleaſing ſavour to God. The gift of Prophecy, the underſtanding of Myſteries, the depth of Knowledg, the removing Mountains, beſtowing Alms, dying for Religion, are brave, and noble Acts; but without Charity (love to God), without which, no other Grace
* 1 Cor. 13. 2, 3. can work, all theſe profit nothing *. There is a moral goodneſs in feeding the poor; but no gracious goodneſs without Charity. A little of this, would make thoſe as a Diamond doth Gold, wherein it is ſet, more valuable. If all thoſe profit nothing without this Grace of Charity, they would profit much with it. How doth Grace alter the very Nature of ſervices? Thoſe acts which are ſenſitive in a Brute, were he transformed into a man, and endued with Reaſon, would become rational. Thoſe actions which are but moral in a meer man, when changed into Chriſtian, become Evangelical: They would be of another Nature, and another value.

Well then, look after the new birth, ſince it is ſo neceſſary. There cannot be gracious Practiſes, without gracious Principles. Can any thing fly to Heaven without wings? We are to walk as Chriſt walked: How can we do it without a principle of Kin to that which Chriſt had? We are bound to act from a principle of Righteouſneſs. Adam was, and his Poſterity are; and ſhould we not look after that which is ſo neceſſary a perfection, requiſite for our ſervices? No doubt but the Devil could find matter enough for prayer, and from the excellency of his knowledg, frame rare ſtrains (as ſome word it): But would it be a ſervice which came from ſuch a Nature? As long as we are allied to him in our Nature, our ſervices will be of as little value. He transforms himſelf into an Angel of light, but is ſtill a Devil; and many men do ſo in their religious acts, yet ſtill remain unregenerate.

4. Not freely, and voluntarily, becauſe we are enmity. A natural man's ſervices are forced, not free. The averſion of our Natures from God, is as ſtrong as their inclination to evil. We have no fervent deſires to love God; and therefore no deſires to do any thing out of affection to him. When ſenſual habits are planted in the ſoul, there is an enmity to God in the mind: It will not be ſubject to the law of
* Rom. 8. God *: and whilſt that habit ſways, it cannot. This inclination to ſin, and conſequently averſion to good, is incorporated in Nature, like blackneſs in a Negro, ‖ Jer. 13. 23. or ſpots in a Leopard; they are accuſtomed to ſin, and cannot do good ‖. There is no agreeableneſs between God and man's ſoul, whilſt there is a Friendſhip between the heart and ſin: He affects the one, and is diſguſted with the other: One is his pleaſure, the other his trouble. He hath no will, no heart to come to God in any ſervice; and when he doth, he is rather dragged, than ſweetly drawn. The things of God are againſt the bent of a natural heart: there's nothing ſo irkſome as the moſt ſpiritual ſervice. When Men engage in them, they row againſt the ſtream of Nature it ſelf. There muſt therefore be ſomething of a contrary efficacy to over-power this violent Tide; a Law of Grace to renew the mind, and turn the motions of the will to another Chanel. Reſtraining Grace may for a while ſtop the current, but not turn and change the natural courſe. A carnal mind conceits the things of
* 1 Cor. 1. 23, 24. God, and his ſpiritual ſervice, to be fooliſhneſs; and therefore contemns them *. The eye of the mind muſt be opened, to diſcern the Wiſdom of God in them, before he can affect them. The heart ſhould be lifted up in the Evangelical ways of God. Can meer fleſh be thus? Force can never change Nature. You may hurl Lead up into the air, but it will never aſcend of it ſelf, while it is Lead, unleſs it be rarified into air, or fire. Keep up Iron many years in the air, by the force of a Loadſtone, it will retain its tendency to fall to the Earth, if the obſtacle be removed: The natural gravity is ſuſpended, not altered. Till the Nature of the Will be altered, it can never move freely to any duty. There muſt be a power to will, before there is a will to do; as Phil. 2. 13. It is God which works in you both to will and to do. A ſupernatural renewing Grace, muſt expel corrupt habits from the Will, and reduce it to its true Object. When Faith is planted, it brings Love to work by: When the Soul is renewed, there is an harmony between God and the Heart, between the Mind and the Word, between the Will and the Duty: When the Appetite, and true taſte of the Soul, is reſtored in Regeneration, then ſpring up ſtrong deſires to apply it ſelf to every holy ſervice, 1 Pet. 2. 2, 3. The ſin-

Well then, there muſt be a change in us, or in the Law. The Law is ſpiritual, man is carnal *; the Law can have no Friendſhip for man, nor man no Friendſhip for the Law in this ſtate, ſince their Natures are ſo contrary. What the Law commands, is diſguſtful to the Fleſh; what the Fleſh deſires, is diſpleaſing to the Law. There muſt then be a change; the Law muſt become carnal, or man become ſpiritual, before any agreement can be between them. Where do you think this change muſt light? It can never be in the Law; therefore it muſt be in man. The Wound in our Wills muſt be cured; the Tide of Nature, that never carries us to God, muſt be turned, and altered by a ſtream of Grace, to move us to him and his ſervice. Man hath been a ſlave to his luſt by the loſs of Grace, and is never like to be reſtored to his liberty in the ſervice of God, till he be re-poſſeſt of that Grace, the loſs of which, brought him into ſlavery. The Goſpel is a Law of Liberty *. A ſervile Spirit doth not ſuit a free Law, neither is it a fit frame for an Evangelical Service.

* Rom. 7. 14.

* James 1. 25.

5. Nor delightfully. We can never perform ſpiritual ſervices with delight, becauſe we are alienated. This we are to do. Paul delighted in the law of God *; and the Law was the delights of David ‖: His whole pleaſure run in this channel. Now becauſe of that averſion to God, there is no will and freedom in his ſervice; much leſs can there be a delight. A corrupt Nature can have no divine ſtrains: A diſeaſed man hath no delight in his own acts; his Diſtemper makes his very motion unpleaſant to him. Things that are not natural, can never be delightful. There is a mighty diſtance between ſpiritual duties, and a carnal heart. Things out of their place, can never be at reſt. Sin is as much a natural man's Element, as Water to a Fiſh, or Air to a Bird. If he be ſtopt in the ways of the Fleſh, he is reſtleſs till he return. He may indeed have ſome delight ſometimes in a ſervice; not as it reſpects God as the Object, or God as the End: There is no ſuch Friendſhip in a natural man's heart to him; but as there is an agreement between a ſervice, and ſome carnal end he performs it for. His delight is not terminated in the ſervice, but in ſelf-love, ſelf-intereſt, or ſome external reward; anchored in it by ſome hopes of carnal advantage; not ſpringing from a living love, or a gracious affection to God. He hath no knowledg of God; and therefore can have no delight in God, or in his ſervice. 'Tis impoſſible we can come before him without pleaſure and delight, if we know how amiable he is in his Perſon, and how gracious in his Nature: But we naturally think God a hard Maſter. And Man having no delight in God, he can have none in thoſe means which lead him to God, and as they are appointed to bring God and his ſoul together. He hath wrong Notions of Duties, looks upon them as Drudgeries, not as advantages, Mal. 1. 13. Ye ſaid, behold what a wearineſs it is, &c. Without a change of Nature, we cannot deſire Communion with God; and therefore cannot delight in the means of it. We can no more do any ſervice chearfully, than the Saints without it, could receive joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods *; We can never be in a holy extaſie, without this inward principle, to make the Goſpel-ſervices connatural to us. This only makes high impreſſions upon the ſoul. 'Tis the Law within our hearts, which only makes us delight to do his will, Pſal. 40. 8. Thy law is within my heart, in my bowels: He had a natural affection to it, and then a high delight in it. It made our Saviour delight to do his work: And 'twas the inward man of the heart, wherein the Apoſtles delight in the Law was placed. Unleſs we have a divine impreſſion of God upon us, we cannot hear his Word with any joy in it; as our Saviour ſaith, John 8. 47. Ye therefore hear them not: that is, the Words of God, becauſe you are not of God. Unleſs we have God's Light, and his Truth, ſent forth into us, we can never make God our exceeding joy, or go to his Altar with ſuch a frame *.

* Rom. 7. 22.

* Heb. 10. 34.

* Pſal. 43. 3, 4.

Well then: There is a neceſſity of the new Nature, to have a warm frame of heart in Evangelical Duties. What is connatural to us, is only delightful. So much of wearineſs and bondage we have in any holy ſervice; ſo much of a legal frame; ſo much of love and delight, ſo much we have of a new Covenant-Grace. A Spirit of Adoption, and Regeneration only can make us delight to come to our Father, and to cry Abba to him.

6. Without Regeneration, we cannot perform Evangelical Duties ſincerely, becauſe

we are a lye, and in our beſt eſtate vanity. We muſt worſhip God in truth, as well as ſpirit ‖. God is a Spirit, and therefore muſt be worſhipped in Spirit. God is Truth, and therefore muſt be worſhipped in Truth. Without a new Nature we cannot worſhip God in Truth. The old Nature is in it ſelf a Lye, a meer falſity, ſomething contrary to that Nature God created. It was firſt introduced by a Lye of the Devil (ye ſhall be as gods, knowing good and evil *) ; and thereupon a fancy that God lied in his command. How can we ſerve God with this Nature, which had nothing but a Lie for its Foundation ; a Lie of the Devil, a Lie in our Fancy? Therefore our old Nature is no better than a Lie. How can we ſerve God with that Nature which is quite another thing to that of his framing? Man in his Fall is a Liar, Rom. 3. 4. Let God be true, and every man a Liar ; a Covenant-breaker, that kept not his Faith with God. God, in reſpect of Truth, and Man, in reſpect of Lying, are ſet in oppoſition by the Apoſtle there. No man, but would ſlight and ſcorn that ſervice from another, which he knew to be a lying ſervice in the very frame of it. There is no truth can be in any ſervice which is founded only upon an old Nature, and performed by one that is acted by the Father of Lies: And ſo is every unregenerate man, every child of diſobedience, Epheſ. 2. 2.

Now ſincerity cannot be without a new Nature,

(1.) Becauſe there are no divine motives which ſhould ſway the ſoul. Moſt ſervices of natural men, have ſuch dirty Springs, ſo unſuitable to that raiſed Temper men ſhould have in dealing with God, that they produce Sacrifices not fit to be offered to an earthly Governor, Mal. 1. 8. If you offer the blind for ſacrifice, is it not evil, &c. offer it now unto thy governor, will he be pleaſed with thee? Had they had divine motives, they had never brought ſuch ſickly ſervices: What was not fit for themſelves, they thought fit for God. Did but Princes know what motives many had in their ſervices, they would with as much ſcorn reject them, as they do ignorantly receive them with affection. But it is otherwiſe with God, who knows all the Springs and Wards in that Lock of the heart of his own framing. Do not moſt ſervices take their riſe from Cuſtom, or from an outward religious Education barely ; or at beſt, from natural Conſcience ; which tho it be all in a man, which takes God's part, yet it is fleſh, and defiled? And what pure Vapours can be expected from a lake of Sodom? Tit. 1. 15. To them that are defiled, and unbelieving, nothing is pure ; but even their mind and conſcience is defiled. The Mind, which is the Repoſitory of natural light ; and the Conſcience, which is the Advocate of natural light, and applies it upon particular occaſion, are defiled, and that in every unbelieving perſon. Can the motives which Conſcience takes from a dark and defiled principle, as the Mind is, be divine? 'Tis fear of Death, Wrath, and Judgment, which it moſtly applies. Theſe are the motives of defilement. Fear is the natural conſequence of pollution: Without ſin and corruption, we never had had any fear of Hell. That cannot be gracious, which ſprings naturally from the commiſſion of ſin ; and can this be divine? Were there no puniſhment feared, there ſhould be no duty performed. Conſcience hath naturally no baſis to ſtand upon, but this. What is the principle of his fear? Self. 'Tis not therefore obedience to God, but ſelf-preſervation, ſways a man. Fear is but a ſervile diſpoſition ; and therefore cannot make a ſervice good. All ſuch extrinſick motives which ariſe not from a new life, are no more divine, than the Weights of a Clock may be ſaid to have life, becauſe they ſet the Wheels on running. The ſame action may be done by ſeveral perſons, upon different principles and motives ; for which, one may be rewarded, the other not, as Math. 9. 41, 42. He that receives a righteous man, in the name of a righteous man, ſhall receive a righteous man's reward ; and whoſoever ſhall give unto one of theſe little ones a cup of cold water, only in the name of a diſciple, he ſhall in no wiſe loſe his reward. One may receive a Member of Chriſt, out of reſpect to Chriſt, and the relation the perſon hath to him. Another may receive the ſame perſon out of a common principle of Humanity ; the action is the ſame ; the good redounding to the Object, is the ſame: nay, it may be greater in him that acts from a commiſeration of him, as a man, than a cup of cold Water from the other, becauſe his ability is greater ; but the inward reſpect to the Object is different. One reſpects him as a man of the ſame Nature with himſelf in miſery ; the other reſpects him as a Member of Chriſt in miſery. One reſpects him as a man, the other as a righteous man. The principle is different; one relieves him out of a natural compaſſion, common to a Heathen with him; the other out of a Chriſtian-affection to his head. The actions are therefore different, becauſe of their motives: One is rewardable, and promiſed to be rewarded; the other not: One may be from Grace [I do not ſay, it always is, unleſs there be a conſtant tenor of ſuch motives in our actions: For a natural man, under the preaching of the Goſpel, may do ſuch a thing out of a preſent and tranſient reſpect to Chriſt, whom he hears ſo often of, and hath ſome preſumption to be ſaved by; but it is not his conſtant frame]; I ſay, one may be from Grace, the other from Nature.

Therefore from hence reſults a Neceſſity of the alteration of the frame of our Souls, to furniſh us with Divine and Heavenly motives for our actions. A man may do a thing by Nature, from a good principle, a principle of common honeſty, good in its kind (Braſs is good in its kind, but not ſo good as Silver), but not Evangelically good, without a renewed affection to God, John 14. 15. If you love me, keep my commandments: Keep what I command you, out of affection to me. Where the imagination of the heart is evil, and only evil, and that continually, Gen. 6. 5. all the ſervice a man in that ſtate performs, riſeth from this Spring, and hath ſome infectious imagination in it, highly abominable to God; either wrong notions of God in it, or wrong notions of the duty, or corrupt motives, ſomething or other of the evil imagination of the heart, mixes it ſelf with it.

(2.) Without a renewed Nature, as there are no divine motives, ſo there can be no divine ends. We are bound to refer our natural actions, much more our religious ſervices, to the glory of God. The end is the moral principle of every action. 'Tis that which confers a goodneſs or badneſs upon the ſervice, Luke 11. 34. If the eye be evil, the whole body is full of darkneſs (This is commonly underſtood of a man's aim). If the intention be evil, there is nothing but darkneſs in the whole ſervice. The perfection of every thing conſiſts in anſwering the end for which it was framed: That which was the firſt end of our framing, ought to be the end of our acting; viz. the glory of God. But man hath taken himſelf off from this end, and hath been fond of making himſelf his chief good, and ultimate end. Men naturally have corrupt ends in good duties. Pride is the cauſe of ſome mens Vertue: And they are ſpiritually vicious, in avoiding crimes, becauſe they intrench too much upon their Reputation. The Phariſees made their Devotion contribute to their ambition, Matth. 6. 5. They pray to be ſeen of men: and Matt. 23. 5. But all their works they do to be ſeen of men. Not one work wherein they had not reſpect to this. Their works might well be called the works of the Devil, whoſe main buſineſs it was to ſet up Pride and Self. All their pretences of Devotion to God, were but the Adoration of ſome Golden Image. Have not many in their more ſplendid actions, the ſame end with Brutes, the ſatisfaction of the ſenſitive part, Covetouſneſs, Pride, Emulation, ſenſe of Honour, Qualities perceivable in the very Brutes, as the end of ſome of their actions? The acting for a ſenſitive end, is not ſuitable to a rational, much leſs can it be the end of a gracious creature. Have not men ſinful ends in their religious ſervices? in their prayers to God, in their acknowledgments of God? The Devil could intreat our Saviours leave to go into the Herd of Swine. Was this a prayer, tho directed to Chriſt, when his end was to deſtroy, and ſatisfie his malice in it? At beſt, a man without Grace, is like a Picture in a Room, which eyes all, and hath no more reſpect to a Prince, than his Attendants. A natural man's reſpect to God, is but equal to a reſpect to all his other Worldly Concerns. Indeed it were well if it were ſo. He parcels out one part for God, one part for himſelf, and one part for the World; but God hath the leaſt ſhare; or at beſt, no more than the reſt. And truly, as a Picture cannot give a greater reſpect, to fix its eyes more upon a Prince, than a Peaſant, becauſe it hath no life; ſo neither can a natural man, pay a ſupreme reſpect to God in his ſervice, without a ſpiritual life. There is a neceſſity then of removing thoſe depraved ends, that man may anſwer the true end of his Creation. The Principles then upon which ſuch ends do grow, contrary to the will of God, muſt be rooted out, that the ſoul may move purely to God in every ſervice. We are come ſhort of the glory of God, Rom. 3. 23. All have ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God: ſhort of aiming at it, ſhort of his approbation of our acts. Being thus come ſhort, our ends cannot riſe higher than the frame of our ſoul. Grace, Grace only can advance our wills to thoſe ſupernatural ends for which they were firſt framed. We can never aim at the glory of God, till we have an affection to him: We can never honour him ſupremely, whom we do not ſupremely love. An affection to God can never be had, till the Nature wherein the averſion is placed, be changed into another frame. We are to glorifie God, as God: How can we do this, without the knowledg of him? How can we know him, but by the Goſpel, wherein he diſcovers himſelf? How can we have right conceptions of the Goſpel, till Goſpel-impreſſions be made upon us? How can we act for the glory of God, to whom naturally we are enemies? There's none of us born with a ſpiritual love to God. There muſt then be an alteration of the end, and aim in us; our actions cannot elſe be good, tho ordered by God himſelf. God employs Satan in ſome things; as in afflicting Job *: But is his performance good? No: becauſe his end is not the ſame with God's. He acts out of Malice, what God commands out of Soveraignty, and for gracious deſigns. Our end without it, is not the ſame with the end of the action: for moral acts tend to God's glory, tho the Agent hath no ſuch intention. So the Action may be good in it ſelf, but not good in the Actor, becauſe he wants a due end.

Well then, thoſe actions only can be ſaid to be Evangelical, when the great end of God's glory, which was his end both in Creation and Redemption, hath a moral influence upon every ſervice; when we have the ſame end in our redeemed ſervices, as God had in his redeeming love.

7. Not humbly. We cannot without Regeneration perform Goſpel-duties humbly, becauſe of natural ſtoutneſs and hardneſs. Evangelical duties muſt be performed with humility. Self-denial is the chief Goſpel-Leſſon, and is to run through the Veins of every ſervice. Therefore God ſpeaks of giving a heart of fleſh, in Goſpel-times, Ezek. 11. 19. I will take the ſtony heart out of their fleſh, and give them a heart of fleſh, that they may walk in my ſtatutes, and keep my ordinances, and do them. Goſpel-duties require a pliableneſs, and tenderneſs of heart. Adam's over-valuing himſelf, and ſwelling with deſigns of being like God, brought an incapacity upon himſelf of ſerving his Creator. And man ever ſince, is too much aſpiring, and too well opinioned of himſelf, to perform duties in an Evangelical ſtrain, with that meltingneſs, that nothingneſs in himſelf, which the Goſpel requires. Our ſwelling and admiring thoughts of our own natural righteouſneſs, hinders Chriſt from ſaving us, and our ſelves from ſerving him. There muſt then be an humble, and melting, and ſelf-denying frame. The Angels are ſaid to cover their faces before God *, as having nothing to glory in of their own. And the chief deſign of the Goſpel, is to beat down all glorying in our ſelves, 1 Cor. 1. 29, 31. That no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence; let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord. And indeed it humbles us no more, than what, upon due conſideration, will appear very neceſſary. Nature then muſt be changed, before this Pride be rooted out: Old things muſt paſs away, that God may be all in all in the Creature. We cannot without a new Nature, make a true eſtimate of our ſelves, and lye as vile and baſe in the preſence of God. A Stone, with all the hammering, cannot be made ſoft. Beat it into ſeveral pieces; you may ſever the continuity of its parts, but not maſter its hardneſs; every little piece of it, will retain the hardneſs of its Nature. So it is with a heart of ſtone: The Nature muſt be changed, before it be fit for thoſe ſervices which require melting, humble, and admiring frames. There is a neceſſity of a reſiding-Grace, like fire, to keep the ſoul in a melting temper.

* Iſa. 6. 2.

8. Not conſtantly. Without a new Nature, we cannot perform Goſpel-ſervices conſtantly, becauſe of our natural levity. Where the Nature is fleſh, the heart minds the things of the fleſh *. The Mind thus habituated, will not be long employed about the things of the Spirit. There is a natural levity in man's Nature. Do not many ſeem to begin in the Spirit, and end in the Fleſh? ſeem to ariſe to Heaven, and quickly fall down to Earth? Do not our very promiſes vaniſh with the next wind of temptation; and like ſparks, expire as ſoon as they be born, unleſs Grace be in the heart to keep them alive? The Iſraelites are accuſed of not having a heart heart ſtedfaſt with God, Pſal. 78. 37. Their heart was not right with him, neither were they ſtedfaſt in his covenant. Are our Natures better than theirs? Do we not all lye under the ſame charge; ſo uncertain naturally, about divine things, as if there were nothing but wind in our compoſition? Nothing can be kept up in motion againſt its Nature, but by force. A Top hath no inward principle of motion, but is moved by ſome outward force: When that is removed, the motion languiſheth. Any motion that depends only upon outward Wires, expires upon the breaking of them. When external motives, which ſpurr'd men on to this or that ſervice, ceaſe, the ſervice dies of courſe, becauſe the ſpring of the motion falls. If fear of Hell, terrors of Death, ſome preſſing Calamity, be the ſpring of any Duty; when theſe are removed, there will be no more regard to the duty they engendred. But what is natural, is conſtant, becauſe the ſpring always remains. Intereſt changeth, Conſcience is various; and therefore the Operations ariſing from thence, will partake of the uncertainty of them. Stony ground may bring forth Blades; but for want of Root, they will quickly wither *. A man may mount high in Religion, by the mixture of ſome religious paſſion, as Meteors in the Air; but by reaſon of the groſs and earthy parts in them, will not continue their ſtation. There's no being without, ſtable, but God; and no principle ſtable within, but Grace, Heb. 13. 9. It is a good thing that the heart be eſtabliſhed with grace. Whatſoever ſervice is undertaken upon changeable motives, is as changeable as the bottom upon which it ſtands. If Credit, ſlaviſh fear of God, Worldly intereſt, inſpire us with ſome ſeeming holy reſolutions, they will all fly away upon the firſt removal of thoſe props. There is therefore a neceſſity of a change of Nature and Diſpoſition. Where there is no approbation of things that are excellent, there can be no conſtant Operation about them. All action about an Object, continues according to the affection to it, and delight in it. We ſhall then be filled with the Fruits of Righteouſneſs, to the glory of God, when we have a ſincere approbation of the excellency of them, Phil. 1. 10, 11. firſt, approve things that are excellent; and then follows, without offence, till the day of Chriſt. A ſtately Profeſſion can no more hold out againſt the Floods of Temptation, than a beautiful Building can ſtand againſt the Winds without a good Foundation under ground. 'Tis the ſpirit of the Lord within, as well as without, can only maintain the ſtandard againſt Temptation *.

* Mat. 13. 5, 20.

* Iſa. 59. 19.

Well then, upon the whole, there is a neceſſity of Regeneration, for the performance of Goſpel-duties. We cannot elſe perform them ſpiritually, becauſe we are fleſh; nor vitally, becauſe we are dead; nor graciouſly, becauſe we are corrupt; nor voluntarily, becauſe we are enmity; nor delightfully, becauſe we are alienated; nor ſincerely, becauſe we are falſity; nor humbly, becauſe of our ſtoutneſs; nor conſtantly, becauſe of our levity: Our Natures muſt be changed in all theſe reſpects, before we can be fit for any Goſpel-ſervice.

2. Regeneration is neceſſary for the enjoyment of Goſpel-priviledges:

1. For the favour of God, and his complacency with us. We are not fit for Gods delight, without it. That perſon who hath his love, muſt have his image. If ever God could love an old Nature, which he once hated, and delight in that which he once loathed, he muſt diveſt himſelf of his immutability. He never hated the perſon of any of his Creatures, but for unrighteouſneſs. And upon the removal of this cloud of ſeparation between him and them, the beams of his love break out in their former vigour. God's love is not ſtraitned, nor his kindneſs exhauſted, no more than his hand is ſhortned, or his ear grown heavy, that he cannot hear, Iſa. 59. 1, 2. But your iniquities have ſeparated between you, and your God: and your ſins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear.

(1.) For firſt, What did make the firſt ſeparation? was it not ſin? God told Adam before, what the iſſue would be, upon his eating the Forbidden Fruit, Gen. 2. 17. In the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die. 'Tis not a temporal death there only meant; for he ſhould then have died that day wherein he fell; the word ſurely importing ſo much. And the puniſhment of a temporal death was pronounced afterwards, Gen. 3. 19. Duſt thou art, and unto duſt ſhalt thou return. Thou ſhalt ſurely die; thy integrity, and righteouſneſs, will expire that very moment, and thou ſhalt die in my juſt diſpleaſure. 'Tis a ſpiritual death that is moſt properly properly meant. The puniſhment of ſin, is death. The chief part of this death

* Eph. 4. 18. is an alienation from the life of God *: that is, not to have God, and the righteouſneſs of Gods Image, living in him; but to be impure, corrupt, a hater of God, and ſervant of ſin. Now from this puniſhment no man can be freed, but by a contrary Regeneration; the proper effect whereof, is to love God, to know his Name, to
* Cocceius more Novoch. p. 65. partake of his Holineſs, to imitate his Vertues *. Man forfeited all Gods favour upon his Fall, and can challenge nothing of it.

(2) What then can reſtore man to God's favour? Can that which firſt deprived us of it? The cauſe of our deſtruction can never be the means of our reſtauration. Did the loſs of Adam's integrity, make him unfit for Paradiſe, the Garden of God, from whence he was expelled, as a Token of God's diſ-favour? And can the continuance of that loſs, be a means to regain that love which caſhier'd us? It was a ſpiritual death. And is the carcaſs of a ſoul, fit for God's complacency? There muſt be not only a ſatisfaction to his Juſtice for the re-inſtating man into his favour (This is done by Jeſus Chriſt): But a reſtoring of his Image, this is done by the Holy Ghoſt. 'Tis as impoſſible the ſoul can be beautiful without life, and without holineſs, as for a body to be beautiful without a good colour, and proportion of parts. Take away this, Beauty muſt ceaſe, and Deformity ſucceed in the place. 'Tis impoſſible therefore, that where ſin remains in its full vigor, where there is nothing of an original integrity reſiding, but that the ſoul muſt be monſtrous, vile, and deformed in the eyes of God. To make it therefore a fit Object for God's favour, it is neceſſary it be beautified with a holy Nature, and adorned with its due proportions and vigor. The righteouſneſs of Iſrael muſt go forth as brightneſs; he muſt be called by a new Name; that is, a new Nature: for what is a Name without a Nature? And then it ſhould be Hepnzibah, the Lord delights in thee. Iſa. 62. 1, 2, 3, 4. The righteouſneſs thereof ſhall go forth as brightneſs, and the glory thereof as a lamp that burns. Righteouſneſs is the glory of a Soul, as well as of a Church. Gentiles ſhall ſee thy righteouſneſs, and all kings thy glory. Thou ſhalt be called by a new name; a new Nature wrought by the word of God; which the mouth of the Lord ſhall name. Then ſhe ſhould be in favour with God; a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of her God. Righteouſneſs is the glory of a ſoul, and Gods delight and complacency is the conſequent of a righteous Nature.

3. The Elect themſelves have no intereſt in God's favour of delight, without it. This follows upon the former. God cannot love the very top of Mankind, his own choice, with a love of complacency, without Regeneration, without a righteous Nature. There is a favour of intention and purpoſe before it: There is alſo an executive love in the very infuſing the habits of grace, which is a ſupernatural favour, becauſe there is both a purpoſe, and then an actual conferring a ſupernatural good. God is free, and may will to give his gifts how, and to whom he pleaſes. But an elect perſon, whileſt he continues in a ſtate of Nature, is not ſimply beloved, tho there be a purpoſe of love; becauſe there is no gracious quality in him, which is the Object of God's ſpecial favour. 'Tis Regeneration only, which is the Object of God's delight in us.

(4.) Hence will follow, That no Priviledges under Heaven, without it, can bring us into God's favour. No, not if any man were related to Chriſt, according to the fleſh. The Apoſtle Paul would not think the better of himſelf, for a fleſhly relation to Chriſt, for being of the ſame Country, deſcended of the Jewiſh Nation, 2 Cor. 5: 16. Though we have known Chriſt after the fleſh, yet henceforth know we him no more. Therefore if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature. Tho it be an honour to be of the ſame deſcent with Chriſt, according to the fleſh; to be of the ſame Nation and Country; yet this doth not make a man any more beloved of God. Nothing avails in Chriſt, but a new creature. And our Saviour himſelf pronounceth it ſo. It was the higheſt priviledg to be the Mother of our Saviour, according to the fleſh: yet this had been nothing, without her being born again of the Spirit: Who is my mother, and who are my brethren? Behold, my mother, and my brethren, point-
* Mat. 12. 48, 49. ing to his Diſciples *, my mother, and my brethren, are thoſe which hear the word of God, and do it, Luke 8. 21. Thoſe that hear the Word, that have the gracious effect of the Word wrought in them by the Spirit, are equal to my Mother, and my Brethren, and ſuperior to any of my fleſhly Relations, if they be without it. There is a neceſſity of Regeneration upon this account.

2. As

2. As there is no favour, ſo there's no union with God and Chriſt without it. Man hath ſome kind of natural Union with all things in the World: He hath being with all Creatures, rational Faculties with Angels, Senſe with Animals, Vegetation with Plants. He wants only that with God, which would beautifie all the reſt. And this can only be by partaking of the Image of God's Holineſs by a new birth. There muſt be a capability for this Union on man's part. A ſuperior and inferior Nature, may be united together; but never contrary Natures. There muſt be ſome proportion between the Subjects to be united, which proportion conſiſts in a commenſuration of one thing to another. What proportion is there between God and our Souls? There can be none without a ſupernatural Grace, infuſing a pure Nature. As we come out of the quarry of Nature, rough and unpoliſht, we are not fit to be cemented with the corner-ſtone in the heavenly Building; we muſt be firſt ſmooth'd, and alter'd by Grace.

(1.) How can things be united to one another, which are already united to their contraries? Separation from one body, muſt make way for union to another. Naturally we are united to the Devil, as the Head of the wicked World. We are by Nature his Members. Our Underſtandings and Wills were united with his in Adam, when Adam gave up his Underſtanding and Will to him: And ever ſince he works in the children of diſobedience *. Working, and working in, as an united Nature to him, and Principle in him. 'Tis neceſſary this Union ſhould be broken, before we can partake of the influence of another Head. The Diabolical Nature and Principle therefore, which we have got by ſin, muſt be removed, and another Nature, which is Divine, put in the place, firſt (in order of Nature) before we can be united to Chriſt, and enjoy the benefits of Union with him.

* Eph. 2. 2. Who now works in the children of diſobedience, ἐνεργοῦντος τοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν.

(2.) How can things of a contrary nature be united together? Can Fire and Water be united, a good Angel, and an impure Devil? Can Heaven and Hell ever meet friendly, and compoſe one body? We are united to the firſt Adam by a likeneſs of Nature: How can we be united to the ſecond, without a likeneſs to him from a new Principle? We were united to the firſt by a living ſoul; we muſt be united to the other by a quickning Spirit. We have nothing to do with the heavenly Adam, without bearing an heavenly image *. We are earthly as in the firſt Adam; we muſt be heavenly to be in the ſecond, becauſe his Nature is ſo: If we are his Members, we muſt have the ſame Nature which was communicated to him by the Spirit of God, which is holineſs. This Nature muſt flow from the ſame Principle; otherwiſe it is not the ſame Nature. An old Nature cannot be joyned to a new Adam: There muſt be one Spirit in both; as 1 Cor. 6. 17. He that is joyned to the Lord, is one ſpirit. And if it were an Union barely of affections, as ſome would only make it, 'tis not conceivable how it can be, without a change of diſpoſition. But ſince it is an Union by indwelling of the ſame Spirit in both (Rom. 8. 9. If any man hath not the ſpirit of Chriſt, he is none of his), 'tis leſs intelligible, how it can be without an aſſimilation of our Nature to the Nature of Chriſt. It can never be ſuppoſed, the Spirit ſhould unite a pure Head, and impure Members. Such an Union would make our bleſſed Saviour like Nebuchadnezzar's Image; an Head of Gold, Arms of Silver, and Feet of Clay. Shall we loath to have naſty things about us? and will the holy Jeſus endure a loathſome putrifying ſoul tobe joyned to him?

* 1 Cor. 15. 48, 49.

(3.) How can any thing be vitally united to another, without life? 'Tis a vital Union, by Vertue of which Believers are called Chriſt (1 Cor. 11. 12. As all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, ſo alſo is Chriſt): And it is compared to the Union of the Members of a natural body, Rom. 12. 4, 5. Members have not only life in their Head, but in themſelves, becauſe the ſoul, which is the life of the body, is not only in the Head, but in all the parts of the body, and exerciſeth in every part its vital Operations. The Spirit therefore, which is the band of this Union, communicates life to every Member wherein he reſides, as well as in the Head. What man would endure a dead body to be joyned to him, tho it were the carcaſs of one he never ſo dearly loved? If a man were united to Chriſt, without Regeneration, Chriſts body would be partly alive, partly dead, if any one Member of it had not a ſpiritual life. A dead body and a living Head; a Member of Chriſt, with a Nature contrary to him, is an unconceivable Paradox. Did God ever deſign ſuch a monſtrous Union for his Son?

Upon theſe accounts doth reſult the neceſſity of Regeneration; without it, no Union with Chriſt.

3. There can be no juſtification without it. We are not juſtified by an inherent righteouſneſs; yet we are not juſtified without it. We cannot be juſtified by it, becauſe it is not commenſurate to the Law, by reaſon of its imperfection: we cannot be juſtified without it; for it is not congruous to the Wiſdom and Holineſs of God, to count a perſon righteous, who hath nothing of righteouſneſs in him, and whoſe Nature is as corrupt as the worſt of men. With what reſpect to God's Honour can it be expected, that God ſhould pardon that man's ſins, whoſe will is not changed, who ſtill hath the ſame habitualneſs in his will to commit ſin, tho he doth not at preſent act it. 'Tis very congruous in a moral way, that the perſon offending ſhould retract his ſin, and return to his former affection. There is a diſtinction between Juſtification, and Regeneration, tho they never are aſunder. Juſtification is relative; Regeneration internally real. Union with Chriſt, is the ground of both; Chriſt is the meritorious cauſe of both. The Father pronounceth the one, the Spirit works the other: 'Tis the Father's Sentence, and the Spirit's Work. The relative, and the real change, are both at the ſame time, 1 Cor. 6. 7. But you are ſanctified, but you are juſtified: Both go together. We are not juſtified before Faith, becauſe we are juſtified by it, Rom. 5. 1. And Faith is the vital principle whereby we live, Gal. 2. 20. The life which I now live, I live by the faith of the Son of God. 'Tis the Root-Grace, and contains the Seeds of all other Graces in it: 'Tis habitually, and ſeminally, all other Grace. So that unleſs we be new born, no Juſtification can be expected; no Juſtification can be evidenced. God never pardons ſin, but he ſubdues iniquity, Micah 7. 18, 19. Who is a God like unto thee, that pardons iniquity? He will ſubdue our iniquities. The Conqueſt cannot be made, while the Nature, the Root of the Rebellion remains. When he turns his compaſſion to us, he will turn away our hearts from iniquity. If a man were juſtified before he were regenerate, then he were righteous before he was alive: Being in Chriſt, as free from condemnation, is alway attended with a walking after the Spirit; and walking is not before living *. Pardon would be unprofitable, unleſs he that were pardoned, were made righteous inchoatively here, and had a right to, and hope of a perfect righteouſneſs hereafter. If Righteouſneſs were not imparted in this manner, it would be an Argument a man were ſtill under the Law; which ſaith, He that doth them ſhall live in them (which is impoſſible in a man that hath once ſinned, tho his ſins are remitted). But it is clear, that righteouſneſs is imparted, ſince there is no man in the World, whoſe ſins are pardoned, but finds ſome principle in him, whereby he is enabled to conteſt with ſin, more than before he was. Therefore do not deceive your ſelves; there is no pardon without a righteous Nature, tho pardon be not given for it.

4. There's no Adoption without Regeneration. We can no more be God's Sons, without ſpiritual Regeneration, than we can be the Sons and Daughters of Men, without natural Generation. Adoption is not a meer relation, without an inward form. The Priviledg, and the Image of the Sons of God, go both together. A ſtate of Adoption, is never without a ſeparation from defilement, 2 Cor. 6. 17, 18. Come you out from among them, be you ſeparate, and I will be a father unto you, and you ſhall be my ſons and daughters. The new Name in Adoption is never given, till the new Creature be framed. As many as are led by the Spirit, they are the ſons of God, Rom. 8. 14. οὗτοι, thoſe very perſons; that is the ſignal mark, that they are led by the Spirit; therefore firſt enlivened by the Spirit. A child-like Relation, is never without a child-like Nature. The ſame method God obſerves in declaring the Members his Sons, as he did in declaring the Head his Son, which was according to the ſpirit of holineſs, by the reſurrection from the dead. So he declares believers to be his Sons, by giving them a Spirit of holineſs, and by a Reſurrection from ſin, and ſpiritual death. The Devils may as well be adopted Sons of God, as we, without a change of Nature. To be the Sons of the living God, was the great promiſe of the Goſpel propheſied of, Hoſ. 1. 10. Ye are the ſons of the living God. How well will it ſuit, a living God, and a dead Son? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Our Saviour's argument from the immortality of the Soul will evidence not only a Reſurrection, but a neceſſity of a ſpiritual life. What advantage is there in being the Sons of the living God, if we had no more life in us, than his greateſt Enemies? Regeneration, as a Phyſical act, gives us a likeneſs to God in our Nature: Adoption, as a legal act, gives us a right to an Inheritance; both the great intendments of the Goſpel, both accompanying one another. No Sonſhip without a new Nature.

5. There's no acceptation of our ſervices without it. We are not fit to perform any duty without it; and God will never accept any duty from us without it. In the 1ſt of Epheſians, 1. Election, 2. Regeneration, expreſt by being holy; 3. Adoption, 4. Acceptation, are linkt together, ver. 4, 5, 6. He hath choſen us, that we ſhould be holy, and without blame before him in love; having predeſtinated us to the adoption of children: after follows Grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved. Our acceptation is only upon the account of Chriſt; but the acceptability is upon the account of Grace. Faith makes our perſons and our duties acceptable; and Chriſt makes them both accepted. Acceptability ariſeth from Grace, as damnability ariſeth from Sin. God damns none, unleſs they be damnable: neither doth God accept any in Chriſt, unleſs they be acceptable. * The Papiſts, that plead for merit, acknowledg nothing of it before Grace, but after Grace, becauſe then the ſervices have a greater proportion to God, from the dignity of the perſon, they being acts of God's children, and wrought by his Spirit. God can love nothing but himſelf, and what he finds of himſelf in the Creature. All ſervices, without ſomething of God's Image and Spirit in them, are nothing. As the product of a million of Cyphers, tho you ſtill add to them, ſignifies nothing; but add one Figure, an Unit, the Spirit, Grace, it will make the product to be many Millions of high account with God. All the ſignificancy depends upon the Figure, which if abſent, the reſt would be nothing. All moral perfections, without a new Nature, are but Cyphers in God's Account, Heb. 11. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. Grace is only a good work, Phil. 1. 6. He which hath begun a good work in you, will perform it till the day of Chriſt. Intimating, that their morality, and their natural wiſdom, before their Regeneration, were not good works in the ſight of God. They were good in their kind; as a Crab may be ſaid to be a good Crab, but not a good Pippin. 'Tis not good, unleſs it be Fruit brought forth in Chriſt: neither is it ordained as good to the day of Chriſt, to appear glorious at the time of his Triumph. God looks into our ſervices, whether the Spirit frames them, and Chriſt preſents them: All that we do, muſt go through their hands, before they can reach God's heart. Acceptation can never be without a renewed Nature. The ſervices of the fleſh cannot pleaſe God, Rom. 8. 8. They that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God. Their perſons cannot, therefore their actions cannot, becauſe they are the products of a Nature at variance with him; a Nature that is not, nor cannot be ſubject to his Law. So that God muſt be diſpleaſed with his own ſpiritual Law; yea, with his own holy Nature, and change his Judgment, and change his Nature, before he can be pleaſed with fleſhly ſervices; for at the beſt, they are but refined brutiſhneſs. The Image of the Devil, can never be grateful to God. Services flowing from Nature, may ſeem in the outward form of them, to be as acceptable as the duties of a good man: But conſidering what a Dunghill of filthineſs the heart is, from whence they proceed, they cannot be ſo. Good Water is ſweeteſt, and bad Water corrupteſt neareſt the Spring or Fountain: The ſtreams may loſe ſome of their corruption in their paſſage. A gracious man's duties are moſt pleaſant to God, neareſt the heart: A natural man's ſervices are moſt diſtateful, neareſt the Spring. When the heart is a good Treaſure, what comes from it, is regarded as a rich Gift, becauſe it comes from a valuable Treaſure *. Hence it is, that a leſs work, coming from a pure and holy principle in a renewed man, is more acceptable to God, than a greater work (in reſpect of the external glorification of him in the good of mankind), coming from an impure principle in a natural man. As a cup of cold Water given to a Diſciple, is more valuable than the gift of a Prince, from another principle. In the one, God ſees a conformity of affection with his holineſs: in the other, only a conformity with his providence. One intends God's glory, and the other only acts it, propoſing ſome other end to himſelf. And we uſe to value gifts, rather by the affection of the Friend, than the quantity of the Gift. Well then, conſider it: Without a new Nature, all our ſervices, tho they ſhould amount to many Millions in number, have no intrinſick value in them with God. For where the Nature is diſpleaſing, the actions flowing from that Nature, can never pleaſe him. He that turns away his ear from hearing the law; that is, from a ſpiritual obedience to the Law, even his prayer is an abomination *. 'Tis formed by a noiſome ſoul.

* Leſſius de Perfect. Divin. p. 56.

* Luke 6. 45.

* Prov. 28. 9

6. There's no communion with God, without a renewed ſoul. God is uncapable on his part, with the honour of his Law and Holineſs, to have communion with ſuch a creature. Man is uncapable on his part, becauſe of the averſion rooted in his Nature. What way can there be to bring God and Man together, without this change of Nature? What communion can there be between a living God, and a dead Heart? God loaths ſin, Man loves it; God loves holineſs, Man loaths it. How can theſe contrary affections meet together in an amicable Friendſhip? What communion with ſo much diſagreement in affections? In all friendſhip there muſt be ſimilitude of diſpoſition. Juſtification cannot bring us into communion with God, without Regeneration. It may free us from puniſhment, diſcharge our ſins; but not prepare us for a converſe wherein our chief happineſs lies. There muſt be ſome agreement, before there can be a communion. Beaſts and Men agree not in a life of Reaſon; and therefore cannot converſe together. God and Man agree not in a life of Holineſs; and therefore can have no communion together. We are by ſin, alienated from the life of God; and therefore from his fellowſhip *. We muſt have his life reſtored to us, before we can be inſtated in communion with him.

(1.) God can have no pleaſure in it. God took a delight in the Creation, and did rejoice in his work. Sin deſpoil'd God of his reſt. It can give God no content, no ſatisfaction: for to be in the Fleſh, is to be in that Nature which was derived from Adam; which brought the diſpleaſure of God upon all Mankind. Regeneration by the Spirit, reſtores the Creature to ſuch a ſtate, wherein God may take pleaſure in him; and ſtrips him by degrees of that ſin which ſpoil'd his delight in the work of his hands; as it grows, communion is enlarged. God made man at firſt after his own Image, that he might have communion with him. Since the loſs of that, what fitneſs can there be for communion, till the reſtoration of that which God thought fit for his delight? Suppoſe that ſome one work of a natural man, may be good and pleaſing to God, it will not argue a communion of God with the perſon: He may be pleaſed with the work, but not with the man; For all the goodneſs he hath, being in the act, and the act being tranſient, when that is paſt, his goodneſs is as the morning dew, vaniſhed. He cannot be the Object of God's delight, becauſe he hath no habitual goodneſs in him. If a man be abominable, and filthy naturally, he cannot have a converſe with God, without a Nature ſuitable to God, and a Nature ſo animated, as that God may put ſome truſt in it, and not be at uncertainty, Job 15. 14, 15, 16. What is man, that he ſhould be clean; he which is born of a woman, that he ſhould be righteous? Behold, he puts no truſt in his ſaints, &c. No man is clean; but thoſe that delight in ſin, are much more abominable; that drink up iniquity like water. Now God being infinitely holy, can have no communion with that which he doth abominate: And he cannot have a fixed, and a delightful communion with that which he cannot confide in. It muſt be therefore ſuch a Nature as is produced, and preſerved by his own Spirit. If the Heavens are not clean in his ſight, we muſt have a Nature purer and cleaner than the Heavens, before God can delightfully behold us, and pleaſingly converſe with us.

(2.) As God can have no pleaſure in it, ſo man is contrary to it. Man, as he is by corruption, is at variance with God, and cannot but be at variance with him. An uncircumciſed heart, will not love God; or at leaſt, will not pay him ſuch a proportion of love, and love of ſuch a quality, as is due to him. For if the end of the circumciſion of the heart, be to love the Lord with all our hearts, as Deut. 30. 6. And the Lord thy God will circumciſe thy heart, to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart; then it will neceſſarily infer, That he whoſe heart is not circumciſed, doth not love God with all his heart. Holineſs and iniquity, are ſo contrary, that no agreement can be made between them. God muſt deny his Nature, before he can deny his hatred of ſin; and man muſt be ſtript of his Nature, before he can leave his affection to ſin. 'Tis equally impoſſible for wickedneſs to love holineſs, and for purity to love pollution: There can be no fellowſhip with God, whilſt we walk in darkneſs, and he is light *. * 1 John 1.6,7.

(3.) Nay Thirdly, Man naturally reſiſts all means for it. 'Tis the Spirit only which is the band of Union, and conſequently the cauſe of communion: The Spirit can only bring God and us together. Walking in the ſpirit hinders us from fulfilling the luſts of the fleſh, which make us uncapable of communion. Gal. 5. 16. Walk in the ſpirit, and you ſhall not fulfil the luſts of the fleſh. But every man by Nature (as well as the Jews) reſiſts the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 7. 51. And while this reſiſtance of the great medium of it remains, this communion can never be: This reſiſtance therefore muſt be removed, and there muſt be a divine ſtamp and impreſſion upon our very Nature, to make it pliable. You ſee more and more the neceſſity of Regeneration.

7. As there is no communion with God without it, ſo no communications of Chriſt to our ſouls, can be reliſht and improved without it. All the communications of Chriſt, reliſh of that fulneſs of Grace which was in his Perſon; and therefore cannot be reliſht by any principle, but that of the ſame Nature. Whenever Jeſus Chriſt comes to bleſs us with the great bleſſings of his purchaſe, he turns away our hearts from iniquity *. * Acts 3. 26.

is no footing naturally for any divine and ſpiritual Truth. The Nature of the Soil muſt be changed, before this heavenly Plant will thrive. Plants grow not upon ſtones, nor this heavenly Plant in a ſtony heart. The Vine and the Weed draw the ſame moiſture of the Earth, which in the Vine is tranſmuted by the Nature of the Plant, into a nobler ſubſtance than that in the Weed. The new Nature of a good man, turns the juice of the Word into a nobler Spirit in him: And according as the Nature of a good man is inricht with Grace, the more doth he concoct the Word, and improve it, to the bringing forth Fruit, and Fruit of a diviner Nature, than another: The juice it affords to all, is the ſame; but the Nature of the Creature turns it in the concoction. Nature muſt be changed then, to make any profitable improvement of the Word, and other Inſtitutions. A ſtone receives the water upon it, not into it: it falls off, or dries up as ſoon as ever it falls. But a new heart, a heart of Fleſh, ſucks in the dew of the Word, and grows thereby. The new Birth and Nature, makes us ſuck in the milk, and grow thereby *. * 1 Pet. 2. 2.

(2.) There can be no communication of comfort. The Spirit comforts, by exciting Grace, and by diſcovering Grace, not by Flaſhes and Enthuſiaſms. What comfort can there be, when Grace, the foundation, is wanting? Can the Holy Ghoſt ever ſpeak a Lye, and give any man comfort, and tell him he is a child of God, when he hath the Nature of the Devil, ſo contrary to him? This were to witneſs, not with our ſpirits, but againſt the frame and habit of them, which is not the Spirits work *. * Rom. 8. 16.
Jeſus Chriſt will not trifle away his comforts upon ſuch as have no conformity to him. This were to put a Jewel in a Swines Snout, a Crown upon a Beaſts Head. Thoſe that are not Heirs by a new Nature, to Heaven, cannot claim any Title to the firſt Fruits and Cluſters of it, the comforts of the Goſpel. As there is a neceſſity of a likeneſs to Chriſt, to make us capable of communications from him in a ſtate of Glory: ſo it is as certainly neceſſary, to the lower degrees of it in this World. Veſſels of Wrath muſt be changed into Veſſels of Honour, before they are capable of being filled with ſpiritual comforts. Our bleſſed Saviour keeps his choiceſt ſhowers, and richeſt beams, for his dreſt Garden, not for the wild Deſart.

8. We cannot be in covenant without it. This ſhould have been firſt, (as the Foundation of all). Had not Adam had an habitual righteouſneſs in his Nature, he had not been a fit perſon for God to have entred into covenant with. There muſt therefore be a reſtored righteouſneſs, that we may come into the bond of the new Covenant, for eternal life. The very terms of it are, a new heart, a heart of fleſh, a new Spirit, the Law written in the heart. Without this new Nature, we cannot depend on him by Faith, which is the Condition of the Covenant. For we cannot confide in him to whom we have an enmity, and of whom we have a jealouſie. We cannot have God to be our God, unleſs we be his People, have the Nature and Diſpoſition of his People, turn to him, act towards him as our God: whereas in our firſt defection, we made the Devil our God. God requires righteouſneſs ſtill, to our being in Covenant; but diſpenſeth with the ſtrictneſs of the firſt Covenant, and gives our Saviour a power to that end, in committing all Judgment to the Son. As the Covenant is ſpiritual, ſo there muſt be a ſpiritual life, to anſwer the terms of it: Without it, we cannot walk in the way wherein we engage by Covenant to walk. Neither can we have any right to the promiſes and benefits of the Covenant. Doth God promiſe to be our God? 'Tis upon the Condition we be his People. Doth he promiſe never to leave us, nor forſake us? 'Tis upon condition we continue not in our Original Apoſtacy. Doth he promiſe to be preſent with us? 'Tis more than his Holineſs will endure, while we continue in our filthy Nature.

2. The Second General. As Regeneration is neceſſary to a Goſpel-ſtate, ſo it is neceſſary to a ſtate of Glory. It ſeems to be typified by the ſtrength and freſhneſs of the Iſraelites, when they entred into Canaan *. Not a decrepit and infirm perſon, ſet foot in the promiſed land: none of thoſe that came out of Egypt, with an Egyptian Nature, and deſires for the Garlick and Onions thereof, with a ſuffering their old bondage, but dropped their Carcaſſes in the Wilderneſs, only the Two Spies, who had encouraged them againſt the ſeeming difficulties. None that retain only the Old Man, born in the Houſe of Bondage; but only a new regenerate creature, ſhall enter into the Heavenly Canaan. Heaven is the Inheritance of the ſanctified, not of the filthy, Acts 26. 18. That they may receive an inheritance among them which are ſanctified, through faith that is in me. So our Saviour himſelf phraſeth it in his diſcourſe to Paul, upon his converſion by Faith, the great renewing Principle. Upon Adam's expulſion from Paradiſe, a flaming Sword was ſet to ſtop his re-entry into that place of happineſs. As Adam in his forlorn ſtate, could not poſſeſs it, we alſo, by what we have received from Adam, cannot expect a greater privilege than our Root. Had Adam retained the righteouſneſs of his Nature, he had been fit for that place, and that place for him: But poor decrepit Adam could have no leave to enter. The Prieſt under the Law, could not enter into the Sanctuary, till he were purified, nor the People into the Congregation: Neither can any man have acceſs into the Holy of Holies, till that be conſecrated for him by the Blood of Jeſus, and he ſprinkled by the ſame blood for it, Heb. 10. 19, 22. 'Tis by the Blood of Jeſus ſprinkled upon our hearts, that we enter into the Holieſt by a way which he hath conſecrated. For there ſhall in no wiſe enter into it, anything that defileth, neither whatſoever works abomination, or a lie, Rev. 21. 17. as every unclean thing was prohibited entrance into the Temple. Whoſoever ſhall enter into the reſt of God, muſt ceaſe from his own works of darkneſs and corruption, as God did from his works of creation *. If man fell the Sixth day, the day of his Creation, the reſt of God in his lower works was diſturbed by the entrance of ſin upon them, as well as it had been diſturbed by the ſin of the Angels in Heaven. God reſted from his works of Creation, but not in them, but in Chriſt, the Covenant of Redemption, and Reſtauration by him. We muſt therefore ceaſe from our own works, to enter into his reſt. This entrance we cannot have in an unbelieving unregenerate ſtate, becauſe by unbelief we approve not of that for our reſt, wherein God ſetled his own repoſe; and by unregeneracy we oppoſe the great intendment of it, the reſtauration of the creature to be a fit Object for Gods reſt and complacency. 'Tis neceſſary to a ſtate of glory.

(1.) Not that there is a natural connexion between a regenerate ſtate and glory, that in its own Nature gives a right to Heaven: but a gracious connexion by the will of God. Tho it be morally impoſſible in Nature, that a man can have communion with God without a renewed ſtate; yet when he hath a new Nature, it is not abſolutely neceſſary, that God ſhould love him ſo intenſly, as to give him an eternal reward; but conditionally neceſſary, upon the account of the Covenant, wherein God hath ſo promiſed. Tho it be abſolutely unavoidable to God, to love goodneſs (for becauſe he is perfectly good, he cannot hate it), yet it is not abſolutely neceſſary he ſhould inſtate it in ſo unconceivable a glory. A new Nature indeed, makes a man capable of eternal glory, without which it is not poſſible for him to have it: but it it gives him not a right to it, nor inſtates him in it, in its own Nature, but by the gracious indulgence of God. For as I have ſaid before, in the general Foundation of this Doctrine, That God may give grace without glory, is intelligible: but how he can admit a man to glory without grace, is unconceivable. The very having of grace, is a reward in it ſelf. 'Tis an enobling of our Nature, a ſetting us in our right ſtation (the purity of the body is a pleaſure, tho a man hath no hopes upon it, to be preferred to a better condition), which may appear to us, upon the baniſhment of Adam from Paradiſe. Had there been any natural connexion, he had not been diſpoſſeſſed, ſuppoſing him to have Faith infuſed into him at the time of the promulgation of the Promiſe: Or if afterwards, he would have had a re-entry, had there been a natural connexion between a new Nature, and a ſtate of Glory.

(2.) Nor is there any meritorious connexion between a regenerate ſtate, and glory; becauſe there is no exact proportion between a new Nature, and eternal Glory. The Papiſts ſay, That before habitual grace, a man cannot merit: but after it is infuſed by the Spirit of God into the Soul, a merit doth reſult from the dignity of the perſon brought into a ſtate of grace. No ſuch thing. Glory indeed is merited; but the merit reſults, not from the new Nature, but from the new Head, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. That righteouſneſs whereby God is engaged to give us a Crown of glory, for a garland of grace, is not a commutative Juſtice: As if grace were of equal value to glory, and Heaven no more than a due compenſation, 2 Tim. 4. 8. There is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which the Lord, the righteous Judg, ſhall give me at that day. But it is the veracity and faithfulneſs of God, which is meant by Righteouſneſs there, and other where in Scripture. It is a Juſtice due to the Promiſe, not to the nature of the grace; and due to the Covenant made with Chriſt, which was, that he ſhould have a ſeed to ſerve him. Upon which compact, our Saviour ſo peremptorily demands his Peoples being with him in glory, John 17. 24. Father, I will that they alſo whom thou haſt given me, be with me where I am. As much as to ſay, Father, I will not remit a tittle of that Article, which is part of the Covenant between thee and me; I will have that performed to the full. And it is obſervable, tho he mentions their Faith, and their keeping his Word, in other parts of the Chapter, as Arguments for God to take notice of them, and preſerve them; yet his deſire of the ſtate of glory, he founds only upon his will, which muſt be grounded upon ſome antecedent agreement, whereby he had a right to plead for it. So that it is from the faithfulneſs of God to his promiſe, and the full merit of Chriſt; and thereupon his fixt reſolution to have it performed; not from any meritorious dignity in the new Nature it ſelf. Grace only fits for glory, but doth not merit it.

(3). It is neceſſary by a fixt determination of God. Suppoſing that God could in his own Nature, congruouſly admit an unregenerate dead creature, to a fruition of him in Heaven: Yet ſince he hath decreed otherwiſe, and appointed other methods, God is now by his own free reſolution, under an immutable neceſſity not to admit him. As God having by a determinate Counſel, ordained the Death of Chriſt, as the medium to Redemption, could not in our apprehenſions, afterwards appoint another way, becauſe his counſel had pitched, not only upon the Redemption of man, as the end, but the Death of Chriſt as the means: And had there been a change, it muſt either be in the end, or in the means. If in the end, and he would not have man redeemed, there had been an alteration in his love and kindneſs. If in the means, it muſt be either a worſe, or a better means: if a worſe, and not ſo fit to effect Redemption, it had ſtill implied a change in his kindneſs. If a better means, it would argue a defect of Wiſdom in his firſt choice, that he did not foreſee the beſt. By the like counſel and wiſdom, he hath ſetled this of Regeneration, as the way to glory: Without holineſs, no man ſhall ſee the Lord *. Without a fixed, and permanent holineſs, which muſt be an holineſs of Nature, not only of action. Suppoſing any holineſs in an action, without a new Nature, 'tis yet but a tranſient holineſs; and tho it may make the action acceptable to God, yet it can never make the perſon that did it, acceptable to him.

* Heb. 12. 14.

(4.) Regeneration is neceſſary in a way of aptitude and fitneſs for this ſtate. A fitneſs in both Subjects is neceſſary to the enjoyment of one another. Since therefore fore our happineſs conſiſts in an eternal fruition of God; and that naturally we are a Maſs and Dunghill of putrified corruption; there muſt be ſuch a change, as to make an agreement with that God, whom to enjoy is our happineſs. For all aptitude is a certain connexion of the Two Terms, whereby they may touch, and receive each other. We cannot enjoy God in his Ordinances, without an holy Nature, much leſs in Heaven. As we are under the condemnation of the Law, by reaſon of our guilt; ſo we are under an unfitneſs for Heaven, by reaſon of our filth. We have a remote natural capacity for it, as we are creatures endued with rational Faculties. But we have a moral unfitneſs, while we want a divine impreſſion to make us ſuitable to it. Juſtification and Adoption, give us a right to the inheritance; but Regeneration gives us a meetneſs to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light *. We are not meet for it, while we are unholy, and while we are darkneſs, becauſe it is an inheritance of Saints, and an inheritance in light. As the body cannot be made glorious, without a reſurrection from a natural death; ſo neither can the ſoul, which is immortal, be made glorious, without a reſurrection from a ſpiritual death. Our corruptible bodies cannot poſſeſs an incorruptible Kingdom, unleſs made like to the glorious body of Chriſt; much leſs our ſouls, which are the chief Subjects of communion with him in Heaven. A depraved ſoul is as much unfit for a purified Heaven, as a corruptible body is for an incorruptible glory. Our Saviour aſcended not into Heaven, to take poſſeſſion of his glory, till after his reſurrection from death; neither can we enter into Heaven, till a reſurrection from ſin. As Jeſus Chriſt became like unto us, that he might be a merciful and faithful high Prieſt for us, Heb. 2. 17. It behoved him to be made like unto his brethren; ſo it behoves us to be made like unto him, that we may be fit Offerings in the hand of our high Prieſt, to preſent to God, for him to take pleaſure in. The Father of the Prodigal, forgave him at the firſt meeting, after his return: but before he admitted him into the pleaſure of his houſe, he took away his garments that ſmelt of draff, and put other Robes upon him. God is ſaid therefore, to work us to this thing, that we may be fit to be clothed upon with our Heavenly Houſe *. If God be happy in his Nature, man cannot be happy in a Nature contrary to him. For we can never expect to enjoy a felicity in ſuch a Nature, which if God himſelf had, he could never be happy in himſelf. 'Tis holineſs in God, which fits him to fill Heaven and Earth with the beams of his glory: And it is an holy Nature in us, which makes us fit to receive him. As without holineſs, God could not be glorious in himſelf, Iſa. 6. 3. Holy, holy, is the Lord of hoſts; the whole earth is full of his glory; ſo without holineſs in our Natures, we could not be glorious with God. We are no more fit for Heaven in a ſtate of Nature, than a piece of putrified fleſh is fit to become a Star. In Heaven there are duties to be done, and priviledges to be enjoyed. The work cannot be done, the reward cannot be received, without a new Nature. The glorifying God, and enjoying him, is the glory of Heaven. How can we do the one, or receive the other, without the change of our affections? Can God have a voluntary glory from his enemy? or can his enemy delight in the enjoyment of him?

(1.) Regeneration, and the new Nature, is neceſſary to the duty of Heaven. Eternity cannot free us from duty. Some duties are eſſential to the relation of a creature: Some reſult only from this or that ſtate of the creature. The alteration in the ſtate, changeth the duty proper to that ſtate: but no place, no ſtate, can exempt a creature from thoſe duties which are eſſential to him as a creature. 'Tis impoſſible to conceive any relation, without ſome new debt, or ſervice. From every change in relations in the World, there doth ariſe ſome new duty, which was not incumbent upon a man before. The relation which a regenerate man hath to God here, is the ſame which it is in Heaven: but it is manifeſt there in an higher degree, and a choicer fruition. Thence therefore will ariſe, tho not any new duty that we can conceive; yet freſher obligations to thoſe ſervices which are proper for that place. Without a change of Nature, it is not poſſible for any man (were he admitted thither) to perform the duties of Heaven. Holy work is troubleſome to a natural man here: and the more heavenly it was in it ſelf, the more diſguſtful to corrupt Nature. What was in a little meaſure holy, was a drudgery upon Earth: and what is in a greater meaſure holy, cannot be a ſatisfaction in Heaven to an old frame. There are ſome natural motives to ſome duties here; and our indigency takes part with them (as in that of prayer): but thoſe of a more elevated ſtrain, as love, and praiſe, and admirations of God, our Natures are more averſe to. What duty can be performed without a will? 'Tis concluded by moſt, That the happineſs of Heaven conſiſts as much, if not more, in the frame of the Will, than in that of the Underſtanding. If the Will be not new framed, what capacity is there to perform the ſervice requiſite to that happy ſtate? We muſt firſt be made juſt here, before we can be made perfect above, Heb. 12.23. Spirits of juſt men made perfect. Juſt by an imputed righteouſneſs, holy by an inherent righteouſneſs, before they were tranſplanted to a ſtate of perfection. Without a perfect frame, none can perform the choice duties of Heaven: and without righteouſneſs here, we cannot be made perfect there.

Queſt. What are the duties of Heaven, that cannot be performed without a new Nature?

Anſ. 1. Attendance on God. Some kind of ſervice which we cannot underſtand, in the ſtate here below. The Angels ſtand before God, and wait his commands; there is a pleaſure of God which they do, Pſal. 103. 21. Ye miniſters of his that do his pleaſure. There is a will of God done in heaven, as well as upon earth: There are acts of adoration performed by them; They cover their faces *: They are commanded to worſhip the Lord Chriſt ||. Their holineſs fits them for their attendance; therefore called the holy Angels. 'Tis againſt the Nature of Devils to perform ſuch acts as thoſe, which the holineſs of Angels fits them for. Glorified ſouls ſhall be as the Angels of God in Heaven, Matth. 22. 30. But are as the angels of God in heaven. Equal to Angels in their ſtate, as they are Angels in Heaven: Equal to Angels in their work, as they are Angels of God, attending on God, and miniſtring unto him *; tho what that Miniſtry ſhall be, is not eaſily known in the extent of it. Is it uſual in this World, to take up a perſon from under an Hedg, and bring him to an immediate attendance on a Prince, without cleanſing him, and begetting other diſpoſitions and behaviour in him, by ſome choice Education? God picks ſome out for an immediate attendance on him in Heaven; but he ſends his Spirit to be their Tutor, to breed them up, and grace their deformed ſouls with beautiful Features, and their ulcerous and cancerous Spirits, with a ſound Complexion, that they may be meet to ſtand before him. When God calls any to do him ſervice in a particular ſtation in the Word, he gives them another heart; So he did to Saul for the Kingdom *. Is there not much more neceſſity of it for an immediate ſervice of God in Heaven? A Malefactor, by pardon, is in a capacity to come into the preſence of a Prince, and ſerve him at his Table: But he is not in a fitneſs, till his noiſome Garments, full of his Priſon-Vermine, be taken off. Can one that is neither pardoned nor purified; one with the guilt of Rebellion upon him, and a Nature of Rebellion in him, be fit to ſtand before God?

(2.) Contemplation of God, is a work in Heaven. There ſhall be a perfect knowledg; therefore a delightful ſpeculation. The Angels behold his face *, and that always. The Saints ſhall ſee him as he is ||. 'Tis not a ſtupid ſight, but a gazing upon the Face of this Sun, with a refined, and raviſhing delight. For this work, there muſt be,

(1.) A change of Judgment. The eye muſt be reſtored. 'Tis as poſſible for a blind eye to behold the Sun, or a blear eye, to ſtare in the face of it, without watering, as for a blind underſtanding to behold God. For it is not a being in the place of Heaven, but having a Faculty diſpoſed, which doth elevate us to the knowledg of him. Things that are corporeal, cannot know things that are ſpiritual. We cannot in this ſenſitive body, view the Face of an Angel, and underſtand his Nature; much leſs with a body of a total death, ſee the Face of God, which is above all created beings, more than any ſpiritual creature is above ſenſe. In Heaven the Saints ſhall know him, as they are known of him *, perfectly, as far as the capacity of a creature can extend: Has God any ſcales upon his eyes? Doth he not know perfectly what he knows? So ſhall the glorified Saints. But if a natural man were admitted into Heaven, what proſpect could he have with a blind underſtanding? As men under the Goſpel-adminiſtrations, cannot ſee the Kingdom of

* 1 Cor. 13. 12.

God,

God, even in the midſt of it, without a new birth; ſo neither could they ſee the Kingdom of God in the midſt of Heaven it ſelf, without a new frame: if not ſee it, much leſs enjoy it.

(2.) There muſt be a change of Will. Men like not to retain God in their knowledg, when he is repreſented to them in the dark, yet pleaſant glaſs of Nature, Rom. 1. 28. The Apoſtle there ſpeaks it of the Heathens, and the wiſeſt of them, their Philoſophers, who tho pleaſed with the contemplation of Nature, yet were not pleaſed with the contemplation of God in Nature: much leſs will they like him, when he diſcovers himſelf clothed with the light of holineſs as a garment: That vicious eye, which is too weak to behold, with any delight, the image of the Sun in a Glaſs, or a Pail of Water, will be much more too weak, to gaze upon it in its brightneſs in the Firmament. If there be no delight to know God here, what pleaſure, what fitneſs can there be in the ſame frame, to contemplate him above? Let me ask you; Have you any pleaſure in the ſtudy of God? What is the reaſon then, that in your retirements, when you have nothing to do, your thoughts are no more upon him? What is the reaſon, that if any motion doth offer to adviſe you to fix your thoughts upon him, you ſo ſoon ſhift it off, as a troubleſome companion, and ſome ſlight jolly thought is admitted with gladneſs into thoſe embraces which the other courted? Can ſuch a Temper be fit for Heaven, where nothing but thoughts of God run through the Veins of glorified ſouls? If the diſcovery of God's glory in the Goſpel, is accounted no better than folly by natural men; and therefore not received *; the manifeſtation of it above, would meet with no better valuation of it, unleſs the Temper both of Judgment and Will were changed: They are ſpiritually to be diſcerned here, and no leſs ſpiritually to be diſcerned above. The weak and wateriſh eye muſt be cured by ſome powerful Medicine, before it can ſtare upon the light of the Sun, or delight it ſelf in its glory.

* 1 Cor. 2. 14.

(3.) Love is a duty in Heaven. Love is a grace that ſhoots the gulf with us, and attends us not only to the Suburbs, but into the very heart of Heaven, when other graces conduct us only to the gates, and then take their leaves of us, as having no buſineſs there. Charity never faileth *. And indeed, 'tis ſo eſſentially our duty in every place, that it is concluded, that God cannot free us from the Obligation of it, whilſt we remain his creatures; becauſe God being infinitely good, and therefore infinitely amiable, and infinitely gracious to them, it would ſeem unrighteous, and inconſiſtent with ſupream goodneſs, to forbid the creature an affection to that which is infinitely excellent, and a gratitude to its Benefactor, which can be paid only in love. Now tho we are bound to love God in the higheſt degree, yet every new mercy adds a freſh Obligation to return our affection to him. So when we ſhall have the cleareſt beams of God's love, darting upon us from Heaven, we ſhall alſo have higher Obligations to love him, both for his excellency, which ſhall be more viſible; and his love, which ſhall be more ſenſible. Now can the heart of a natural man cling about God? Can it forget its Fathers houſe, and be wholly taken up with the Creator's excellency? Can he that loved pleaſures more than God * in the World, love God more than pleaſures in Heaven, without an alteration of his ſoul? No: The heart muſt be firſt circumciſed by God, before we can love God with all our heart *. If we will not be ſubject to the Law of God here, how can we be ſubject to the Love of God, which is the Law of Heaven? How can we cleave to God without love, or reliſh him without delight? No man in a natural Eſtate, could ſtay in Heaven, becauſe he doth not love the perſon, whoſe preſence only makes it Heaven. How can there be a conformity to God in affection, without a conformity to his Holineſs? A choiceneſs of love, with a perverſeneſs of will; a ſupremacy of delight, without a rectitude of heart; a love of God, without a loathing of Sin; a fervency of love, with a violence of luſt: all theſe are contradictions. He that hath a hatred of God, cannot perform the main duty of Heaven; and therefore what ſhould he do there?

* 1 Cor. 13. 8.

* 2 Tim. 3. 4.

* Deut. 30. 6.

(4.) Praiſe is a ſervice in Heaven. If a pure Angel be not ſufficient for ſo elevated a duty, how unfit then is a droſſy ſoul? What is the Angels Note, Holy, holy, holy Lord God *, can never be a natural man's: For how can he poſſibly praiſe

* Iſa. 6. 3.

Praiſe that which he hates? What is the note of glorified Saints? 'Tis Allelujah, Rev. 19. 1. Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power unto the Lord our God: And again they ſaid, Allelujah, ver. 3. Allelujah, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth, ver. 6. Nothing but Allelujah four times, ver. 1, 3, 4, 6. How can that heart frame an Allelujah, that is ſtuft with Jealouſies of him? How can he exalt the Honour of God, who was always pleaſed with the violations of it? How can he rejoice at the Lord's reigning, that would not have One luſt ſubdued by his power? How can a natural man, as natural, ever be wound up to a height, fit for ſuch ſtrains, ſince out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaks? The Tongue can never be framed to praiſe, while the heart is evil. Our bleſſed Saviour muſt be glorified in us, before he can be glorified by us*. If a man in a meer natural ſtate, be unfit for this heavenly Work, how unfit are then their Tongues to ſound his praiſe, which are always filled with reproaches of God? And how can their ears endure to hear it from others, which were never offended with the blaſphemies of him? They could never rejoice in this heavenly conſort, were they admitted. Nay, their enmity to the Work, would not permit their ſtay. The ſmoke of pure Incenſe, is fitter, rather to drive a Swine out of the Room, than to invite his continuance.

* 2 Theſ. 1. 10, 12.

2. The new birth is neceſſary, as to the duty, ſo to the reward of Heaven. As the reward is exceeding glorious the preparation thereto, muſt be exceeding gracious. The rewards of Heaven are ſomething incorporated with us, inlaid in the very frame of our ſouls, and cannot be conceived enjoyable, without a change in the nature of the Subject. Man was firſt formed, before he was brought into the garden of Eden, or pleaſure*: There he put the man whom he had formed. Man muſt be new-formed, before he be brought into that place, which is the Antitype of Eden, the place of eternal and ſpiritual pleaſure. A natural man can no more reliſh the rewards of Heaven, than a dead carcaſs can eſteem a Crown, and a Purple Robe: or be delighted with the true pleaſure of Heaven, than a Swine that loves to wallow in the Mire, can be delighted with a bed of Roſes. A diſorder in Nature, is a prohibition to all happineſs belonging to that Nature. A diſtempered body, under the fury of a Diſeaſe, can find no delight in the pleaſures of the healthful. A wicked man, with a troubled and foaming Sea of ſin, and luſt in his mind *, would find no more reſt in Heaven, than a man, with his diſ-joynted Members upon a Rack, can in the beauty of a Picture. We muſt be ſpiritually minded, before we can have either *life or peace. Righteouſneſs in the ſoul, is the neceſſary qualification for the peace and joy in the Kingdom of God, Rom. 14. 17. The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the Holy ghoſt. While Malice remains in the Devil's Nature, were he admitted into Heaven, he would receive a torment inſtead of a content. A wicked man would meet with Hell in the midſt of Heaven, as long as he carries his own Rack within him, boiling and raging luſts in his heart, which can receive no contentment, without Objects ſuitable to them, let the place be what it will. Heaven indeed, is not only a Place, but a Nature; and it is a contradiction to think that any can be happy with a Nature contrary to the very Eſſence of happineſs.

* Gen. 2. 8.

* Iſa. 57. 20.

* Rom. 8. 6.

The Pleaſure and Reward of Heaven is,

(1.) A perfect likeneſs to God and Chriſt. This is the great priviledg of Heaven, which the Apoſtle, in the midſt of his ignorance of other Particulars, reſolves upon as certain, as that which reſults from Regeneration, and being the Sons of God, and is the full preparation for the beatifick Viſion, 1 John 3: 2. Now we are the ſons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be; but we know, that when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him, for we ſhall ſee him as he is. He ſeems to intimate this, that we can never be like him when he doth appear, unleſs we be now, while we are here, the Sons of God; nor ever be admitted to a ſight of him. As Chriſt preſented himſelf without ſpot to God, when he laid the Foundation of our Redemption; ſo he preſents his People without blemiſh to God, when he lays on the top-ſtone of it in our glorification *. Now as we cannot be like to Chriſt in our walk here, without a new Birth; neither can we without it, be like to Chriſt in glory hereafter. 'Tis not the place makes us like to

* Eph. 5. 27.

God, but there muſt be a likeneſs to God, to make the place pleaſant to us. When once the Angels had corrupted their Nature, the ſhort ſtay they made in Heaven after, did neither pleaſe them, nor reform them. And when Satan appeared before God, among the Angels *, neither God's preſence, nor his ſpeaking to him did any wiſe better him. He came a Devil, and he went away ſo, without any pleaſure in the place, or preſence, but by the permiſſion of God to wreak his malice on holy Job. An unlikeneſs to God, is the miſery of the creature. 'Tis therefore impoſſible, whileſt the ſoul remains in that ſtate, that it can arrive at bleſſedneſs, becauſe it is a contradiction, to think a felicity can be enjoyed in a contrariety to, and ſeparation from the Fountain of it, Pſal. 73. 27. Lo, they that are far from thee, ſhall periſh. 'Tis by Faith, beholding the glory of the Lord in the glaſs of the Goſpel here, that we muſt be transformed into his Image, before we can be changed into his glory *. And we cannot be like God by holy actions only, tho we had performed as many of them, as all the holy men in the World ever did, as to the matter of them, abſtracted from the Principle and End: and the Reaſon is, becauſe God is not only holy in his Actions, but holy in his Nature; and therefore we muſt not only have actions materially good, but a holy Nature ſuitable to the holineſs of God; otherwiſe we neither are, nor never can be like him.

* Job 1. 6.

* 2 Cor. 4. 18.

(2.) The fruition of God is a priviledg of Heaven, which neceſſarily follows this likeneſs. God is the eternal portion of glorified ſouls, upon which they live. He is the ſtrength of their hearts: There is none but God in Heaven is the chief Object of their love and delight. The preſence of God makes the fulneſs of joy, Pſal. 16. 11. His favour, and the light of his glorious countenance, conſtitutes Heaven and Happineſs; not the place, but the countenance. God's frown kindles Hell, and his ſmile renders any place an Heaven. Now an old Nature cannot have a good look from God: For ſince he is infinitely holy, he muſt hate unholineſs; infinitely true, he muſt hate falſity. As it is impoſſible a man can love truth and falſity, righteouſneſs and unrighteouſneſs, as ſuch, at one and the ſame time, in an intenſe degree; Therefore an impure Nature cannot be happy, unleſs God be mutable. God cannot ſmile on the old Adam, unleſs he hate himſelf. What ſatisfaction can ſuch an one poſſibly have in God's preſence? How can he favour the ſociety of God, that never loved it? Do we naturally love any warm mention of God? Have we not a ſtony deadneſs to any heavenly motion that falls upon us? A mighty quickneſs to receive ſinful motions in that which we love. Do not our countenances fall, and our delight take wings to it ſelf, and fly away, at any lively appearance of God? If we have ſuch an enmity to his Law, which is but a tranſcript of his Holineſs, much greater muſt our enmity be to the Original Copy. Hence in Scripture men are ſaid to refuſe his law, Pſal. 78. 10. to forſake his law, Pſal. 119. 53. to be far from his law, Pſal. 119. 150. Darkneſs doth not more naturally vaniſh at the appearance of the Sun, than an old Nature will fly from the glory and brightneſs of God. A maſs of black darkneſs, and an immenſe ſphear of light, may as ſoon be eſpouſed together, as a friendly amity be ſtruck up between God and an unrenewed man. God is light without darkneſs, 1 John 1. 5. Man is darkneſs it ſelf, as if nothing elſe entered into the compoſition of his corrupt Nature, Eph. 5. 8. If there be therefore a diſagreement, contrariety, and unwillingneſs on both ſides, how can any pleaſing correſpondence be effected? If God ſhould bring a man, with his corrupt Nature, into local Heaven, God could not pleaſe himſelf in it, nor ſuch an one delight himſelf in God, no more than a Swine can be pleaſed with the preſence of an Angel, or a Mole ſport it ſelf with the beauty of Flowers, or a vitiated eye rejoyce at the brightneſs of light. We muſt really make God ſuch an one as we ſhape him in our natural fancy, and like to us, before we can take any pleaſure in converſe with him. Our Nature therefore muſt be changed, before we can pleaſe him, or be ſatisfied in him. His preſence elſe will cauſe fear, while our ſinful ſtate remains, an affection inconſiſtent with happineſs.

Pſal. 73. 25, 26.

3. The Company of the Saints is an adjunct of that happineſs in Heaven. A ſitting down with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of Heaven, in a feſtival converſe, verſe, is a part of that felicity: The coming to be with an innumerable company of Angels, with the general Aſſembly, and Church of the firſt-born, is not the leaſt thing in the compoſition of this happineſs *. What joy is that man capable of, which ſhould be ſurrounded with company he hath the greateſt diſaffection to, where he could not meet with any one perſon, without the holy quality he hath an antipathy againſt? A natural man never loved holineſs, as holineſs here. The more beautiful the Image of God was in any, the more burdenſome was their company. The more degrees any good man wanted of perfection in righteouſneſs, the more tolerable was a familiarity with him. If holineſs in others, in a lower degree, were diſ-affected by you, how can you bear the perfection of it? If the mixt and dark goodneſs in renewed men, which was but a weak flaſh of the glory of Heaven, were unwelcome, how will you be able to endure the luſtre of it? Again, glorified Saints could not have the leaſt converſe with ſuch an one. If carnal Nature were a trouble to them here, when they had many Reliques of corruption, much more muſt it be above, if they were admitted into that place of glory, becauſe the more holy any creature is, the more it hates that which is contrary to that holineſs: The more ſetled we are in any thing, the more we loath that which is oppoſite to it: All the folly in their hearts here, which was the Principle of any Agreement between the one and the other, is done away, and the diſagreeing Principle perfected in the bleſſed. There muſt therefore be a change in them, to take pleaſure in you; or a change in you, to take pleaſure in them. They muſt return to the frame of old Adam, and put off the renewed Image of God, before they can delight in you; or you muſt come up to the frame of the new Adam, and be new created after the ſame Image, before you can delight in them. The truth is, ſuppoſing a man admitted into the heavenly place, with an old Nature, he could not continue there. For the Saints muſt either leave Heaven, or he muſt. Light and darkneſs cannot agree: What makes the one happy, cannot beatifie the other. Saints ſhall not leave it, becauſe 'tis their Inheritance; it was prepared for them, and they for it: A natural man muſt, becauſe it was never prepared for him, nor he fitted for it.

* Heb. 12. 22, 23.

4. Spiritual delights unconceivable are in that ſtate: Which without a new and heavenly Nature, it is impoſſible to reliſh. In the light of God, they ſee light, and they drink of the rivers of God's pleaſures, and are ſatisfied with the fatneſs of his houſe *. Now is it a fleſhly fatneſs? Are the pleaſures of God carnal or ſpiritual? What is God's pleaſure, ſhall be the pleaſure of glorified ſouls. How can the ſordid old Temper be fit for ſpiritual delights? Fleſh can never ſavour but the things of the fleſh: Another palate is neceſſary to reliſh the things of the Spirit, Rom. 8. 5. They that are after the fleſh, do mind the things of the fleſh; but they that are after the ſpirit, the things of the ſpirit. There muſt be a transformation by the renewing of the mind, Rom. 12. 2. which is the palate of the ſoul, before we can know what the will of God is, or taſte what the pleaſures of God are. Without it, we can no more reliſh the pleaſures of God, than we can know his will. All ſatisfaction doth not reſult from the intrinſick excellency of the Object, or the beauty of a place, or a power in any thing to affect us; but from a Faculty rightly diſpoſed to the Object, and a congruity and agreement between that and the underſtanding, and between that and the will. Brutes cannot be delighted with intellectual pleaſures, becauſe they want a Faculty; nor Fools, becauſe they want a right diſpoſition of that Faculty. Purity of heart only gives us a reliſh of the purity of pleaſure, Tit. 1. 15. To the pure, all things are pure; but unto them that are defiled, and unbelieving, is nothing pure. An ill humour on the palate, tinctures the meat, and imbitters that which was ſweet in it ſelf. It muſt be freed from that vitious juice, before it can reliſh the ſweetneſs of Food. Natural men, becauſe of the impurity of their Natures, ſavour not thoſe ſpiritual delights, which the Word, and Prayer, and other holy duties afford in themſelves. What fitneſs then is there in this ſtate, for the delights of Heaven, which are as much ſuperior to thoſe delights in duties, as the Sun doth ſurmount a Star in brightneſs? The beſt unregenerate man is ſunk in ſenſe, ſwallowed up in ſenſe: And what ſuitableneſs can there be between a ſpiritual delight, and a ſenſual frame?

* Pſal. 36. 8, 9.

True pleaſures, and contrary deſires, can never abide together. A carnal man hath no apprehenſions of ſpiritual delights, but by the meaſures of animal pleaſures. And if there be no conception of them in the underſtanding, what motion to them can there be in the will, or what fitneſs for them in the affection? Without a new Nature, a new Frame, we are no more able to underſtand, or enjoy the pleaſures of Heaven, than a Bat is to take pleaſure in a Mathematician's Lines, or a Philoſopher's Books. 'Tis not conceiveable how God can make any man happy againſt his will, becauſe all pleaſure conſiſts in the agreeableneſs of the Will to the Object. The whole Scheme of Heaven muſt be changed, to make ſuch men happy, that have not Tempers ſuited to its preſent ſtate. The bright Hangings of Heaven muſt be taken down, and others put in their place, to pleaſe a vitious Nature.

USE. If Regeneration be abſolutely neceſſary to a Goſpel-ſtate, and the enjoyment of eternal glory in Heaven; then it informs us,

1. How much the Nature of man is depraved. For otherwiſe there were no need of his being born again: And no reaſon could be imagined, why our bleſſed Saviour ſhould ſo preſſingly urge the neceſſity of it. If man's Nature were according to his Original frame, it would pleaſe God, becauſe it was of his own Creation. But we are fleſh by our natural birth; and therefore to be happy, we muſt be ſpiritual by a ſecond birth. 'Tis not a new mending, a new repairing, and patching, but a new birth. We are by ſin as diſtant from God, and Grace, as death from life, as nothing from being. 'Tis not a death in appearance, but a certain death. God foretold it to Adam, Gen. 2. 17. But of the tree of the knowledg of good and evil, thou ſhalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die *. I ſuppoſe there is nothing here of a corporal death meant (as I have ſaid before); but a death of his Integrity, and righteous Nature, upon this act of diſobedience: And the reaſon is, becauſe a temporal death did not enſue preſently. And God uſes to be punctual, when he fixed a time to any threatning, as here he did, in the day, at that very time thou ſhalt die. Had it been meant of a temporal death, he had died at that inſtant. When God threatned Pharaoh, To morrow ſuch and ſuch a plague ſhall come, it was certainly ſo: The deſtruction of Nineveh in Forty days, had been too, had they not repented. When he promiſed any mercy, or deliverance at ſuch a time, it was certainly performed: The very day, at the end of the time appointed, the Iſraelites came out of Egypt *. And tho God threatned Hezekiah with death, and bids him ſet his houſe in order, yet he fixed no time, Iſa. 38. 1. Beſides, a temporal death was not neceſſary to his puniſhment: God might have flung both body and ſoul away together into Hell. Beſides, a temporal death, or death of the body, was fixt after the promiſe of the ſeed *, as a puniſhment ſuperadded upon his ſin, as well as the reſt, of his eating his bread in the ſweat of his brows, and the pain of Womens Conception and Travail, which were to put him in mind of his ſin in his redeemed ſtate. Therefore I queſtion whether a temporal death, or an obnoxiouſneſs to it, were at all meant there; but a ſpiritual death, the death of his righteous Nature. 'Tis a certain death, a mighty depravation, a loſs of a noble frame, a beautiful rectitude. How may we cry, as the Prophet in another caſe, Iſa. 14. 12. How art thou fallen from heaven, oh Lucifer, ſon of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground! How is our beauty not only defaced, but changed into deformity! How dreadfully are we fallen, not only to lame our ſelves, but dead our ſelves, that we cannot riſe again, as a man fallen may! We are ſo unconceivably changed from what we were, that we cannot be recovered without a new make, without a new birth. Oh that we had a true and ſenſible proſpect of this! Give me leave to ſay, That tho the Fall be the cauſe of all our miſery, yet the true conſideration and ſenſe of it, is the firſt ſtep to all our happineſs. And we cannot take ſo full a view of it, in the extent of the Nature of it, as in the conſideration of this Doctrine, viz. The neceſſity of Regeneration.

* Exod. 12. 41.

* Gen. 3. 12.

2. If Regeneration be ſo neceſſary, then how much to be lamented is the ignorance of this Doctrine in the world? And ſtrange and ſad it is, that it ſhould be ſo little conſidered. The common talk is, of ſerving God, and reforming the life; life; but who of a thouſand, ſpeaks of the neceſſity of a new Nature? 'Tis a ſad caſe, that when a Doctrine is ſo clear, men ſhould be ſo ſtupid, and deludingly damn themſelves; that they ſhould be ſo ſottiſhly ignorant of this, who have Bibles in their hands and houſes; yet not underſtand this, which is the great purpoſe for which God even ſent the Scripture among the ſons of men. 'Tis a ſhame not to have the knowledg of this great and neceſſary truth. As the Apoſtle in another caſe, 1*Cor.* 15. 24. Some have not the knowledg of God: I ſpeak it to your ſhame. How ſtrange and uncouth doth this Doctrine ſound in the ears of the carnal World, which wonder at it, as Nicodemus did at our Saviour's propoſal; and think all our diſcourſes of it, an heap of Enthuſiaſtick Non-ſenſe? 'Tis as if we ſhould ſpeak Parables; as if you ſhould talk of Aſtronomy to the natural Fool, or read Divinity in Arabick to a man who underſtands only his native Language. How little ſenſible is the World, of the neceſſity of this work? They expect Chriſt ſhould change their miſery into glory, without changing their hearts, and fitting their Spirits for it, which will never be. They think it enough for them, that Chriſt was conceived in the Womb of the Virgin, without being formed again in their ſouls; as the poor Jews at this day expect a Meſſiah, not to alter the frame of their Souls, but the frame of the World; not to ſubdue their ſpirits, but to conquer the Nations to be their Vaſſals. How ſhould this ſtupidity of men, be a matter of lamentation to us!

3. If Regeneration be ſo abſolutely neceſſary, how ſhould Chriſtian Parents endeavour all they can, to have their children regenerate? There is no neceſſity they ſhould have great Eſtates, and live bravely in the World: but there is a neceſſity, a great neceſſity, they ſhould be new creatures, and live ſpiritually. In leaving the one to your children, you leave them but Earth; in leaving the other, you convey Heaven to them. There is an obligation upon you; their old polluted Nature was derived from you by carnal generation; make them amends, by endeavouring to derive grace to them by ſpiritual inſtruction: You made them Children of Wrath; why will you not endeavour to make them Children of God, and Heirs of Heaven. Education of it ſelf will not produce this noble work; nor the bare hearing of the Word, or any outward means whatſoever, by their own ſtrength; yet the Spirit doth often bleſs them, and very much; and I doubt not but a great number that are regenerate, had the firſt ſeeds ſown in them by a religious Education; and I have made the obſervation in many: Timothy had a religious Education, both by his Mother and Grandmother, tho this did not renew him; for Paul, by the preaching of the Goſpel, was the inſtrument of that: He calls him his own ſon in the faith * : Yet no queſtion, his religious inſtructions from his Parents, did much facilitate this work. Uſe all endeavour therefore, to convince them of the neceſſity of a new birth: be earneſt with them, till you ſee it produced, that they may not curſe you for being the inſtruments of their beings, but bleſs you for being the inſtruments of their ſpiritual life.

4. This Doctrine acquaints us with the inſufficiency of every thing elſe without this, to enable us to enter into the Kingdom of God.

(1.) Great knowledg is not ſufficient. Natural knowledg is not. All the Wiſdom of Solomon in a man, tho it may enable him to take an exact meaſure of Nature from the higheſt ſtar, to the meaneſt inſect, doth no more fit him for Heaven, than the ſtone in the head of a Toad expels his venomous Nature. We have more Relicks of Adam's Nature in knowledg, than we have in righteouſneſs. To be a Philoſopher, Phyſician, or States-man, is not eſſential to happineſs in this World; much leſs can it prepare a man for the happineſs of another. But grace is as eſſential to it, as natural heat, and radical moiſture, are to the life of a man. Jeſus Chriſt came not to make us Scholars in Naturals, but to endue us with ſuch a knowledg, as is in order to eternal happineſs; and with ſuch a renewing principle, as might make us capable of Heaven. Knowledg and Wiſdom are ſome of the choiceſt Flowers in Natures Garden: But it will be a ſmall advantage, to deſcend to Hell with our brains full of Wit and Sophiſtry. One ſaving cry from a new-born-Infant-ſoul, is of more value, than the knowledg of all Philoſophers. Spiritual knowledg is not; that is, the knowledg of ſpiritual Doctrines, the knowledg of Scripture it ſelf. Nicodemus had a good ſtock of this; he underſtood ſtood the letter of the Scripture; was well read in all the parts of the Law; he was thought fit to be one of the great Sanhedrim: Something elſe was requiſite beſides this; a new birth was ſtill wanting. What if we underſtood the mind of the Spirit of God in every Verſe in the Bible; were able to diſcourſe profoundly of the great Myſteries of the Goſpel; had the gift of Prophecy, and knowledg of things to come; had the interpretation of the whole Book of the Revelation writ in our minds; what will all this avail us? An Evangelical Head, will be but drier Fuel for eternal burning, without an Evangelical impreſſion upon the heart, and the badg of a new Nature. Men may propheſie in Chriſt's Name; in his Name caſt Devils out of bodies, and Devils of error out of mens brains; yet not be regarded by Chriſt: but he ſays to them, I never knew you: depart from me ye that work iniquity *. If they had had this mark, and Goſpel-impreſſion, our Lord would have known them. Chriſt in Heaven would have owned himſelf formed in the heart: He could not have been ignorant of his own Nature and Off-ſpring.

* Mat. 7. 22, 23.

Well then: A man may have all the learning of Chriſtians and Heathens ſtored up in his head, and not the leaſt ſtamp of it in his heart. He may be wiſe in knowledg, and a fool in improvement. A heap and pack of knowledg, is not wiſdom among men, without an application of that knowledg to particular exigencies and uſefulneſs.

(2.) Outward Reformation is not ſufficient. Regeneration is never without Reformation of life: But this may be without that: We may be outward Chriſtians, without an inward principle, tho we can never be inward Chriſtians, without an outward holineſs.. The new birth is properly an internal work, and ſhows it ſelf externally; as the heat of the heart, and vital parts, will evidence it ſelf in outward motions: The kings daughter is all glorious within, as well as without, Pſal. 45. 13. What a Vanity would it be, to boaſt of Freedom from other Diſeaſes, if thou haſt the Plague upon thee? What a poor comfort is it, to brag of thy being without groſs immoralities, whileſt the plague of thy Nature remains uncured? Outward Reformation only (tho of excellent uſe), is but a new appearance, not a new creature; a change of life, not of the heart: Whereas this work we diſcourſe of, is a new birth in the underſtanding and will; it begins at the Spirit, and deſcends from thence to the body, 1 Theſ. 5. 23. 'Tis a ſanctification in Spirit, Soul, and then Body. Can that which can be no evidence to us in ſelf-examination, be of it ſelf ſufficient to waft us to Heaven? If you retire to take a view of your ſelves, whether you belong to God, will you judg by your outward Actions, or inward Frame? There is no Characteriſtical difference in any external Action, between a true Chriſtian, and an Hypocrite: That therefore which is not a ſufficient Evidence to us, of a right to happineſs, cannot be a ſufficient preparation of our ſelves for it.

This Reformation may proceed either,

(1.) From force and fear. Such a Reformation is from impediments, not from inclination. The cutting a Bird's Wings, takes not away its propenſity to fly, but its ability. The cutting the Claws of a Lion, or pulling out his Teeth, changes not his Lioniſh Nature. Fear reſtrained Herod from putting John to death, when his will was inclin'd to the act *. Fear may pare the Nails of ſin; Grace only can hinder the growth, and take away its life. This doth but only ſtop the ſtreams, not choak the Fountain.

* Mat. 14. 5.

Or (2.) From ſenſe of outward intereſt. It may be a rational abſtinence from thoſe ſordid pleaſures, which debaſe a man's Eſteem, and prey upon his Reputation; and in the mean time, his inward Luſts may triumph, while outward appearances are ſtopt. Such a ſplendid life may conſiſt with thoſe inward Vermine, more contrary to the pure Nature of God, and as inconſiſtent with a man's happineſs. The River which ran in open view, may ſink, and run as fiercely through ſubterranean Caverns. Men may caſt out One groſs Devil, to make way for Seven more ſpiritual ones. The intereſt which reſtrains outward acts, will not reſtrain inward luſts.

Well then: an outward Reformation, without an inward Grace, can no more rectifie Nature, than an abſtinence from Luxury, can cure a Diſeaſe a man hath con-contracted through Intemperance, without ſome other Phyſick to pluck up the root of the Diſtemper. Outward applications of Salves and Oyntments, will do little good in a Fever, unleſs the ſpring of the Diſeaſe be altered, and a new craſis wrought in the Blood. All outward acts are but bodily exerciſe, which profit little *. Outward Reformation doth but ſweeten the converſation, but doth not purge the man: He only is a Veſſel unto Honour, who hath purged himſelf from theſe things, 2 Tim. 2. 21. If a man therefore purge himſelf from thoſe, he ſhall be a veſſel unto honour. Outward Reformation only, 'tis a cleanſing of our life, but not our ſelves. Self-Nature muſt be purged.

* 1 Tim. 4. 8.

(3.) Morality is not ſufficient. By Morality, I mean, not only an outward Reformation, but ſome love to moral Vertue, as the Heathens had, raiſed upon the thoughts of the excellency of it. Nicodemus was a moral man: He had ſome affection to Chriſt, upon the conſideration of his Miracles; he had never elſe ventured to come to him, ſo much as by night. He had no blot upon his Converſation; he had deſires to be inſtructed. This was more than a bare abſtinence from ſin; yet notwithſtanding, beſides thoſe moral qualifications, he muſt have a new birth, before he can ſee the Kingdom of God. Men may do much good, be very uſeful to others in their Generation, yet be in the very bottom of unregeneracy. An healing Witch, as well as a hurting one, is the Devil's Client, and in covenant with him *. There is not ſo great a difference between the higheſt degree of Glory in Heaven, and the loweſt degree of Grace on Earth, as there is between the loweſt degree of ſaving Grace, and the higheſt degree of natural Excellency, becauſe the difference between theſe is ſpecifical, as between a rational and irrational creature; the difference between the other, is only in degree, as between an infant and a man. 'Tis one thing to have a love to moral Vertue, another thing to have a love to God in it; one thing to move for ſelf, and another thing to move for the glory of the Creator; one thing to be animated by Reaſon, and another thing to be inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt. What can a moral honeſty profit that man, who values the World's dung above the Creator's glory? What tho he be honeſt, and uſeful to his Neighbours, muſt his affection to God be meaſured by his honeſty among men? The great buſineſs is from what principle it flows. What if he doth good to others, whileſt he doth his Creator wrong, by foſtering any one thing in his heart above him? Can his goodneſs to others, make a compenſation for his diſeſteem of God? The braveſt man in the whole World, who hath no other deſcent than from Adam, muſt have a new quality put into his heart, before he can be happy: For if a new birth be neceſſary, all endowments below it, are to no purpoſe for the attainment of that ſtate for which it is intended. Whatſoever is of the old Adam in us, tho it be a beautiful Flower, muſt wither and die, 1 Pet. 1. 23, 24. For all fleſh is as graſs, and the glory of man, as the flower of graſs; the graſs withers, and the flower thereof fadeth away. The Apoſtle ſets in oppoſition, the incorruptible Seed, whereby they were born, and the fairer Flowers in Natures Garden. The beſt thing which a man glories in, is a Flower, but withering: 'Tis a glory, but the glory of the fleſh: It hath no luſtre in the ſight of God: 'Tis not a Flower to be ſet in Heaven: 'Tis only the Word of God, and the impreſſions made on us by that Word, which endure for ever. As Herbs cannot grow without partaking of the natural influence, and beams of the Sun, ſo nothing ſtands and flouriſhes, but what partakes of the Nature and Spirit of Chriſt. Nay, it is ſo far from being ſufficient, that it is a great hinderance of Regeneration, without the over-powering Grace of God, becauſe it is the glory of a man; that is, that wherein a man glories. Men are apt to reſt upon their Morals, without reflecting upon their Naturals. They ſee no ſpots in their lives; and therefore will not believe there are any in their hearts. They are ſo taken up with the Phariſee, their proud thoughts of their being above others; that they never think how much they have inwardly of the Publican, in coming ſhort of the glory of God. Unregenerate Morality therefore is not ſufficient. The heart muſt be changed, before moral Vertues can commence Graces. When this is once done, what were Moral before, become Divine, as having a new principle to quicken them, and a new end to direct them.

* Burrough's Moſes choice, p. 711.

tion conclude, that this only is the import of all those Scriptures which speak of being born of God, raised from a death in sin, quickned and led by the Spirit, created in Righteousness and true Holiness? are not these things in the very manner of speaking them, elevated above any meer profession, which may be declared to the world without any such work, which is the evident intendment of those Scriptures? 'Tis not the naming the name of Christ, but the departing from iniquity; a departing from it in our nature, as well as in our actions, that is the badg whereby the Lord knows who are his, 2 Tim. 2. 19. The Lord knows who are his: and let every one that names the name of Christ, depart from iniquity. Religious profession only is but a Form, a Figure, a Shape of Godliness: A Picture made by Art, without Life, and Power, and an enlivened Faculty, and a Divine Principle whence it should proceed; 'tis but a name of Life at best under a state of death, Rev. 3. 1. Thou hast a name, that thou livest, and art dead. Professions without a new nature, are no more the things God requires of us, than Sacrifices under the Law, without a Broken Heart: 'Tis not a following our Saviour in Profession, but in Regeneration, which gives the Apostles a Title to that promise of sitting upon his Throne in Glory, Mat. 19. 28. Ye that have followed me in Regeneration, ye shall sit upon Twelve Thrones, judging the Twelve Tribes of Israel. Judas had followed Christ till that time, and after, in a Profession, but not in the Regeneration, not from a Regenerated Principle.

5. Multitudes of External Religious Duties and Priviledges, are not sufficient. Men are very apt to place their security here: It was the great labour of the Prophet Isaiah, to bring the Jews in his time off from them: God doth not require attendance on ordinances, as the ultimate end, but as means to the beginning and promoting a New Birth, Isa. 11. 16. To what purpose is the multitude of your Sacrifices to me? Wash ye, make ye clean. The resting in these, is the manifest destruction of mens souls, when thousands of Sacrifices to God, cannot be acceptable without a new nature. We naturally affect an easy Religion, and outward acts of Worship, especially under the Gospel, have no great difficulty in them. Men would rather be at great expence of sacrificing, than crucifie one beloved sin; and cringe a Thousand times before the Cross of Christ, than nail one corruption to it: How easie a work were it, to get to Heaven, if nothing else were required but to be a member of the Christian Visible Church? Circumcision was a priviledg, but it availed nothing without a new Creature. There was another Circumcision made without hands, the work of God, that was required; A new Creature, without which, Outward Circumcision signified nothing. The Practise of some Duties may stand with an inward hatred of them, as the abstinence from some sins may stand with an inward love to them. Outward Worship is but a Carkass, when the Soul is not conform'd to God, the Object of Worship, and doth not attain an Union to, and Communion with God, which is the end of Worship. what are all acts of Worship without a nature suitable to the God we approach unto in them? Judge not therefore of your state, by any external actions; No outward act, but unregenerated persons may do, yea, they may express much zeal in them; They may have their bodies as Martyrs consumed by flames, without having their Corruption consumed by Grace; a stinking breath may make as good Musick to the ear in a Pipe, as a sound one: There is something more necessary than a bare performance of Duties.

*Col. 2. 11.

(6.) Nay more, Convictions are not sufficient. Nicodemus was startled by our Saviours Miracles, believes him to be a Prophet sent by God, acknowledgeth that God was with him*, yet still the necessary qualification of a new birth was wanting. Your spirits may be torn in pieces by terror, the heart of stone may be rent asunder, and yet no heart of flesh appear; the ground may be plowed, yet not sown: Sensuality and Lust may be kept under by a Spirit of Bondage, when it is not cast out by a Spirit of Adoption: The Sun may scorch you, and not enliven you: The knowledg of the foulness of sin, and the fierceness of wrath, is the work of the Spirit in the Law; The New Birth is the Work of the Spirit in the Gospel; the Stone may be cut and hewed by the Law, and yet never polisht by the Gospel, never brought into Covenant, Hos. 6. 5, 7. I have hewed them by my Prophets, but they like men have transgrest the Covenant. 'Tis not then great Knowledg, ledg, fair coloured Fruit, Oil in the Lamp of Life, Loud Profeſſions, Glittering Services, or Tearing Convictions, which are this Badg, whereby Chriſt knows his own from all the world beſides; all theſe will be anſwered, I know you not: Is it not then a worthy work, and high time to get that new nature, whereby God will know thee to belong to him? Profeſſions may be falſe, outward Reformation may be but as a Painted Sepulcher: Knowledg only elevates the Underſtanding; but as our Communion lies in the Acts of the Will, there muſt be ſome work upon that to fit us for our great Happineſs. If theſe things are not ſufficient, then Profane men cannot expect Heaven by the Way of Hell.

USE 2. If Regeneration be ſo abſolutely neceſſary to Salvation; How miſerable is the condition of every unregenerate man! What a miſerable caſe is it, that ſinners ſhould dream on in their deluſions, till everlaſting burnings confute their Fancies, and turn their Hopes into dreadful deſpair? Oh, how do moſt men live, as if this Doctrine were a mere falſity; and act as if they would take Heaven by the violence of their Luſts, not by the Induſtry of Grace? Know you not that an unrighteous nature ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God? 1 Cor. 6, 9. Know you not that the unrighteous ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God? be not deceived, &c. Is it poſſible you ſhould be ignorant of that which ſtares you in the Face, in every Page in the Bible? if you know not this, you know nothing. Be not deceived: Nothing is ſo natural as heart-deceit, and preſumptuous confidence; the Apoſtle elſe would not have ſpoken of it, with ſuch an Emphaſis, but that he knew how apt men are to delude themſelves with hopes of Mercy in a State of Sin. Self-flattery is one of the ſtrongeſt branches, which grows upon the Pride of Nature. How vain is it to fancy to your ſelves a fitneſs for Heaven, while there are only preparations for Hell? Whence ſhould ſuch imaginations ariſe? Not from God; 'tis contrary to all his profeſt declarations; Is it from your ſelves? What Reaſon have you to believe your Fancies in Spiritual things, who are ſo often miſtaken in Temporal? Is it from the Devil? What Reaſon have you to believe your greateſt Enemy? If this Work be wrought, he hath for ever loſt you: 'Tis he that cheriſhes ſuch notions, for he hath no pleaſure to undo his Kingdom, and loſe his Subjects. Never did any man uſe ſo much diligence to get a new Nature, as the Devil doth to hinder him.

Will you ſeriouſly conſider,

(1.) 'Tis highly irrational to expect ſecurity and glory in an unregenerate ſtate. Is it for us to ſeparate thoſe things, which God hath joined, fleſh and deſtruction, a New Birth and a Kingdom? that which doth naturally tend to Hell, can never conduct us to Heaven: Can the Old Nature, which frames a fit ſubject for eternal vengeance, ever faſhion it to be a Veſſel of Eternal Glory? There is as great a tendency in the Old Nature to Hell, as there is of a Stone, or Lead, to the Earth. If men may be ſaved in their Unregeneracy.

(1.) God muſt be falſe to himſelf. Falſe he muſt be to his Truth, falſe to his Holineſs, falſe to his Son, falſe to the whole Tenor of the Goſpel. God muſt change the Covenant of Grace, blot out all his Threatnings in Scripture, give the lie to all his declarations in the word, proclaim himſelf unwiſe in all his adminiſtrations, if ever ſuch a man be happy; and is it not a damnable conceit, and a provoking wiſh, to deſire, that God ſhould bely himſelf, to befriend us? There muſt be a New Goſpel, before any can be ſaved without a New Nature; this cannot be: Muſt God change his Law, or we our Luſts? God hath ſetled and declared a decree, that none that are not born again, ſhall enter into the Kingdom of God; his Decree ſtands irreverſible, the change muſt neceſſarily therefore be on our ſide.

(2.) As far as I can underſtand, God muſt put himſelf out of Heaven, before that ſuch a man can come thither: There can be no pleaſure on either ſide with unſuitableneſs: If God be abſent from Heaven, as to his glorious preſence, how can there be happineſs? He loves his own Righteouſneſs better than to endure ſuch mens preſence; and they love their unrighteouſneſs ſo much as not to bear his. No man cares for coming into a place, which is poſſeſſed by one that he hates; they can have no pleaſue to be in a Heaven with God, who were delighted to be *in a world without him.

* Eph. 2. 12.

(3.) Jeſus Chriſt muſt be a liar, and the Goſpel falſe, if ever there be a Heaven enjoyed by an old nature. He hath aſſerted it, that is truth it ſelf; and is it not a madneſs to imagine a poſſibility of coming thither in ſpight of him? You may upon better grounds hope to be crowned Monarch of the whole World to morrow, than to enter into Heaven without being born again. Chriſt values his Truth, tho he did not his life, above our Souls, and his Word will ſtand firm againſt all preſumptuous confidence whatſoever.

(4.) Suppoſe God ſhould reverſe his Goſpel, (which cannot be) and declare another, I cannot ſee how the caſe would be mended; For what Goſpel can God frame with a ſalvo to his own Honour, without the creatures being righteous, to enjoy the benefit of it? Muſt God conform himſelf to the will of our luſts? Muſt he caſt his Holineſs into the depths of the Sea? Muſt he paint himſelf black to agree with our hue? As the Negroes picture him of their own colour: In a Word, muſt God ceaſe to be God, that you may ceaſe to be miſerable? To deſire happineſs without a New Nature, ſhows a contempt of God, ſince it is to deſire it on terms on which it is diſhonourable for God to give it.

Well then: This Doctrine is ſo certainly true, that if an Angel from Heaven ſhould declare the contrary, he ought not to be believed, Gal. 1. 8. Let him be accurſed, that is, he would be more a Devil than an Angel, and it would be an accurſed Doctrine: He muſt found his Doctrine upon another Goſpel, and a Goſpel printed in Hell, but impoſſible to have an Imprimatur from Heaven. Is it poſſible then for any man, after ſuch an aſſertion of our Saviour, to live under the hearing of the Chriſtian Doctrine, and fancy a Heavenly Glory belonging to him without a Heavenly Nature?

(2.) As it is highly irrational, ſo it is highly ſinful, to lie in an unrenewed ſtate. To continue in it after the declaration of Gods Holineſs, in ſo eminent a manner, in the death of his Son, is a high approbation of unrighteouſneſs, and a contempt of his Infinite Purity; for ſince he hath ſhown himſelf a hater of ſin, and the old nature of Adam in the death of the Redeemer, more than he could any other way; the foſtering the Old Nature in us, is a valuing that which God hath manifeſted his hatred of, and a ſlighting all the expreſſions of his love. It draws a greater guilt upon our perſons, than Adam did by his fall upon our natures, Joh. 15. 22. If I had not come and ſpoken to them, they had not had ſin. If I had not told them thoſe things, and preached Heavenly Doctrine to them, their ſin had been as it were a petty lareeny in compariſon of what it is now, a Treaſon againſt my Fathers Crown and Dignity, but now they have hated me and my Father.

(3.) Hence it follows, that ſuch a mans condition muſt be exceeding miſerable. Thoſe that have a part in the firſt reſurrection, on them it is ſaid the ſecond death ſhall have no power, Rev. 20. 6. Whether he means the reſurrection of Chriſt, or the ſpiritual reſurrection of the ſoul; The ſecond death then ſhall have power over them that have no part in the firſt Reſurrection.

(1.) Such are peculiarly miſerable. Such a man had better have been any other Creature, a Toad, a Serpent, a Beetle, liable to be trod to death by the next comer, than have been a man, and live and die with a Serpentine Nature, and without renewing Grace, would be glad one day to change ſtates with them; and it had been better to have been born in the darkeſt part of America than in England; and better to have lived in the blindeſt corner in England than in London, where he hath heard ſo much, and ſo often of the neceſſity of the New Birth, and yet cheriſhed an Old Nature: 'Tis an aſtoniſhing madneſs this; better never to have been born a man, than not be a real Chriſtian, which he cannot be without this New Birth, this neceſſary Regeneration; better never to have entred by the Door of Baptiſm into the Chriſtian ſociety, than not have a nature anſwerable to the Baptiſmal intendment. There is not the meaneſt beggar that creeps in the ſtreet, the moſt ulcerous Lazarus that lies at a door, but if renewed, is infinitely happier than any one unrenewed can be with all worldly felicity.

(2.) Such are unavoidably miſerable. The Mercy of God can never make you happy againſt his truth, the Righteouſneſs of God can never do it without the neceſſary qualification. Is it juſt with God to give his worſt enemies the ſame reward of glory with his choiceſt Friends? To thoſe that never endeavoured to reform reform their lives according to the methods of the Goſpel, as to thoſe who have had the Holy Image of his Son drawn and wrought in their hearts; in 2 Tim. 4. 8. He is ſaid to be a righteous Judg, which could not be, if he gave the ſame rewards to both the contrary qualifications. The Devil may as ſoon be ſaved as any man without a New Birth: Tho there be enough written againſt the Salvation of Devils, yet there is more written in the Book of God againſt the Salvation of men living and dying in an unregenerate ſtate, than againſt the Salvation of Devils. Do they expect to ſee the Kingdom of God without it? Why, that form on which you ſit, that duſt under your feet, far cleaner than our ſelves by Nature, are fitter to be brought into that place of glory; the Holineſs of God can better endure them than an unrenewed man; he pronounced their kind good at the Creation; but never was an unrenewed nature pronounc'd good by God. You can no more ſhun an eternal miſery without it, than you can a temporal death with it; you can no more fly from Hell than from your ſelves. Our Bleſſed Saviour, the Redeemer of the world, will know none for admiſſion into happineſs, without his badg upon them, Mat. 7. 23. I never knew you: You had nothing in you worthy my knowledg and affection: Where is the Evangelical impreſſion upon your ſoul? will be the only Queſtion then askt.

Well then; I wiſh every unregenerate man would put the queſtion to his ſoul, Can I dwell with everlaſting burnings? Can I with a chearful ſecurity meet the Wrath of God in its march againſt me? Is eternal darkneſs a delightful ſtate? Is an eternal ſeparation from the Bleſſed God to be deſired? Is a preſent ſenſual life to be preferred before a joyful Eternity? Is there any one Scripture in the whole Book of God can give me comfort in this ſtate? What then doſt thou, Oh my ſoul, ſpend thy thoughts about, ſince there is nothing to procure thy felicity, but this New Birth?

USE 3. Is of Comfort. Is it ſo, that without Regeneration there is no ſalvation? Then how great is the comfort of that perſon, who hath attained this neceſſary thing? What a foundation is here for the compoſition of new Songs for Spiritual exultings? what a diffuſion may there be of pleaſure through the whole ſoul? That little Regenerating principle within you is more neceſſary than the Wiſdom of Solomon, the Power of Nebuchadnezzar, the Glory of Ahaſuerus, the reaching heads of the moſt knowing men in the world, and ſhall make you happy, when others in their unrenewed wiſdom, and unſanctified wealth, ſhall deſcend to deſtruction.

1. The leaſt true Grace hath comfort from hence. Except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the Kingdom of God; therefore if he be born again, he ſhall ſee it: Our Saviour doth not ſay, except a man hath been born ſo long, arriv'd to ſuch a ſtature, but ſimply born again; it lies upon the eſſence, not upon the degree: A Child that cries the firſt minute it is born, is in a ſtate of life, as well as a Man in the Prime of his Strength: A Child hath the Nature of a Man, tho attended with ſome ſtrong diſeaſe and great infirmities; tho every true Chriſtian hath not the ſame growth, yet he hath the ſame birth, the ſame renewing Spirit. If a man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature; the Apoſtle doth not ſay, he is a ſtrong creature, or a tall creature. St. John reckons Three different States of Chriſtians*; Children, Young Men, and Fathers, and all in a ſtate of the Knowledg of God. * 1 Joh. 2. 13, 14.

2. Here is Comfort in the ignorance of the time of the New Birth. Except a man be born again, not except he know the time of his being born again; the want of the knowledg of the time hath troubled ſome; but 'tis no matter for the time, if we find the eſſential properties; our happineſs is ſecured by the eſſence, not by the circumſtance. 'Tis the Glory of thoſe that were born in Sion, that they were *born there, tho the time of their birth were not exactly known by them: Many may tell the firſt preparations to it, the firſt ſtrong conviction, the firſt time they found their hearts affected; this is more eaſy, than to tell the very time when ſpiritual life was infus'd, any more than to tell the punctual time when the Child was quickned in the Womb; this is no more known, than that particular minute, when this or that addition was made to our ſtature and growth, tho the growth it ſelf be diſcernable. * Pſal. 87. 5.

3. Such are New Born to the enjoyment of God in glory. If none ſhall ſee God without without it, then thoſe ſhall certainly ſee God who have it; 'tis for the undefiled inheritance, that God did firſt beget you, 1 Pet. 1. 3. He hath begotten us to a lively hope, to an inheritance undefiled, incorruptible, that fadeth not away, reſerved in Heaven for you: Had not God intended you for an everlaſting converſe with himſelf, he would not have taken ſuch pains, but have let you lain in your blood, and run down the ſtream of Nature into the Ocean of a miſerable Eternity, with the common Maſs of the World. What comfort will this be, when you ſee the old houſe of your bodies, full of gaps, ready to fall, that your reborn ſouls are ready to take poſſeſſion of their eternal inheritance? Paul was one of the higheſt rank in Chriſtianity, both in grace and office, yet the Crown of Righteouſneſs was not only laid up for him, and to be given to him, but to all that *love the appearing of Chriſt, that is, to all thoſe that from the Principles of the New Nature, aſpire to that perfection, which ſhall be at the appearance of Chriſt: There is as certain a tendency by the ordination of God of a renewed ſoul to Heaven, as of flame into the air. Grace and glory are in Nature the ſame thing as a ſeed and a plant.

* 2 Tim. 4. 8.

4. 'Tis Comfort upon this account, If New-born to Heaven, then to all things which may further your paſſage thither, and aſſiſt you in it. To God as your God and King to protect you, as your Father to cheriſh you; to the promiſes as your promiſes, as aſſurances and deeds for Heaven; to a Sanctification of all ſtates for a furtherance of you in your travel to, and fitneſs for this Kingdom; to a ſight of God in his Ordinances, and in his Providences; he will not deny a beam here in his inſtitutions to thoſe, for whom he reſerves his full face hereafter; to a fellowſhip with God in duties of Worſhip, as a foretaſte of a perpetual Communion with him; to an improvement of all graces; to the perfecteſt dreſs at laſt of all beautiful grace, which may compleatly fit you for an everlaſting ſight of God in Heaven.

USE 4. If without the New Birth there's no entring into Heaven; Then it ſtands you upon to clear up your Evidences for the New Birth. If the exiſtence of it be neceſſary for our felicity, the knowledg of it is neceſſary for our comfort: This is the great diſtinguiſhing Evangelical ſign; without an inward Principle of Life, we have not reached the intendment of the Goſpel, Joh. 6. 63. The words of Chriſt are ſpirit and life. Joh. 10. 10. I am come that you might have life: He hath no intereſt in the Goſpel that hath not this in his heart: Every man in Chriſt muſt be a New Creature.

To encourage you in this Work, Conſider,

1. 'Tis by this you muſt know your Juſtification. Juſtification is our Bleſſedneſs, Rom. 4. 8. Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute ſin; And this is the way to know our bleſſedneſs; forgiveneſs of ſin precedes the inheritance, and both this and that are received only by the ſanctified through faith in Chriſt, Act. 26. 18. That they may receive forgiveneſs of ſin, and inheritance among them which are ſanctified by faith which is in me. The alteration of our frame is notius, more diſcernable to us, than that of our relative ſtates; the new Creature diſpoſitions diſcover what relation we ſtand in to God: This is a certain truth, he that doth not find the draught of Gods image in him, hath no reaſon to conclude he hath any ſaving intereſt in the propitiatory ſacrifice of the Redeemer: As the Blood and Water were not ſeparated in their effuſion upon the Croſs, neither are they in their application to the ſoul; water to renew us, and blood to juſtifie us; The Waſhing of Regeneration evidenceth our being juſtified by grace *; The Apoſtle infers the one from the other.

* Tit. 3. 5, 7.

2. Therefore by the knowledg of this only you can gain comfort. The great Deſire is, Oh that I were aſſured. Let it be your great buſineſs to clear up the New Birth. 'Tis the Office of the Spirit, not only to comfort but renew, and to comfort by renewing: The hope of eternal life is founded upon the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, as well as on Juſtification by Grace *: The ſpirit as a comforter is to guide into all truth ||, into that truth which is ſanctifying *: The Property of the Spirit is to guide us into ſanctifying truth, and ſanctifie us by that truth; the Spirit doth witneſs with our Spirits, that we are the Children of God; its witneſs is by ſomething within us, not without us: There muſt be ſomething in our hearts as a foundation of this teſtimony; what witneſs can there be in an Old Nature? Look after therefore thoſe eſſential properties of the New Nature: Chriſt preached Duty and Comfort together; his firſt Sermon, Mat. 5. is made up of both. The clear evidence of a New Life ſeated in the Center of the Soul, will be a ſurer Teſtimony of out Right to, and fitneſs for glory, than if an Angel from Heaven ſhould aſſure us in the name of God, that we are ſome of his heirs; The Teſtimony of an Angel, is but that of a Creature, lower than the Verbal teſtimony of the Son of God. The evidences of the beginnings of glory, by the Operations of Grace, and a Godlike Nature, are more uncontrolable, than the higheſt aſſurances all the Angels in Heaven can give us. Clear up this therefore. There are many counterfeits; men may take morality, outward Reformation, heaps of Religious Duties, to be this work, but theſe are all inſufficient, and men without good examination may cheat themſelves, and take Copper for Gold, and Tin for Silver; There is a natural or moral integrity, and an Evangelical integrity: The natural integrity God owns in Abimelech, Gen. 20. 6. Yea, I know that thou didſt this in the integrity of thy heart: He was King of the place where Abraham thought there was no fear of God, v. 12. And it is likely there was not: God puts none of them upon prayer for themſelves, but Abraham upon praying for them.

Then ask your ſelves theſe Two or Three Queſtions.

(1.) How ſtand your hearts to God, and Sin? Is there a Byas in the Will, which doth naturally carry it to God? What Light is there in your minds? What Flexibleneſs and Tenderneſs in the Will and Conſcience? What Spritelineſs in your affections to the Things of God? What readineſs to meet him in his motions to you? What cloſing with Chriſt? Are there ſtrong cries, ſtrugling, wreſtling, Jacob-like prayers? A new born Babe not to cry; a Child not to call to his Father and follow him and preſs to him! it is inconſiſtent with ſuch a Nature, ſince it is the firſt fruit of the Spirit of Adoption received by us, to cauſe us to cry Abba Father*. How ſtand your hearts to ſin? are there deep humiliations for it, utter deteſtation of it? are your affections dead to the fleſh and the world, and alive and quick to the things of God? Rom. 8. 10. The body is dead becauſe of ſin, and the ſpirit is life becauſe of righteouſneſs. What humbling of inward pride, what ſtriving againſt inward ſins, what loathing of inward corruptions? * Rom. 8. 15.

(2.) What delight have you in Spiritual Duties? Do your ſouls ſpring up in a Service? Are your hearts in Heaven, before the words are out of your mouth? what is agreable to Nature, is not burdenſome. Spiritual ſervices are as pleaſant to a New Nature, as ſin is to an old, as ſweet wines and delicious food is to a gluttonous diſpoſition, Pſal. 119. 103. How ſweet are thy words unto my taſte, yea ſweeter than hony to my mouth! Hony, one of the ſtaple excellencies of Canaan, which is deſcribed to be a land flowing with Milk and Hony. Doth your delight in the Law of God ſpring up from the inner man? There is a delight in doing ſome things of the Law (The Gentiles did by Nature the things contained in the Law*,) by a moral Nature, not a new Nature; if by Nature, they had then a delight in them, and it was as all delight is, inward in the ſoul and heart; no doubt but many of them had pleaſure in their morality; that is not the meaning of the Apoſtle; but he doth diſtinguiſh his delights from theirs by the Object of it, and by the Subject or Spring of it. It was the Law of God, as it was the Law of God, that he did delight in; and it was not only an inward delight, but a delight ariſing from an inner Nature, a man diſtinct from that man compoſed of ſoul and body; it did ariſe from a ſpirit poſſeſſed with nobler principles and higher ends. * Rom. 8. 22.

Well then: Is it your meat and drink to do his Will? Has the Glory of God been dearer to you than the deareſt worldly concerns you have? Are your converſes with him very delightful to you? Do the thoughts of God, and delights in him, frequently return upon you? What bears the moſt grateful reliſh in your ſouls, holy thoughts and duties, or ſinful and fooliſh Vanities?

(3.) How do you live? Have you another life, by the faith of the Son of God *? Another faith beſide the common faith, not reſting in aſſent, but working by love *: Do you live to your ſelves? That is proper to a ſtate of Nature. Or do you live to God? that is proper to a ſtate of Grace, Gal. 2. 19. I am dead to the law, that I might live unto God. Is there a cloſing with Chriſt not only as your Saviour, but as the * Gal. 2. 20. ‖ Gal. 5. 6. * Cor. 2. 5. 17.

the principle and end of your lives? Is there a living the life of God, the life of Chriſt? Can Chriſt be formed in the heart, and there be nothing of the qualities of Chriſt, nothing of the ſpirit of Chriſt? Is Chriſt formed in the heart, a hard, low, dead, cold, dark, liveleſs Chriſt? This frame is a quite contrary thing to Chriſt. If we are born of the Will of God, we are born to anſwer the Will of God. Is it the Will of God, that we ſhould be looſe in our hearts, and vain in our lives? That is the Will of the Fleſh, not the Will of God. According as our hearts are, ſo is our birth; ſin or Grace muſt have dominion in the ſoul; they cannot live amicably together; a man cannot be a ſinner and a Saint with the ſame will, cannot equally love Holineſs and iniquity; we may as well ſay, that a man may be in Heaven and Hell at the ſame time; Not but that a renewed man may in a ſudden fit do a thing againſt his Nature, as Moſes, one of a mild diſpoſition, was tranſported with a ſtrain of paſſion againſt his Nature. If ſin reigns in the heart, tho it doth not in outward acts: If we yield our ſelves ſervants, to obey it in the luſts thereof, tho not in the outward fruit of thoſe luſts; this New-Creature principle was never ſetled in the heart, Rom. 6. 12. Let not ſin reign therefore in your mortal body, that you ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof, neither yield ye your members as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin. He makes a manifeſt difference between the inward luſt obeyed, and the outward commiſſion of it in the members, and places the reign of ſin in one as well as the other; and v. 16. concludes them in a ſtate of Nature or a ſtate of Grace, according as they yield themſelves ſervants to this or that. A regenerate practical Atheiſt, is juſt as true as to ſay a regenerate Devil.

(1.) Be diligent obſervers therefore of what ſolid alterations you find in your ſpirits, What motions, ſtarts, principles, ends you can perceive there; And if you find you have this excellent and neceſſary New Birth, admire Gods Grace in you, that he ſhould paſs by ſo many thouſands in the world, and renew you; that he ſhould leave many ſoaking in their ſins, and ſwimming to deſtruction in their Old Nature, and beſtow this heavenly plant upon your ſouls: And prize it too. Aquinas hath an excellent Saying: The good of one Grace is greater than the good of all Nature; which words Cajetan commends as fit to be writ upon our minds, and conſtantly reviewed by us, to raiſe our admirations of God and his Grace.

I ſpeak now but little of theſe things, becauſe the next Diſcourſe will lead me to ſpeak more of them.

(2.) Seek it. If it be neceſſary to be had, 'tis neceſſary to be ſought. We are all at this preſent before God in an Old or New Nature; and if we die in the Nature we have received from Old Adam, without another from the New, 'tis as certain that every one of us ſhall be excluded out of the Kingdom of God, as it is certain we live and breath in the places where we ſtand or ſit. We are born of the earth, we muſt be born from heaven; we muſt have a ſpiritual as well as an animal life. Oh that every man and woman had the ſame thoughts of the neceſſity of it, as they have who are paſt hope in hell of ever attaining it. Riches are not neceſſary, Honours are not neceſſary; this is of abſolute neceſſity; were you like Solomon in all his Glory, you could not have the priviledg of entring into Gods Kingdom without a New Nature; but a New Nature without the Glory of Solomon, nay without a rag to your backs, will admit you: If thoſe that are already renewed muſt be every day putting off the old and putting on the new man *, Eph. 4. 22. 24. How much more need have you, who have not dropt one ſcale, or ſweat out one ſpirit of the Old man, nor have a grain of the new man in you? As Original Corruption ſtood up in the place of Original Righteouſneſs: ſo a gracious Regenerate Frame, muſt riſe up in the place of Original Corruption; for God will never befriend corrupt Nature ſo much as to give a happineſs to that which he hates. Men do not chuſe Weeds, but Flowers to plant in their delightful Gardens. God indeed doth chuſe weeds, but they are turned into the Nature of Flowers before he tranſplants them to Glory: We muſt have a Wedding-Garment, to fit us for his Feaſt; and Oil in our Veſſels, to prepare us for his Nuptials.

Burgeſs.

Seek it, For,

(1.) 'Tis an indiſpenſable Duty. God hath reſolved, that only the pure in heart ſhall ſee God *. 'Tis a duty incumbent on us to love God; ſince we are bound to love God, we are bound to love whatſoever hath any relation to him. Therefore fore we muſt love our ſelves, not with a ſordid carnal love, but as we are the image of God: Hence we are bound to do what we can to brighten and clear this image, and reſtore it to its primitive perfection in our ſouls. We are anſwerable to God for the preſenting this image of God in the ſame ſtate wherein it was, when he conferred it upon Adam, and upon us in his loins. Since the Redeemer hath undertaken to reſtore it, 'tis our duty to ſeek to this Redeemer for the Reſtauration of it, for he came that we might have life *: A vital principle in us to fit us for eternal life; and to have it more abundantly, in a more glorious and fixed manner than Adam had. * John 10.16.

(2.) Seek it, For ſomething of this nature, or equivalent to it, ſeems neceſſary to all rational and intellectual creatures. The firſt nature of man was ſown in mutability, and there was a neceſſity of ſomething equivalent to this Regeneration, to fix and eſtabliſh his nature: as the confirmation of Angels under the Head Chriſt is in ſome ſort a Regeneration of them; for it is an alteration of their ſtate, from mutable to immutable, not by nature, for ſo God only is immutable, but by grace, Eph. 1. 10. He hath gathered together in one all things in Chriſt. There is need now of it to change our nature, and afterwards to fix us in it. Moſt think that Adam, had he ſtood ſome time, had been confirmed in the ſtate of innocency, and advanced to a more excellent ſtate than that of Paradiſe, which would have been an alteration of his ſtate: If then an alteration of ſtate was neceſſary for the fixing his happineſs; an alteration of ſtate is much more neceſſary for us for regaining the happineſs we fell from.

(3.) Seek it, Becauſe in not ſeeking it, you act againſt your own reaſon and natural experience. You have by the light of Nature, improved by the light of the Goſpel, ſo much knowledg as to perceive that you are not as God firſt made you; you cannot but acknowledg it impoſſible, that ſo filthy and diſorderly a piece can come out of his hands; that there is ſomething wanting to you. And are thoſe reliques of Nature left only to ſhew us our indigence, and not alſo to ſpur us on to ſeek a remedy? Melanchon ſaith, I have ſeen many Epicures who being in ſome grief for their ſins, have argued, How can I expect to be received by God, when I find not a new light, and new virtues infuſed into me? When you are ſtilled after the rage of carnal affections, or glut of pleaſures, and you do in ſilence turn in upon your ſelves, and make enquiry after your future ſtate, if your conſciences do not lie and flatter, will they not tell you to your faces, that you are men of death prepared againſt the day of ſlaughter? Beſides, will not every man confeſs in his moſt raiſed retirements, that he cannot find any real ſatisfaction in things below? and are there not ſometimes ſome natural aſpirings to ſomething above theſe? Do not all men one time or other enquire, * Who will ſhew us any good? Have you ever a more delightful pleaſure, than when you find your ſelves enflamed with ſome deſires for it? But alas! Do you not feel your ſelves in a depraved ſtate, and that theſe motions are but weak flutterings, and that the ſoul is quickly wearied in them? Is not this an evidence, that there muſt be a more vigorous nature infuſed both to attain and enjoy them? Is it not then an acting againſt your own ſentiments, not to ſeek it? Do you not offer violence to that little reaſon in you, to cut the wings of ſuch Motions? Let me add this too, you act in a way contrary to the nature of every thing, not to ſeek that ſtate which was deſigned for the perfection of humane nature? Is it not natural for every thing to endeavour its recovery to its primitive purity, and ſtruggle under that which is preternatural to it? A fountain will not reſt, till it hath wrought out the filth which hath been caſt into it; ſo neither ſhould man be quiet, till he recover himſelf from the dominion of ſin in his nature, and his pollution by it? Are you contented with a naſty, impure and diſeaſed body? are you not reſtleſs till it be cleanſed and cured? and is it no trouble to you, to have your ſouls in a dirty and foul condition? Do you not hereby act againſt your own nature in other things? * Pſa. 4. 6.

4. Not to ſeek it, is to deſpiſe the general mercy of God, and the general kindneſs of the Mediator to human nature. There are in man deſires for, and inclinations to happineſs, and ſome knowledg that this happineſs lies in God: Theſe deſires were left in man by the mercy of God upon the interpoſition of the Mediator: therefore ſome call them not reliques of nature, but reſtored principles, as a foundation to work upon; for upon the fall man did forfeit all, and ſin deſpoil'd him of all de Jure, but by the mediation of Chriſt, thoſe were left, (Col. 1. 17. By him all things conſiſt), otherwiſe there had been no ſtock to work upon. Theſe are left as foundations upon which God grafts this Grace of Regeneration *; as they that ſpin, do not ſpin out the whole thread, but leave ſome end, that they may add to it another thread; ſo God having a purpoſe to do good on man in renewing him, did not ſuffer the ſtock of nature to be wholly rooted out, but left that as a root to graft upon, to make him the better capable of happineſs; had not man had a natural deſire to happineſs, there were no ground to work upon him to induce him to ſuch a thing; therefore in not ſeeking it, you reproach God for leaving this ſtump in you; and ſeem to be ſo well pleaſed with corrupt nature, as if you would not have any remainder of the former. 'Tis a ſtriving againſt the relique of Original Nature left in us.

* Stoughtons righteous mans Plea. Ser. 1. P. 30.

(5.) Seek it, For 'tis as neceſſary as Juſtification. You ſhould therefore ſeek it with as high an eſteem of it as you have of pardon; none but would deſire pardon of ſin; you muſt be as deſirous of the Regeneration of your Nature; they are equally neceſſary: Thoſe who will not have an inherent Righteouſneſs, can never expect an imputed righteouſneſs from Chriſt, he never came to that end. Two things happened to us by the fall, Another State, and another Nature; the regaining of the former, muſt be equally ſought with the latter, a being in another Covenant by Juſtification (for naturally we are in the Covenant with Adam) and a being beautified with another image, becauſe naturally we are deformed by the image of Adam. As long as we are only in a ſtate of deſcent from, and union with the firſt Adam, we are under the ſtrictneſs of his Covenant, and the deformity of his Image; when we are united to the ſecond Adam, and ſpiritually deſcend from him, we are in his Covenant of Grace, and are adorned with his Image. Both therefore muſt be looked after as equally neceſſary, Rom. 5. 21. That as ſin hath reigned unto death, ſo might grace reign through righteouſneſs unto eternal life by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord: Let us then look after this reign of Grace; let not that be the laſt, which ſhould be firſt in our thoughts: Since our natural deſcent from Adam, we are born Gods enemies, we muſt be ſpiritually new-born before our enmity can expire.

(6.) The advantages that accrue by Regeneration are high. When we are renewed, we part with Impurity for Purity, with Droſs for Gold, with Corruption for Holineſs, with Fleſh for Spirit, with Nature for Grace, with Sin for God, and the enjoyment of him for ever. Our preſent Nature is a Nature of Death and Bondage, a New Nature is like the new Law, a Law of Life and Liberty *. It will put our ſouls in order, and ſet the Iſraelite free from the Egyptian Taſkmaſter; it will quell the rage of ſin, and diffuſe a ſerenity in our ſouls. Grace and Peace are not unfitly joined together by the Apoſtle, in reſpect of peace in our ſelves, which cannot be without habitual Grace; as well as peace with God, which cannot be without his Favour. It will enable us to perform ſpiritual ſervices; as all natural actions flow from a natural form in the creature, ſo all ſpiritual actions flow from a ſpiritual nature in the ſoul, and without it a carnal heart can no more do any ſpiritual work, than a Rock can perform the work of a Balſom-Tree. 'Tis but highly reaſonable and juſt, we ſhould endeavour to regain that ſtate wherein we were created, as the beſt for us; ſince the eſtate wherein God created us, was certainly the beſt; 'tis unconceivably better to be a righteous man, than to be a man.

* James 1. 25.

7. Seek it; You will never repent your labour, becauſe it is neceſſary. Neceſſity makes us contend with the greateſt difficulties: Men will do more at a pinch, than they can do at other times, when no neceſſity is upon them; never did any repent of it, never any will, it hath been a comfort upon a death-bed to all that had it, it never was any mans ſorrow. The univerſal conſent of all who have found it wrought, ſhould quicken our deſires and endeavours for it. Ask a renewed man, whether ever it troubled him that he was regenerate? whether he would be without that ſtate, rather than undergo the ſame pains again? Would not his anſwer be, No not for all the world? When the Bleſſed Apoſtle Paul conſidered his late regeneration, he expreſſeth it with ſome regret *. As one born out of due time. It implies a ſorrow that he was not born ſooner; and Auſtin cries out, Sero te amavi ui Domine; I have loved thee too late Lord: So doth every renewed man repent that he was not regenerate ſooner. A regenerate man come under the Yoke of Chriſt, finds ſuch a pleaſure in it, ſuch a ſuitableneſs, ſuch an advantage to his intereſt, that he would not be free from thoſe delightful engagements, and the ſweetneſs of that Yoke, for all the delights and commodities of the World.

* 1 Cor 15. 8.

3. Exhortation. Seek it preſently, Let not a minute paſs without ſome ejaculation to God for the new Birth; and when you come home, fall upon your knees, and riſe not till you find a change of reſolutions and diſpoſitions: If you did well underſtand the neceſſity of it, you would not be one hour without begging it. You have heard the neceſſity of it now, are you ſure you ſhall ever hear the Doctrine preached on again? Are you ſure you may not be paſt the hope, as well as the happineſs of the new Birth before many days be run, if the preſent opportunity be neglected? When God commanded Abraham to circumciſe himſelf and his Family, 'tis ſaid, he did it that very day, wherein God commanded him*; Why ſhould you not imitate Abraham in the ready and ſpeedy Circumciſion of the Heart? Tho God doth wait long, it cannot be thought he ſhould alway be courting dead ſouls. It muſt be now; there is no hope of ſuch a change after death; *The redemption of their ſoul ceaſeth for ever ; no more under the offers of a redeeming Saviour, no more under the motions of a renewing ſpirit. Chriſt breaks the nations *like a potters veſſel. A Veſſel before it be burned, may be macerated in Water, and formed anew; but when it hath been burned in the furnace, it cannot be changed. Well, if thou wilt be new born this day, God will bleſs the memory of this day; for he will gain a Son; Jeſus Chriſt will by his Blood put this day in Red Letters in his Calender, for he will gain a Brother; the Spirit will rejoice, for he will gain a Temple; Angels will rejoice, for they will gain a fellow-ſervant; You will gain a fitneſs for an everlaſting inheritance. Let me therefore preſs Young Men and Women to this neceſſary and important concern; I know not when I may have ſo fit an opportunity or ſubject for it: 'Tis not ſaid, except an old man be born again, but except a man; therefore be not careleſs, as if you were not concerned in it, nor put it off to a longer day, from the probability of the length of your life in a courſe of Nature. Conſider,

(1.) In preventing much ſin. How ripe are young ones, yea even Children when they are ſcarce green in age, as tho iniquity had been their tutor in the Womb? Youthful Blood is the Devils Tinder. Job knew it; therefore when his ſons feaſted, he ſacrificed *. He was jealous of their inbred corruption, from the ſence of the ſins of his own youth, which we find him complaining of*; therefore he feared his children having the ſame Temptations, might fall into the ſame tranſgreſſions. Now by an early Regeneration, many diſeaſes of the ſoul are prevented, as well as the great crack of nature cured; as the diſtempers of the body are prevented by altering the habit of it in the Spring. Tho by a late Regeneration, that of an Old Man, the ſoul is fitted for Heaven, yet it will be greivous to him to think, that his former diſhonouring of God in his natural ſtate was not prevented. 'Tis otherwiſe with the early Regenerate, they cannot complain as Paul did, Oh how have I perſecuted the Church of God! how have I breathed out threatnings againſt Chriſt and his people! how have I wallowed in all kind of ſin! They have indeed as much reaſon to complain of the ſtock of the Old Nature within them, but not of ſo many bitter fruits of the fleſh as others. How doth the Devil hang the wing, when he is deprived of an active ſervant? As nothing makes Heaven ſo glad, ſo nothing makes Hell ſo ſad, as to be fruſtrated of the full crop of ſin it expected from ſuch an inſtrument.

(2.) In doing much ſervice for God. Young men are uſually of active ſpirits, and vigorous affections, whereas age doth freez all youthful warmth: Such, like *Peter, can gird themſelves, and go whither they pleaſe, and travel about for God; but age damps the ſpirits. We are not ſo fit for ſervice when the Vigour of our Youth is ſpent. And would you be ſaved and God have no more Glory from you? Now what parts, or ſtrength, or mettle a young man hath, Grace will byas, put into a right channel, and direct to an uſeful end. The early regenerate will be eminent in piety; For in a courſe of Nature, they have a longer time to grow in: Their Faith and Love, by a larger exerciſe, will be the ſtronger; and the ſtronger the Grace, the more Glory will be brought to God, Rom. 4. 20. Abraham, 'tis ſaid, was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God. He that riſes betimes in the morning, will do more work, than he that lies in bed till Noon, or loiters till the Sun declines.

(3.) In manifeſting the power of the grace of God. An early Regeneration, is the great Ornament of the Goſpel. It evidenceth the dignity and ſtrength of habitual Grace, in quenching youthful heats, and powerful temptations; in making ſuch to deny themſelves, and prefer God's Precepts before their own pleaſures: It magnifies Grace, when the Devil is beat upon his own Dunghill, where he had ſo great an intereſt, by reaſon of the corruptions ſuch are ſubject to. What an Elogy is it to the beauty and power of Grace, to ſee a young flouriſhing Plant in God's Garden? It ſhows the power of his Grace upon ſuch to ſalvation, that they are ſtrong in the power of the might of God, to wreſtle againſt Principalities and Powers, as well as againſt Fleſh and Blood. It manifeſts the power of God's Grace in the work of Faith, and that there is a Spirit of power reſiding in them.

(2.) As an early Regeneration makes for God's Honour, ſo it makes for your own intereſt.

(1.) Your new birth will be the gentler. The work of Conſcience will be more kindly, without the horrors they have, who have lain many years ſoaking in the old Nature. More of Hell muſt be flaſht in an old ſinners face, to awaken him from his dead ſleep. Paul, who had ſinned ſome years with an high hand, was ſtruck to the Earth: Chriſt, as it were, took him by the Throat, and ſhook him, Acts 9. 6. He trembling, and aſtoniſhing, ſaid, &c. There will be more amazing aggravations of ſin to rack the Conſcience, and conſequently more anguiſh. Putrified Wounds require more lancing; and therefore are more painful in the cure, than thoſe which are but newly made. The more we are alienated from the life of God, the harder it will be to return to live that life again. The further a man is gone out of his Road, the longer he muſt travel to come in again; and the more pains he muſt take in running, or riding, than he that wandred but a little from it.

(2.) Your new birth will be the gratefuller to God. God loves the firſt Fruits: He would not have the Gleanings, but the firſt Crop of every thing under the Law, which was laid upon the Altar as God's portion. The kindneſs of the Youth is moſt reſpected by God. He cheriſhed Iſrael, becauſe they were the firſt fruits of his increaſe, Jer. 2. 2, 3. I remember the kindneſs of thy youth, the love of thy eſpouſals, when thou wenteſt after me in the wilderneſs; under many diſcouragements. God writes down the time of the new birth, and it runs in his mind a long time after. Epenetus, the firſt fruits of Achaia, is ſaluted by Paul, juſt after the ſalutation of the whole Church, with the Title of Well-beloved, Rom. 16. 5. Greet the church that is in their houſe; ſalute my well-beloved Epenetus, who is the fruits of Achaia unto Chriſt: And ſurely more beloved by the Lord, than by the Servant. God hath moſt affection for ſuch as come in at the firſt ſound of the Goſpel. Daniel was a young man, yet the holieſt man of his Age; and God hath ſo great an affection to him, that he joins him with Noah, that famous Preacher of Righteouſneſs; and Job, that Mirrour of Patience, Ezek. 14. 14. Though theſe three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they ſhould but deliver their own ſouls by their righteouſneſs: as thoſe that had the greateſt power with him, to keep off Judgments from the place where they were.

(3.) Comfort will be the greater by an early new birth. What a long time will ſuch an one have to enjoy the comforts of the Spirit! whereas thoſe that are renewed later, have fewer comforts, becauſe their grieving the Spirit hath been the longer. You will be always ready, and fit for the Kingdom of God, let God call when he will: Your fore-taſts of Heaven greater, and much acquaintance with the life of it, before you arrive at the place of full enjoyment. John, the youngeſt Diſciple, lay in Chriſt's boſom; he had afterwards the moſt ſpiritual illuminations, luminations, and the diſcoveries of the whole ſtate of the Church in after Ages, revealed to him. When our ſluggiſhneſs makes God wait for our return, his Juſtice will make us wait long for his Comforts. The earlier your new birth, the ſweeter will be your death, as being more ſtored with Experiences of God's Grace, and Goodneſs, and Truth, wherewith to anſwer all the Devil's affrighting Charges in your departing hence. No doubt can ariſe, but there will be a Treaſure of Experiences whence to draw an anſwer. The longer acquaintance you have with God, and the longer likeneſs to him in your Natures, the more joyful will be your paſſage to him, and the more confidence againſt the fear of death.

(4.) The earlier your new birth, the ſincerer and ſtronger will be your Grace. To row againſt the ſtrong Stream, and Tide of Nature, temptations of a youthful Age, the inconſtancy and lightneſs of your Humor, and the inconſiderateneſs of your Temper, are Arguments of ſincerity. To ſeek God, when a man hath fair and frequent invitations to ſin, is not ſo liable to ſuſpicion, as when a man can live no longer: The later proceeds rather from a fear of Wrath, than love to their Creator, or affection to his Glory. Grace will be the ſtronger, the more full of juice. He that is new-born betimes, when he is young, will grow to a greater ſtature, and a mighty ſtrength in his Age; for it is not with Grace as it is with our Bodies, the older the weaker; but as the outward man decays, the inward man grows, and is renewed day by day *. A young Plant in the Houſe of God, will be fat and flouriſhing, and full of fruit in old age ||. The weakneſs of the Body in ſuch, is the youthfulneſs of Grace.

|| Pſal. 92. 13, 14.

(5.) The earlier the new birth, the weightier will be your glory in the Kingdom of God. God rewards according to our works, Rev. 2. 23. I will give to every one of you according to your works. Not only to the wicked, the Children of the Woman Jezabel, according to their works, but to them whoſe Charity, Service, Faith, Patience, he knew, ver. 19. The longer you are without a new life, a vital principle, the fewer will your works be, and the ſhorter your wages. Tho God in Regeneration works as a Soveraign, and hath mercy on whom he will have mercy; yet in rewarding, he acts as a righteous Judg, according to the Rules of Juſtice, 2 Tim. 4. 8. The crown which the Lord, the righteous Judg ſhall give me: and ſo doth proportion the Glory to every man's Service. Young ones regenerate, that bear Head againſt the Temptations of their violent Nature, ſhall have Crowns ſet with more Jewels: They ſhall not only have an entrance, but an abundant entrance into the everlaſting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt *. They ſhall enter into the Port with a full Gale: The more violent ſtorms they bear up againſt, the brighter will be their Glory: For if he that endures Temptation, but one Temptation, ſhall have a Crown, by proportion he that endures many, ſhall have a greater, James 1. 12. Bleſſed is the man that endures temptation, for when he is tried, he ſhall have a crown of life. How comfortable will it be to feel the weight of your Crown, and the richneſs of your Robes, according to your years of Service. If there be any ſorrow in Heaven, 'tis becauſe they were not ſooner new-born, that they might more have glorified God on Earth, who beſtows ſo much Honour upon them in Heaven. If any of you were ſure to be regenerate, after you had ſpent ſo many years after the courſe of the World, and fulfilling the Luſts of the Fleſh; yet how great would your loſs be, both of the comforts of the Spirit in this life, and of degrees of Glory in the other?

* 2 Pet. 1. 11.

(3.) Deferring the ſeeking after this new birth, till more years grow upon you, is a mighty folly. 'Tis a matter of the higheſt concern, the greateſt neceſſity, in compariſon of which, all other things are but Toys and Superfluities. Is it not folly to prefer ſuperfluous things before neceſſary? Is it not a madneſs for a man to be mending the Mud-Wall about his Garden, and neglect to quench the Fire which hath got hold of his Houſe? You are poyſoned in your Nature; you have Plague-ſpots upon your hearts. Would it not be ridiculous for a man that hath drunk Poyſon, and ſpilt ſome upon his Clothes, to be more careful to have the ſtains fetch'd out of his Garments, than the Poyſon out of his Stomack? You are careful about the concerns of the Body and Fleſh: Oh! be not ſuch fools, as to let the Poyſon within, get the greater head, and the Plague continue in the heart.

Folly it is,

(1.) Becauſe of the uncertainty of life. You are not Lords, and Keepers of your own times; they are in God's hands *; My times are in thy hands. What if he ſhould fling that time out of his hand to morrow? what would your condition be? Thoſe that are in a dead ſtate now, as they are here, if judgment find them ſo, are irrecoverable. Becauſe thou art a child of Wrath, if he take thee thus away with his ſtroke, as Job ſpeaks *, then a great Ranſom cannot deliver thee. Hell followed Death cloſe at the back, Rev. 6. 8. Shall ſin reign in a Body? That is baſe; but in a mortal body, a Body that may drop into the Grave every hour? that is folly in the higheſt degree. 'Tis the Apoſtle's Exhortation, Rom. 6. 12. Let not ſin therefore reign in your mortal bodies. Many a Candle hath been put out, before half burnt: How often hath a clear Sun in the Morning, been over-caſt before Noon? Were none of you the laſt Week at the Funeral of ſome ſtrong and vigorous perſon? Perhaps there is no more time left you, than juſt what will ſerve for to ſeek this new birth. God ſeizeth upon ſome ſuddenly, that they have not time, ſo much as to cry out what aileth them, Job 36. 13, 14. They cry not when he bindeth them. They die in youth, and their life is among the unclean. 'Tis better to be new-born many years too ſoon (if it can be ſuppoſed to be too ſoon), than to defer it one minute too late. He that defers the new birth to day, may not have a morrow to be new born in. And to be ſurpriſed by Death before you are new born, better for you you had never been born at all.

(2.) 'Tis Folly, becauſe if you neglect the preſent time, tho you may live, yet your return to God by a new birth may be very uncertain. There is ſuch a thing as a day of Grace, ſhorter than the days of a man's life, Luke 19. 42. the things of their peace were then hid from their eyes, tho their deſtruction was deferred Forty years. There is ſuch a reſolve in Heaven ſometimes, that the Spirit ſhall ſtrive no longer with this or that man, Gen. 6. 3. My ſpirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man, or in man; with this, or that man; for that he alſo is fleſh. 'Tis a threatning to thoſe in the Church, in oppoſition to the prophane World, ver. 2. The Church began then to be corrupted. My Spirit ſhall not ſtrive with them: Tho they make a profeſſion of me, and attend upon me in Worſhip, yet they are Fleſh, degenerated into meer Fleſh, and Fleſh they ſhall be. And ſometimes 'tis confirmed by a ſolemn Oath, Rev. 10. 5, 6. The Angel ſwears in a moſt ſolemn manner, by him that lives for ever, who created heaven and earth, &c. that there ſhould be time no longer; that is, no time of Repentance, as appears, if you refer it to Rev. 9. 20, 21. 'Tis not therefore without great Reaſon, that the Apoſtle doth double both the Notes of Attention, Behold; and the time too, Now, now, when he exhorts them not to receive the Grace of God in vain; that is, ſit under the Goſpel-Adminiſtration to no purpoſe, without having a Goſpel impreſſion and ſignature upon their hearts. Behold now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of ſalvation, 2 Cor. 6. 2.

(4.) As 'tis a Folly to neglect it, ſo if it be not preſently ſought, and endeavoured for, the more difficult it will be every day to attain it.

(1.) In regard of the increaſe of moral indiſpoſition and unfitneſs. 'Tis true indeed, there is in every man a moral indiſpoſition to a ſpiritual renovation; but the indiſpoſition is greater, when the habits of ſin are more than ordinarily ſtrengthned. The more the ſoul is frozen, the harder it will be to melt. A body dead ſome few hours, is a ſubject more capable of having life breathed into it, than when it is putrified, and partly mouldred to duſt. A young Tree may more eaſily be taken up, and tranſplanted, than a ſtrong old Oak, which hath ſpread its Roots deep into the Earth. The more rooted the habit of ſin, the harder the alteration of the ſoul. Every ſin in an unregenerate man, is an adding a new ſtone to the former heap upon the Grave, to hinder his Reſurrection. 'Tis a fetter and bond, Acts 8. 23. bond of iniquity. And the more new chains are put upon thee, the more unable wilt thou be to ſtir. The habits of ſin will become more connatural to the ſoul, and fortifie themſelves with new recruits.

(2.) In regard of the induſtry of the Devil. If you remain in a ſtate of Nature till you are old, that Devil which blinds you now, will have increaſed your blindneſs by that time: He will beſtir himſelf in your Age, that he may not loſe that which he hath poſſeſſed ſo long. 'Tis a ſhame for Satan, as well as for a man, deficere in ultimo actu. He that ſtruck the firſt fatal blow to us, and occaſioned this degenerate Nature, will not want watchfulneſs and care to ſtrengthen it in you: He will be diligent to keep up his own work: The longer his poſſeſſion, the more difficult his departure. Judas was a Devil in our Saviour's Judgment all his time, John 6. 70. One of you is a devil. But when he had withſtood the force of our Saviour's Diſcourſes, and nouriſhed his covetouſneſs againſt his Maſters frequent convictions, the Devil entered into his heart *. Perhaps there had been before, ſome ſtruglings of natural Conſcience in Judas, as there may be in ſome of you; but when he had, againſt the ſight of our Saviour's Miracles, the hearing of his Sermons, the checks of his own Conſcience, continued in a natural ſtate, Satan enters into him in a more peculiar manner, in a way of more ſpecial efficacy; and by an uncontroulable power, breaks the Bridle of Conſcience, which had held him in ſo long, and runs furiouſly with him to what wickedneſs he pleaſed. Satan reigned in him before: but as the regenerate being by degrees filled with ſpiritual Gifts, and having additions of Grace, are ſaid to be filled with the Spirit; ſo natural men as they increaſe in ſin by degrees, are ſaid to have a new entrance of Satan into them, becauſe there is an increaſe of his efficacy in them, and power over them, binding them in ſtronger Chains and Fetters of Iron.

* John 3. 17.

(3.) In regard of ſpiritual Judgments, which will make it impoſſible. Such Judgments upon men that ſit under the Goſpel, and admit not the influence of it, are more frequent than is uſually imagined, tho they are not ſo viſible. Open ſins, God puniſhes many times by viſible Judgments; but wilful unregeneracy by ſpiritual. Tho a man may ſit under the ſame means of Grace which God doth bleſs to regenerate others, they may be an accidental means to harden him. The miry places ſhall not be healed, but be given to ſalt, as it is, Ezek. 47. 11. when others ſhall grow like Trees on both ſides the River, and bear a never-fading Leaf. If once your neglects and provocations, put God to his Oath, and make him ſwear, as he once did, that you ſhall not enter into his reſt *, his Oath will be irreverſible; he will blow up Heaven and Earth, before he will break it. And that it may not be evaded, that this was an Oath againſt the Iſraelites, it is intimated by the Apoſtle, that even in the times of the Goſpel, this Oath is of force, ver. 12. He from thence exhorts them at that time, to take heed of an evil heart of unbelief. What need of this Exhortation to them, if this Oath did only concern the Iſraelites murmuring in the Wilderneſs, and were not valid againſt unbelievers, and unregenerate men in the time of the Goſpel? 'Tis a terrible place, that in Iſa. 6. 9. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and ſhut their eyes, leſt they ſee with their eyes, and underſtand with their heart, and convert, and be healed. Which dreadful place, is no leſs than Six times quoted in the New Teſtament, as tho it belonged only to them that ſit under Evangelical light with a wilful unregeneracy. Certainly as the mercies of the Goſpel are moſt ſpiritual, ſo the Judgments inflicted upon the neglecters of it, are the moſt ſpiritual Judgments: Then a man is made the Center of divine fury, and his heart ſealed up from any ſeizure by ſanctifying Grace, Ezek. 24. 13. Becauſe I have purged thee; that is, offered thee purging Grace, and thou waſt not purged, thou ſhalt not be purged from thy filthineſs any more, till I have cauſed my fury to reſt upon thee. When God paſſes ſuch a ſecret ſentence, if all the Men in the World, and all the Angels in Heaven, ſhould with their moſt affectionate ſtrains of Reaſon, attempt the perſwading of you, they were not able to open an heart which God hath judicially lockt up and ſealed. 'Tis obſerved by ſome, that the work of the Goſpel, for converſion, is uſually done in thoſe places where it comes, in the ſpace of Seven Years, as to thoſe who have ſate under it ſo long; and they ground it upon Dan. 9. 27. And he ſhall confirm the covenant with many for one week; that is, one Week of Years. And that our Saviour preached Three years and an half among the Jews, and the Apoſtles Three years and an half, or thereabouts, before the Jews were diſcovenanted. I will not affirm it poſitively; but offer it, as worthy conſi-deration, to thoſe that have ſate under the Goſpel more than Seven Years, without any renewing-work on their ſouls.

Well then: let me beſeech you, reſolve upon this work preſently. We are not *Prov.3.27,28. to bid a poor man, go away, and come again to morrow *; and ſhall we bid the Spirit, knocking at our hearts in the Goſpel, go away, and come again another time? Our bleſſed Saviour did not defer his Death for us till he was old; and ſhall not we live to him till we are old? As his Death is an Argument uſed by the Apoſtle, * 2 Cor. 5. 14, 15. to move us to live to him *, ſo the time of his Death ſhould be an Argument to us, to live to him betimes. How many hath this fooliſh to morrow deceived? And many have periſhed to day, before the dawning of to morrow. Defer it not therefore a night longer: Reflect upon your ſelves, and ſay, Have I lived ſo long, pleaſed with my old Nature? Oh Lord! what had become of me, without thy wonderful Patience? Let your motion be as the lightning, as the Prophet Ezekiel ſpeaks of the motion of Four Beaſts, Ezek. 1. 14. God may make up the Match between himſelf and you, before mid-night: There was leſs time in God's working upon the Jaylor.

Queſt. What ſhall we do to get this new birth?

Anſ. 1. Begin with prayer; ſeek it from that Saviour that firſt made ſo plain a declaration of it. A man cannot receive any thing, unleſs it be given him from heaven *: Then from Heaven beg it; let God hear of you as ſoon as ever you come * John. 3. 27. * Jackſon Vol. 3. chap. 28. p. 496, 497. home. * God uſually lets in renewing Grace at the ſame Gate, at which honeſt Prayer goes out. Prayer is a compliance with God's Grace. He never refuſeth it to them that heartily deſire it. Go therefore to God, give him no reſt; if you do ſo, it may not be long before you will hear that joyful word drop from his gracious lips, My Grace ſhall be ſufficient for you; ſufficient to renew you; ſufficient to cure you. Let the fervency of your Prayers be proportioned according to the neceſſity of the thing, and the greatneſs of your miſery without it. Plead therefore with God for it: Lord, is it not better to make me thy Friend, than to let me continue thy Enemy? Is it not more thy glory, to raiſe a ſoul from Sin, than a Lazarus from the Grave? Thy power and mercy are more illuſtrious in turning a dry ſtock into a fruitful and flouriſhing Tree. Overcome therefore my baſe Nature, by thy merciful power; change me from a venemous, to a dove-like Nature. Oh, how fain would I glorifie thee, by anſwering the end of my creation! Glorifie thy ſelf by new-creating my heart, that I may glorifie thee in a newneſs of life: I cannot get a new heart by my own ſtrength; but it is a work not too hard for thy power, and ſuitable to thy promiſe. Plead the Promiſe, Ezek. 11. 19. I will take the ſtony heart out of their fleſh, and I will give them an heart of fleſh: And Ezek. 36. 26. A new heart will I give you, and a new ſpirit will I put within you; but he will be enquired of, to do it for them, ver. 37. Breathe and aſpire after it; beg for it as earneſtly as you would in extream hunger, for food for the ſatisfaction of your natural Appetite: God will not deny it to ſuch * Mat. 5. 6. as breathe after it *; Hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs, and you ſhall be filled. Beg the operation of the Spirit. Our Saviour provided the Plaiſter, but left the Spirit to apply it. He provided the Colours, his Blood, to draw his Image; but none but the Spirit can lay them on. Ask therefore the Spirit of the Father in the Name of Chriſt. The Father ſends him into the World, and ſends him into the heart, but in the Name of Chriſt. 'Tis called a holy Spirit, becauſe without it there can be no holy Nature.

2. Be deeply ſenſible of the corruption of Nature. The more we are ſenſible of our inherent depravation, the more we ſhall breathe after a real change. Can he ever imagine the neceſſity of a cure, who underſtands not the greatneſs of his Diſeaſe? Be fully convinced, as Paul was, that in you, that is, in your fleſh, dwells no good thing, Rom. 7. 18. I know, I am experimentally ſenſible of it. Did we but truly ſee the defilement of our Nature, and the monſtrous alteration of it, from that of our creation, as we can the deformity of ſome Monſter in the World, we ſhould loath our ſelves, we ſhould fly, if we could, from our own nature, and ſend forth nothing but groans for a deliverance from the body of death, and have no reſt, till we were ſtript of ſo abominable a frame. Let us therefore turn in upon our ſelves, take a view of our condition, ſee if there be any ſuitableneſs between tween our depraved Natures, and the glory of another World. There is not, unleſs we conceit Heaven a place filled only with carnal pleaſures. But reaſon will tell us the contrary; and a carnal ſoul can never, in that ſtate, be fit for a ſpiritual Glory.

3. View often the perfection of the Law of God. This will make us ſenſible of the contrariety of our Nature to God's Holineſs, and conſequently, make us look about for a Remedy. See whether your Nature anſwers the exactneſs of the Law: for altho you were alive without the Law, yet when the Commandment, and your Hearts come to look upon one another, you will ſee ſin in its life and power, and all the conceits of your own Excellency will die, Rom. 7. 9. For I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died. Paul thought himſelf a righteous perſon, till he came to meaſure himſelf by the exact and ſpiritual Image of the Law. He had been inſtructed in the Literal Knowledg of the Law; for he was brought up a Phariſee: His Head and the Law were acquainted; and then he thought himſelf a living perſon: but when his Heart and the Law came to be acquainted, then he found himſelf dead, and his high opinion of himſelf, fell to the ground. Conſider then, how the Law requires a perfect righteouſneſs, an inward principle. All duties it commands, are not only to be done materially, but formally; for they are ſo commanded, in ſuch a manner, from ſuch a principle, to ſuch an end. Then reflect; Have I ſuch a Righteouſneſs? Can I anſwer the Law? Do I come up to the meaſures of it in any one action? Surely I do not. Then conſider further, Doth not this Law ſtand? will God lay it in the duſt; has he thrown it out of doors? Surely it is holy, juſt and good; and therefore a ſtanding Rule. I muſt have a principle ſuitable to that which Jeſus Chriſt came not to deſtroy, but eſtabliſh. How ſhall I do it with this corrupt Nature, wherein I do not one action that doth ſincerely reſpect it, as the Law of God, that is accompanied with a delight in it? Certainly this Temper, ſo contrary to the Law, muſt be changed. I muſt have an inner man to delight in this Law; a principle, that muſt in ſome meaſure, tho imperfectly, ſuit it. This orderly Conſideration, would put you upon the ſeeking out for ſuch a Righteouſneſs, as may in part anſwer it.

4. Obſerve the motions of the Spirit. There is an aſſiſting work of the Spirit, and an informing work. There's not a man, but hath, or once had the ſtrivings of this Spirit with him. There are the knockings of Chriſt by his Spirit at the door: There are calls; Zacheus, come down; this day is ſalvation come to thy houſe. Did you never hear a Voice from Heaven, ſaying, Come to me, that you may have life? Did you never hear a groan from Heaven, When ſhall it once be? Did you never ſee a Tear trickling down the Cheek of Chriſt, as when he wept over Jeruſalem? Did you never hear a Sigh of a grieved Spirit waiting upon you? Can you ſee, and hear, and hear again, yet no compliance, when that is of abſolute neceſſity you are exhorted to? Smother not thoſe motions; anſwer them with ſuitable affections. If Chriſt looks upon you, as he did upon Peter, think of what you are, and weep *. If the Spirit calls, anſwer preſently, Thy face, Lord, will I ſeek. The neglect of the time of the Spirits breathing, is the cauſe of a continuance in unregeneracy. Repel not thoſe ſweet motions that ſtrike upon your hearts.

* Mark 14.72.

5. Attend diligently upon all means of Grace. They are the Pipes through which the Spirit breathes; the Lungs of the Spirit, the Inſtruments whereby our Natures are altered. Faith comes by hearing. 'Tis by the hearing of Faith, that the Spirit is miniſtred, Gal. 3. 5: He therefore that miniſters to you the ſpirit, doth he it by the works of the law, or the hearing of faith? None can expect it, who will not uſe the means to have it, no more than men can expect to live, without eating and drinking. Would we be warm? We muſt approach to the Fire: Would we be clean? We muſt waſh in the Water: Would we be renewed? We muſt attend upon the breathings of the Spirit in the inſtitutions of God. This we may do, tho we cannot renew our ſelves: We may read the Word, as well as a piece of News; we may hear the Word, and attend to it, as well as to any worldly concern; we may meditate upon it, and conſider it, as well as a Story. This we have power to do, and it is by the Word that this great work is done.

By

By a powerful Word, Chriſt called Lazarus out of the Grave; and by his Word ſpoken by his Spirit, his great Deputy he ſent after him, he calls us out of our ſtate of Death. Beg of the Spirit to breathe upon you, before you come to attend upon his Inſtitutions. We profit little by the Word, and our old Nature attends us, becauſe we take no notice of the Spirit of God, who is appointed the principal Officer in this buſineſs. 'Tis he that is to guide us into truth *. Tho men may ſpeak Truth to us, yet the Spirit can only guide the Truth into our Hearts, and guide us into the Heart, and Bowels, and Inwards of Truth, to taſte the Marrow of it.

* John 16 13.

6. I might add, Study the Goſpel. Look upon Jeſus Chriſt in that Glaſs: This transforms us into his Image: as the beholding the light of the Sun in a Glaſs, paints an Image of that light in our Faces; ſo doth the beholding Chriſt in the Goſpel, 2 Cor. 3. 18. But ye all with open face, beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image. The Goſpel is the cauſe of our firſt change, and of our growth in it, from glory to glory; but by the Spirit of God in the Goſpel, as by the ſpirit of the Lord. Study the Promiſes of the Goſpel, and the end of the blood of Chriſt, which was to purge our Conſcience from dead works: 'tis by believing the promiſes of pardon in the Blood of Chriſt, that the conſcience is purged from dead works *.

* Heb. 9. 14.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF THE NATURE OF REGENERATION.

2 Cor. V. 17.

Therefore if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſt away, behold, all things are become new.

THE Apoſtle in thoſe words *v.*13. For whether we be beſides our ſelves, it is to God: or whether we be ſober, it is for your cauſe, defends his ſpeaking ſo much of his integrity; though ſome men would count him out of his wits for it, yet he regards not their judgment; for if he were in an extaſy, or beſides himſelf, his purpoſe was to ſerve God and his Church, and therefore he did not regard the opinion of men, whether he were accounted mad or ſober, ſo he might perform the end of his Apoſtleſhip. The ſenſe therefore of it, as Calvin renders it, is this: Let men take it as they will, that I ſpeak ſo much of my Integrity, I do it not upon my own account, but have reſpect to God and the Church in ſpeaking of it, for I am as ready to be ſilent as to ſpeak, when my ſilence may glorify God and advantage the Church as much as my ſpeech. For the love of Chriſt conſtrains me, ver. 14. for whom I am bound to live; and ſo he paſſes on to inculcate the duty of every man that hath an intereſt in the death of Chriſt. The love of Chriſt conſtrains us actively; the Love wherewith Chriſt hath loved us, is a powerful attractive to make us live to him. 'Tis the higheſt equity and juſtice, that we ſhould live to him who died for us. Whence obſerve:

The true conſideration and ſenſe of the love of Chriſt in his death, hath a pleaſing force, and is a delightful bond and obligation upon us, to devote our ſelves wholly to his Service and Glory. There is a Moral conſtraint upon the Soul to this end, if one died for all, then were all dead, then all were obnoxious to Eternal death. Others * diſlike this Interpretation; and underſtand it not of the death to God, brought in by the firſt Adam, but a death to ſin and the fleſh, procured by the ſecond Adam, which death is ſpoken of *Rom.*6.2. how ſhall we being dead to ſin, &c. and called a ſuffering in the fleſh, and a ceaſing from ſin *. If one died for all, then all for whom he died are dead, jure & obligatione, dead to themſelves, that they might not be under their own power, but the power of him that died for them, and roſe again: ſince therefore we are dead to ſin, we ſhould take no care to maintain the life of it. And this ſeems by the following Verſe to be the true meaning of it, ver. 15. And that he died for all, that they which live, ſhould not henceforth live unto themſelves, but unto him which died for them, and roſe again. He hath Redeemed us by the price of his blood, that he might have us in his own power, as his own propriety; ſo that we are no longer our own Maſters, and have no longer right to our ſelves *. They ought to die to themſelves, that they may live to Chriſt; It being fit they ſhould live, not to their own wills, or own honour, but to the Glory and Will of their Redeemer. It was to this end that Chriſt died, that he might have a ſeed to ſerve him, and live to him. 'Tis ingratitude and injuſtice to deny him our ſervice, ſince thereby we endeavour to fruſtrate the deſign of his coming, and the end of his death. Obſerve,

* 1 Pet. 4. 1.

* Calvin.

1. Self is the chief end of every natural man. That they which live, ſhould not henceforth live unto themſelves. Implying, that all Men living, who are not under the actual benefit and efficacy of our Saviours death, do live to themſelves. The greateſt diſtinction between a Regenerate and a Natural Man is this, Self is the end of one, and Chriſt the end of the other. The life of a Natural Man, and all the dependancies of it, is to gratify corrupt ſelf, with the greateſt detriment to his Natural and Moral ſelf, the happineſs and good of his Soul: but the life of a New Creature, with all the dependancies of it, is for the Glory of God, and the Redeemer. This ſelf-dependance, and a deſire of independancy on God, which was the great ſin of Adam, whereby he would make himſelf his own chief end, hath run in the veins of all his Poſterity, and is the bitter Root upon which all the Fruits of Gall and Wormwood grow.

2. The end of our Saviours dying and riſing again, was to change the corrupt end of the creature. The end of Redemption, and conſequently the end of the Redeemer, muſt be contrary to the end of corruption, and the end of the firſt Adam. As Adam diſpoſſeſſed God of his Dominion, to ſet up ſelf; ſo doth Chriſt pull down Self, to advance God to his right of being our chief end. 'Tis called therefore a Redemption of us to God: Rev. 5. 9. For thou waſt ſlain, and haſt redeemed us to God by thy blood; Redeemed us from a ſlavery under ſordid Luſts, to God as our end.

3. Therefore we muſt be taken off from our ſelves, as our end, and be fixt upon another, even upon Chriſt. Elſe we anſwer not the end of Chriſts Death and Reſurrection: he bore our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, ſhould live unto righteouſneſs *. And if the ends of our Saviours Death and Reſurrection be not accompliſht upon us, the Fruits of it ſhall not be enjoyed by us. The whole Work of Regeneration, and Converſion, and Sanctification, and the Efficacy of the Death of Chriſt in the Soul, conſiſts in theſe two things: A taking us off from Self, and pitching us upon God and Chriſt, as our end. The terminus a quo, is Self; the terminus ad quem, is Chriſt. We are redeemed by the precious blood of Chriſt, from our vain converſation received by tradition from our fathers *; even from our firſt father Adam. This is properly to ſet up no other Gods before him, and to abhor the groſſeſt Idolatry.

* 1 Pet. 1.18.

4. 'Tis highly equitable, that if Chriſt died for us, and was raiſed for us as our happineſs, we ſhould live to his glory, and make him our end in all our actions, and the whole courſe of our lives. The Apoſtle uſes this conſideration as an Argument, and as a Copy and Exemplar. As Chriſt died not for himſelf, nor roſe again for himſelf, but he died for Gods Glory and our Redemption; to vindicate Gods Righteouſneſs, and juſtify us in his ſight; and roſe again to make it appear, that he had done our buſineſs in Redeeming us, and went to Heaven to manage our cauſe for us: ſo we are to live to keep up the honour of Gods Righteouſneſs and Holineſs, and to juſtify Chriſt in our profeſſions of him, and conformity to him in the deſign of his Death and Reſurrection. 'Tis a high diſeſteem of our ſelves, not to live to Chriſt, which is both a more rightful and a more ſatisfying object of our affections, who returns our living to him, with a happineſs to our ſelves: By his Dying he purchaſed a dominion over us; by his Reſurrection his Dominion over us was confirmed, and thereby our obligation of Love and Service increaſed. He Died as our Surety to ſatisfy our Debts; and Roſe as our Saviour to juſtify our perſons; ſo the Apoſtle Rom. 4. 25. He was delivered for our offences, and roſe again for our juſtification: Therefore as he roſe to juſtify us, we muſt riſe to glorify him. And indeed it is a great ſign of a Spiritual growth, when we grow in our ends and aims for God.

5. The Reſurrection of Chriſt, as well as his Death, was for us. He roſe again, it muſt be underſtood, for them for whom he died; he died as a publick Perſon, bearing our ſins; and roſe again as a publick Perſon, and head of the believing World, acquitted from our ſins, *Heb.*9.24. He is entred into heaven to appear in the preſence of God for us. And in a conformity to theſe two publick acts of Chriſt, doth our Regeneration and Communion with Chriſt conſiſt; In a mortification of the body of ſin in conformity to his Death; In newneſs of life, by quickning Grace in Conformity to his Reſurrection *. * Coloſ. 2. 12.

The Apoſtle proceeds on, and makes his inference in the 16th. Verſe. Henceforth know we no man after the fleſh; yea, though we have known Chriſt after the fleſh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. To know, is uſed in Scripture for love and delight; both on Gods part, Pſal. 1. 6. The Lord knows the way of the righteous, that is, loves, and delights in the way of the Righteous; and on mans part, Hoſ. 4. 1. no knowledge of God in the land, that is, no love of God. Not to know men after the fleſh then, is either not to judg of men according to the endowments, though never ſo glittering, which ariſe only from fleſhly principles. To eſteem no man according to his greatneſs, his knowledge and worth in the account of the World; or, not to love men for our ſecular intereſt; or, not to regard men according to thoſe fleſhly priviledges of Circumciſion and carnal ceremonies. Not our ſelves, which is included in no man; not to eſteem of our ſelves by our knowledge, wealth, credit, honour, or any other excellency which falls under the praiſe of men; but by inward Grace, living to God, fruitfulneſs to him, which falls under the praiſe of God. Men eſteem not their Fields for the gay wild Flowers in them, but for the Corn and Fruit; yea, though we have known Chriſt after the fleſh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. We do not glory in him, becauſe he was of kin to us, and our Countrey-man according to the fleſh. We look upon him no more, only as a miraculous man; but we have more noble thoughts of him, we know him as the great Redeemer of the World. We conſider him in thoſe excellent things he hath done, thoſe excellent Graces which he hath communicated, thoſe excellent offices he doth exerciſe; we know him after a Spiritual manner, as the Author of all Grace, appointed by God for ſuch ends; accepted by God upon ſuch works, glorified by God for ſuch purpoſes, we regard him as tranſacting our great affairs in Heaven, where he is entred as a fore-runner for us *; and as ſuch we ſerve and honour him; we deſire not his company in the fleſh, but in the Spirit, in his Heavenly appearance and glory. Obſerve, * Heb. 6. 20.

1. Natural men have no delight in anything but ſecular concerns; love nothing, but for their own advantage; admire not any true Spiritual worth; they know and love men; yea, what love they pretend to Chriſt, is only a fleſhly love; a love from education; a cuſtomary love.

2. An evidence of being taken off from our ſelves, and living to Chriſt, is our valuation either of our ſelves or others according to holineſs. Though a civil reſpect be due to men according to their ſtation in the world; ſuch a reſpect the writer of this Epiſtle gave to Agrippa: yet our inward valuations of men ought to be upon the account of the Image of God in them. God, who loves Righteouſneſs, knows no man after the Fleſh, but as he finds the Image of his own Righteouſneſs in him. And as a New Creature is framed after the Image of God; ſo his affections and valuations of men or things, are according to Gods affections to them, or eſteem of them.

3. Our profeſſions of Chriſt, ſerving him and loving him barely for our ſelves, and for fleſhly ends, doth not conſiſt with Regeneration. Such a love is a love to our ſelves, not to Chriſt; a making him only ſubſervient to us, not our ſelves ſubſervient to Chriſt.

4. We ſhould eye Chriſt, and ariſe to the knowledge of him, as he is advanced and exalted by God. Look upon him as our head, delight to come under his wing, and have our whole dependance on him, know him in his Righteouſneſs to juſtify us, know him not only as a Saviour riſen, but in the power of his Reſurrection in our Souls, and the fellowſhip of his ſufferings, and to be made conformable to his death: ſuch a knowledge the Apoſtle aims at *; the other knowledge, is a knowledge of him in the head; this a knowledge of him in the heart; the other is a * Phil. 3. 8, 9, 10 knowledge of him after the fleſh, this a knowledge of him after the ſpirit, in the draught of Chriſt in our hearts by the Spirit; an inward conception of him in the womb of our hearts.

The Text is another inference made from that poſition, verſe 15. If there be ſuch an obligation upon us to live to Chriſt, becauſe he hath died and roſe again for us: then certainly whoſoever hath an intereſt in the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt, as to the fruits of it, muſt be a New Creature, a changed perſon; old things are paſt away, all things are become new in him. Whoſoever is in the Kingdom of Chriſt, engrafted into him, under the participation of his Death and Reſurrection, is a new creature. All other excellencies are defective, though they may be uſeful to the World; 'Tis a new creation only makes a man excellent and worthy of the Kingdom. Old things are paſt away; old affections, old diſpoſitions of Adam: thoſe things, the ἀρχαῖα, things that are very near of as old a ſtanding as the World. Adam would be his own rule and ruler, he would be the rule of good and evil to himſelf, he would be his own end: theſe things muſt paſs away: we muſt come to a fiduciary reliance upon God, under the New Head of his appointment, and make him our higheſt good, our chief end, our exact rule. And therefore what is called the new creature, Gal. 6. 15. is called, faith working by love, Gal. 5. 6. Adam's great failures were unbelief and ſelf-love; he would not believe Gods precept and threatning; he would not depend upon God: to this is oppoſed Faith, which is a Grace that empties us of our ſelves, and fixes us in our dependance on another. He would alſo advance himſelf and be his own rule and end, to know as God; to this is oppoſed Love, which is an acting for God and his Glory. And theſe two are the eſſential parts of the new creature. Some of late would underſtand by the New Creature, only a converſion from Idolatry to the profeſſion of Chriſtianity. But there muſt be a greater import in the words than ſo. The Apoſtle makes it a qualification neceſſary both to Jew and Gentile; That neither the circumciſion of the one did avail without it, nor the uncircumciſion of the other prejudice them that poſſeſs it. Beſides, men may turn from one profeſſion to another, without living to God, and directing all their actions to the Glory of Chriſt. Some tranſlate it, Let him be a new creature; others, He is a new creature; one notes his ſtate, the other his obligation. Old things are paſt away; it is a reaſon rendred, there is a change in the whole frame of things. If you underſtand it of the Old Oeconomy, the Old Legal ſtate, then it is an Argument ſhowing the neceſſity of the new creature. Old things are withered, there is a New Frame in the Church, in the Kingdom; therefore there ought to be ſo in the ſubjects of it: for the Prophets uſe to ſpeak of the ſtate of the Goſpel under the names of a new Heaven and new Earth *. As old Rites in the Church are removed, ſo the old principles, and the old frames of Adam ſhould paſs away: the old rubbiſh muſt be thrown out, when the Houſe is new built. And they are paſt away in a regenerate man, jure, obligatione; poteſtate; though not wholly in actu. All things are become new, but not of our ſelves, but by the Grace of God; ver. 18. and all things are of God. 'Tis likely the Apoſtle expreſſeth himſelf thus, to pull down the ſwelling thoughts of the Corinthians which they had of themſelves: They were proud of their Gifts, wherein by the Apoſtles own confeſſion they came behind no Church in the world *, and he diſcourſeth to them much of the excellency of charity, above knowledge, and adviſeth them to covet the beſt gifts ‖; he depreſſeth their confidence in knowledge without Grace, which doth but puff up, not edify to eternal life. He wiſheth them therefore to look more to the new creature in them; to try themſelves whether they be in Chriſt or no, by the change they found in their hearts. If any man be in Chriſt, that is, be a member of Chriſt, engrafted into him.

‖ 2 Cor. 13.

In the words obſerve,

1. The character of a true Chriſtian, by his ſtate, a new creature.

2. The neceſſity of this new creation: if any man; if he be not a new creature, he is not in Chriſt, he hath nothing at preſent to do with him, he is no true member of his body.

3. The univerſality: any man; not a man can be in Chriſt by any other way, without this New Creation paſs upon him.

4. The

4. The advantage of it: if he be a New Creature, he is certainly in Christ, 'tis an infallible token, that the Redeemer did die and rise again for him.

5. The nature of it.

1. Removal of the old form: old things are past away.
2. Introduction of a new: all things are become new, as without in the Church, so within in the Soul.

6. The note of attention: behold; more particularly set to this passage, of all things becoming New, to remove the deceit that men are liable to. Old things in some measure may pass away, but look to that, whether new things come in the place contrary to those old, whether there be new affections, new dispositions; old things may pass away, when old sins are left, and no new frames be set up in the stead of them. The Doctrine I shall insist upon, is this:

Doct. Every man in Christ hath a real and mighty change wrought in him, and becomes a new creature.

I pitch upon these words to show the Nature of Regeneration, the necessity of which I have already discoursed of.

'Tis difficult to describe exactly the Nature of Regeneration.

1. Because of the disputes about the Nature of it; * Whether it be quality, or a Spiritual substance; whether, if a quality, it be a habit, or a power, or whether it be the Holy Ghost personally. Many controversies the wits of men have obscured it with. The Scripture discovers it to us, under the terms of the new creature, a new heart, a law put into us, the Image of God, a Divine Nature; these though Scripture terms, are difficult to explain. * Baxt. Rest, part 1. chap. 3. 6, 7.

2. 'Tis difficult, because it is visible, not in it self, but in its effects. We know Seed doth propagate it self, and produce its like, but the generative part in the Seed lies covered with husks and skin, so that 'tis hard to tell in what Atome or point the generative Particle doth lie. We know we have a Soul, yet 'tis hard to tell what the Soul is, and in what part it doth principally reside. We know there are Angels, yet what mortal can give a description of that Glorious Nature? 'Tis much like the Wind, as our Saviour describes it, John 3. 8. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it comes, nor whither it goes: So is every one that is born of the Spirit. The wind, we feel it, we see the effects of it, yet cannot tell how it ariseth, where it doth repose it self, and how 'tis allayed: And all the notions of Philosophy about it, will not satisfy a curious enquirer: So likewise it is in this business of Regeneration; the effects of it are known, there are certain Characters whereby to discern it; but to give a description of the Nature of it, is not so easy.

3. 'Tis difficult, because of the Natural ignorance which is still in the minds of the best. A man cannot understand all iniquity, for there is a mystery of iniquity; neither can he fully understand this work, for there is a mystery of Godliness *; not only in the whole Scheme of it without, but in the whole frame of it in the heart. 'Tis called the hidden man of the heart ‖; hidden from the world, hidden from reason, hidden from the sight sometimes of them that have it: a man can hardly somtimes see it in his own heart, by reason of the steams of corruption; As a beautiful Picture is not visible in a Cloud of smoke. The blindness the God of this world hath wrapt us in, that we might not know God, or the things of God, is not wholly taken off. And even what we know of the truths of God, suffers an Eclipse by our carnal conceptions of them; for all the notions we frame of them, have a tincture of sense and fancy. * 1 Tim. 3. 16. ‖ 1 Pet. 3. 4.

4. 'Tis hard for those to conceive it, who have no experience of it. If we speak of the motions of Natural corruption, as wrath, passion, distrust of God, and enormous sins, men can easily understand this; because we have all sad experiments of an inward corruption; but the methods and motions of the Spirit of God in this work, are not comprehended, but by those that have felt the power of it. The motions of sin are more sensible, the motions of the Spirit more secret and inward, and men want as much the experience of the one, as they have too much of the other. Hence it is that many carnal men, love to have the nature of sin ript up and discovered; partly perhaps, for this reason among others, That they can better understand that by the daily evidence of it in their own practises; whereas other other things, out of the reach of their experience, are out of the graſp of their underſtanding; and therefore ſeem to them Paradoxes and incredible things: the Spiritual man is not judged or diſcerned by any, but them that are Spiritual *. ‡ 'Tis certainly true, that as a Painter can better Decipher a ſtormy and cloudy Air, than the ſerenity of a clear Day, and the ſpectator conceive it with more pleaſure: So it is more eaſy to repreſent the agitations and affections of Natural corruption, than the inward frame of a Soul wrought by the Spirit of God. I ſhall therefore deſcribe it conſonantly to the Scripture, thus: Regeneration is a mighty and powerful change, wrought in the Soul by the efficacious working of the Holy Spirit, wherein a vital principle, a new habit, the Law of God, and a Divine Nature are put into, and framed in the heart, enabling it to act holily and pleaſingly to God, and to grow up therein to eternal Glory. This is included in the term of a New Creature in the Text. There is a change, a Creation, that which was not, is brought into a ſtate of being. If a New Creature, and in Chriſt, then ſurely not a dead but a living Creature, having a principle of life; and if a living Creature, then poſſeſſed of ſome power to act, and habits to make thoſe actions eaſy: and if a power to act, and a habit to facilitate that act, then a Law in their Nature as the rule of their acting; every Creature hath ſo: In this reſpect the Heavens are ſaid to have Ordinances; knoweſt thou the ordinances of heaven *? and they ſeem to act in the way of a covenant, Jer. 33. 25. according to ſuch Articles as God hath pitched upon. And laſtly, as in all Creatures thus endued, there is a likeneſs to ſome other things in the rank of beings: ſo in this New Creature there is a likeneſs to God, whence 'tis called the Image of God in Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, and a Divine Nature. So that you ſee the divers expreſſions whereby the Scripture declares this work of Regeneration, are included in this term of the new Creature, or the New Creation, as the word is καινὴ κτίσις. 'Tis a certain Spiritual and Supernatural Principle, or permanent form, per modum actus primi, infuſed by God, whereby it is made partaker of the Divine Nature, and enabled to act for God.

* Job 38. 33.

Let us therefore ſee,

1. How 'tis differenced from other ſtates of a Chriſtian.
2. What it is not.
3. What it is.

First, How it is differenced from the other ſtates of a Chriſtian.

1. It differs from Converſion. Regeneration is a Spiritual change, Converſion is a Spiritual motion. In Regeneration there is a power conferred; Converſion is the exerciſe of this power. In Regeneration there is given us a principle to turn; Converſion is our actual turning; that is the principle whereby we are brought out of a ſtate of Nature, into a ſtate of Grace: and Converſion the actual fixing on God, as the terminus ad quem. One gives poſſe agere, the other actu agere.

1. First, Converſion is related to Regeneration, as the effect to the cauſe. Life precedes motion, and is the cauſe of motion. In the Covenant, the New Heart, the New Spirit, and Gods putting his Spirit into them, is diſtinguiſht from their walking in his Statutes *, from the firſt ſtep we take in the way of God, and is ſet down as the cauſe of our motion: I will cauſe you to walk in my ſtatutes. In renewing us, God gives us a power: in converting us he excites that power. Men are naturally dead, and have a Stone upon them: Regeneration is a rouling away the Stone from the heart, and a raiſing to newneſs of life; and then Converſion is as natural to a regenerate man, as motion is to a living body. A principle of activity will produce action.

* Ezek. 36. 27.

2. In Regeneration, man is wholly paſſive: In Converſion, he is active: as a Child in its firſt formation in the Womb, contributes nothing to the firſt infuſion of life; but after it hath life, it is active, and its motion natural. The firſt reviving of us, is wholly the act of God, without any concurrence of the Creature; but after we are revived, we do actively and voluntarily live in his ſight *; he will revive us, he will raiſe us up, and then we ſhall live in his ſight, then we ſhall walk before him, then ſhall we follow on to know the Lord. Regeneration is the motion of God in the Creature; Converſion is the motion of the Creature to God, by vertue of that firſt principle; from this principle all the acts of believing, repenting, mortifying, quickning, do ſpring: In all theſe a man is active; In the other meerly paſſive; passive; all these are the acts of the Will, by the assisting Grace of God, after the infusion of the first Grace: Conversion is a giving our selves to the Lord *: giving our own selves to the Lord is a voluntary act, but the power whereby we are enabled thus to give our selves, is wholly and purely in every part of it from the Lord himself. A renewed man is said to be led by the Spirit, Rom. 8. 14. not dragged, not forced: the putting a bias and aptitude in the Will, is the work of the Spirit quickning it; but the moving the Will to God by the strength of this bias, is voluntary, and the act of the Creature. The Spirit leads as a Father doth a Child by the hand: the Father gave him that principle of life, and conducts him and hands him in his motion; but the Child hath a principle of motion in himself, and a Will to move. The day of Regeneration is solely the day of Gods power, wherein he makes men willing to turn to him *. So that tho in actual Conversion, the Creature be active, it is not from the power of man, tho it be from a power in man; not growing up from the impotent root of Nature, but setled there by the Spirit of God.

* Hoſ. 6. 2.

* 2 Cor. 8. 5. That place may be reduced to Conversion, though the proper meaning is not of Conversion.

* Psal. 110. 3.

2. It differs from justification. They agree in the term to which, that is God: by Justification we are reconciled to God; by Regeneration we are assimilated, made like to God. They alway go together. As our Saviours Resurrection, which was the Justification of him from that guilt which he had taken upon himself, and a publick pronouncing him to be his Righteous servant, is called a New begetting him, Acts 13. 33. God hath raised up Jesus again, as it is also written in the second Psalm: Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee: Because it was a manifestation of him to be the Son of God, who before, being covered with our infirmities, did not appear so to the World: so our justification from guilt, and new begetting us, and manifesting us to the Angels, to be the Sons of God, are at one and the same time, and both are by Grace; by grace you are Justified, Rom. 5. 1. the quickning and raising us together with Christ is by grace *. The blessing of Abraham, which is the application of Redemption from the curse of the Law, and the receiving the promise of the Spirit by Faith, are both together *.

* Eph. 2. 5, 6.

* Gal. 3. 14.

But 1. it differs from Justification in the nature of the change.

Justification is a relative change, whereby a man is brought from a state of Guilt, to a state of Righteousness; from a state of Slavery, to a state of Liberty; from the Obligation of the Covenant of Works, to the Priviledg of the Covenant of Grace; from being a Child of Wrath, to be an Heir of Promise. Regeneration is a Physical change, and real, as when a dead man is raised from death to life; 'tis a filling the Soul with another Nature, Eph. 2. 1. And you hath he quickned, who were dead in trespasses and sins: The Translators have inserted those words, hath he quickned, because those words are put in the 5th. verse, but methinks the words refer better to the 23. verse of the 1st. chapter, speaking of Christ, who fills all in all, and fills you too with a Spiritual life; or he passes from the power of God in raising Christ, to his power in raising us. 'Tis a change of Nature, and of that Nature whereby we are Children of Wrath, not only by the first sin, but by a conversation according to the course of the World. And this quickning respects the change of that Nature which was prone to a Worldly conversation, and a fulfilling the desires of the flesh. The first is a change of a mans condition, this a change in a mans dispostion. When a man is made a Magistrate, there is a change in his Relation; when a Servant or Slave is made a free-man, there is an alteration of his condition; but neither the ones Magistracy, nor the others Liberty, fills their hearts with new principles, or plants a new frame in their Nature. Relation and Nature are two distinct things. In Creation there is a relation of a Creature to God, which results from the meer being of the Creature: but there is also the Nature of the Creature in such a rank of Being, which is added over and above to its meer Being. The Apostle in the Verses following the Text, speaks of Reconciliation, or non-imputation of our Trespasses, as distinct from that change wrought in us in the New Creation. In Justification we are freed from the guilt of sin, and so have a title to life; in Regeneration we are freed from the filth of sin, and have the purity of Gods Image in part restored to us. Amen.

2. They differ in the cause, and other ways. Justification is the immediate fruit of the blood of Christ. Being justified by his blood *: Regeneration is by the immediate

* Rom. 5. 9.

2 Theſ. 2. 13. ate operation of the Spirit, therefore called the Sanctification of the Spirit; the matter of that is without us, the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt; the matter of the other within us, a gracious habit: The form of the one, is imputing; the form of the other, is infuſing or putting into us: they differ in the end; one is from Condemnation to Abſolution; the other from Pollution to Communion. In the immediate effect, one gives us a right, the other a fitneſs. In their qualities, the Righteouſneſs of one is perfect in our head, and imputed to us. The Righteouſneſs by Regeneration is actively in us, and aſpires to perfection.

3. It differs from Adoption. Adoption follows upon Juſtification, as a Dignity flowing from Union to Chriſt, and doth ſuppoſe Reconciliation. Adoption gives us the priviledg of Sons, Regeneration the Nature of Sons. Adoption relates us to God as a Father; Regeneration engraves upon us the lineaments of a Father.
* John 1. 12. That makes us relatively his Sons by conferring a power*. This makes us formally
‖ 1 Pet. 1. 23. his Sons by conveying a principle ‖. By that we are inſtated in the Divine Affection; by this we are partakers of the Divine Nature. Adoption doth not conſtitute us the Children of God by an intrinſick form, but by an extrinſick acceptation; but this gives us an intrinſick right; or Adoption gives us a title, and the Spirit gives us an earneſt; Grace is the pledg of Glory. Redemption being applied in Juſtification, makes way for Adoption. Adoption makes way for Regeneration, and is the foundation of it. Gal. 4. 5. God ſent forth his Son to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of ſons. And Verſe 6. becauſe you are ſons, God hath ſent forth the ſpirit of his ſon into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Becauſe you are thus Adopted, God will make you like his Son, by ſending forth the Spirit of his Son, to intimate the likeneſs it ſhall produce in the hearts of men to Chriſt, that you may cry, Abba, Father, behave your ſelves like Sons, and have recourſe to God with a Child-like Nature. The relation to Chriſt as Brethren is founded upon this New Creature, Heb. 2. 11. For both he that ſanctifies, and they who are ſanctified, are all of one: they are all of one Nature, not the Divine Nature which Chriſt had by Eternal Generation, but that Divine Nature Chriſt had by the Spirits Unction. And being of one Nature, he is not aſhamed, tho Glorious in Heaven, to call them Brethren; and being Chriſts Brethren by a Divine Nature, thence reſults alſo the relation of the Sons of God.

4. It differs from Sanctification. Habitual Sanctification indeed is the ſame thing with this New Creature; as habitual rectitude was the Spiritual life of Adam: but actual Sanctification, and the gradual progreſs of it, grows from this principle as from a root. Faith purifies the heart, Acts 15. 9. purifying their hearts by faith, and is the cauſe of this gradual Sanctification; but Faith is part of this New Creature, and that which is a part cannot be the cauſe of the whole, for then it would be the cauſe of it ſelf. We are not regenerated by Faith, tho we are Sanctified by Faith; but we are New Created by the Spirit of God, infuſing Faith into us. Faith produceth the acts of Grace, but not the habit of Grace, becauſe it is of it ſelf a part of this habit; for all Graces are but one in the habit or New Creature; Charity, and likewiſe every other Grace is but the bubbling up of a
* 1 Tim. 1. 5. pure Heart and good Conſcience*. Regeneration ſeems to be the life of this gradual Sanctification, the health and livelineſs of the Soul.

2. The ſecond thing propoſed, is, what it is not.

1. Tis not a removal or taking away of the old ſubſtance or faculties of the Soul. Some thought that the ſubſtance of Adam's Soul was corrupted when he ſinned, therefore ſuppoſe the ſubſtance of his Soul to be altered when he is renewed. Sin took not away the eſſence, but the rectitude; the New Creation therefore gives not a New Faculty, but a New Quality: The cure of the Leproſie is not a deſtroying of the Fabrick of the Body, but the Diſeaſe: yet in regard of the greatneſs of mans corruption, the Soul is ſo much changed by theſe New Habits, that it is as it were a New Soul, a New Underſtanding, a New Will. 'Tis not the deſtroying the Metal, but the Old Stamp upon it, to imprint a New: Humane Nature is preſerved, but the corruption in it expelled. The ſubſtance of Gold is not deſtroyed in the Fire, tho the Metal and the Flame mix together, and Fire ſeems to be incorporated with every part of it; but it is made more pliable to what ſhape the Artiſt will caſt it into, but remains Gold ſtill: 'Tis not the breaking the Candleſtick, but ſetting up a new light in it; not a deſtroying the will, but putting a new bias into it. 'Tis a new ſtringing the Inſtrument, to make a new harmony. 'Tis an humbling the loftineſs, and bowing down the haughtineſs of the Spirit, to exalt the Lord alone in the ſoul *, ſpeaking of the times of the Goſpel. The eſſential Nature of man, his Reaſon and Underſtanding, are not taken away, but rectified. As a Carver takes not away the Knots and Grain in the Wood, but plains, and ſmooths it, and carves the Image of a man upon it, the ſubſtance of the Wood remains ſtill; ſo God pares away the rugged pieces in man's Underſtanding and Will, and engraves his own Image upon it; but the change is ſo great, that the ſoul ſeems to be of another ſpecies and kind, becauſe it is acted by that Grace, which is another ſpecies from that principle which acted it before. New Creation is called a Reſurrection: Our Saviour in his Reſurrection, had the ſame body, but endued with a new quality. As in Chriſt's tranſfiguration *, neither his Deity nor Humanity were altered, both Natures remained the ſame. But there was a Metamorphoſis, and a glorious brightneſs conferred by the Deity upon the Humanity, which it did not partake of before. So tho the Eſſence of the Soul, and Faculties, remain the ſame; yet another kind of light is darted in, and other qualities implanted. It was the ſame Paul when he complied with the body of Death, and when he complained of it, but he had not the ſame Diſpoſition. As Adam in a ſtate of corruption, had the ſame Faculties for ſubſtance, which he had in the ſtate of Innocency; but the power, vertue, and form in thoſe Faculties, whereby he was acceptable to God, and in a capacity to pleaſe him, was wholly aboliſht. * We loſe not our ſubſtantial form, as Moſes his Rod did, when it was turned into a Serpent; or the Water at Cana, was turned into Wine. Our Nature is enobled, not deſtroyed; enricht, not ruined; reformed, not annihilated.

2. 'Tis not a change of the eſſential acts of the ſoul, as acts: The Paſſions and Affections are the ſame, as to the Subſtance and Nature of the Acts; but the difference lies in the Object. And acts, tho for ſubſtance the ſame, yet are ſpecifically diſtinguiſht by the diverſity of Objects about which they are converſant. Whatſoever is a commendable quality in Nature, and left in man, by the interpoſition of the Mediator, is not taken away; but the Principle, End, and Objects of thoſe acts, ariſing from thoſe reſtored qualities, are altered. * The acts of a renewed man, and the acts of a natural man, are the ſame in the Nature of acts; as when a man loves God, and fears God; or loves man, or fears man, 'tis the ſame act of love, and the ſame act of fear; there are the ſame motions of the ſoul, the ſame ſubſtantial acts ſimply conſidered; the ſoul ſtands in the ſame poſture in the one, as in the other; but the difference lies in the Objects; the Object of the one is ſupernatural, the Object of the other natural. As when a man walks to the Eaſt, or Weſt, 'tis the ſame motion in body and joynts, the ſame manner of going; yet they are contrary motions, becauſe the Terms to which they tend, are contrary one to the other: Or, as when we bleſs God, and bleſs Men, 'tis with one and the ſame Tongue that we do both; yet theſe are acts ſpecifically different, in regard of the difference of their Objects. The Nature of the Affections ſtill remain, tho not the corruption of them; and the Objects to which they are directed, are different. If a man be given to thoughtfulneſs, Grace removes not this Temper, but turns his Meditations to God. The ſolitarineſs of his Temper, is not altered, but ſomething new offered him, as the Object of his Meditation. If a man be hot and earneſt in his Temper, Grace takes not away this heat, but turns it into zeal to ſerve the Intereſt of God. Paul was a man of an active diſpoſition; this natural activity of his Diſpoſition and Temper, was not dammed up by Grace, but reduced to a right Channel, and pitched upon a right Object: As he laboured more than any in perſecuting, ſo afterwards he laboured more than any in edifying *: His labour was the ſame, and proceeded from the ſame Temper, but another principle in that Temper, and directed to another term. As it is the ſame Horſe, and the ſame Mettle in the Beaſt, which carries a man to his proper Stage, that carried him before in a wrong way, but it is turned in reſpect of the term. David's Poetical Fancy is not aboliſht by this new principle in him, but employed in deſcanting upon the praiſes of God, which otherwiſe might have been laviſht out in Vanity, and fooliſh Love-Songs, and deſcriptions of new Miſtreſſes. So that the ſubſtance and nature of the affections, and acts of a man remain: But anger is turned into zeal, by vertue of a new principle, grief into repentance, fear into the fear of God, carnal love into the love of the Creator, by another principle which doth byas thoſe acts.

3. 'Tis not an excitation, or awakening of ſome gracious principle, which lay hid before in Nature, under the oppreſſion of ill habits: As Corn lay hid under the Chaff, but was Corn ſtill. Not a beating up ſomething that lay ſculking in Nature; not an awakening, as of a man from ſleep; but a Reſurrection, as of a man from Death; a new creation, as of a man from nothing. 'Tis not a ſtirring up old principles, and new kindling of them; as a Candle put out lately, may be blown in again by the fire remaining in the ſnuff, and burn upon the old ſtock; or as the life, which retired into the more ſecret parts of the body, in thoſe creatures that ſeem dead in Winter; which is excited, and called out to the extream parts, by the Spring-Sun. Indeed there are ſome ſparks of Moral Vertues in Nature, which want blowing up by a good Education; the Foundation of theſe is in Nature, the exciting of them from inſtruction, the perfection of them from uſe and exerciſe. But there is not in man the ſeed of one Grace, but the ſeeds of all Sin, Rom. 7. 18. I know, that in me, that is, in my fleſh, dwells no good thing. Some good thing may be in me, but it ariſeth not from my fleſh; 'tis not from any ſeed ſown by Nature; but it is another principle put into me, which doth ſeminally contain in it, all Grace; 'tis a putting a new ſeed into the ſoil, and exciting it to grow; an incorruptible ſeed *. Therefore the Scripture doth not repreſent men in a Trance, or Sleep, but dead: and ſo it is not only an awakening, but a quickning, a Reſurrection ||. We are juſt in this work, as our Saviour was when the Devil came againſt him, John 14. 30. The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me. He had nothing to work upon in Chriſt. But he rakes in the Aſhes of our Nature, and finds ſparks enough to blow upon: But the Spirit finds nothing in us, but a ſtump, ſome confuſed deſires for Happineſs: he brings all the fire from Heaven, wherewith our hearts are kindled. This work therefore is not an awakening of good Habits, which lay before oppreſt, but a taking off thoſe ill Habits, which were ſo far from oppreſſing Nature, that they were connatural to it, and by incorporation, with it, had quite altered it from that original rectitude and ſimplicity wherein God at firſt created it.

|| Eph. 2. 5. Col. 2. 12. Eph. 1. 19, 20.

4. Nor is it an addition to Nature. Chriſt was not an addition to Adam, but a new Head by himſelf, called Adam, in regard of the agreement with him in the notion of an Head and common perſon. So neither is the new Creature, or Chriſt formed in the ſoul, an addition to Nature. Grace grows not upon the old ſtock. 'Tis not a piece of cloath ſowed to an old Garment, but the one is caſt aſide, the other wholly taken on; not one Garment put upon another, but a taking off one, and a putting on another, Col. 3. 9, 10. putting off the old man, putting on the new man. 'Tis a taking away what was before; old things are paſt away, and beſtowing ſomething that had no footing before. 'Tis not a new Varniſh, nor do old things remain under a new Paint; not new Plaiſter laid upon old; a new creature, not a mended creature. It is called light, which is not a quality added to darkneſs, but a quality that expels it: 'Tis a taking away the ſtony heart, and putting an heart of fleſh in the room *. The old Nature remains, not in its ſtrength with this addition, but is crucified, and taken away in part with its Attendants, Gal. 5. 24. They that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts. As in the Cure of a man, Health is not added to the Diſeaſe; or in Reſurrection, Life added to Death; but the Diſeaſe is expelled, Death removed, and another form and habit ſet in the place. Add what you will, without introducing another form, it will be of no more efficacy, than Flowers and Perfumes ſtrowed upon a dead carcaſs, can reſtore it to life, and remove the rottenneſs. Nothing is the terminus a quo, in creation: It ſuppoſeth nothing before, as a Subject capable: nothing in a natural man, is a Subject morally capable to have Grace, without the expulſion of the old corrupt Nature. 'Tis called a new creature, a new man; not an improved creature, or a new dreſt man.

* Ezek. 36. 26.

5. It

5. It is not external Baptiſm. Many men take their Baptiſm for Regeneration. The Ancients uſually give it this Term. One calls our Saviour's Baptiſm, his Regeneration *. This confers not Grace, but engageth to it: Outward Water cannot convey inward Life. How can Water, a material thing, work upon the ſoul in a phyſical manner? Neither can it be proved, that ever the Spirit of God is tied by any promiſe, to apply himſelf to the ſoul in a gracious Operation, when Water is applied to the body. If it were ſo, that all that were baptized, were regenerate; then all that were baptized, would be ſaved; or elſe the Doctrine of perſeverance falls to the ground. Baptiſm is a means of conveying this Grace, when the Spirit is pleaſed to operate with it. But it doth not work as a Phyſical cauſe, upon the ſoul, as a Purge doth upon the Humors of the body: For 'tis the Sacrament of Regeneration, as the Lord's Supper is of nouriſhment. As a man cannot be ſaid to be nouriſhed without Faith, ſo he cannot be ſaid to be a new creature without Faith. Put the moſt delicious meat into the mouth of a dead man, you do not nouriſh him, becauſe he wants a principle of life to concoct and digeſt it. Faith only is the principle of ſpiritual life, and the principle which draws nouriſhment from the means of God's appointment. Some indeed ſay, that Regeneration is conferred in Baptiſm upon the Elect, and exerts it ſelf afterwards in Converſion. But how ſo active a principle as a ſpiritual life, ſhould lye dead, and aſleep ſo long, even many Years which intervene between Baptiſm and Converſion, is not eaſily conceivable.

* Clem Alex. Pedagog. lib. 3. cap. 6. p. 68.

3. Let us ſee what it is poſitively.

1. It is a change; and as to the kind of it, it is,

1. A real change; real from Nature to Grace, as well as by Grace. The term of creation is real: The form introduced in the new Creature, is as real as the form introduced by Creation, into any being. Scripture-terms manifeſt it ſo. A Divine Nature, the Image of God, a Law put into the heart, they are not nominal and notional: 'Tis a reality the ſoul partakes of; it gives a real denomination, a new man, a new heart, a new ſpirit, a new creature *, ſomething of a real exiſtence; 'tis called a Reſurrection, John 5. 25. The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear ſhall live. If Chriſt had ſaid only, that the hour ſhall come, it had been meant of the laſt Reſurrection; but ſaying, that it was already come, it muſt be meant of a Reſurrection in this life. There is as real a Reſurrection of the Soul, by the Trumpet of the Goſpel, accompanied with the vigorous efficacy of the Holy Ghoſt, as there ſhall be of Bodies by the Voice of the Son of God, at the ſound of the Trumpet of the Archangel. All real Operations ſuppoſe ſome real form whence they flow: as Viſion ſuppoſeth a power whereby a man ſees, and alſo a Nature wherein that power is rooted. The Operations of a new Creature are real; and therefore ſuppoſe a real power to act, and a real habit as the ſpring of them. 'Tis ſuch a being, that enables them to produce real ſpiritual actions; for the ſpirit of power is conveyed to them *; whereby as when they were out of Chriſt, they were able to do nothing; ſo now being in him, they are able to do all things ||.

* 2 Tim. 1. 7.

|| Phil. 4. 13.

2. 'Tis a common change to all the children of God. If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: Every man in Chriſt is ſo. 'Tis peculiar to them, and common to all of them. The new Creation gives being to all Chriſtians. 'Tis a new being ſetled in them, a new Impreſs and Signature ſet upon them, whereby they are diſtinguiſht from all men, barely conſidered in their Naturals. As all of the ſame Species have the ſame Nature; as all Men have the Nature of Men, all Lyons the Nature of Lyons; ſo all Saints agree in one Nature: The Life of God is communicated to all, whoſe Names are written in the Book of Life. All Believers, thoſe in Africa, as well as thoſe in Europe; thoſe in Heaven, as well as thoſe on Earth, have the ſame eſſential Nature and Change. As they are all of one Family, all acted by one Spirit, the heart of one anſwers to the heart of another, as face to face in a Glaſs. What is a Spirit of Adoption in them below, is a Spirit of Glory in them above; what in the renewed man below, is a Spirit crying, Abba Father; that is in them above, a Spirit rejoycing in Abba Father.

3. It is a change quite contrary to the former frame. What more contrary to light than darkneſs? ſuch a change it is *, inſtead of a black darkneſs, there is a bright light. As contrary as fleſh and Spirit *; that which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh; that which is born of the ſpirit, is ſpirit. Where both are put in the abſtract, one is the compoſition of fleſh, the other of Spirit: As contrary as Eaſt to Weſt; as the Seed of the Woman to the Seed of the Serpent; as the ſpirit of the World, and the Spirit of God. The frame of the heart before the New Creation, and the frame of the heart after, bear as great a diſtance from one another as Heaven from Earth. As God and ſin are the moſt contrary to one another: So an affection to God, and an affection to ſin are the moſt contrary affections. 'Tis quite another bent of heart, as if a man turn from North to South. 'Tis a poſition quite contrary to what it was: the heart touched by Grace, ſtands full to God, as before to ſin, 'tis ſtript of its perverſe inclinations to ſin, clothed with holy affections to God: he abhors what before he loved, and loves what before he abhorred: he was alienated from the life of God, but now alienated from the life of his Luſts: nothing would before ſerve him, but Gods departure from him; nothing will now pleaſe him, but Gods rays upon him. He was before tired with Gods ſervice, now tired with his own ſin. Before, crucifying the motions of the Spirit, now crucifying the Affections and Luſts. That which was before his life and happineſs, is now his death and miſery; he diſaffects his fooliſh paſtimes and ſinful pleaſures, as much as a man doth the follies of his childhood; and is as cheerful in loathing them, as before he was jolly in committing them. 'Tis a tranſlation from one Kingdom to another; Coloſ. 1. 13. a tranſlation from the power of darkneſs, into the kingdom of his dear ſon. Μετίστασις, a word taken from the tranſplanting of Colonies: they are in a contrary Soil and Climate, they have other Works, other Laws, other Priviledges, other Natures: As Chriſts Reſurrection was a ſtate quite contrary to the former; at the time of his Death he was in a ſtate of guilt by reaſon of our ſin; at his his Reſurrection he is freed from it; he was before made under the Law, he is then freed from the curſe of it; he was before in a ſtate of Death, after his Reſurrection in a ſtate of Life, and lives for ever. God pulls out the heart of ſtone, that inflexibleneſs to him and his ſervice; and plants a heart of fleſh in the room, a pliableneſs to him and his will *. 'Tis as great a change, as when a Wolf is made a Lamb, that Wolviſh Nature is loſt, and the Lamb-like Nature introduced. * By corruption man was carnal and brutiſh; by the New Creation he is Spiritual and Divine; by Corruption he hath the Image of the Devil; by this he is reſtored to the Image of God; by that he had the Seeds of all Villanies; by this the Roots of all Graces: that made us fly from God, this makes us return to him; that made us Enemies to his Authority; this ſubjects us to his Government; that made us contemn his Law; this makes us prize and obey it. Inſtead of the thorn, there ſhall come up the fir-tree; inſtead of the briar ſhall come up the mirtle-tree, and God will preſerve it from being cut off, Iſa. 55. 13. ſpeaking of the time of Redemption.

* Eph. 5. 8.
* John 3. 6.
* Ezek. 36. 26.
* Sabunde tit. 275. p. 585.

4. 'Tis a univerſal change of the whole man. 'Tis a New Creature, not only a New Power, or New Faculty: this, as well as Creation, extends to every part, Underſtanding, Will, Conſcience, Affections, all were corrupted by ſin, all are renew by Grace. Grace ſets up its Enſigns in all parts of the Soul, ſurveys every corner, and triumphs over every lurking Enemy; 'tis as large in renewing, as ſin was in defacing. The whole Soul ſhall be Glorified in Heaven; therefore the whole Soul ſhall be beautified by Grace. The beauty of the Church is deſcribed in every part, Can. 4. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c.

* Can. 4. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c.

1. This New Creation bears reſemblance to Creation and Generation. God in Creation creates all parts of the Creature intire. When Nature forms a Child in the Womb, it doth not only faſhion one part, leaving the other imperfect; but labours about all, to form an intire man: the Spirit is buſy about every part in the formation of the New Creature. Generation gives the whole ſhape to the Child, unleſs it be monſtrous. God doth not produce monſters in Grace; there is the whole ſhape of the New Man. You miſtake much, if you reſt in a Reformation of one part only; God will ſay, Such a work was none of my Creation. He doth not do things by halves.

2. It

2. It bears proportion to Corruption: As ſin expelled the whole frame of Original Righteouſneſs; ſo Regenerating Grace expels the whole frame of Original Corruption. It was not only the head, or only the heart, only the underſtanding, or only the will, that was overcaſt with the blackneſs of ſin; but every part of Man did loſe its Original rectitude. Not a faculty could boaſt it ſelf, like the Phariſee, and ſay, It was not like this or that Publican; the waves of ſin had gone over the heads of every one of them. Sin, like Leaven, had infected the whole Maſs; Grace over-ſpreads every faculty to drive out the Contagion. Grace is compared to Light, and Light is more or leſs in every part of the Air above the Horizon, for the expulſion of Darkneſs when the Sun ariſeth. The Spirit is compared to Fire, and therefore pierceth every part with its warmth, as heat diffuſeth it ſelf from the Fire to every part of Water. The Natural Man is denominated from Corruption, not an old underſtanding, or an old Will, but the old man *. So a Regenerate Man is not called a New Underſtanding, or a New Will, but a New Man ‖. * Eph. 4. 22. ‖ Eph. 4. 24.

3. The proper ſeat of Grace is the ſubſtance of the Soul, and therefore it influences every faculty. * 'Tis the form whence the perfection both of Underſtanding and Will do flow; 'tis not therefore placed in either of them, but in the eſſence of the Soul. 'Tis by this the Union is made between God and the Soul; but the Union is not of one particular faculty, but of the whole Soul. He that is joyned to the Lord, is one ſpirit; 'tis not one particular faculty that is perfected by Grace, but the ſubſtance of the Soul. Beſides, that is the ſeat of Grace which is the ſeat of the Spirit; but this or that particular faculty is not the ſeat of the Holy Ghoſt, but the Soul it ſelf, whence the Spirit rules every particular faculty by aſſiſting Grace, like a Monarch in the Metropolis ſending Orders to all parts of his Dominions. The Spirit is ſaid to dwell in a man *, in the whole man, as the Soul doth in the Body, in forming every part of it; if it dwelt only in one faculty, there could be no Spiritual motion of the other; the principles in the Will would contradict thoſe in the Underſtanding; the Will would act blindly, if there were no Spiritual Light in the Underſtanding to guide it: the light of the Underſtanding would be uſeleſs, if there were no inclination in the Will to follow it; and Grace in both thoſe faculties would ſignify little, if there remained an oppoſing perverſity in the Affections. The Spirit therefore is in the whole Soul, like fire in the whole piece of Iron, quickning, warming, mollifying, making flexible, and conſuming what is contrary: like Aarons Ointment, poured upon the heart, and thence runs down to the skirts of the Soul. * Suarez, de gra. l. 6. c. 12. Numb. 13, 14. 'Tis the heart to which the Spirit is directed in his Commiſſion to us. * Gal. 4. 4. Rom. 8. 9.

4. Therefore there is a gracious harmony in the whole man. As in Generation two forms cannot remain in the ſame ſubject: for in the ſame inſtant wherein the New Form is introduced, the Old is caſt out: So at the firſt moment of infuſing Grace, the Body of Death hath its deadly wound in every faculty, Underſtanding, Will, Conſcience, Affection. The rectitude reaches every part; and all the powers of the Soul by a ſtrong combination, by one common principle of Grace acting them, conſpire together to be ſubject to the Law of God, and advance in the ways of holineſs, Pſal. 119. 10. 'tis with the whole heart that God is ſought. In the underſtanding there is light inſtead of darkneſs, whereby it yields to the Wiſdom of God, and ſearches into the Will of God; the ſpirit of the mind is renewed *. In the will there is ſoftneſs inſtead of hardneſs, humility inſtead of pride, whereby it yields to the Will of God, and cloſes with the Law of God. In the Heart and Conſcience, there is purity inſtead of filth (whereby it is purged from dead works ‖, ſetled againſt the approbation of ſin) and a reſolution to be void of offence *. In the affections there is love inſtead of enmity, delight inſtead of wearineſs, whereby they yield to the pleaſure of God, have flights into the boſom of God; oh how love I thy Law! 'tis my delight day and night. The memory is a repoſitory for the Precepts and Promiſes of God, as the choiceſt Treaſure. 'Tis a likeneſs to Chriſt; the whole humane Nature of Chriſt was Holy, every faculty of his Soul, every member of his Body, his Nature Holy, his Heart Holy. If we are not ſo formed, Chriſt is not formed in us: look therefore whether your Reformation you reſt in, be in the whole, and in every part of the Soul. * Eph. 4. 23. ‖ Heb. 9. 14. * Acts 24. 16.

5. 'Tis principally an inward change. 'Tis as inward as the ſoul it ſelf. Not only a cleanſing the outſide of the Cup and Platter, a painting over the Sepulcher, but a caſting out the dead bones, and putrified fleſh; of a Nature different from a Phariſaical and Hypocritical change *. 'Tis a clean heart David deſires; not only clean hands *. If it were not ſo, there could be no outward rectified change. The Spring and Wheels of the Clock muſt be mended, before the Hand of the Dial will ſtand right. It may ſtand right Two Hours in the day, when the time of the day comes to it; but not from any motion, or rectitude in it ſelf. So a man may ſeem by One or Two Actions, to be a changed man; but the inward Spring being amiſs, 'tis but a deceit. Sometimes there may be a change, not in the heart, but in the things which the heart was ſet upon, when they are not what they were: As a man whoſe heart was ſet upon uncleanneſs, change of Beauty may change his Affection; the change is not in the Man, but in the Object. But this change I ſpeak of, is a change in the Mind, when there is none in the Object; as the affection of a child to his Trifles, changeth with the growth of his Reaſon, tho the things his heart was ſet upon, remain in the ſame condition as before.

* Mat. 23. 25, 26, 27.
* Pſal. 51. 10.

(1.) 'Tis a change of Principle.
(2.) A change of End.

(1.) A change of Principle. The Principle of a natural man in his religious actions, is artificial; he is wound up to ſuch a peg, like the ſpring of an Engine, by ſome outward reſpects which pleaſe him: But as the motion of the Engine ceaſeth, when the ſpring is down; ſo a natural man's motion holds no longer than the delight thoſe motions gave him, which firſt engaged him in it. But the principle in a good man, is ſpirit, an internal principle; and the firſt motion of this principle is towards God, to act from God, and to act for God. He fetches his Fire from Heaven, to kindle his ſervice: an heat and fervency of Spirit precedes his ſerving the Lord *. There may be a ſerving God from an outward heat, conveying a vigor and activity to a man; but the new creature ſerves God from inward, and heated affections. Examine therefore, by what principles do I hear, and pray, and live, and walk? For all acts are good or evil, as they ſavour of a good or bad root, or principle in the heart. The Two principles of the new Creature, are Faith and Love. What is called the new Creature, Gal. 6. 15. is called faith working by love, Gal. 5. 6.

* Rom. 12. 11.

Faith is a part of this new creature. The new creature it ſelf is the prime root of all motion.

(1.) Faith: This is the firſt diſcovery of all ſpiritual life within us; and therefore the immediate principle of all ſpiritual motion. A ſplendid action without Faith, is but moral; whereas one of a leſs glittering, is ſpiritual with it. The new creature being begotten by the ſeed of the Word, and having thereby an Evangelical frame, hath therefore that which is the prime Evangelical Grace, upon which all other Graces grow; and conſequently all the acts of the new creature ſpring from this principle immediately; viz. Faith in the Precept, as a Rule; Faith in the Promiſe, as an encouragement; Faith in the Mediator, as a ground of acceptation. Therefore if we have not Faith in the Precept, tho we may do a ſervice not point-blank againſt the Precept, yet it is not a ſervice according to a divine Rule; if we have not Faith in the Promiſe, we do it not upon divine motives; if we act not Faith in the Redeemer, we deſpiſe the way of God's ordaining the preſentation of our ſervice to him. All thoſe that you find, Heb. 11. acting from Faith, had ſometimes a Faith in the power of God, ſometimes in the faithfulneſs of God; but they had not only a Faith in the particular Promiſe, or Precept, but it was ultimately reſolved into the promiſe of the Meſſiah to come, ver. 14. Thoſe all died in faith, not having received the promiſes, but having ſeen them afar off, &c. The performance of particular promiſes, they had received; but not the performance of this grand promiſe; but that their Faith reſpected: They, as new Creatures, did all in obſervance of God promiſing the Mediator: and we are to do all in obſervance of God ſending the Mediator, being perſwaded of the agreeableneſs of our ſervices to him, upon the account of the Command; and of the acception of our ſervices by him, upon the account of the Mediator. This put a difference between Paul's Prayer, after the infusion of Grace into him, and before; so that our Saviour sets a particular Emphasis upon it, Acts 9. 11. Behold he prays. Paul, no doubt, had prayed many times before his believing, but nothing of that kind was put upon the File, as a Prayer: Before, they were Prayers of a self-righteous Pharisee, but these of an Evangelical Convert; These were Prayers springing from a flexibleness to Christ, a faith in him; from a Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?

(2.) Love. There are many principles of Action, hope of Heaven, fear of Hell, Reputation, Interest, force of natural Conscience, some of those are inward, some outward, which are the Bellows that blow up a man to some fervency in action; but the true Fire that contributes an heavenly frame to a service, is the Love of God. The desire of the heart is carried out to God; his heart draws near to God, because his sole delight is in God, and his sole desire for him, Psal. 73. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? Then Verse 28. But it is good for me to draw near to God. This choice affection in the new Creature, spirits his services, makes his soul spring up with a wonderful livelineſs. The new Creation is the restoration of the soul to God from its Apostacy; a casting down those rebellious principles which contended with him, and reducing his affections to the right Center; and when all the lines meet here in one Center, in God, all the returns to him flow from this affection. 'Tis but one thing setled in the soul, as the Object of its earnest desire; and that should be the spring of all its enquiries and actions, the beholding the beauty of the Lord *. Things may be done out of a common affection; as when a man will raise a child fallen into the dirt, out of a common tenderness; but a Father would raise him with more natural affection, which is a sphear above that common compassion. Every affection therefore, is not the renewed principle, but a choice affection to God. This is a mighty ingredient in this change, and doth difference the new creature from all others. One acts out of affection to God, the other out of affection to self. Men may be offended with sin, because it disturbs their Ease, Health, Estate, &c. He may pray, and hear, meerly out of a respect to natural Conscience: but how can these be the acts of the new creature, when there is no respect to God in all this? But a new creature would quench the fire of corrupt self-love, to burn only with a spiritual and divine flame: He depresseth the one to exalt the other, and would be disengaged from the burdensome chains of self-love, that he might be moved only by the spiritual charms of the other purer affection: 'Tis a death to him to have any steams of self-love rise up to smoak and black a service.

* Psal. 27. 4.

2. A change of end, as well as principle. The Glory of God is the end of the new Creature, Self the end of the old Man. Before this new Creation, a man's end was to please Self; now his end is to please God. A man that delights in Knowledg, to pleasure his Understanding, and for self-improvement, when he becomes a new creature, tho his desire for knowledg is not removed, yet his end is changed, and he thirsts after knowledg, not meerly to please his inquisitive disposition, but to admire and praise God, and direct himself in ways agreeable to him: As the end of the Sensualist, is to taste the sweetness in pleasure; so the end of a renewed man, is to know more of God, to taste a sweetness in him, and in every religious duty. This is the distinguishing character of the new Creature. This design for the Glory of God, was not to be found among any of the Heathens, who were so great admirers of Vertue. Most of them intended only an acquiring a Reputation among their Countrey men: And tho some of them might esteem Vertue for its native dignity, yet this was to esteem it by the moyety of it, when they referred it not to the Honour of God, from whence it flowed to the World. Man was not created for himself, and to be his own end: He therefore that doth chiefly aim at his own satisfaction in any thing, is not a new Creature; he hath his old deformed end into which he sunk by the Fall. But Grace carries a man higher, and reduceth all to God, and to his well-pleasing. Col. 1. 9, 10. the Apostle desires they may be filled with the knowledg of the will of God, that they may walk worthy of the Lord, unto all well pleasing. The very first motion of this new principle, is towards God, to act for God. As the firſt appearance of a living ſeed in the Ground, is towards Heaven; thither it caſts its look, from whence its life came. What the new creature receives, is as from God, 1 Theſ. 2. 13. They received it as the word of God; and therefore what he doth is for God.

(1.) The principal intent of God in the new creation, is for himſelf, Hoſea 2. 23. I will ſow her to me; ſpeaking of the Church in the time of the Goſpel: Not to ſin, not to the World, not for her ſelf; but I will ſow her to me. Husbandmen ſow the ground for themſelves, for their own uſe, to reap the Harveſt; and the Corn grows up to the Husbandman that ſow'd it. What the ſeed doth naturally, the new creature doth intentionally, grow up for God. Since the new creature is a divine infuſion, it muſt needs carry the ſoul to pleaſe God, and aim at his Glory. God would never put a principle into the Creature, to drive it from himſelf, and conduct it to his own diſhonour: This conſiſts not with God's righteouſneſs; this would be a deceit of the creature. 'Tis impoſſible, but that which is from God in ſo peculiar a manner, and with gracious intentions to reſtore the creature to his happineſs, muſt tend to the advancement of God. Where there are no aims at the divine Glory, there is no divine Nature, nothing in the ſoul that can claim kindred with God. Regeneration is a forming the ſoul for God's ſelf, and to ſhow forth his praiſe *. Hence they are ſaid to be a peculiar people, in reſpect of their end, as well as their ſtate. Certainly that man, who makes not God his pattern, and his end, that doth not advance the praiſe and glory of God, was never new formed by him. What comes from God, muſt naturally tend to him. Is it poſſible, that the living Image of God, ſhould diſgrace the Original? that a divine impreſſion ſhould be unconcerned in the divine honour?

* Iſa. 43. 21.

(2.) The new creation is an Evangelical Impreſſion, and therefore correſponds in its intention with the Goſpel. This is the inſtrument whereby the new creature was wrought; and this was appointed and publiſhed for the glory of God; Glory to God in the higheſt *. 'Tis to promote holineſs in the creature, which is the only way whereby we can honour God: This is the prime Leſſon the Grace or Goſpel of God teaches, to live godly ‖; to live to God: What therefore is produced by the efficacy of ſuch an inſtrument, cannot but aim at the glory of God, which was intended in it: Otherwiſe the Goſpel would work an effect contrary to it ſelf, which no inſtrument doth produce, when managed by a wiſe Agent; and contrary to the end of the Agent too; viz. the Spirit of God, whoſe end is to glorifie Chriſt, John 16. 14. He ſhall glorifie me. The frame and acts of a renewed man, are like the Grain, or Seed of the Word ſown in the heart. Nothing the Goſpel deſigns more than the laying ſelf low, even as low as duſt and death. The firſt Leſſon is Self-denial. 'Tis in ſelf that the ſtrength and heart of the body of ſin and luſt lies: And it is the principal end of the Goſpel, to bring the creature to ſacrifice ſelf-love to righteouſneſs, ſelf-intereſt, ſelf-contentment, wholly to God, and his Law, and his Love, that God may be all in all in the creature. Before the heart was touched with the Goſpel, it had not the leaſt impulſe to bring forth the Vertues and Excellencies of God into the World; but when it is changed, 'tis filled to the brim with zealous deſires to have his Name exalted upon an high Throne among men.

* Luke 2. 14.

‖ Tit. 2. 12.

(3.) A new creation is the bringing forth the ſoul in a likeneſs to God. The end therefore of the new creature, is the Glory of God. As God is the cauſe, ſo he is the pattern of the new creature, according to which he doth frame the ſoul; 'tis after God, created in righteouſneſs, &c. *. There can be no likeneſs to God, where the Creature diſſents from him in the chief end. Without ſuch an agreement, there can be nothing but variance between God and the Creature. All the Commotions and Quarrels upon Earth, are founded upon the difference of ends. God aims at his own Glory; ſo doth the new creature; otherwiſe it were impoſſible he ſhould walk with God, or follow him, as a dear child. It conſiſts alſo in a likeneſs to Chriſt: His Reſurrection is the pattern, and cauſe of our Regeneration; Ye are riſen with Chriſt *; What, to contrary ends? Did Chriſt riſe only to live to himſelf? No; but to live to God, as the great end for which he was appointed Mediator. Did he deſign to glorifie God on Earth, and doth he live live to dishonour God in Heaven? No, he lives to the same end there, for which he lived and died here. Our spiritual Resurrection, is not only a restoring us to a spiritual life, but to the ends of this life, a living to God, and Christ, and to the ends of his mediation. Surely the new creature cannot be so brutish, as not to mind the honour of that Nature, to which it is so near allied, the glory of that God, unto whom it hath the honour to bear a resemblance. A new creature hath a mighty sprightliness, and a height of spirit in some measure, when any thing in his hands concerns God, more than when it concerns himself; for his will being framed according to the will of God, is filled with an ambition for the promoting the Excellency of his Name.

* Eph. 4. 24.

(4.) The end of the new Creation is to advance the soul. It can never be advanced by an end lower than it self, or equal to it self. Any Interest lower than God, would be a degrading of it, a disparagement to its state, and too sordid for the soul to drive at; for it is the excellency, or sordidness of the end, which doth elevate, or debase a man's Spirit, and his Action also: The one enlargeth, the other shrivels up the soul in its operation. All things below God, are unworthy of the boundless Nature of the soul of man, much more unworthy of a soul rectified by a new Creation. The soul is only perfected in a tendency to this end, and disgraced and lost in the mud and dirt of lower aims. That Grace that is most durable, and doth most ennoble the Spirit of a man, has this property, that it seeks not her own *, nor vaunts it self. * 1 Cor. 13. 4, 5.

(5.) 'Tis impossible the soul can have this new creation, without a change of end. It is not conceivable, how any thing can return to that, which it doth not eye as its end. The Soul, as deriving its Original from God, hath an obligation in all its motions, to return to him, as its chief end. The new creature hath an higher obligation by Grace. Doth that therefore deserve the Name of the New Creature, that is so far from answering a gracious tye, that it doth not so much as answer a natural one? That is yet below the sphere of inanimate Creatures, who all run back to their Fountain, and one way or other, declare the glory of Gods. He is no new creature therefore, who is devotedly fawning upon himself, caressing himself: He is one that is yet bemired in his old Nature, and hath not yet partaked of the Fruit of Christ's Purchase, redeeming and renewing Grace. Those that are under the efficacious influence of it, and are the Temple of the holy Spirit, do glorifie God in their body and spirit too, inwardly as well as outwardly, because they are God's *. The Understanding and Will, are both elevated by Grace. The more intelligent any creature is, the more noble is his end, or ought to be; and the more he doth intend his end. The aim of a man, is higher than that of a child: The aims of men in this or that station, are still more noble than the ends of men in a lower rank. Since the new Creation therefore, endues man with the most excellent Nature he is capable of, it must fix a man upon the most excellent end, which is God and his Glory; it were not else a new creature, or worthy of such a Title. * 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20.

6. This change of end doth only fit the soul for its proper service. From this end doth arise a quickness, and an heartiness in every service. When God and his Glory is not our end, our Hearts flag, and we feel our Spirits tired at our entrance into any service for him. When the Apostle had made the Glory of God his end, in testifying the Gospel of the Grace of God, then his life was not counted dear to him, that he might finish this course with joy *. Where this end sits uppermost in the heart, all allurements to the contrary, are mightily despised. What a scornful eye doth the Apostle cast upon all other things? and sets no higher a value upon them, than he would upon dross and dung, when they were not conducing to his main end, which was the knowledg of Christ *. * Acts 20. 24. * Phil. 3. 8, 10.

Well then: this is one of the most essential properties of the new creature, and that which is the cleerest discovery of this state. A new creature is as earnest in secret, for the glory of God, and as industrious for God, as if the eyes of all the World were upon him; the bent of his heart alway stands this way; he glorifies God in his spirit, as well as body *. When men will be zealous in things that concern God, before men, and negligent in their Spirits, and inward part of the Soul, then the glory of God was not their end, but themselves. For what is a * 1 Cor. 6. 20.

man's end, ſets an edg upon his Spirit in private, as well as publick. But a new creature is of another frame, when he finds that he hath miſſed of his full aim, and hath not had that ſingle reſpect as he ought, he is unſatisfied, and troubled, that God hath been no more glorified by him. But he that is not renewed, is well pleaſed, if any concerns of ſelf have been advanced, tho God be not glorified; and his ſoul is at reſt in that act, as it hath lived to himſelf, and brought in ſomething to increaſe the treaſure of his ſelf-ends.

(3.) As it is an inward change, in reſpect of Principle and End; ſo Thirdly, 'tis a change of Thoughts. Being new, he is new in the choiceſt Faculty. As when he was after the fleſh, he minded the things of the fleſh; ſo now being after the ſpirit, he minds the things of the ſpirit *. As a child hath not the thoughts of a man, ſo neither hath a natural man the thoughts of a new creature. A Principle is placed in his Underſtanding, which doth emit other Beams different from that ſmoaky light, which was in it before. Tho a new creature cannot hinder the firſt motions; yet he endeavours to ſuppreſs their proceeding any further, and excites others in his heart, to make head againſt them; and would, as far as he could, hinder the riſing of any Wave, the leaſt bubbling againſt right Reaſon, and the Intereſt of God. When David had an inclination in his heart to God's Statutes, the immediate effect of it, is to hate vain thoughts, Pſal. 119. 112, 113. I have inclined my heart to perform thy ſtatutes: And it follows, I hate vain thoughts. The vanity of his heart was a burden to him, and he loathed all the inward excreſcencies, any buds from that bitter ſtump he ſtill bore within him. A new creature is as careful againſt wickedneſs in the Head or Heart, as in the Life. He would be purer in the ſight of God, than in the view of Men: He knows none but God can ſee the workings of his heart, or the thoughts of his head; yet he is as careful that they ſhould not riſe up, as that they ſhould not break out. The ſoul is ſo changed, that it is no longer a ſtranger, and ill-willer to the motions of the Spirit; it will welcome them upon their entrance, conduct them into the innermoſt room, converſe familiarly with them, and delight in their company: It invites their ſtay, purſues them when they ſeem to depart, holds them faſt, and will not let them go, as the Church doth to Chriſt. He turns much in upon himſelf, ſets his eye upon his own heart, keeps that with all diligence, to obſerve what Iſſues of a ſpiritual life are there; as it is directed in Prov. 4. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the iſſues of life. If he perceives any Weeds to ſpring up there, or Muſhromes (as they will in a night), he cuts them up, and throws them out. The Underſtanding is more quick and ſenſible, to diſcern them in the firſt riſings, to receive good ones, or check bad ones, than it was before: The new creature is ſenſible of any touch contrary to its Intereſt. A corrupt Mind draws to it the vileſt things, and unproportionable to the true Nature of the Soul, as a corrupt Stomach doth unwholeſome food; till by a new Creation it be ſet higher, and by a ſanctified Reaſon becomes more choice about its Objects; and then like David, the heart is filled as with marrow and fatneſs, when he meditates on God in the night-watches *. The thoughts of God are an inward ſpring of pleaſure to him, more than the thoughts of ſin can be to a deformed and depraved Soul.

* Rom. 8. 5.

* Pſal. 63. 5, 6.

4. Change of comforts follows upon this. Since there is a change of Nature, there is a change of his Complacency. The former Nature is his trouble; therefore all his delights which ariſe from it, are its diſcontents and burden. Every Nature hath a peculiar pleaſure belonging to it: The Nature of a Dove, will not acquieſce in that which pleaſes a Swine; nor the New Nature in that which pleaſed the Old. The comforts of Manhood are of another make than thoſe of a Child; and the comforts of a Prince more elevated than thoſe of a Peaſant, becauſe he hath another Spirit. That Spirit who is appointed to renew him, is appointed an Officer to comfort him: As therefore he gives him new Principles, ſo he gives him new Conſolations. He is, as a Comforter, to glorifie Chriſt, to receive of his, and ſhew it unto the new creature. They are Chriſt's own words, He ſhall glorifie me, for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhow it unto you, being deſcribed before under the Title of a Comforter. He ſhall receive of mine, Grace from me, ſuitable to the Grace in me, wherewith to beautifie; and comforts from me, me, ſuitable to thoſe comforts in me, wherewith to refreſh you. As they are brought to live the life of God in holineſs, ſo they are brought to live the life of God in joy and comfort. Righteouſneſs, Peace, Joy, are the Trinity which make up the Kingdom of God in the Heart, Rom. 14. 17. The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the holy Ghoſt. As the Grace of God is their life, ſo the joy of the Lord is their ſtrength. Strangers to God intermeddle not with it, and have no ſhare in it. There is a joy put into the heart, together with this new creature; Thou haſt put gladneſs into my heart *. A gladneſs not founded upon any worldly conſideration, as the joy of men, not a joy of their own putting in; but the new creatures joy, is a joy of God's putting in: Other mens comforts are in the Creature; the new Creatures comforts in the Creator. Others cannot joy, if worldly things be removed, becauſe the foundation of their joy is without them: But theſe by the loſs of worldly things, have their comforts rather increaſed than impaired, becauſe the foundation of their joy is within them. The comforts of a natural man, are ſuckt from the dry Breaſts of Creatures. The comforts of a new creature, are derived from the full Fountain of Life, which makes their very ſufferings glorioufly comfortable to them *. The Prodigal by his change of mind, had a change of refreſhment, Robes for Rags, and a fatted Calf for Husks. 'Tis as much his comfort to loath himſelf, as derived from Adam, and to love the ſelf implanted by God, as it was before the contrary. He can never look upon the new creature in him, but with delightful views; and a pleaſure mingles it ſelf with every caſt of his eye upon it. For certainly from making God our end, and doing all things for his Glory, flows the higheſt delight; ſince God is the only happineſs of that ſoul that is in conjunction with him, as his main end, he muſt needs have a ſhare in the happineſs of God, as well as his Nature. Felicity and Conſolation follow it, as the ſhadow doth the body: and every act of the new Creature towards God, is edg'd with comfort in the very acting.

* Pſal. 4. 7.

* 1 Pet. 4. 13, 14.

6. As it is an inward change, ſo 'tis alſo an outward change. I call it outward, in regard of Objects, in regard of Operations; tho it is principally inward, in regard of the prime ſeat of it; in regard of the form, which cauſeth the outward. The power of ſeeing is in the ſoul, tho the Viſion it ſelf be in the eye. The change our Saviour made in thoſe he cured, was in the Organ, when he made the blind to ſee, the deaf to hear, and the lame to walk, which did neceſſarily infer a change of Objects, and a change of Actions. So a man by this new creation, ſees the things of God, hears the voice of God, walks in the ways of God. All outward changes argue not an inward; but an inward is alway attended with an outward.

1. In regard of Objects. The World and Sin was before the Object of his inquiries and endeavours: Now he ſeeks the face of God; his ſoul follows hard after him. The World and God are ſo contrary, that the love of the one is enmity to the other. From multitudes of Objects which diſtracted him, he is come to Unity, which quiets and ſettles him, Pſal. 27. 4. One thing have I deſired of the Lord, that will I ſek after, that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple. 'Tis no lower an Object than this, that the ſoul is converſant about, about God himſelf, to embrace him; about what hath moſt of God in it, to value and cheriſh it; about the Word of God, to direct him in his ways, and to do his work. The Underſtanding is converſant about the things of God, in the apprehenſion of them; the Will in the election, the Affections in complacency in them. Spiritual Objects are ſet up by every Faculty, as the delightful things which it heartily embraceth. Before a man had no affection to God, you might as well have perſwaded a Swine to love the Muſick of a Lute, as a natural man ſupremely to love God: All his deſires were ſet upon the droſs of the World, the cuſtomes, courſe, corruptions, pleaſures of the World: But a truly regenerate man, can as little make the World his chief Object of deſire and affection, as a man uſed to choice Viands, can feed upon Chaff and Husks. The intendment of the Goſpel, is to ſet forth God in Chriſt, as an amiable Object, as infinitely glorious. It declaims againſt the World, to draw men from the affectionate conſiderations of it. The renewed work then doth conſiſt in fixing upon God in Chriſt, as the main Object of Deſire and Affection: When the heart therefore complies with the Goſpel, there muſt be a compliance with the chief Subject of the Goſpel, and in ſuch a manner as may anſwer the intendment of the Goſpel. While Paul was in his Natural and Phariſaical ſtate, Chriſt and his Truth was accounted as dung, trampled upon as droſs, fit to be thrown out of the converſe of Mankind: But when his heart is changed, there is a change in the Object of his Valuation; Chriſt is then his Treaſure, his All; and other things but droſs, in compariſon of him *.

2. In regard of Operations. Old things are paſt away, old Actions as well as old Affections. Operations are never conſtantly againſt Nature; the Heart and the Actions do not alway contradict one another. According to the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaks *. According to the ſpring of Grace in the heart, will the hand of the life ſtand. It will vent it ſelf more or leſs, according to the quantity of it. 'Tis an inward Baptiſm with Fire, which will quickly break out, and ſhow it ſelf in the Members, Mat. 7. 20. By their fruits you ſhall know them. New Apprehenſions infer new Operations. An alteration of judgment cannot be without an alteration of acting. As he hath received Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, ſo he walks in him *. The very intendment of God in the new Creation, was this, Eph. 2. 10. created to Chriſt in good works, which God hath before ordained, that we ſhould walk in them. If there be not then new Works, there is no new Creation: For the chief intention, and aim of God, cannot be fruſtrated. Chriſt formed in a man, is not a ſleepy and unactive being: Actions will ſcent of him. Fruits bear the Image of the Root whence they ſpring, and upon which they flouriſh. A new Root cannot bring forth old Fruits: If the Nature of a Crab-Tree, be changed into that of a Vine, it will bear no longer Crabs, but Grapes. Where holineſs is implanted in the Nature, holineſs will be Imprinted in the life. A man that hath Reaſon ſuperior to Senſe, doth uſe his Senſe rationally: A renewed man that hath Grace ſuperior to Reaſon, uſeth his Reaſon graciouſly. The Operations were rational, when bare Reaſon held the Scepter; but they are ſpiritual, when Grace aſcends the Throne. For it cannot be, that that perſon who is acted by the Spirit, lives in the ſpirit, walks in the ſpirit *, ſhould do any thing without a ſpiritual tincture, in that wherein he is acted by it. For it is impoſſible, but every Action muſt be died of the ſame colour with the Principle whence it flows, and by which it is directed. Actions of ſenſitive Nature, are by reaſon of Grace, ordered by a new Rule, directed to a new end. He eat and drank to the fleſh before, now to God *. He degraded his ſoul, to invent ways to pamper his body. Now he puts his body in its due poſture, to ſerve the ſoul, and both to exalt God. Yea, his religious duties are changed, not as to the matter, but the manner. He knew them before, as he did Chriſt, after the fleſh; he now knows them, and performs them after the Spirit. There is zeal inſtead of coldneſs, livelineſs inſtead of deadneſs, brokenneſs inſtead of preſumption, a Spirit of Liberty inſtead of the Whip of Conſcience, confidence in God inſtead of confidence in Duty, melting pleading of Promiſes, inſtead of a Phariſaical pleading of works: In a word, Grace inſtead of Nature, Spirit inſtead of Fleſh. Paul, of a Phariſaical boaſter, becomes a Chriſtian ſuppliant; behold he prays. This change is outward as well as inward: In a man of an exact Morality, it is chiefly inward; he walks in his old outward ways with a new heart: In a looſe man renewed, 'tis apparently outward; he hath left both his old ways, and his old Nature: But a man only outwardly reformed, without any inward change, walks in new ways with an old Spirit. He that lacks theſe things, ſaith the Apoſtle, after an enumeration of ſeveral Graces, hath forgotten that he was purged from his old ſins *: for indeed he never was.

Thus have I conſidered this new Creation in the Nature of a Change.

2. Let us conſider it in the Nature of a vital Principle. This new Creation is a Tranſlation from Death to Life, 1 John 3. 14. We know that we have paſſed from death to life. And we have not a ſpiritual life, till we are in Chriſt; He that hath not the Son, hath not life *. When our Saviour called Lazarus out of the Grave,

Grave, he gave him a principle of life and motion; the ſame he doth, when he calls Men from a Spiritual death in ſin: whatſoever we had from the firſt Adam, is Mortal; whatſoever we have from the ſecond Adam, is Vital; the one communicates a Spiritual Life, as the other propagated a Spiritual Death. The New Creature is a Vital powerful principle, naturally moving the Soul to the ſervice and obedience of God, and doth animate the Faculties in their ſeveral motions, as the Soul doth quicken the Members of the Body. 'Tis called the hidden Man, the inward Man, implying that it hath life and motion. As the life of the Body is from the Soul, as the effect from the cauſe; ſo the life of the Soul is from Grace; Chriſt is the Meritorious cauſe of this life in his perſon; the efficient cauſe of it by his Spirit; but Grace is the formal cauſe of this life: As God is the cauſe of our Bodily life efficiently, and the Soul the cauſe of it formally. 'Tis not then a guilding, but a quickning; not a carving, but an enlivening. Whatſoever doth proceed from an external cauſe, is not life, or a living motion. A piece of Wood may be Carved in the ſhape of a Man, but remains Wood ſtill, in ſuch a Form and Figure. But a Chriſtian hath a Spiritual Life breathed into him, as Adam had a Natural. When Adam's Body was formed of the Earth, it was no more than Earth, till a Heavenly ſpark was breathed into him by God, to ſet him upon his Feet, and enable that piece of Earth to move. 'Tis diſtinguiſht therefore from Hypocriſie, which is but the ſhadow of Chriſtianity; this is a living principle; that a form, this a power; that a piece of art, this a nature. A Picture may have the lineaments of a Man, but not the life, underſtanding and affections of a Man.

3. Let us conſider it as a habit, and then ſee what light the conſideration of it, as a vital principle, and a habit, give us into the Nature of this New Creation. By Habit we muſt not underſtand, as we do in common ſpeech, a Clothing; as when we ſay, Such a one was in ſuch a Habit; but by Habit we mean an inward frame, enabling a man to act readily and eaſily; as when an Artificer hath the habit of a Trade. Since this New Creation is not a deſtruction of the ſubſtance of the Soul; * but that there is the ſame Phyſical being, and the ſame faculties in all men, and nothing is changed in its ſubſtance, as far as reſpects the nature of man: 'tis neceſſary therefore that this New Creation conſiſt in gracious qualities and habits, which beautify and diſpoſe the Soul to act Righteouſly and Holily. Corruption of Nature, is the Poyſon, the ſickneſs and deformity of our Nature; Grace is the Beauty, Health, Ornament of it, and that which gives it worth and value. When a debauched man is become Vertuous, we ſay, He is another Man, a New Man, tho he hath the ſame Soul and Body which he had before, but he hath quitted thoſe Evil Habits wherewith he was poſſeſſed. 'Tis impoſſible to conceive a New Creature without New Habits: nothing can be changed from a ſtate of Corruption to a ſtate of Purity, without them. The making Darkneſs to become Light, in the very Nature of it, implies the introducing a New Quality *. This is meant by the ſeed, 1 John 3. 9. his ſeed remains in him. As Seed makes the Earth capable to bring forth good Fruit; which had a Nature before to bring forth, not Corn, but Weeds, till the Grain was put into it: and it is expreſt by a fountain of living Water ſpringing up into Eternal Life ||.

(1.) There is ſuch a Habit. * God doth provide as much for thoſe that he loves, in order to a Supernatural good, as for thoſe Creatures that he loves in order to a Natural Good: but God hath put into all Creatures ſuch forms and qualities, whereby they may be inclined of themſelves to motions agreeable to their Nature, in an eaſy and Natural way. Much more doth God infuſe into thoſe that he moves to the obtaining a Supernatural good, ſome Spiritual qualities, whereby they may be moved rationally, ſweetly and readily to attain that good: he puts into the Soul a Spirit of Love, a Spirit of Grace, whereby as their underſtandings are poſſeſſed with a knowledg of the excellency of his ways, ſo their wills are ſo ſeaſoned, by the power and ſweetneſs of this Habit, that they cannot, becauſe they will not, act contrary thereunto. And this habit of Grace, hath the ſame Spiritual force in a Gracious way, as thoſe principles in other Creatures in a Natural way. As the habit of ſin is called fleſh, in regard of its Nature, and death in regard of its conſequent; ſo the habit of Grace is called the New Creature, and Spirit *, in regard of its term and conſequent, life. This habitual Grace is the principle of all Supernatural acts, as the Soul concurs as an immanent principle to all Works by this or that faculty. As Chriſt had a Body prepared him, to do the Work of a Mediator; ſo the Soul hath a habit prepared it, to do the Work of a New Creature. To this purpoſe there is a habit of truth or ſincerity in the Will, and a hidden wiſdom in the Underſtanding *. As the corrupt Nature is a habit of ſin, ſo the New Nature is a habit of Grace; God doth not only call us to believe, love, and obey, but brings in the Grace of Faith, and Love, and Obedience, bound up together, and plants it in the Soyl of the Heart, to grow up there unto Eternal Life: he gives a willingneſs, and readineſs to believe, love and obey.

* Gal. 5. 17.

* Pſal. 51. 6.

(2.) This habit is neceſſary. The acts of a Chriſtian are Supernatural, which cannot be done without a Supernatural principle; we can no more do a Gracious action without it, than the Apoſtles could do the works of their Office, unleſs endued with power from above, which our Saviour bids them tarry at Jeruſalem for *. If there were not a Gracious habit in the Soul, no act could be Gracious; or ſuppoſing it could, it could not be Natural, it would be only a force. New Creation is not from the Spirit compelling, but inclining: not like the throwing a ſtone contrary to its nature, but changing the nature, and planting other habits, whereby the actions become natural. As ſin was habitual in a man by Nature, ſo Grace muſt be habitual in a New Creature, otherwiſe a man is not brought into a contrary ſtate (though the acts ſhould be contrary) if there be not a contrary habit: for it is neceſſary the Soul ſhould be inclined in the ſame manner towards God, as before it was towards ſin; but the inclination to ſin was habitual.

* Luk. 24. 49.

(3) This habit is but one. For it is an intire rectitude in all the faculties, and an univerſal principle of working Righteouſly. As the Corrupt Nature is called the Old Adam, and a body of death; the Gracious Nature is called the New Man *; (as a Man is but one Man, a Body one Body) tho conſiſting of divers members, and ſeveral parts, all formed by one Spirit, and making up but one habit; ſo that as all ſins are parts of that Body of Death; ſo all Graces are but ſtrings of this one Root: As from that Primigenial Light, kindled at the firſt Creation by God, were framed the Stars and Lights of Heaven, which have their ſeveral appearances and motions, and are diſtinct from one another, tho all ariſing from the Womb of that firſt Light: ſo all particular Graces, tho they have their ſtated ſeaſons of action, and are diſtinct in themſelves; yet all flow from, and are contained in this habit as in a Root. They are as ſo many Grapes growing upon one ſtalk, cluſters proceeding from one Root of the New Nature. 'Tis from the participation of the Divine Nature, that all thoſe Graces ariſe, the exerciſe of which the Apoſtle exhorts them to, 2 Pet. 1. 4, &c. And indeed it being a Divine Nature, muſt needs include all the perfections due to it: As the Divine Eſſence of God is one, yet contains all perfections eminently; and if there were a deficiency of any, it could not be the Divine Eſſence: ſo the Grace infuſed into the heart, contains in it vertually all the perfections wherein it may agree with the Nature of Gods Holineſs, otherwiſe it were not a Divine Nature. If there were any defect in the nature of the habit, I ſay, in the nature of the habit. † And it cannot be otherwiſe: for tho the Spirit may give one Gift to one man, another Gift to another *; yet when he would make a New Creature, there muſt be a Nature or Habit containing all Graces. It could not elſe be a Divine Nature; for if the Spirit doth purpoſe to make a New Creature, he cannot but give all Grace, which belongs to the Eſſence and Conſtitution of that New Creature, otherwiſe he would either wilfully or weakly croſs his own intention.

† J. Goodwin.

1 Cor. 12. 8, 9.

4. This habit receives various Denominations; Either,

(1.) From the ſubject. 'Tis ſubjectively in the Eſſence of the Soul; but as it ſhows it ſelf in the underſtanding, 'tis called the knowledg of God; as it is the will, 'tis a choice of God; as it is in the affections, 'tis a motion to God: As the body of death is in the Underſtanding, ignorance; in the Will, enmity; in the Conſcience, deadneſs; in the Affections, diſorder and frowardneſs. As Diſeaſes receive ſeveral Names, as they are centred in ſeveral parts, yet are but the dyſcraſy or Diſtemper of the humors.

(2.) From

(2.) From the Object it is diverſified. As it cloſes with Chriſt dying, it is Faith; as it rejoiceth in Chriſt living, it is Love; as it lies at the Feet of Chriſt, 'tis Humility; as it obſerves the Will of Chriſt, it is Obedience; as it ſubmits to Chriſt afflicting, 'tis Patience; as it regards Chriſt offended, 'tis Grief; yet all ariſing from one Habit, and animated by Faith; ſo that it is the Love of Faith, the Joy of Faith, the Humility of Faith, the Patience of Faith: they all ſpring from one habit, ſeated in one Soul, converſant about one Object, God in Chriſt; ſuch a unity there is in all theſe diverſifications. As the Holy Oyl wherewith the Veſſels of the Tabernacle were Anointed, was but one Ointment, tho compoſed of many ingredients *; As all the perfections of Creatures are eminently in one God; all the evil diſpoſitions of the Creatures ſeminally in man by Nature; ſo all the beauties of Grace, are eminently included in this habit. * Exod. 30. 25, 26.

Hence we may take a proſpect of the Nature of the New Creature. It being thus a vital principle, and a habit, therefore the motion to God, and for God, muſt be:

1. Ready, in reſpect of diſpoſition. He ſtands ready and diſpoſed to every good Work, upon Gods Call. As the habit of ſin diſpoſeth the Soul to every evil work, ſo the habit of Grace prepares it for every good work, and makes it meet for its Maſters uſe, 2 Tim. 2. 21. If a man therefore purge himſelf from theſe, he ſhall be a veſſel unto honour, ſanctified, and meet for his maſters uſe, and prepared unto every good work. 'Tis juſt as it was with Iſaiah, Chap. 6. 5. at the firſt ſight of the Viſion he complains, Wo is me, a man of unclean lips; taken up with ſelf-reflection; no offers to act for God: But when a live Coal was taken from the Altar, and laid upon his Mouth; there is a ready anſwer to Gods queſtion, Verſe 7. 8. Whom ſhall I ſend? Here am I, ſend me. No demurs; 'twas a live Coal from the Altar had quickned him into a New Frame for God. David doth not ſay, he had performed the Statutes of God, but he had enclined his heart to perform them *. * Pſal. 119. 112.

That I may not grate upon any troubled ſpirit; conſider,

(1.) This readineſs is ſeminally in every renewed perſon, yet it does not always actually appear. As the Old Nature contains in it ſeminally all ſins, yet every man is more prone to one than another, according to education, temper of body, or a ſet of temptations; So the heart of a renewed Man hath an habitual diſpoſition to the exerciſe of all Grace, becauſe it hath the Seeds of all Graces in it; yet it doth not act all alike, for want of vigorous occaſions. As the Attributes of God, tho in the higheſt perfection, yet in their exerciſe in the World, ſometimes one appears more triumphant than another, ſometimes more of Patience, ſometimes Mercy, ſometimes Juſtice, ſometimes Wiſdom, one is more eminently apparent than another: So the Divine Nature hath ſeminally in this habit all Grace, and an agreeableneſs to every Duty enjoyned; a principle to ſend forth the fruits of all, when an object is offered, and the Grace excited by the Spirit of God; yet ſometimes one is more viſible than another, according to the call it hath to ſtand forth and ſhew it ſelf. This habitual diſpoſition may be, when there is not a preſent actual fitneſs for ſome ſervice of a higher ſtrain, by reaſon of ſome particular commiſſion of ſin, which hath ſullied the Soul. As a Veſſel of honour in reſpect of its formation, may be fit for uſe; but in reſpect of ſome foulneſs contracted, may not be immediately fit for ſome noble ſervice, till a new ſcouring hath paſſed upon it. A grown Chriſtian who hath his ſenſes exerciſed in the ways of God, doth not alway actually exerciſe this habit; yet he is ready upon the leaſt motion actually to do it: As a New Creature having a change of End, doth habitually mind the glory of God, yet he doth not in every action actually think of it, or will it as his End: but he is ready to bring this habitual aim into exerciſe upon the leaſt motion, and reaches out his Arm to embrace and ſtand right to that point. David had an habitual repentance in him, while he lay aſleep in his ſin; and by vertue of this habit, he doth without any reſiſtance comply with the firſt touch God gave him by Nathan. His Repentance flowed, and never ceaſed, till it had done its perfect work. 'Twas a ſign of a heart of fleſh; a heart of ſtone could not have been ſo flexible. Job was eminent for Patience; but being a New Creature, he had a diſpoſition to all the reſt, and had acted them with as high a ſtrain, had he had the ſame occaſions.

(2.) That

(2.) This readineſs to every ſervice doth not actually appear in perſons Newly Regenerate. I think the loweſt degree of this habit in one Newly Regenerate, is a purpoſe of heart to cleave unto the Lord, Acts 11. 23. When he came, and had ſeen the grace of God, he was glad, and exhorted them, that with purpoſe of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. Certainly when there is ſuch a fixed and conſtant purpoſe, 'tis a token of the Grace of God: yet to this purpoſe there may not alway be connext an actual readineſs to every ſervice: For at the firſt beginning of the New Creature there is a ſtrong reſiſtance; 'tis in a ſtrange Soyl; the Armies of Hell are in Array againſt it; 'tis like a Daniel in a Lions Den, or a Lot in Sodom, only God reſtrains the force of theſe Enemies. As it is in a Child derived from Adam, there is a principle in the Natural Corruption to exert all kind of wickedneſs; yet it doth not preſently riſe to the utmoſt of its force, till ripened by time and other intervening cauſes: So tho the New Creature hath in it a readineſs virtually to the moſt raiſed action, to be as Believing and laborious as Paul, as Zealous as Elijah, as Patient as Job, yet it mounts not preſently to this ſtate; a time muſt be allowed for growth. There is an infancy in Grace, as well as in Manhood. And as a Child, tho his Soul be of the ſame nature with that of a Man, yet he cannot exerciſe thoſe acts of underſtanding and reaſon, becauſe of the predominancy of ſenſe, and the indiſpoſition of the Organs: ſo neither can a young Chriſtian: he may have a diſpoſition equal to the beſt Chriſtians, but not an equal ſtrength; the reluctancy of the Corrupt Habits is more vigorous, not being much mortified; he wants alſo that additional ſtrength gained by exerciſe. There may be a greater reſiſtance to one Grace more than to another, from the ſtrength of ſome Corruption particularly oppoſite to that Grace; yet to will is preſent with him, tho he cannot perform that which is good, Rom. 7. 18. The poſture of the Soul to God, was as natural to him, as the poſture of the heart was before to ſin. As a young Boy firſt come to School, may have as ſtrong a purpoſe to get Learning, as a Man that hath taken all his Degrees in the Univerſity. The firſt graces which appear in a renewed Soul, are Repentance and Faith; becauſe Regeneration being a rooting up from the Old Stock, and ſetting up a New, as it relates to the Old Stock, it doth neceſſarily produce Repentance upon the ſight of his Miſery, and for being upon the Old Stock ſo long. And Faith, as a neceſſary Grace for cloſing with the Redeemer upon a ſight of him, and for ingrafting him upon a New Stock. And then Love, Admiration and Thankfulneſs walk the Stage, from a reflection upon the greatneſs of the miſery eſcaped, and the great deliverance attained. Sprouts from a Root grow up ſome faſter, ſome ſlower; yet all ariſing from the ſame Root. So ſome Graces appear at the very firſt ſetting this habit in the Soul, other Graces lie hid till new occaſions draw them out. This diſpoſition, inclination, will, readineſs, purpoſe, is the firſt Language of a habit.

2. A ſecond thing wherein you have a proſpect of the New Creature is this; As it is ready in reſpect of diſpoſition, ſo it is in activity of motion. Since it is a Life infuſed by infinite activity; ſince it is a Habit bearing the impreſſion of God, and maintained by a Union with him, 'tis impoſſible it can be ſleepy and dull in a conſtant way. All Life hath motion proper to the principle of it. Rational life is attended with rational actions. Senſitive life, with acts proper to ſenſe. 'Tis as impoſſible then that a Spiritual life ſhould be without acts conſonant to it, as that the Sun ſhould appear in the Firmament without darting forth its Beams. All life is accompanied with Natural heat, which is the band of it, whereby the Body is enabled to a vigorous motion. The New Creature is not a Marble Statue, or a tranſparent piece of Chryſtal, which hath purity, but not life. 'Tis a living Spirit, and therefore active; a pure Spirit, and therefore purely active, according to the degree of it. 'Tis the ſame habit in part renewed, which Adam had by Creation, which was not a ſluggiſh and unweildy principle; It muſt therefore have an activity, it could not elſe be a proper principle to conteſt with the contrary principle, which is active like the Sea, caſting out mire and dirt. Since the Old Adam conveyed ſuch a vigorous principle of Corruption, the New Adam is not wanting to endue the principle of his conveyance with a ſuitable activity. Grace abounds in its vigour, as well as ſin hath abounded in its kind *. Upon Chriſts call, Matthew left his Receipt of Cuſtom; the other Apoſtles their Nets;

motion

motion presently follows an inlivening call of God. 'Tis first a habit, then an act; first a Spirit of Grace and Supplication, then a looking upon him whom they have pierced, by an act of their Understanding, and a mourning by an act of the Will ‖. First a Sanctification of the Spirit, then a belief of the truth to the obtaining of Glory *. When any thing ceaseth to act, there is either an oppression, or a death of Nature. ‖ Zech. 12. 10, 11. * 2 Thes. 2. 13.

(1.) This principle of the New Creature is Naturally active. All vital motions are Natural; sometimes in Men there are Natural actions without any actual exercise of reason; as when the Spirits flow out to any part for the defence of it upon the motion of any passion, as Blood starts to the Face upon shame, &c. which all the reason of a Man cannot hinder. 'Tis as natural to this New Habit to produce New Actions, as for any thing to engender according to its own likeness and species; as for a living Tree to spring out in Leaves and Fruits. A renewed Man, whose Seed is within himself, brings forth Fruit after its kind, as well as the Herbs and the Trees *. All living Creatures move agreeably to their Natures, with a spontaneity and freedom of Nature. The Bramble doth not more naturally bring forth thorns, than a habit of sin doth steam out sinful actions; nor a Fountain more freely bubble up its Water, than a habit of Grace springs up in Holy actions. For shall the Workmanship of God be more unapt to the proper end of it, than the workmanship of the Devil, since good Works are the End of Gods new creating us, that we should walk in them? Walking is a Natural motion; Eph. 2. 10. We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus to good works. A well-drest Vine doth not more naturally bring forth Grapes, than a Soul rooted in Christ doth the fruits of the Spirit; neither doth the Sun more naturally enlighten the World with its Beams, than the new Creature shoots forth its desires and affections to God; for it is impossible but this habit should tend to him, since it is planted by him. The new Creatures services are his Meat and Drink, not his Work; 'tis as natural to him to do it, as for a Creature to desire and take its proper Food; you need not hire a Child to suck, by the promises of fine things, it will Naturally, without imitation, take the Breast. The new Creature having a Righteous and Just Nature, cannot but do Righteous things; nothing can act against its Nature, while Nature is orderly, and not disturbed by some Disease or Frenzy. As God, whose Image a Regenerate Man bears, cannot but do good, because his nature is goodness. Rom. 6. 2. How can you that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? He can no more naturally do it, than a dead Man can walk. Not but that there are some mistakes sometimes, which proceed not from Nature, but from some obstructing humour. Nature doth not err in its right course, unless hindred by some Adversary: the errors renewed Men are subject to, proceed not from the regenerate principle in them, but from that remainder of Corruption, which by degrees is weakned by the other, and at last wholly put off. * Gen. 1. 12.

(2.) It is voluntarily active. There is a kind of natural necessity of motion, from life and habit, yet also a voluntary choice; 'tis a power which constrains and enclines the Will *. The Apostle tells us, there was a necessity laid upon him to preach the Gospel ‖, yet it was not a compulsion, but a voluntary act, after his Will was changed. The New Creature is not constrained from without, but flows freely, is not forced; the chief work is upon the Will; the proper effect of any work upon the Will, is voluntariness; the Spirit works to make it willing, its motion then is not by compulsion: there is a sweet necessity of the New Nature, and a gracious choice of Will, which meet together and kiss each other; a natural, not a coactiven ecessity. How freely doth the Soul, winged with Grace, move to and for God, as a Bird in the Air? With what a free and ready Spirit doth the New Creature go to prayer, reading, and hearing? How freely doth it breathe in the Air of Heaven? Not spurred by outward interest, or dragged by the threatnings of the Law, nor chid to it by the clamours of Conscience; but gently moved to it, and upheld in it, by a soft, and Dove-like, and free spirit *. How great is the difference between the flowing of a Fountain, and the dropping of a Spunge? one is free, the other squeezed. Between a Statue drawn upon Wheels, and a living Motion? One moves, the other is moved. Our Saviour by washing us from our sins in his own Blood, hath made us kings and priests unto God *. First Kings, * Psal. 110. 3. ‖ 1 Cor. 9. 16. * Psal. 51. 12. * Rev. 1. 6.

putting into the New Creature a Royal and Magnanimous frame, as he did into Saul, when he advanced him to the Kingdom: and then Prieſts to offer Sacrifices to God with this Royal and Generous Spirit: So that it is as troubleſom to a Soul, having this Royal Spirit, to omit things proper to this frame, as it is for a Legaliſt to do them. Therefore where there are frequent omiſſions of Duty, or a conſtant dulneſs in it, it ſhows the want of this Kingly frame, and conſequently that we are not waſhed from our ſins in the Blood of Chriſt. There is both ſuch a nature, and ſuch a choice, that as the Apoſtle ſaith, 2 Cor. 13. 8. We can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth. So the New Creature cannot but do the things which are Holy, Juſt, and Good, ſo far as he is Regenerate, were there no rule without to guide him, becauſe he hath a habit of Holineſs with him, a Will ſet to the right point. His former ſtate made him have an averſion from Holy Services; this makes all Spiritual Duties connatural to him: So that it is as irkſom for him to live without God in the World, as before it was to live with him: he can as ſoon ſtrip himſelf of his own Soul, as act from a renewed principle, contrary to God and Righteouſneſs.

(3.) It is fervently active. The nobler the being of any thing is, the greater degree of activity it is attended with; the more Spiritual the quality, the more vigorous the effect. Both the Spirituality of the principle, excellency of the Object, and Affection to the End, conſpire together to increaſe this activity. The principle is Spiritually vital; the operation therefore is vigorous: the Object is God as amiable; the warmer therefore the Zeal: the acts are, loving God, truſting in God, depending on God, promoting his Kingdom in the heart, acts delightful in themſelves, delightful in their iſſue, the motion in them more quick: the end is the Glory of God, the happineſs of the Creature; the higher the end, the more elevated the Soul. There is an innate principle in every thing to preſerve its happineſs, 'tis as natural as life it ſelf. Inanimate Creatures are endued with this Nature: The Flame aſpires to Heaven, and waves on this and that ſide greedily, to catch what may ſupply a fuel: much more will other Creatures act vehemently for that which preſerves their beings; the Toad to its Plantain, the Swallow to its Celendine, the Babe to the Breaſt, and the Chriſtian to the Word. There is in the New Creature an impetus and force, ſetled in the Soul to do good. 'Tis a Baptiſm of Fire following that with Water. The Spirit is firſt as Water, waſhing us from our filth; then as Fire, quickning us with Grace, Matth. 3. 11. I baptize you with water, he ſhall baptize you with the holy ghoſt and with fire. In this reſpect it is likened to Creatures of the greateſt activity: Fire, Wind, a ſpring of living Water; what more active, in the rank of corporeal beings, than Fire and Wind, either above or in the bowels of the Earth? Witneſs the many ſtately Buildings ſpeedily conſumed by the one, or overthrown by the other. The new principle in the Creature fills every part, diſſolves the hard, melts the lumpiſh Leaden heart, and makes it movable in the ways of God with a glowing heat. But above this, there is a higher denomination, the New Creature is called Spirit, John 3. 6. That which is born of the ſpirit, is ſpirit; that is, a Spiritual Creature. The activity of a Spirit doth unconceivably ſurmount that of a Body; what vaſt ſtrides can a Spirit take in a moment, from Heaven to Earth? The habit of ſin in reſpect of its vehemency to evil, is called a Spirit, a ſpirit of whoredom *; as well as the habit of Grace, in reſpect of its vehemency to good, a ſpirit of love, 2 Tim. 1. 7. How active is the New Creature in its motion to God? It can fly in a thought from Earth to Heaven, enter the boſom of God, claſp about him, hold him faſt, even till Almightineſs bids him let him alone. Where there are Rivers of living Waters in the Belly, they will flow *; where there is a Divine habit, the Soul will have a paroxiſme of Divine heat for the Glory God. Acts 17. 16. Paul's ſpirit was ſtirred in him upon the ſight of the Athenians Idolatry. If created to good works, then not to a dull and ſluggiſh motion in them; this was not the intendment of the Creator, and therefore not the diſpoſition of the Creature.

* Hoſ. 4. 12.

(4.) It is unboundedly active. This New Creatures deſires are as large as his nature, he cannot be bound up in the narrow and contracted motions of his former diſpoſition. The Natural activity of the Soul overflows, like a ſwelled River, all natural bounds, ſince it is poſſeſſed by a Spiritual habit. A Man without a habit bit in an Art, doth but bungle at his work, is quickly tired, desponds of attaining what he would; but he that hath a habit, suppose of Mathematical knowledg, finds one proposition following upon another, one deduction rising up from another, that he hath a largeness, he knows not where to end: So the New Creature finds one affection coming upon the neck of another many times in transports and out-goings to God, which know no limits. 'Tis unboundedly active.

(1.) In affections to God. The New Creature would be as unlimited in its affections to God, as God is in his affection to him. It will not fix lower than the Object it hath pitched upon in Heaven; all its Operations tend thither; nothing below can give them a cessation, tho they may suffer an interruption; it flies up, and is pulled back; it mounts again and again, follows hard on after the Lord. His affections are larger than his ability. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none in earth that I desire besides thee *. He seems to scorn every thing else in comparison of God, tho it were an Angel. Like a Man that makes haste to some mark, turns the impediments on this side and that side: The New Creature puts by the temptations of the Flesh and the World, to make its way into the bosom of God, the center of its Rest, and the boundless limit of its Soul. The Sun, so many thousand Miles distant from us, sends its Rays as far as the lowest Valley of the Earth; and the New Creature, the dartings of his Soul to the highest Heavens. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty *, the Vail is taken away, it beholds, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord; like an Eagle, mounts up as near as it can to the Sun, peers upon it till its Eyes be dazled with its brightness: he is never glutted with the views of him; his desires for him are never bounded but by him; one breathing after another, that he may fill God (as it were) with his affections, as he is filled by him with his Spirit. In his obedience too, he would have his heart enlarged, that he may run, not creep, in the ways of Gods Commandments; 'tis his grief that he cannot keep pace with Gods Commandments: 'tis his joy that God flies upon the Wings of the Wind to him; and and his sorrow that he cannot fly upon the Wings of the Wind to God. He groans under his dulness; and his pleasure consists much in a liberty in Gods service.

* 2 Cor. 3. 16, 17.

* Psal. 119.32

(2.) In disaffection to sin. He hates that Body of Death which hinders the accomplishment of the desires of his Soul; and regards it at no other rate, than his Fetter, Disease and Torture. He is discomposed when he meets with any check in his Religious course; 'tis a violence to his New Nature, and he cannot bear it without regret. His anger and impatience rises with as much force against any obstacle to a free converse with God, as it did before against any impediment in the way of his Lust. Nature is restless till it hath got the conquest of the Disease and corrupt humors of the Body. Neither can a New Creature be at quiet, till all that is against the interest of the New Nature, be purged out; And to that purpose he daily knocks at Heaven Gates for new strength and recruits of power against sin in the Spiritual conflict. 'Tis a trouble to him, that he hath not as full a sense of his own corruptions as he would, and therefore he goes frequently to God to beg new discoveries of sin, that he may fetch his Enemy out of his holds and sculks, and beat it to death: for by this habit the understanding is more quick in discerning the first rising of any sinful motion, and sensible of the least touch contrary to the new interest of it.

(5.) The New Nature is powerfully active. There is not only an unbounded Affection, but there is a power inherent in this habit to enable the Soul to act; all habits add strength to the faculty. 'Tis therefore called might in the inner man *; and a Spirit of power, 2 Tim. 1. 7. 'Tis put as a stock into the heart, to maintain the acts of Holiness; as there is a stock of sap in the Root to produce Branches and Fruit: A power of acting is alway united with a form, and rooted in it. In regard the New Nature is implanted by a higher cause than any Moral Habits, even by the Spirit of God, it must be able to do more than any Moral Nature can; and being more excellent than Moral Nature, must produce more excellent operations, otherwise it were not of a more excellent kind, if it had not a more excellent power: Jesus Christ was appointed to be a quickning Spirit, to convey a powerful life, to enable us to live to God. The kingdom of God in the heart, as well as that in the World, is not in word, but in power *. Move Steel as often often as you will, you can never make it of it ſelf move towards the North; but by the impreſſion made on it by the Loadſtone, there is a power derived to turn, and ſtand that way of its own accord. By Nature we are without ſtrength *, becauſe without life, Eph. 2. 1. But in the renewing there is ſtrength conveyed together with life; an ability to walk in God's Statutes, conveyed with the new heart: Out of weakneſs the ſoul is made ſtrong; and the Grace within, in concurrence with the ſupplies of the Spirit, is ſufficient for it. 'Tis not only an outward ſtrength, as is from a ſtaff in a ſick man's hand; but an inward might. But beſides this inherent ſtrength, there is an adherent ability; for Chriſt, who is his life, Col. 3. 4. is alſo his ſtrength, Phil. 4. 13. I can do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengthens me. So that whatſoever active power is wanting in it ſelf, can be ſupplied by the Head. And therefore the new creature hath a kind of Almighty Power of Activity, by the communication of another, which is called a greatneſs of power, and a mighty power which works towards them, or, εἰς ἡμᾶς, in them that believe *. This power doth reſide in the heart, and this adherent power is ready for it; but neither of them is alway perceptible, but upon ſome emergency; as a ſound man hath a greater power to act, than he puts forth upon all occaſions.

* Eph. 3. 16.

* 2 Cor. 4. 20.

* Rom. 5. 6.

* Eph. 1. 19.

(6.) It is eaſily active. Since that motion to God, and for God, is connatural and voluntary, and a power and ability alſo in the new creature, it muſt follow, that the motion is very eaſie. Habits are to ſtrengthen the Faculty, and facilitate the acting of it. Bubbling is no pain to a Fountain: Rivers of Water flow out of the belly eaſily, becauſe naturally. The motion of this Habit, is as eaſie as the motion of the Lungs, or the Pulſe of the Artery; tho conſtant, yet not troubleſome, or painful in it ſelf; but by reaſon of ſome imparted humor ſetled in them. This ſtock of Grace is called the Unction, 1 John 2. 20. But you have an unction from the holy one; the inward oyling the Soul; as Oyl communicates agility to the Body. This Unction ſome underſtand of habitual Grace, conveyed from the Holy One by the Spirit. As this Unction upon our Saviour, was the cauſe of his activity for God in doing good, Acts 10. 38. God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power, who went about doing good; ſo it being the ſame in the new creature, will have the like effect upon him. Supernatural motions are as eaſie, by the ſtrength of a ſupernatural habit, as natural motions are by the ſtrength of natural habits. A Bird doth with as much eaſe fly upward, as a Beaſt walks upon the ground; and the Seed doth with as much eaſe ſpring up, and put its Ear out of the ground, as a bitter Root doth its unwholeſome Fruits and Flowers. So when the Soul is filled with this new habit, the walks in the ways of God are as eaſie by vertue of it, as a courſe of ſin and folly was before. The Yoke of it ſelf is eaſie *, and the motion under a light Yoke cannot be grievous: The very Yoke is not a ſhackle and burden, but a priviledg. There is indeed ſome reluctancy ſometimes, which ariſeth not from the will, as renewed, but from ſome evil habits reſident in the ſoul, not yet fully conquered by renewing Grace. You know how the Apoſtle Paul doth diſtinguiſh between the poſture of his Will, and the interruptions by that Sin which dwelt in him *.

* Mat. 11. 30.

* Rom. 18. 19, 20.

(7.) 'Tis pleaſantly active. Ἡδὺ μὲν τὸ κατὰ φύσιν, ſaith the Philoſopher. As all actions which flow from life, are pleaſant; ſo thoſe which flow from a divine life in the ſoul. 'Tis a joy to a juſt man to do judgment *. That is, the entire inclination of the ſoul, ſtands right to ſuch actions: And as much a joy to him to do judgment, when enabled thereunto by a gracious habit, as it is to a ſinful man under the bonds of iniquity, to commit it. His ſoul leaps as much at an opportunity of pleaſing God, as John Baptiſt did in his Mothers Womb at the appearance of Chriſt; as much as his heart ſprang up before, at the propoſal of a ſinful Object. Never did the Sun naturally rejoice ſo much like a ſtrong man to run its race in the Heavens *, as the new man doth ſpiritually rejoice to run his Race to Heaven. 'Tis a mighty pleaſure to have our ſpiritual enemies under our feet, to be eſtranged from them: 'Tis the pureſt delight to comply with God, and be emboſomed in him. He is ſwallowed up in theſe choicer pleaſures, as a man that hath had his full draughts of Learning, is in his Studies, whence his Diſeaſes cannot not draw him, tho in his childiſh time, he counted them his task and burden *. The delights of an heart ſeaſoned with habitual Grace, are more raviſhing than all the pleaſures of ſenſe, becauſe they ariſe from an habit planted in the ſoul by that Spirit, which is a Spirit of Joy as well as of Grace: The fatneſs of God's Houſe, the Sacrifices preſented by him, are his delight; and he drinks of a River of pleaſure in his very acts of Worſhip, Pſal. 36. 8. They ſhall be abundantly ſatisfied with the fatneſs of thy houſe, and thou ſhalt make them drink of the rivers of thy pleaſures. In keeping thy commandments there is great reward. He finds much ſweetneſs in the very acts of Worſhip. Ah! how can the motions of the habits of ſin, under the quarrels of Conſcience, yield as much delight, as the habits of Grace under the breathings of the Spirit? The very marks of Chriſt in his body, are his delight and triumph: He takes pleaſure in diſtreſſes for Chriſt's ſake, 2 Cor. 12. 10. ſaith the Apoſtle, I take pleaſure in infirmities, in reproaches, in neceſſities, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes for Chriſt's ſake. The motions of his ſoul to Chriſt, are his life and joy. He chides his ſoul, that her flights to Chriſt are not as ſtrong as Chriſt's flights to him. He would have a delight in doing the will of God's Precept, as Chriſt had in doing the will of the Mediatory command. He rejoyces in his breathings after God, tho he wants him, and is glad his ſoul can have any flights towards him, tho he cannot find him. The Tabernacles of God are amiable, when his heart and his fleſh cries out for the living God, Pſal. 84. 1, 2. How amiable are thy tabernacles, oh Lord? my ſoul longs, yea, even faints for the courts of the Lord. And when by reaſon of ſome Diſtemper, he cannot move ſo readily, ſome Diſeaſe fetters him, ſome corruption hath caſt a clog upon him; yet he delights in the thoughts of what he had; As a man in the former Converſes with his friend, tho now at a diſtance; and cheers up his ſoul with the thoughts that he will again return, Pſal. 42. 5, 11. Why art thou caſt down, oh my ſoul! hope thou in God, for I ſhall yet praiſe him. He grieves, becauſe he at preſent cannot do what he would; and hopes for another frame, and rejoices in the Faith, that he ſhall repoſſeſs it: He will turn again, &c. Micah 7. 19. A natural man without an habit of Grace, may move in ſome ways outwardly good, but with ſome reluctance, and without any pleaſure in the goodneſs of the thing enjoyn'd; or the goodneſs of that God who enjoyns it. He may have a ſudden inclination to do a good action, but he is not pleaſed with that inclination it ſelf. Ahab's humiliation was good in it ſelf, no doubt but Ahab was pleaſed with it, but not as it was humiliation, or had a likeneſs to a gracious action, or a tendency to the pleaſing God; but as it was a means of removing the Judgment threatned: ſo that his pleaſure was only in the iſſue of it: But a gracious ſoul is pleaſed with the habit it ſelf; for he conſiders it as the perfection of his Nature, regards it as an ancient Inmate, tho ſeparated from his Nature by Adam's degeneracy; as friends long abſent, rejoice in one another. When this rectitude is in part reſtored, and underſtood to be of kin to it by Creation, but loſt, and now returned, there muſt needs be an high complacency in the ſoul, and a joyful compliance with it. And the ſtronger, and more vigorous this inward rectitude is in habit, the more pleaſure a man hath in the exerciſe of it. As God, who is infinitely righteous in all his ways, and in all his works, has an infinite pleaſure in the exerciſe of this righteouſneſs, and an infinite loathing of what is contrary to it, becauſe it is his infinite Nature; ſo the ſtronger the habit in a man, the more contentment there is in the exerciſe of it, becauſe his Nature is more elevated. And what is natural, is delightful; and the more natural, the more delightful. Mercy is natural to God, therefore he delights in it; and becauſe infinitely natural, therefore he doth infinitely delight in it.

* Prov. 21. 15.

Well then: ſince all the motions of Nature are pleaſant, the new Nature is not Inferior in the pleaſure of acting, to any other Nature whatſoever. It being the perfecteſt Nature, muſt beget the moſt delightful Operations. What a pleaſure is it to draw near to God, to melt before him, to pour out a Prayer to him, and diſſolve it ſelf into Love and Affection in any Addreſs to him!

The Philoſopher ſaith of an Habit, ἐκ ἀυκίνητον ἐκ ἀυμετάβολον, Ariſtot. Categ. cap. 5.

(8). 'Tis a permanent activity. There is a ſpring of perpetual motion. The Fountain doth conſtantly bubble. The Sun doth conſtantly move, becauſe naturally. Whatſoever is natural, is conſtant in its poſture: Fire perpetually burns, and Water perpetually cools. What is the eſſential property of a thing, doth competere ſemper: A man is alway rational, and ready to act Reaſon: If there be any indiſpoſition, it is not in the Soul, but in the Organ, or ill Habit of the Body, which doth obſtruct the motions of the Soul, and is an unfit inſtrument for it to act by. This Habit is not a Paſſion, but a Principle; not a motion, but a ſpring of uniform motion: 'Tis wrought in the Nature, and like the heart, is continually beating. The Principle is permanent; 'tis an abiding anointing *: 'Tis ſetled by God, given to us in Chriſt, backt and aſſured by the earneſt of the Spirit in the heart, where this habit is ſeated. All is expreſt, 1 Cor. 1. 21, 22. Now he which eſtabliſheth us with you in Chriſt, and hath anointed us, is God, who hath alſo (that is, beſide this) ſealed us, and given the earneſt of the ſpirit in our hearts. 'Tis a life and habit more fixed than that in Adam: His life depended upon the rectitude of his ſoul; but this depends principally upon the power of the Spirit, and the everlaſting life of Chriſt. 'Tis a Water which quencheth all thirſt, and never leaves ſpringing, till it mount up to eternal life, John 4. 14. 'Tis perpetually active and ſpringing, till it be ſwallowed up in Glory, as Rivers in the Sea. Others may move by ſome Wires, and have ſome ſtrains of a natural Religion by ſome ſudden impulſes, which touch the ſtrings and faculties of the ſoul; but the Wires break, the touch ceaſeth, and the motion with it; it hath no living ſpring. Nay, ſometimes thoſe motions in natural men under the Goſpel, may be more quick, and warm, and violent for a time, than the natural motion of this habit; as the motion of a ſtone out of a ſling, is quicker than that of life, but faints by degrees, becauſe it is from a force impreſt, not implanted and inherent in the Nature. They are juſt like Water heated by the Fire, which hath a fit of warmth, and may heat other things; but tho you ſhould heat it a Thouſand times, the quality not being natural, will vaniſh, and the Water return to its former coldneſs. But the new heart being in the new creature, cauſeth him to walk in the Statutes of God, not by fits and ſtarts, but with an uniform and harmonical motion, Ezek. 36. 27. Ye ſhall keep my judgments, and do them: You ſhall treaſure them in your minds, and act them in your lives. Not but that there are in the new Creature, ſome faintings: 'Tis ſometimes more vigorous, ſometimes more weak in its motion: It hath its ſickneſſes; it meets with Wounds, but none of them to Death. Every one that is born of the ſpirit, is like the wind *; it moves and bluſters, and when you think it is paſt away, it returns, reſumes its force, and you feel as ſtiff a motion as you did before. A man is never weary of that which is habitual to him. There may be a wearineſs in duty and ſervice, but not a wearineſs of it, ſo as to throw it off: but after he hath refreſht and recruited himſelf, his habit will put him upon a delightful return to it. Where the ways of God are in the heart habitually, ſuch ſhall go from ſtrength to ſtrength, till they appear in Sion, tho there may be ſome reſts and intermiſſions by the way, Pſal. 84. 5, 6. in whoſe heart are the ways of them: Some read, the high ways of God in their hearts, more conſonant to the Hebrew.

* 1 John 2.27.

* John 3. 8.

(9.) It is an orderly motion and activity. Natural motions are orderly. As affirmative Precepts bind ſemper, but not ad ſemper; ſo this habit enables the ſoul ſemper, but not ad ſemper: I mean, not to this or that ſervice at all times. Natural things have their ſtated times, places, and meaſures: As trees bring forth fruit in their ſeaſon, ſo doth the new creature bring forth fruit in his ſeaſon *: In a ſeaſon proper for that fruit. 'Tis alway producing ſome fruit or other, according to the particular ſeaſons, ſometimes Love, ſometimes Humility, ſometimes Patience. This Habit is ready at hand, whence he draws out fruits new and old. * As God doth all things in weight, and number, and meaſure; ſo doth this habit of his own implanting. As God gives every creature meat in due ſeaſon, ſo the new creature renders God his fruit in due ſeaſon. As a wicked man is always acting ſin, ſometimes one, ſometimes another, according to the ſeaſons of them. So doth this habit in the New Creature, act Grace ſometimes one, ſometimes another.

From all theſe things put together, there follows,

1. A predominancy of Grace in the New Creature. As a ſtate of Nature conſiſts in the prevalency of the corrupt habit, which leavens the whole Man: So the ſtate of Grace in a predominancy of the gracious habit, which ſpreads it ſelf over the whole Soul, ſtriving with the powerful oppoſite, which in part reſides there ſtill: 'tis a habit put in to mate and deſtroy that habit of ſin which was there before; the Soul by it is made alive from the dead, Rom. 6. 13. Yield your ſelves to God, as thoſe that are alive from the dead. Life triumphs over Death; Grace over Nature; whereby the Members become inſtruments of Righteouſneſs unto God, inſtead of being inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin. 'Tis put in to guide Reaſon and Will, and therefore is inveſted with the Sovereign Power. As Senſe was firſt in Man; but that veil'd when Reaſon ſtept into the Throne, as being a more excellent principle than Senſe: ſo muſt Reaſon deſcend and give place to Grace when that comes in, as being a more excellent principle than Reaſon: 'tis reaſon it ſhould have the Sovereignty, for it doth but regain its own right, and take poſſeſſion, which by the Law of Creation it ought to have kept till violently ejected by Man. He that hath this habit, hath a Spirit of might, as well as of the fear of the Lord, the ſame Spirit which was in Chriſt, which is a ſpirit of might, Iſa. 11. 2. They that are Chriſts, have crucified the fleſh with the affections and luſts *; have, not ſhall: as ſoon as ever they are Chriſts, which they are by this principle, a deadly wound is given to ſin: ſuch a one ſcorns to have any thing more to do with Idols *; he overcomes the World, 1 John 5. 4. Whatſoever is born of God overcomes the World; He can do all things, enter the Liſts with the ſtrongeſt Goliah; repel the ſharpeſt temptations, through Chriſt which ſtrengthens him, Phil. 4. 13. ſo that Grace is predominant.

* Hoſ. 14. 8.

2. There follows from hence a difficulty to ſin. No Creature can eaſily act againſt a rooted habit: how hard is it to make a Beaſt do that which is different from, and contrary to his nature? To act contrary to Nature is burdenſom and intolerable. What Creature would willingly change its Element? Will a Bird ſink of its own accord into the Water, or a Fiſh delight to leap upon the Land, whoſe only Element is the Water? What Creature would court the deſtruction of its life? What Man would willingly deform and gaſh his own Body? Men never do ſo by Nature, but when phrenzy hath diſpoſſeſſed them of their reaſon. Sin muſt diſpoſſeſs a Chriſtian of his Grace, before it can be eaſy for him to run into ways deſtructive to his nature and bleſſedneſs. That principle which is in all natures, muſt be more eminently in the higheſt nature, and proportionably in every nature that is of neareſt approach to it. Righteouſneſs and Holineſs is the very conſtitution of the New Creature, Eph. 4. 24. That new man which after God is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs. 'Tis as impoſſible for the New Creature to ſin by the influence of habit, as for Fire to moiſten by the quality of Heat, or Water to burn by the quality of Cold. 'Tis as impoſſible for that habit to bring forth the fruits of ſin, as for the Sun to be the cauſe of darkneſs; or a ſweet Fig tree to bring forth ſowr fruit. Yet as there is darkneſs in the Air, tho the Sun be up, by the interpoſition of thick Clouds; ſo is there darkneſs in the New Creature from the habit of ſin in the Soul, which is not only a lodger, but an unwelcom inhabitant, Rom. 7. 20. ſin that dwells in me ſtill, and acts according to its Nature, tho much over-powered and weakened by degrees by the habit of Grace. Therefore it is a hard thing for him to ſin, 1 John 7. 9. he cannot ſin. 'Tis as hard for him to contradict the New Nature, as before to croſs the Old. I cannot do this wickedneſs, ſaith Joſeph, 'tis againſt the frame and diſpoſition of my Soul.

(1.) It muſt be difficult to ſin againſt purpoſe of heart, which is the loweſt ſtep of the New Nature *, tho it be not hard to ſin againſt a flaſhy reſolve.

* Acts 11. 23.

(2.) 'Tis hard for a Man to ſin, who hath cordially choſen God for his portion, which every New Nature doth, with a fixed reſolution to keep his word, Pſal. 119. 57. Thou art my portion, O Lord: I have ſaid, that I would keep thy word. When it is carried out with a free motion to God, it cannot eaſily be diverted from from that charming Object: he cannot but value any diverſion at no better a rate than that of puniſhment.

(3.) 'Tis difficult for him to contradict the New Habit, wherewith he is ſo highly pleaſed, and which he is aſſured hath nothing but happineſs in the Womb of it.

(4.) It muſt be difficult for him to act that, which by vertue of this habit he is daily in the mortification of.

(5.) 'Tis difficult for the habit of ſin in him, to do the ſame acts, after it hath received a deadly wound, as for a wounded man to do that which he could when he was ſound.

(6.) This Nature cannot be in a Man without an univerſal enmity to ſin, tho it may without an univerſal victory; this belongs to the perfection of it; but enmity to the very conſtitution of it, Gen. 3. 15. I will put enmity between the ſeed of the woman, and the ſeed of the ſerpent. He can at the beſt but half ſin, and ſcarce that: he could not commit ſin very freely before, becauſe of the reluctancy of Natural Conſcience; he can leſs freely do it now, ſince there is a habit of Grace in him, which doth more powerfully fly in the face of ſin when it appears; therefore there can be but a partial Will to it, or delight in it. The New Man in the heart can never do it; the Old Man remaining cannot fully do it, becauſe of the contradiction it receives from the new habit. If he doth at any time ſin, this New Nature can be no more pleaſed with it, than the nature of a Man is with the Poyſon which he hath wilfully taken, which will conteſt with it, and endeavour to expel it, whether a Man will or no: ſo that if a New Creature be catched at a diſadvantage, and be be-mired by the remaining habit of ſin in the heart, his ſpirit is wounded, his ſoul bleeds, his conſcience upbraids him, he is diſpleaſed with himſelf, and with his ſin, runs to God, ſearcheth into himſelf, calls Heaven and Earth to his aſſiſtance, ſharpens his Spiritual weapons, and by vertue of this habit in him is diſſatisfied, and in little eaſe, till he hath overcome this Rebellion of Luſt, diſpoſſeſſed it, removed the guilt, and caſt out the filth.

4. As we have conſidered this Work as a change, a vital principle, a habit, ſo we will conſider it as a Law put into the heart. Every Creature hath a Law belonging to its nature, ſo hath the New Creature. Man hath a Law of reaſon; Beaſts a Law of ſenſe and inſtinct; Plants a Law of Vegetation; Inanimate Creatures a Law of motion. A New Creature hath a Law put into his heart, Jer. 31. 33. I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts: cited by the Apoſtle, Heb. 8. 10. 'Tis called, the law of the mind, Rom. 7. 23. it beginning firſt in the illumination of that faculty. As ſin begun firſt in a falſe judgment made of the Precept of God, You ſhall be as Gods, knowing good and evil.

Now as to this law put into the heart, you may know what is meant by it, in ſome Propoſitions.

(1.) This Law of the mind, or Law written in the heart, is not wholly the ſame with the Law of Nature. * Some indeed tell us, that it is nothing but the Law of right reaſon. But certainly they are miſtaken, it is a Law of Grace. The Law of Nature was the Law of a Covenant of Works; this Law of the Mind is the Law of the Covenant of Grace. The Law of Nature is in all men; this Law of Grace only in ſome: the Law of Nature was in Paul before his Converſion, this Law of the Mind was in him upon his Converſion. The Law of Nature conſiſts not of Faith in a Mediator; but Faith is a main part of the Law of Grace. The Law of Nature acquaints not a Man with the knowledg of all ſins, not with unbelief; this Law of Grace doth; for the conviction of this, is a Work of the Spirit, John 16. 8, 9. Of ſin, becauſe they believe not in me. The Law of Nature is the general Work of the Mediator in all Men, who enlightens every man that comes into the world *. This is the peculiar Work of the Mediator by his Spirit, in the hearts of thoſe that believe: the Law of Nature doth not oppoſe ſin as ſin, this Law of Grace doth: the Law of Nature is no part of Sanctification, for this is in Men that are born of the fleſh, are fleſh ſtill; but the Law of the Mind is a part of Sanctification, and wars againſt the Law of the Members: there is indeed a war and a conteſt from the Law of Nature againſt ſome groſs ſins, but not not againſt the Law of ſin in the Members. As ſin wars againſt the Law of the Mind, as a Law of direction; ſo the Law of the Mind, or the Law of Grace, wars againſt ſin, as it is a Law which pretends to guide and order the ways of a Man.

(2.) Yet it is the reſtoring of that Law, which was the Law of Nature Originally. It is a renewing in the heart that Law, which was writ in the heart of Adam, Eph. 4. 24. That new man which after God is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; or after God was created, κτισθέντα, alluding to that Righteouſneſs wherein Adam was created, loſt by him, and reſtored by Chriſt: This Righteouſneſs which Adam had, was the firſt Righteouſneſs of the Law. Holineſs towards God, which includes the duties of the Table. Righteouſneſs, including the duties of the ſecond Table. And Truth being added (as it may be referred both to Holineſs and Righteouſneſs) ſhows the ſincerity of it, in the manner and the end of being Holy to God, and Righteous to Man. This was the Law written in the heart Originally, which was defaced by the fall; and whatſoever relicks there were of this Law, in man, were only upon the account of the Mediation of Chriſt; 'tis this Law which is new Engraven in the Soul by Regeneration. God doth not ſay, I will write another Law in their hearts, but my Law *; that which was my ſtanding Law, my Law to Adam, and to your Fathers. The Law written in the heart is not ſubſtantially diſtinct from that in the Nature of Adam. Man by his fall did blot this Law, loſt his Righteouſneſs, had an enmity in his heart to it, and to the very reliques of it. He is not naturally ſubject to the Law, nor can be, as it is the Law of God, becauſe of his enmity to God *; the Law of ſin had taken place inſtead of it. Regeneration is a taking down the Law of Sin, and fixing the Law of God in its due place and poſture.

* Rom. 8. 7.

(3.) This Law is written in the heart wholly. The whole Law; every command which hath the print of God upon it, is written there. As God writ his whole Law in Tables of Stone, ſo he writes the whole Law in the fleſhly tables of the heart *. 'Tis true Holineſs and Righteouſneſs; true, as to its eſſential and integral parts. God doth not write one part of the Law upon the heart, and leave out another; 'tis not a moiety of it, the impreſſion of one command, and the defect of another. If it were not the whole Law, ſomething belonging to the eſſence of a New Creature would be wanting; It would not be a New Creature, becauſe it would be a Monſter, wanting ſomething neceſſarily requiſite to the conſtitution of it; and would not be a New Creature according to the Original Copy. Where there is an agreeableneſs in one Nature to another, 'tis to the whole Nature, the Nature of the Soul to the Nature of the Law.

* 2 Cor. 3. 3.

(4.) This Law written in the heart doth not make the outward Law uſeleſs: for that is ſtill a Rule. This inward Law written in the heart, is a conformity to the outward Rule; and therefore is not a Rule it ſelf. The Law in the heart is imprinted by the external word in the hand of the Spirit; and therefore to try the truth of the Law within, we muſt have recourſe to the Law written. If a Man hath notions of any human Law, he muſt conſult the Law written, to know whether his notions of it be right, and whether his actions be according to the Letter and Reaſon of the Law, or no: As the Law of ſin within a man is not the rule of judging of ſin, but the Law of God; ſo neither is the Law of Grace within the Rule of judging good, but the word of God. The Law within, tho it be commenſurate to the Law in its eſſential parts, yet it is imperfect as yet; but a Rule ought to be perfect *, and ſo the written Law is ‖. 'Tis this Law written in the word, that we are to take heed to, for the cleanſinng of our ways. Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not ſin againſt thee. When this writing of the Law in the heart was promiſed, Verſe 11. there was alſo an inward teaching promiſed, Jer. 31. 32. And they ſhall teach no more every man his neighbour, ſaying, Know the Lord: which is ſpoken in regard of the abundance of the knowledg which ſhould be in the time of Goſpel Light, above what was in the twilight of Jewiſh Ceremonies: ſo that the weakeſt Chriſtian under the Goſpel knows more of God and his Attributes in Chriſt, than the greateſt Jewiſh Doctor did before the coming of Chriſt. This was not ſo underſtood by Chriſt, as if teaching others were utterly uſeleſs: for then why ſhould he inſtitute Apoſtles, Paſtors, Teachers, &c. and promiſe to be with them to the end of the World, if this promiſe of inward teaching made outward teaching uſeleſs? In like manner, neither doth the writing the Law in the heart, make the outward written Law uſeleſs, but rather it doth eſtabliſh and advance it, and the eſteem of it. The outward Law is the rule; as the Model of a Houſe is the rule by which a Carpenter is to make a Building, and to which he is to conform that Idea he hath in his mind of it; but that Idea or Figure of it which he hath in his mind, is to be ſuted to that Rule which is preſcribed to him in the outward pattern; and therefore that pattern is to be conſulted with. The Law of God is of Eternal duration; and as it is a Law of Holineſs and Love of God, doth oblige every reaſonable Creature, in what condition ſoever he be, whether of Nature, Grace or Glory.

* Pſal. 19. 7.
‖ Pſal. 119. 9.

Queſt. Wherein doth this Writing of the Law in the heart conſiſt?

Anſw. (1.) In an inward knowledg of the Law, and approbation of it in the underſtanding. The knowledg of Righteouſneſs, and the being of the Law in the heart, are put together as the proper Character of the People of God, Iſa. 51. 5. Hearken to me ye that know righteouſneſs, the people in whoſe heart is my law. Leſt they ſhould think a knowledge were enough, he adds, In whoſe heart is my Law: not in the head, but in the heart. There is in a renewed underſtanding, a principle teaching how to make uſe of the Law. 'Tis like the inward skill of a Pilot, who guides the Ship by the Compaſs and Rudder. The outward Law is the Compaſs by which we muſt ſteer; the inward Law is the practical knowledg of this; an inward skill to make application of it to particular occaſions. The word of God being a Seed, doth, as every Seed, produce a being like it ſelf, and like that Plant whoſe Seed it is; from the Seed of Corn ariſeth a Grain of the ſame Nature. This ſeed being ſown firſt in the underſtanding, is there cheriſhed, and grows up in principles and thoughts agreeable to it ſelf, whereby the mind becomes the Epiſtle of Chriſt *, and an Ark to preſerve the Tables of the Law; whence David ſpeaks of his ſoul keeping Gods Teſtimonies, and not forgetting them *. The New Creature by its New Light ſees an Amiableneſs in the Law, a Holineſs in the Precepts, and a filthineſs in himſelf thereby.

* 2 Cor. 3. 3.
* Pſa. 119. 167. Pſal. 119. 16.

(2.) It conſiſts in an inward Conformity of the heart to the Law. The Soul hath a likeneſs to the Word and Doctrine of the Goſpel within it; 'tis delivered into that Mould, Rom. 6. 17. You have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine, into which you were delivered. He conſiders the Goſpel as a Mould, and the Romans as a Metal poured into it, and putting on the form of it. As melted Metal poured into a Mould, loſes its former form, and puts on a new ſhape, the ſame Figure with the Mould into which it is poured: The Soul which before was a ſervant of ſin, and had the Image of the Law of ſin, being melted by the Spirit, is caſt into the Figure and Form of the Law. As when a Seal hath maed its impreſſion upon Wax, the ſtamp in the one anſwers exactly to the ſtamp on the other, put the Seal on again, and they both will meet as cloſe as if they were one body, the Wax will fill every cavity in the Seal; but put this Seal to any impreſſion made by another Seal, there will be an inequality, the ſtamp on the Seal and that on the Wax will not cloſe. The Law of Sin and the Law of God being contrary impreſſions, cannot cloſe together; but the Law of Grace in the heart, and the Law of God, cloſe, they being but one and the ſame ſtamp. So that when any command of God appears, a New Creature finds ſomething within it of kin to it; as a Natural man finds ſomething ready to cloſe with ſin upon the appearance of it. The heart anſwers to the Law as a Lock to a Key, Ward for Ward; ſometimes it may not anſwer, but reſiſt, as a Lock doth, becauſe of ſome ruſt or ſome filth got up into it; but then it needs not a new making, but a new cleanſing, to anſwer exactly to the Key of the Law: So that as the Gentiles having not the law, are a law to themſelves *, having it writ upon their minds in thoſe notions common to mankind; ſo the New Creature, if he had not the written Law, would be a Law to himſelf. So natural is this Conformity, that were there no Law without, the renewed Soul would naturally be carried out in the ways of Holineſs *. The Law, ſaith the Apoſtle, is not made for a Righteous man: 'tis not chiefly intended for the Righteous, but for the unrighteous, who would not ſtir one ſtep in any good action without it, and will hardly ſtir with it. There would be no need of any written Law in a Common-

* 1 Tim. 1. 9.

Commonwealth, if all men had an exact Juſtice and Righteouſneſs in their own minds, and did jointly conſpire to the good of the Community. But when Diſturbers of the Peace and common Welfare ſtart up, there is need then of publick Laws to reſtrain them. But there is no need of a publick enacting of a Law for them that are good, becauſe what the Law enjoyns, they do by their own judgment and inclination. So that what a new creature doth in obſervance of the Law, is from natural freedom, choice and judgment, and not by the force of any threatnings annext to it.

(3.) It conſiſts in a ſtrong propenſion to the obedience of it. As there was a ſtrong impetus in the old Nature, enclining it to ſin; ſo there is a ſtrong impulſe in the new Nature, byaſſing it to obſerve the commands of the Law. In this reſpect it is chiefly called a Law written in the heart, in regard of the efficacious Vertue of this new Nature, ſweetly conſtraining, and directly conducting to the performance of it. The Law without us commands us; the Law within conſtrains us: That enjoyns a thing to be done; this enclines us to the doing of it. The firſt Law is written in the Scripture, or in the Conſcience, whereby we judg thoſe commands to be kept; the other conſiſts in the propenſion of Love, or Faith working by Love. As the impulſe of Concupiſcence is called the law of ſin *, ſo the impulſe of Grace is called the Law in the Heart; not as a thing diſtinct from the Law without, but only a counterpart of it; an Indenture anſwering to the other. They are but Two parts united between themſelves, and compoſe one perfect Law: one as the direction, the other as the practiſe: That lays the injunction; this embraceth it; and as naturally from the diſpoſition of the new Nature, as he did embrace the Law of Sin, from the diſpoſition of the old. 'Tis a powerful, operative Law of the Spirit of Life, which ſets us free from the Law of ſin and death *; not a dead Letter, but an active Principle, quickning the heart to cloſe with the Law, and delivering it from that which was the great hindrance to it. As the Devil doth act in mens hearts *, not perſonally, but by a Principle in the heart, the Law of ſin; ſo doth the Spirit of Life, by the Law of Grace: for being writ by a living Spirit, it is a living Law. This is the chief intent of the whole new Creation, to cauſe us to walk in Gods Statutes *. Pſal. 37. 31. The law of God is in his heart, none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide. The ſoul being thus Evangeliz'd, and Spiritualiz'd, may be ſaid to do by Nature the things contained in the Goſpel, as the Gentiles are ſaid to do by Nature the things contained in the law, Rom. 2. 14. becauſe there was a Law of Nature engraven in them.

(4.) It conſiſts in a mighty affection to the Law. What is in the Word a Law of Precept, is in the Heart a Law of Love: what is in the one a Law of Command, is in the other a Law of Liberty. Love is the fulfilling of the law *: The Law of Love in the Heart, is the fufilling the Law of God in the Spirit. It may well be ſaid to be written in the Heart, when a man doth love it. As we ſay, a beloved thing is in our Hearts, not Phyſically, but Morally; As Calais was ſaid to be in Queen Marys Heart: They might have lookt long enough, before they could have found there the Map of the Town; but grief for the loſs of it, kill'd her. 'Tis a Love that is unexpreſſible. David delights to mention it in Two Verſes together, Pſal. 119. 47, 48. I will delight my ſelf in thy commandments, which I have loved: My hands will I lift up to thy commandments, which I have loved: and often in that Pſalm reſumes the Aſſertion. Before the new Creation, there was no Affection to the Law: It was not only a dead Letter, but a devilliſh Letter in the eſteem of a man: He wiſh'd it ras'd out of the World, and another, more pleaſing to the fleſh, enacted: He would be a Law to himſelf. But when this is written within him, he is ſo pleaſed with the inſcription, that he would not for all the World be without that Law, and the love of it: Whereas what obedience he paid to it before, was out of fear, now out of affection; not only becauſe of the Authority of the Lawgiver, but of the purity of the Law it ſelf. He would maintain it with all his might againſt the power of ſin within, and the powers of darkneſs without him. He loves to view this Law; regards every lineament of it, and dwells upon every feature with delightful raviſhments. If his eye be off, or his foot go away, how doth he diſſolve in tears, mourn and groan, till his former Affection hath recovered breath, and ſtands upon its feet? If he finds not his heart anſwering the Law, he longs after the Precepts, as the Prophet ſaith, Pſal. 119. 40. I have longed after thy precepts, quicken me in thy righteouſneſs. He longs to joyn hands again with the holineſs of them. As his heart is enclined to obey it, ſo it is wounded upon any neglect of it, and never at eaſe, till he be reduced to his former delight in it. He hath no mind ever to part with it, becauſe of its intrinſick goodneſs, as well as conveniency for him. 'Tis his pleaſure, not his confinement; his ornament, not his fetter: He hates every thing that is contrary to it. How doth Paul grieve, and groan under the body of death, when he conſi-

* Rom. 7. 23, 24. dered what oppoſition the law in his members made againſt the law of his mind *? The Law in his Members brought him into captivity to the law of ſin: Then, Oh wretched man that I am! tho he knew he was in part delivered from it: How doth he long for a perfect redemption from his ſhackles, which hindered him from following the Law of his delight! And he that never murmured at his ſufferings, but could glory in perſecutions and death for Chriſt, ſeems to be impatient, till he could hear the laſt expiring groan of this Enemy: All which was
* Ver. 22. the effect of his delight in the law of God after the inward man *. And that this writing the Law, doth principally conſiſt in this Affection, thoſe Two Expreſſions, putting the law into the inward parts, and writing it in the heart, intimate. The Nature of man being enmity againſt the Law of God, the writing it argues, not a change of the Law, but a change of the frame of the heart to the Law, that ſhould be ſo faſhioned, that the Law ſhould reign there, and all his Affections ſubſcribe to it. As the writing the law in the heart of Chriſt, was no-
* Pſal. 40 8. thing elſe but the agreeableneſs of the Mediatory Law to him, and his delight in it *; ſo it is with a new creature.

(5.) It conſiſts in an actual ability to obey. Writing the Law in the heart, implies a putting a power and ſtrength into the ſoul, enabling it to run the ways of God's Commandments, as well as to encline the Heart and Affections to them; the promiſe is made to the latter times: Not but that the ancient Patriarchs were regenerate; but not by the Law; not by any Covenant of Works: This Ability did not reſide in the Law, but was transferred to them from the Goſpel. In
* 2 Cor. 3. 6. this reſpect it is called a Letter *, becauſe it did only inſtruct the eye, or ear, when read, or heard; this teaches the heart; that a killing Letter, this a quickning Spirit; that exacted the obſervance of its Precepts, but writ nothing in the heart to anſwer it, but condemned upon neglect; This commands the obſervance of the Law, and gives an ability evangelically to perform it. That was
* 2 Cor. 3. 9. a miniſtration of condemnation, this of righteouſneſs *: That could do no other but condemn, becauſe it gave no intrinſick power to obſerve it. 'Tis through Jeſus Chriſt that we are enabled by vertue of this inward Writing, to ſerve with our minds the Law of God, tho in our fleſh we be captivated by the Law of Sin. As an unregenerate man is dragged to any good, but willingly obedient to the motions of ſin; ſo a regenerate man is ſometimes under the rape of ſin, but is willingly obedient to the motions of Grace. So that the Law is written in the heart, in reſpect of the the aſſent of the Underſtanding, conſent of the Will, pleaſure of the Affections: In the Underſtanding, by the clearneſs of the light of Faith; in the Will, by the heat of the Fire of Love. In the Underſtanding there is a judicious Approbation of it; in the Will, a motion to it, cloſing with it, and an Affection to keep it; and according to its ability, an endeavour to keep pace with it.

5. The Fifth thing. As there is a vital Principle, an Habit, a Law written in the heart; ſo there is a likeneſs to God in the new creature. Every creature hath a likeneſs to ſomething or other in the rank of Beings: The new Creature is framed according to the moſt exact Pattern, even God himſelf. In this the form of Regeneration doth conſiſt. The new creature is begotten; begotten then in the likeneſs of the begetter, which is God. As ſin is the impreſſion of Satan's Image, which was drawn over all by the Fall; ſo renewing Grace is the impreſſion of the Image of God; for it is a quite contrary thing to corruption. This likeneſs to God was man's original happineſs in Creation, and is his reſtored happineſs pineſs in Redemption, Col. 2. 10. renewed in knowledg after the image of him that created him. His miſery conſiſted in loſing it; our felicity therefore doth conſiſt in recovering it. Hence it is called a divine Nature *. Every thing receives its denomination from the better part. A man is denominated rational, tho he hath both a ſenſitive Principle common with Beaſts, and a vegetative, or growing Principle, common with Plants: So a new Creature is denominated Divine, becauſe Grace, a divine Principle, is ſuperior in the ſoul. Every perfection in the creature is ſuppoſed to be eſſentially ſomewhere. Every impreſſion ſuppoſeth a Seal that ſtampt it; every ſtream a Fountain from whence it ſprang; every beam a Sun from whence it is ſhot. Grace being the higheſt perfection of the creature, muſt be ſomewhere eſſentially: Where can that be but in God? His Womb and Power is the Womb that bare it, and the Breaſts which gave it ſuck: It muſt then have a reſemblance to him, as a Child to the Father, the Copy to the Original. We are ſaid to be born of God *. Now to be born of any thing, is to receive a form like that, which the generating perſon hath. But,

* 2 Pet. 1. 4.

* 1 John 3. 9.

(1.) 'Tis not a likeneſs to God in eſſence: 'Tis no participation of the eſſence of God. 'Tis a Nature, not the Eſſence; a likeneſs in an inward diſpoſition, not in the infinite ſubſtance, which is communicated by Generation, only to the Son, and by Proceſſion to the Holy Ghoſt. The divine Eſſence is incommunicable to any creature. Infiniteneſs cannot be repreſented, much leſs communicated. Man is no more renewed according to God's Image, than he was at firſt created according to it *; which was not a communication of the Divine Eſſence, but of a righteouſneſs reſembling the righteouſneſs of God, according to the capacity of Adam's Nature; which Image of God in Adam, is by the Apoſtle reſtrained to that of righteouſneſs and true holineſs *. The likeneſs in a ſtate of Glory, is founded upon a ſight of God as he is *; which may more properly be meant of the ſeeing of Chriſt, as he is in Glory: for the Apoſtle goes on in the Diſcourſe, without naming of Chriſt; but without queſtion, means him, ver. 5. when he ſaith, that he was manifeſted to take away our ſins. We ſhall be like him, as we ſhall ſee him; Therefore not in Eſſence. His Eſſence is concluded by moſt, to be inviſible, even in Glory. How can finite Creatures behold an infinite Being? He muſt be God that knows God's Eſſence. We ſhall underſtand him in his Bowels, as a Father; in his wiſe Acts, as a Governour; in his judicial Acts, as a Juſtifier; in his merciful Acts, as a Reconciler: We ſhall ſee him in all his Relations to us. Such a Viſion we ſhall have, whatſoever it is, which ſhall transform us into as high a likeneſs to him, as a finite creature is capable of. There can be no participation of the ſubſtantial perfections of God, which are incommunicable: for then it would not be a participation, but an Identity, Oneneſs, or Equality. God put in one Letter, and the chiefeſt of his Name Jehovah, ה, which is Twice repeated in it, into the Names of Abraham and Sarai, reckoned Nehem. 9. 7. as one of his favours to Abraham; but not the whole Name; that is incommunicable; and Jacob's Name is changed to that of Iſrael, putting in אל, a communicable Name of God.

Naturale eſſe Dei, is not communicated.

* Gen. 1. 27.

* Eph. 4. 24.

* 1 John 3. 2.

2. Yet it is a real participation. 'Tis not a Picture, but a Nature: 'Tis Divine. God doth not buſie himſelf about Apparitions. 'Tis a likeneſs, not only in Actions, but in Nature. * If God communicates to the Creature, a ſingular participation of the divine Viſion, and divine Love, why may he not alſo give ſome excellent participation of his Nature? There is a Nature; for there is ſomething whereby we are conſtituted the children of God: A bare Affection to God doth not ſeem to do this. Love conſtitutes a man a Friend, not a Son, and Heir by Generation. The Apoſtle argues, If children, then heirs *. He could not argue in a natural way, If Friends, then Heirs. And the Scripture ſpeaks of Believers being the children of God, by a ſpiritual Generation, as well as by Adoption. So that Grace, which doth conſtitute one a child of God, is another form whereby a Divine Nature is communicated. Generation is the production of one living thing by another, in the likeneſs of its Nature; not only in the likeneſs of Love; ſo is Regeneration. Were not a real

* Rom. 8. 17.

a real likeneſs attainable, why ſhould thoſe Exhortations be, of being holy as
* 1 Pet. 1.15. God is holy, pure as he is pure *? The new creature receives the Image of God;
1 John 3.3. not as a Glaſs receives the Image of a Man, which is only an appearance, no real exiſtence; and tho it be like the perſon, yet hath no communion with its Nature: but as Wax, receives the Image of the Seal; which tho it receives nothing of its ſubſtance, yet receives exactly the ſtamp, and anſwers it in every part: So the Scripture repreſents it, Eph. 1. 13. You were ſealed with that holy ſpirit of promiſe. Something of God's Perfections are in the New Creature by way of Quality, which are in God by way of Eſſence. In a word: 'Tis as real a likeneſs to God, as the Creature is capable of, laid in the firſt draughts of it in Regeneration, and compleated in the higheſt meaſures in Glory.

(3) 'Tis the whole image of God, which is drawn in the New Creature. 'Tis
* Col. 3.10. the image of God *; not a part: A Foot, or a Finger, is but the Image of thoſe parts, not of a man. The Members in a child anſwer to thoſe in a Parent, that is but a chip from the body of his Father, tho not in ſo great a proportion. The Image of a Man hath not only the Face, or Eyes, but the other Members. Tho a Chriſtian may have One or Two parts of this Image, more beautiful than the reſt; as a man may have a ſparkling Eye, that hath not a proportionable Lip; yet he hath all the Members of a Man. The Painter's skill appears in ſome lineaments more than in others. So the Spirit's wiſdom appears in making ſome eminent in one Grace, ſome in another, according to his good pleaſure; yet the whole Image of God is Imprinted there; it would be elſe not a likeneſs, but a monſtrous birth in defect. The fruit of the ſpirit is in all good-
* Eph. 5.9. neſs, righteouſneſs, and truth *: And therefore the immediate effect of the Spirit in the Soul, is the engraving all goodneſs, righteouſneſs and truth in the eſſential parts of it. As God's Nature is holy, his perfections holy, his actions holy; ſo holineſs beautifies the Nature, ſpirits the Actions, and is writ upon all the Endowments of a renewed man. There is an impreſſion of the Wiſdom of God in the Underſtanding, and of the Holineſs of God in the Will.

(4) 'Tis more peculiarly a likeneſs to Chriſt, wherein we partake of his Nature.
* 1 John 3.7. He that doth righteouſneſs is righteous, as Chriſt is righteous *. There is a real likeneſs to Chriſt in righteouſneſs, tho not an equal perfection. The New Nature is a draught of Chriſt; ſomething of Chriſt put into the ſoul; ſuch a likeneſs to Chriſt, that it ſeems to be (as it were) another Chriſt; as the Image of the Sun, ſeems to be another Sun, in a Pail of Water; therefore called a

Not a carnal ſeed, as the Jews ſay; and therefore deny Chriſt to be the Meſſiah, becauſe he left no Poſterity. Whereas ſeed is ſpiritually underſtood: As in the Firſt Promiſe, the ſeed of the Serpent, or the Devil. Devils do not beget, but Metaphorically, as they inſtill their curſed Principles into men. This Diſpoſition was the inward motive of his Death, and the foundation of his Advancement. Without this diſpoſition we cannot be conformable to him in his Death, and conſequently not his Fellows in his Advancement. The New Creature is a likeneſs to Chriſt; therefore called the New Man; as the Natural Man is like to Adam, therefore called the συμμόρφους, of the ſame form and ſhape.

Old

Old Man. The New Man and Old Man are titles of Chriſt and Adam, and transferred upon others by a Figure *. Theſe are the heads and Roots of the two diſtinct Bodies of Men in the World. All are in the Old Adam by Nature, and ſo partake of the Old Man. All believers are in the New Adam by Faith, and ſo partake of the nature of the New Man: as we did partake of Adam's nature by our natural birth, ſo we partake of the nature of Chriſt by our Spiritual; by the one we have the Image of the Earthly, by the other the New Creature hath the Image of the Heavenly *; the one derives Sin, the other Righteouſneſs: they both imprint their Image according to the quality of their extraction. Chriſt is full of Purity, Righteouſneſs, Charity, Patience, Humility, Truth, and in a word, all the parts of Holineſs; then the Form and Image of Chriſt in the New Creature, can be no other, than a lively repreſentation of thoſe Divine qualities: a Soul glittering with Goodneſs, Humility, &c. which the Apoſtle comprehends in two words, Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. Therefore if there be not a likeneſs to Chriſt in the frame and qualities of our Souls, we are not born of him. No Man will ſay an Ox, or a Sheep, or a Dog deſcends from Adam, becauſe they have not the likeneſs, ſhape and qualities of Adam; neither can any man without ſuch a likeneſs to Chriſt in Faith, Humility, Patience, Love, Obedience, and minding the Glory of God, number himſelf in the Spiritual ſeed of Chriſt. He retains the nature poyſoned by the Serpent, creeping upon the Earth, feeding upon the duſt; not the nature formed by the Eternal Spirit.

* 1 Cor. 15. 48, 49.

(5.) 'Tis a likeneſs to the Spirit, which is the immediate cauſe of it. Therefore the New Creature is called Spirit in the abſtract, as a Natural Man is called Fleſh in the abſtract, John 3. 6. That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh; and that which is born of the ſpirit, is ſpirit: As that which is born of the Fleſh, is like to Fleſh in its Nature; ſo that which is born of the Spirit, is like to the Spirit in its Nature; As Light in the Air being the Natural effect flowing from the Sun, is like to that Light which is in the Sun: Its reliſhes, delights, breathings, are according to its Spiritual Original. Its motions, purpoſes, diſpoſitions, are like thoſe of the Holy Ghoſt, of whom it is born. The principles and impreſſions in the Nature muſt be agreeable to thoſe the Spirit hath. The Spirit is a Spirit of Holineſs, Grace, Love and Zeal to the Glory of God; his office is to exalt and glorify Chriſt. If we are renewed, then we ſhall have the ſame draught in our hearts, the ſame deſign, the Fleſhly principle will be changed into Spiritual. They will be habitual too, as the frame of the Holy Spirit is; a Natural Man may do ſome acts that look like Spiritual, by fits and ſtarts; but there is no ſetled principle. Whereas the Spirit in a New Creature is a Spirit of Meekneſs, and curbs the Paſſions; a Spirit of Humility, and overthrows Pride; a Spirit of Zeal, and fires the heart; a Spirit of Power, and arms the Soul againſt ſin; a Holy Spirit, and therefore cleanſeth it; an Heavenly Spirit, and therefore elevates it.

Queſt. Wherein doth this likeneſs to God chiefly conſiſt?

Anſw. 1. In a likeneſs of affections. God is no Bodily ſhape; we cannot be like him in our Bodies, but in our Souls, as they are Spirits: but if there be a diſſimilitude of affection and diſpoſition, the unlikeneſs to God is greater than a likeneſs to him in point of the Natural Being. There is no draught of this Image in us, unleſs we have a conformity of affections to God; 'tis then chiefly evidenced by a delighting in him, by Faith and Love, wherein we bear a reſemblance to him in his affection to himſelf; by delighting in his Image in others, wherein we imitate his affection to his Creatures. He that loves not that Image of God which is viſible, cannot love the inviſible Original, 1 John 4. 12, 20. and ſo having no likeneſs to God in his Affection, can have no likeneſs to him in his Nature. And the Apoſtle poſitively affirms, That he that loves, is born of God, 1 John 4. 7. The New Creature extends its Arms to every thing which hath a reſemblance of that whoſe Image it bears. The Divine Nature is chiefly ſeen in the Objects of the Affections: when they are ſet upon the ſame Objects, and in a like manner as Gods and Chriſts are. When we grieve moſt for ſin, for this grieves the Spirit; when we deſire moſt an inward Holineſs, this God moſt longs for; Oh that there were ſuch an heart in them! When we hate ſin as God hates it, becauſe of the inward filthineſs; when we love Grace as God loves it, becauſe of its native beauty; when we can love God and Chriſt above all the World, and other things in order to him and his Glory; when we can truſt Chriſt with all our concerns, as God doth truſt him with his Glory; then, and not till then, there is an Image of God in us, which God values above all the World. When the Soul is thus touched and quickned by Grace, ſhe can no more ſtrip her ſelf of the Object and manner of her Affections, than ſhe can of the Affections themſelves. And when ſhe doth reach out her ſelf to all that is good, and hath a complacency in it, 'tis her happineſs, becauſe it is the great likeneſs to the ſpring of happineſs. When we have the like Affections with God, we have in our meaſure a like happineſs and bleſſedneſs with God.

* Eph. 4. 17. 2. In a likeneſs of Actions. Men by ſin are alienated from the life of God *, by reſtoring Grace then they are brought to have Communion with God in his life, to live as God lives; by Nature Men live the life of Beaſts and Devils; by Grace they come to live the life of Chriſt. If he lives then the life of God, he muſt be conformable in his actions to the acts of God. No Nature is ſtript of Affections and Actions proper to it; it would be elſe a Picture without breath, a Body without motion, a liveleſs colour. The Divine Image is not a painted Statue, but an active Being. The nearer any thing approacheth in its Nature to the Fountain of Life, the more of livelineſs and activity it muſt needs partake of. The communicable perfections of God are inſtampt upon the Soul as a pattern to imitate, and as a principle to quicken. A New Creature acts like God; as melted and enflamed Gold will act after the nature of Fire, by the aſſiſtance of that quality communicated by the Fire to it; ſo doth the Soul by that Divine quality it partakes of. 'Tis as impoſſible that this Image of God can produce any thing but Divine acts, as that the Image of the Sun in a burning-Glaſs ſhould produce a darkneſs and coldneſs in the Air. There will be the manifeſtation of the life of Chriſt in the motions of our Soul, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks in caſe of ſufferings for him there will be in our Bodies *. Natural Men are called the Devils Children, becauſe they reſemble him in Nature and Works, egging on to ſin, and delighting themſelves in their own and others iniquities ‖: ſo renewed Men are Gods Children, becauſe they live the life of God, and abound in the Works of God *. As there is the ſame Nature, and the ſame Spirit which Chriſt had, there will be a following of him in his Works: all Creatures of the ſame Species have the ſame inſtinct, the ſame nature, the ſame acts that the firſt Creature of that kind had Originally in its creation. Grace being a new excellency advancing the Soul to a higher ſtate, endues it with a more noble kind of Operation. Nothing is lifted up to a more perfect ſtate of Being, but in order to a more perfect manner of Acting; If a Beaſt ſhould be elevated to the nature of Man, would you then expect from him the actions of a Beaſt ſtill? And can any have the implantation of the Divine Nature, who hath only the actions of a man, which bear no reſemblance to God?

3. This likeneſs to God conſiſts principally in a likeneſs to him in Holineſs. 'Tis only he that doth righteouſneſs, is born of him. 1 John 2. 29. If you know that he is righteous, you know that every one that doth righteouſneſs, is born of him. 'Tis by this the Children of God are manifeſt from the Children of the Devil, 1 John 3. 10. in doing Righteouſneſs. If we are unlike to God in this, we are like him in nothing; God hath not a pretence of Holineſs, but a real Purity. He that hath not eſcaped the corruption that is in the world through luſt, is no partaker of the divine nature; the Apoſtle puts that as a neceſſary qualification, 2 Pet. 1. 4. If by afflictions good men are partakers of Gods Holineſs, much more by Regeneration. Heb. 12. 10. He chaſtened us for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs. If God aim in his corrections at the bringing his People to partake with him in Holineſs, as a Father doth at the reformation of his Child, that he may be a follower of his vertues; much more doth God aim at it in Regeneration, when a Spirit of Holineſs is infuſed into the Soul. The New Creation is a drawing this excellency of God in the Soul: If any Attribute lift up his head above another, 'tis this; In this we chiefly are to imitate him; this is the greateſt evidence of the Divine Nature. By ſin we come ſhort of that which is the glory of God *; by the renewing of the Soul we attain the Glory of God; that is, attain a ſtate of Holineſs, and at laſt a perfection of it, a communion with him in Holineſs here, and a full enjoyment of it hereafter. Whatſoever our fancies, our hopes, our preſumptions are, if this be not drawn in our Soul, if we have not an internal Holineſs, we are not New Creatures, and therefore not in Chriſt.

USE 1. It ſerves for Information. If Regeneration be ſuch an inward change, a vital principle, a Law put into the heart, the Image of God and Chriſt in the Soul: Then,

1. How few in the World are truly New Creatures? Is the Law tranſcribed in many mens lives? Nay, can we all all read it Copied in our own hearts? Cannot many ſee the Image of the Devil ſooner than the Image of God in their own Souls? Is not the Law of Sin writ in Text Letters, and with many flouriſhes; when the Law of God is writ in Characters hardly legible, and crouded into a narrow room? How many are changed from Childhood to Youth, from Youth to Manhood, from Manhood to Age, and the Old Nature ſtill remaining in its full ſtrength, and the body of death more vigorous than twenty or thirty years ago? Changed years, and unchanged hearts, are a very ſad ſpectacle.

(1.) Prophane men are numerous. None will offer to rank theſe in the number of New Creatures. Such naſty Souls are no branches of Chriſt, nor habitations for him; we read of the Devil in Swine, but never of our Saviour in Swiniſh Souls. Are ſuch Regenerate? Can Brambles be ever accounted Vines, or Thiſtles Fig-trees? Theſe rather look like Helliſh than Divine Creatures; Diabolical, not God-like natures. A devotedneſs to the ſins of the fleſh is inconſiſtent with the Circumciſion made by Chriſt, Coloſ. 2. 11. putting off the body of the ſins of the fleſh, by the circumciſion of Chriſt: that is, the body of ſins which exert themſelves in the fleſh or natural Body; whereas ſuch have the body of ſin, with an activity in every Member of it. * Is the Image of Chriſt in ſuch men? Is not he meek as a Lamb? are not they fierce as Lyons? Is not he Holy, and they defiled with intemperance? Did not he labour for nothing but the Glory of his Father, and the Salvation of Souls? and they mind nothing but the diſhonour of God, and the deſtruction of themſelves and others. Did not he do good to his Enemies, and they ſcarcely ſpare their Friends? Alas, with this contrariety, how can they pretend the Image of Chriſt, when they have nothing but what looks like the Image of his Enemy the Devil? Is not the Goſpel counted as great a fooliſhneſs by ſuch, as at the firſt times of its publiſhing? Are not the great Myſteries of God, and the contrivances of Eternity, entertained with coldneſs, and ſometimes with ſcoffs, and the Word, the great inſtrument of this change, unregarded? Are ſuch New Creatures, that contemn the very means to attain it? Surely they are ſo far from being near the Kingdom of God, that they are in the very Suburbs of Hell. Is a hugging baſe Luſts againſt the Light of Nature, a contempt of Gods Law and Authority, the Nature of Chriſt? Were any ſuch ſpots upon our Saviours Garment? Is this to be like him who was Holy, harmleſs, ſeparate from ſin and ſinners?

* Daille.

(2.) Among profeſſors, is there much evidence of a New Creation? When men ſhall ſay, All that the Lord ſpeaks to us we will do, has not God as great occaſion to ſay as he did of old, Deut. 5. 24. O that there were ſuch a heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep my commandments *! We may find a change of Language in ſome, a change of outward Actions in others; but how few are there among many, who ſtand up before God with the breath of Life? Here and there a Man or Woman, wherein God may ſee the Image of his own Nature. How few are they with whom Chriſt can ſhake hands, and juſtly call them his fellows! Chriſt may be in the mouth, and the Devil formed in the heart; the Name of Chriſt may be upon them, and the Nature of Chriſt not in them. They may be born of the will of Man in a Religious Education, but not born of the Will of God in a Spiritual Regeneration. Is it not a graceleſs Chriſtianity in many Men, a Faith without Holineſs, a Chriſtianity without Chriſt? Regeneration is never without Faith, Love and Righteouſneſs; they depend upon Grace as the property upon the form; wherever the New Creation is, theſe are, for they are the qualities created; wherever they are not, there is nothing of a New Creature, let the pretences be never ſo ſplendid. There may be a nearneſs to the Kingdom of God by profeſſion, when there is no right to it for want of Regeneration. Inſtead of Humility, according to our Saviours pattern, doth not pride compaſs men as a chain *? Counting that their Ornament, which is the ſtrength of their Old Nature. Inſtead of Patience, roaring Paſſions; inſtead of Meekneſs, boiling Anger; inſtead of Love, a glowing Hatred. How few then are renewed? But few ſhall be ſaved, and therefore few Regenerate. How little is the report of a likeneſs to God believed by the incredulous World? How few are the ſtrivings of any towards Heaven? Moſt lie quiet without any ſuch motions, like the duſt on the ground, unleſs ſome ſtormy affliction raiſe them a little towards Heaven, whence they quickly fall back to their old place.

2. It informs us, That a Dogmatical change, or change of Opinion is not this New Creature. It is not, if any man change his opinion from Gentiliſm to Chriſtianity, he is a New Creature; but if any man be in Chriſt, by a vital participation from Union with him. As men generally place ſaving Faith in Dogmatical aſſents, ſo they place the New Creation in a change of Opinion, as well from Truth to Error, as from Error to Truth, though there be no Spiritual knowledg of God, nor Internal Cordial cloſing with the Goſpel, nor practiſe of it. Such a change may endue the head with a knowledg which never gently ſlides down to the affections. It may indeed have ſome influence upon the life, as this or that principle comes neareſt to, or is Divine Truth, and is ſettled as an Opinion in the Soul; yet this great change may not be wrought. That is but a change in the head, this in the heart; that of opinion, this of affection; that perfects the underſtanding, this both the underſtanding, and will, and the whole Soul. There is a natural deſire of knowledg, but a natural averſion from Grace; whence this change becomes eaſy, the New Creature-change difficult. A hot contriving head may have a cold and ſapleſs heart. A head informed by the knowledg of truth, may be without a heart enlivened by the Spirit of Truth. A head changed in opinion only, will deſcend into the bottomleſs pit, when the leaſt grain of renewing Grace ſhall not receive ſo much as a ſinge from thoſe flames. A change from Error to Truth, without a heart framed to the Truth, doth but more ſettle a man upon his lees, and makes him not only more regardleſs, but oppoſite to a true change to God: It ſtores up wrath for him, and his very judgment will be a witneſs for the condemnation of his practiſe. The knowledg of God will not juſtify, but condemn a practical denial of him; but for all that, they are abominable, Tit. 1. 16. This New Creature-change is not from one Doctrine to another, barely conſidered as Doctrine; but a change to the Goſpel in the main intendment of it, as it is a doctrine according to Godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 3. as it may affect, purify and direct the Soul in its motion. And by the way, obſerve this: when ever you are ſollicited to a change of Opinion, conſider the truth of it by this Rule, whether it have a tendency to encourage and promote internal Godlineſs; Since this Doctrine of Regeneration was the firſt Goſpel-Leſſon taught, to which all ſucceeding Truths refer as to their end and center. The Apoſtle tells us what the iſſue of all ſuch Doctrines are, that refer not to this, pride, doting about queſtions, envy, ſtrife, railings, and evil ſurmiſings, Verſe 4. A heap of notions may conſiſt with a body of death in its full ſtrength, but a Spirit of Grace cannot; a Notionaliſt may ſpeak great things, but a New Creature acts them. Great ſpeculations only are but Leaves without Fruit, like Cedars that by their ſhadows may give a refreſhment, but have no Fruit to fill the Soul hungring after Righteouſneſs.

3. Morality is not this New-Creature-change. That is, Moral honeſty, freedom from groſs Vices, &c. I have before ſpoken ſomething about it, ſhewing it inſufficent, when I handled the neceſſity of Regeneration; we cannot ſpeak too much againſt it, it being a ſoft pillow, from whence many ſlide inſenſibly into deſtruction. How many upon this account think themſelves New Creatures, who are yet deeply under the Image of Satan; and tho they have blown off ſome duſt from the Law of Nature, yet never had a ſyllable of the Law of Grace writ in their hearts? Nay, the Image of the Devil may be more deeply engraven in a Soul, whoſe life is free from an outward taint. Prophane Men expreſs more of the he Beaſt; a civil and moral converſation may have more of the Devil and Serpent within, in ſpiritualized wickedneſs.

(1.) Yet Morality is to be valued. 'Tis a comely thing among Men, a beauty to humane ſocieties, ſatisfaction to natural conſcience, ſecurity to the body, example to others; men are to be applauded for it, and encouraged in it. 'Tis a fruit of Chriſts Mediation, left for the preſervation of human ſocieties, without which the World would be a meer Bedlam and Shambles: the works of Kindneſs, Juſtice, Mercy, Love, Pity, &c. are uſeful and commendable. 'Tis a thing which our Saviour loved, yet not with ſuch a Love as eternally to reward it; he looked upon the young man with ſome affection, Mark 10. 21. but ſcarce upon the Phariſees without anger and diſdain.

(2.) Yet we muſt not ſet the crown belonging to Grace, upon the head of it, and place it in a throne equal to that of the New Creation. 'Tis too amiable for men to be beaten off from it; yet with juſt reaſon we may perſuade them to ariſe to a higher elevation. 'Tis a curious Paint, a delightful Picture, an uſeful Artifice, but not a vital principle: a glow-worm is a lovely Light, yet it is not a Star. We preſs not men to throw off Morality, but to advance it, to exchange it for Chriſt, that their Moral vertues may commence Chriſtian Graces. 'Tis an elevation near the Kingdom of God, not a tranſlation into the Kingdom of God; 'tis nature improved, not nature renewed; 'tis a well-coloured Picture without a principle of life; an outward reſemblance, not an inward power, 2 Tim. 3. 5. a form of Godlineſs; As a change that is made upon Cloth in the draught of a Picture, but no change in it by the conveyance of life. For,

(1.) It removes not the Body of Death. 'Tis a cutting away the outward Luxuriances, not the inward Root. It removes the ſtench and putrefaction, not the death; an Embalmed Carcaſs is as much dead as a putrified one, tho not ſo lotahſom. It removes not that wherein the ſtrength of ſin lies, tho it doth ſomewhat of the ſtench of ſin. It may check thoſe degenerate Luſts inconſiſtent with the peace of Natural Conſcience, but not heal the Corrupt Nature. It may be a change from ſcandalous to Spiritual ſins; from vanity in the outward life, to vanity in the mind; from debauched practiſes, to a vain-glorious and envious ſpirit, Eph. 4. 17. 18. Henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their minds. Having the underſtanding darkned, being alienated from the life of God. By the Gentiles from whom the Apoſtle would have the Epheſians differenced, he means not the lower ſort, but the whole rank, Verſe 21. there was a truth in Jeſus which they had been taught; he makes no diſtinction between the looſer rabble, and the profeſſors of Wiſdom, whom he calls fools, Rom. 1. 22. the followers of the divine (as they called them) Philoſophers, were alienated from the life of God, and walked in the vanity of their minds. The New Man he exhorts them to put on, was another kind of thing than what the greateſt Moraliſts among the Heathen were acquainted with. It was at beſt human, not divine; an Old nature purified, not a New implanted; or as the Apoſtle phraſeth it, a walking in the vanity of their mind, in the darkneſs of their underſtandings, tho not in a vanity of groſs actions. It can never remove that body of death which was introduced into the World, while this outward Morality ſtood. What Immorality againſt the Light of Nature do you find in Adam? He did break a poſitive command in eating the forbidden fruit; you find nothing of Drunkenneſs, Lying, Swearing; his great ſin was inward pride and unbelief; nothing of thoſe ſins, the freedom from which you boaſt of, and reſt on. Some would make Adam guilty of the breach of every command in the Moral Law; virtually I confeſs they may; expreſly I do not ſee how they can; and alſo virtually the higheſt meer Moraliſt is guilty of the breach of the whole; yet all his Morality after the breach of this one command, could not preſerve him in Paradiſe; nor all the Morality without a New Nature, reſtore you to it. You may have Adam's Morality with Adam's Corruption; a freedom from groſs vices, with a heap of ſpiritual ſins in your hearts, as Adam had; but not a true Righteouſneſs without the New Adam, the quickning Spirit.

(2.) Therefore the higheſt Morality without a New Creation, is but fleſh: all men out of Chriſt agree in a fleſhly Nature. 'Tis the higheſt thing in the rank of fleſh, but it is not yet mounted to Spirit. Water heated to the higheſt pitch, is but Water ſtill; and Morality in the greateſt elevation of it, is but refined Fleſh; an Old Nature in an higher form. A prophane man reduced to a Philoſophical Morality, is putrified Fleſh reduced to ſome ſweetneſs, endued with a freſh colour, but wanting life as much as before: It is an Old Nature new mended. But a New Creature is Chriſt formed in the ſoul. Moral Vertue colours the skin, renewing Grace enlivens the heart; that changeth the outward actions, this the inward affections; that paints the man, this quickens him; that is a change indeed in the Fleſh, not of the Fleſh into Spirit; 'tis a new action, not a new creation. There is a difference indeed among men in this reſpect; as there is of cleanly Lambs from a filthy Swine, or a ravenous Wolf, yet both are in the rank of Beaſts. There ſeems to be a difference in the wickedneſs and malice of Devils: Our Saviour tells us of a kind that are not caſt out but by faſting and prayer, Mat. 17. 21. intimating, that there are other kinds of them, not altogether ſo bad, or ſo ſtrong; yet all agreeing in one common Diabolical Nature: As there is a difference in gracious men, one ſhining like a Star, another of a leſſer light; yet all agree in the Nature of light, and light in the Lord. So tho there be a difference among men, in point of Moral Vertue, yet all agree in the Nature of Fleſh; That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh, Joh. 3. 6. Let it be what it will, a Nicodemus as well as Judas, 'tis Fleſh, a more refined ſenſuality, an animal life.

(3.) It muſt needs be differenced from the New Creature, becauſe its birth is different. Moral Vertue is gained by humane induſtry, natural ſtrength, frequent exerciſes: 'Tis made up of habits, engendred by frequent acts. But Regeneration is an habit infus'd, which grows not upon the ſtock of Nature, nor is it brought forth by the ſtrength of Nature: for man being fleſh, cannot prepare himſelf to it. That may be the fruit of Education, Example, Philoſophy; this of the Spirit: that is a fruit of God's common Grace, this of his ſpecial Grace: that grows upon the ſtock of ſelf-love, not from the Root of Faith, and a Divine Affection: that is like a wild flower in the field, brought forth by the ſtrength of Nature; this like a flower in the garden, tranſplanted from Heaven, derived from Chriſt, ſet and watered by the Spirit. And therefore the other being but the Work of Nature, cannot bear the Characters of that Excellency, which the Affections planted by the Spirit do. That is the product of Reaſon, this of the Spirit; that is the awakening of natural light, this the breaking out of ſpiritual light and love upon it: that is the excitation of an old Principle, this the infuſion of a new; that a riſing from ſleep by the jog of Conſcience, this a riſing from death by the breath of the Spirit, working a deep contrition, and making all new.

(4.) It differs from the New Creature, in regard of the contractedneſs of the one, and the extenſiveneſs of the other. That is in part a purifying of the fleſh, this a purging both of fleſh and ſpirit, 2 Cor. 7. 1. that binds the hands, this clears the heart; that purgeth the body, this every part of the ſoul; that, at the beſt, is but Oyl in the Lamp of Life, this Oyl both in Lamp and Veſſel: that is a change of outward poſtures, modes, and faſhion of walking, this of Nature, Heart and Spirit; that ſeems to be a diſlike of ſome ſins, this of all. If any thing in moral honeſty be given to God, 'tis but a certain part; the greateſt and beſt is kept back from him. That may be a caſting away ſome Iniquity, but not making a new heart, when both are commanded together, Ezek. 18. 31. Caſt away from you all your tranſgreſſions, and make you a new heart and a new ſpirit. That is a caſting away the loathſome Works of the Fleſh, this a new Root to bring forth the Fruits of the Spirit.

(5.) It differs from the New Creature in the immediate principle of it, and its tendency. That is a cleanſing the outward fleſh in the fear of man, out of Reverence to Superiors (as 'tis ſaid of Jehoaſh, he did that which was right, while he was under the awful inſtructions of Jehojada, 2 Kings 12. 2.) This is a perfecting holineſs in the fear of God, 2 Cor. 7. 1. That is an outward reformation from the hearing of the Word; ſome acts materially performed from the newneſs of the thing, John 5. 35. this from a judicious and hearty approbation of the Law and

Will of God: That ariſeth from a natural love to Reaſon, Juſtice, Equity; this conſiſts of love to God: that avoids ſome ſins, becauſe they are loathſome, this becauſe they are ſinful: That tends not to God for himſelf, but for ſomething extraneous to him: 'Tis an acting for ſelf, not for the praiſe of God. The actions of unregenerate morality, as well as loathſome prophaneſs, are to gratifie the Fleſh in ſome part of it: They all meet in that point, as the cleareſt Brooks as well as the moſt rapid and muddy Streams, run to feed the Sea.

Well then: deceive not your ſelves; conclude not your ſelves New Creatures by your Moral Honeſty: It will not follow, that becauſe you have ſome Vertues, you have therefore true Grace; but it will follow, that if you are New Creatures, and have Faith and Love, you have all Graces in the Root; and they will appear in time, tho they may lye hid a while in that ſeminal Principle: The greater Vertues contain the leſs, but the leſs do not infer the greater.

4. It will certainly follow from hence, That reſtraints are not this New Creature. Reſtraining Grace, and renewing Grace, are two different things; the one is a withholding, Gen. 20. 6. I withheld thee from ſinning againſt me: the other an enlivening with a free Spirit againſt it. Reſtraint may be from a chaſtiſement, attended alſo with ſomething of natural Conſcience. Abimelech had ſome natural integrity in his Conſcience, not to meddle with another man's Wife, which God acknowledges; I know that thou didſt this in the integrity of thy heart; for I alſo withheld thee: Yet without this reſtraint by a puniſhment, this natural integrity might have been baffled by the temptation. Reſtraints may ſpring from the Law in the hand of the Magiſtrate, when it doth not ſpring from the Law of God in the heart. Men may love that which they do not act; at leaſt, they may love it in others, tho not in themſelves, for ſome extrinſick conſiderations; and wiſh they had as fair a way to commit it, as others have. They may hate what they practiſe. Do all that hear the Word, love the Word, hide it in their hearts, and let it ſink down into the bottom of their ſouls? Do all that abſtain from ſin, loath what they abſtain from? The reſtraints of many being barely outward reſtraints, are no more arguments of Regeneration, than God's withholding the Devils by the Chain of his powerful Providence, is a ſign of the New Creation of them. The damned are hindered from committing many of thoſe ſins, which were their pleaſure upon the Earth: 'Tis not a change of their Diſpoſition, but of their Condition. Neither puniſhments in Hell, nor puniſhments upon the Earth, alter the Nature; tho after lying a thouſand years in Hell, they ſhould have leave to dwell upon the Earth again, they would have the ſame inclinations, without an inward change. Do we not ſee it daily in mens afflictions, tho the ſenſe of the ſmart nips a little thoſe inclinations, yet when that ſenſe is extinguiſht, thoſe inclinations bud forth afreſh? The bare pruning a tree, makes it bear more fruit of the ſame kind, as long as the root remains, rather than diminiſheth it, Iſa. 1. 5. Why ſhould you be ſtricken any more? you will revolt more and more: the whole head is ſick, and the whole heart is faint. While the Head is ſick, and the Heart faint, tho there may be a weakneſs to act ſome ſins under the ſtroak, yet afterwards the revoltings are more violent many times than they were before. The beſt that Reſtraints work of themſelves, is but a cautiouſneſs to ſin more warily. The act may be repreſt, while the habit remains.

5. A ſerious fit of melancholy, or a ſudden ſtart of affections, is not this work of the New Creature. 'Tis an habit, a Law writ in the heart; not a tranſient pang, or a ſudden affection; not a skipping of fancy, or a quick ſparkling of paſſion; but a New Nature, a Divine Frame ſpreading it ſelf over every Faculty; Knowing God in our Underſtandings, complying with him by our Wills, aſpiring to him by a ſetled and perpetual flame of our Affections, riſing Heavenwards, like the fire upon the Altar, conforming our ſelves to him in the whole man, a denial of whole ſelf for God. 'Tis not a working of the imagination, or a melancholy Vapour, which may quickly be removed, or a flaſh of joy and love; but a ſerious humility, a conſtant grief under the remainder of corruption yet unextirpated; a perpetual recourſe to God, and delight in him through Jeſus Chriſt. Are your affections raiſed ſometimes to God? and are they not oftentimes raiſed higher to Objects extrinſical to God? Such affections may ariſe rather from the conſtitution of the body, than alteration of the ſoul. They are but a taſte of the heavenly gift, and the good word of God, Heb. 6. 4, 5. A taſte, and no more; and is but a tranſient work. The Object about which our affections are ſtirred, may be divine; yet the Operation but meerly natural. May not ſometimes affections be ſtirred much at the hearing the ſufferings of our Saviour pathetically expreſt, yet only out of a natural compaſſion, from an agreeable impreſſion upon the fancy? The ſtory of Joſeph in the Pit, and Chriſt upon the Croſs, may be heard with the ſame workings of paſſion. And may not the ſame be done at a well-humored Play, or at the hearing a report of the lamentable Death of a Turk, or Heathen, pathetically expreſt? Theſe are but the workings of natural Spirits. Some affections are as movable as Quickſilver, upon the leaſt touch; they ſweat like Marble in moiſt Weather, but reſemble it alſo in hardneſs. You do not find the affections to be the chief ſeat of the Law. This would be as to write Letters upon melted Wax, or running Water: but the Tenor of the Covenant runs upon the mind; I will put my law into their minds, Heb. 8. 8, 10. And when God works upon the mind, the affections will attend the dictates of that, and the motions of the Will. But a work upon the Affections only, is like Water in a Spunge, eaſily ſuckt up, and upon the leaſt compreſſion, ſqueezed out. Theſe may be where there is no root of Grace; they ſuddenly riſe, and ſuddenly vaniſh. When unrooted Notions are received only into the fancy, without any illumination of the Underſtanding, or determination of the Will, the Affections to them will be as volatile as the Fancy which entertained them. Thoſe in Mat. 13. 20, 21. that received the word with a ſudden joy, were as ſuddenly offended for want of a root: anon with joy receives it, by and by he is offended. The word tranſlated anon, and by and by, εὐθὺς, is the ſame, a lightning of affection, and a ſudden vaniſhing. Therefore this is not the New Creature, ſudden affections, or a melancholy fit. The Law of God ſeated in the heart, mind and will; tho a conſtant courſe of affection, is a very good character to judg of the New Creature.

6. It informs us of the excellency of the New Creature. How excellent is this New Creature? 'Tis a Change, a divine Nature, a likeneſs to God, an excellency above that of the greateſt Moraliſt under Heaven. The Apoſtle calls it a change from glory to glory, 2 Cor. 3. 18. implying, that the firſt change wrought upon the ſoul, is glorious, and a New Creature excellent in its firſt make, more glorious in its progreſs, unconceivably glorious when God ſhall put his laſt hand to the compleating of it. Regeneration is more excellent than Creation. 'Tis more noble to be formed a Son of God by Grace, than made a man by Nature: Nature deforms, Grace beautifies. By Nature we are the Sons of Adam; by the New Nature the Members of Chriſt. As Grace excels Nature, and Chriſt ſurmounts Adam; ſo much more excellent is the ſtate of a Chriſtian, a real Chriſtian, above that of a man. Can there be a greater excellency, than to have a divine beauty, a formation of Chriſt, a proportion of all Graces, ſuited to the imitable perfections of God? Man is an higher Creature than others, becauſe he hath an higher Principle: A life of Reaſon is more noble than that of Senſe. To live by Senſe, is to play the part, and live the life of brutes: To live by Reaſon, is to live the life of a man: But he that lives by the Spirit, lives the life of God, anſwers the end of his Creation, uſeth his Reaſon, Underſtanding, Will, Affection for God, by whom they were firſt beſtowed; acts more nobly, lives more pleaſantly, than the greateſt Angel could do without ſuch a Principle. A New Creature doth exceed a rational Creature, conſidered only as rational, more than a rational doth a brute. The Apoſtle makes a manifeſt diſtinction between the natural, or the ψυχικὸς, the rational, and the ſpiritual man, 1 Cor. 2. 14, 15. A man with the richeſt endowments, is no more to be compared in excellency, with a regenerate man, than the top of a craggy Mountain is with a well-dreſt Garden. That muſt needs be excellent, the forming of which is the end of all God's Ordinances in the World, the end of the Spirit's being among the Sons of men, the end of keeping up of Mankind, the end of his patience in forbearing his puniſhment upon contempt of the Goſpel. The end of his preſerving the World, is to form Chriſt in the heart: and when the laſt New Creature is formed, God hath no more to do in the World. When all that are given to him, ſhall come to believe, Chriſt ſhall then come to be admired in them, 2 Theſ. 1. 10. He doth not come therefore, till all his choſen ones are brought in, to believe in him; for then he would not be admired by all thoſe that are Saints in his purpoſe. This therefore muſt needs be excellent. One New Creature is more excellent than the whole unrenewed World, with their choiceſt Ornaments. It was never pronounced of them, that they were partakers of the Divine Nature.

Sons

7. How much therefore ſhould New Creatures be eſteemed and valued? Is any thing, next to God, more worthy our eſteem than that which bears his Image? Is any thing, next to a crucified Chriſt, glorified in Heaven, more worthy our valuation, than Chriſt formed in the heart of a believer? What eſteem have men had for thoſe who have had Tempers like to ſome Heroes, ſome generous and uſeful men in the World? How much more reſpect ſhould be given to them that bear the characters of God upon them, and have communion with God, and Chriſt, and the Spirit, in their Nature? If the dead Image of God in a natural man, ought to be reſpected, much more the living image of God in a renewed man. If a Picture is to have reſpect, much more the Life. To ſlight them therefore, redounds to the ſlighting that infinite perfection, whoſe Image it is. They are his living Images, ſent into the World to repreſent him. He then that diſeſteems them for that work, diſeſteems him that wrought and engraved them, by the ſame Rule, That he that deſpiſed the Diſciples, deſpiſed Chriſt, and the Father that ſent him, Luke 10. 16. 1 Theſ. 4. 8. He therefore that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth not man, but God, who hath alſo given us his holy Spirit. Yet no better muſt be expected here: for the contracted Spirit of the World, can love no other birth but its own, no other ſimilitude but what draws near unto it: If you were of the world, the world would love his own: but becauſe you are not of the world, therefore the world hates you, Joh. 15. 19. The Copy can expect no better uſage than the Original. The nearer any approach in likeneſs to Chriſt, the more they will be expoſed to contempt and ſcorn in the World.

8. If the New Creature be ſuch a thing as you have heard, then the ſin of a regenerate man, hath a greater aggravation than the ſins of any in the World. If you ſlip into ſin, the ſins of the whole unregenerate World have not ſo great a blackneſs. 'Tis true, a New Creature may, and doth ſin: For tho a New Man is created in him with all his Members, and eſſential and integral parts, yet the body of Death doth remain ſtill with all its Members, and a ſeed-plot ſtill, tho not in the ſame ſtrength and fruitfulneſs as before: For the Apoſtle Paul doth not complain of a Member of Death, or a piece of ſin, but the whole body of it, and the law of ſin in his members, Rom. 7. It ſeems it did reſide there ſtill; and ſo it doth in all the renewed, tho but faint and feeble, an Old Man indeed, growing older every day, loſing its teeth and ſtrength, leſs able to bite, leſs able to aſſault. Yet ſometimes a New Creature may fall into ſin, but not without great aggravation. For other men ſin againſt natural, you againſt ſpiritual Principles; others ſin againſt an habit of common notion, you againſt an habit of Divine Grace. A natural man ſins againſt the light of God in his Conſcience, a renewed man againſt the life of God in his heart *. Others ſin againſt a Chriſt crucified, and riſen from the Grave; he ſins againſt a Chriſt new-formed, and riſen in his heart. Others ſin againſt the Law of God in the Word, he againſt the Law written in his Mind and Word too. Such caſt dirt upon the Spirits work, croſs the end of ſo noble a peice, bring a Thief into the Spirits Temple, and grieve the holy Spirit, who inſtructed him better. Whenever you ſin, it muſt coſt you more grief, becauſe your ſins are more grievous; and you muſt grieve the more for them, becauſe the Spirit is grieved by them. Greif for ſin is a ſtanding Grace in the New Creature, and part of a likeneſs to the Spirit of God, whatſoever ſome men dream to the contrary.

* Gurnal, part 2. pag. 218, 219.

USE 2. Is of comfort. There is ground of joy unſpeakable and full of Glory that reſults from this. Are you of this New Creation that I have been diſcourſing of? Then take your portion of comfort. The Jewel of comfort belongs only to the Cabinet of Grace. 'Tis fit you ſhould have the comforts of Heaven in your hearts, who have a fitneſs for Heaven in your Nature. The day of the New Birth was a happy day, to be brought from under the rule of ſin and death in it, to the rule of the Spirit of God and Life in it; from bearing fruit to death, to bringing forth fruit to God and Everlaſting Life: If ſin be a torment to the Womb that bare it, no joy can reſide in an unregenerate Spirit; if ſin be the Souls rack in its own Nature, Grace muſt be its pleaſure; for it carries as much contentment and ſatisfaction in its Bowels, as ſin doth diſquietneſs and ſorrow.

1. You have by the New Creation, a relation to the Bleſſed Trinity. Such are the ſons of God, the ſeed of Chriſt, the temple of the Spirit; what a connexion is there between you and the three Perſons? God in Chriſt, and Chriſt in you, that you may be made perfect in one, John 17. 23. God in Chriſt reconciling the World; you in Chriſt reconciled to God. God in Chriſt, as a Father in a Son; you in Chriſt as members in the Body; Chriſt in you, as a head in the body; the Spirit in you as an informing and enlivening principle. It makes you related to the Father as his Friends, by the ceaſing of your enmity: to the Son, as his propriety for then you are his; to the Spirit, as the tutor of you, and inhabitant in you; all implied, Rom. 8. 8, 9, 10. By your former birth you were Children of wrath; by this, Children of God; by that, partakers of the Serpentine Nature of the deſtroyer; by this, partakers of the Divine Nature of your Creator and Redeemer; by Nature you deſcended from the loins of Adam, and thereby were related to all the Corruption of the World: by the New Birth you are deſcended from the Son of God, and counted to the Lord for a Generation, Pſal. 22. 30. and thereby related to all the perfection of Heaven: as really deſcended from Chriſt by a Spiritual, as from Adam by a Natural Generation. What an overflowing comfort is this? To be a Kings Son is a higher priviledg than meerly to be his ſubject; ſubjects have protection, Sons affection; ſubjects partake of the kindneſs of the Prince, Sons of his Nature; As a Son he hath a right to the Inheritance of the Father, as a ſubject not. Men are ſubjects by covenant, tho born of others; Sons by Generation: By being a New Creature, the Regenerate man acquires a more noble relation, than by being a Creature. That relation that he loſt by a prodigal corruption, is reſtored to him in a more excellent way by his Spiritual Regeneration.

2. If you be New Creatures, you are the delight of God. 'Tis impoſſible but God ſhould have the tendereſt reſpect to his own likeneſs; he muſt needs take a pleaſure in a reſemblance to his own Nature, in a habit of his Spirits infuſing. Can God deſpiſe the Work of his own hand? Can he then deſpiſe the Work of his heart, a likeneſs to Himſelf, to his Son, to his Spirit? His delight is ſtrengthned by a threefold cord: he delights not in the ſtrength of a horſe, nor takes pleaſure in the legs of a man, but in them that fear him, in them that hope in his mercy, Pſal. 147. 10, 11. You are the firſt fruits of his Creatures, peculiarly dedicated to him as his portion by the New Birth. James 1. 18. Of his own will begat he us, with the word of truth, that we ſhould be a kind of firſt fruits of his creatures: taken out of the maſs of the World for a Holy-Offering to himſelf; the more refined part of his Creation; not barely Creatures, but firſt fruits, peculiarly belonging to him, upon whom he looks with a delightful eye, and under another relation. God cannot but love himſelf, and therefore that which approacheth moſt near to himſelf; for nothing in the Creature is a fit object for Gods Love, but his own living Image in him: as he Loves himſelf in himſelf, ſo he Loves himſelf in his Creature. To deny his truth, is to deny himſelf; to deny his Love to his Image, would be to deny his Love to himſelf: He can as ſoon hate his Chriſt Glorified at his hand, as hate Chriſt formed in the Soul. If ſin makes men the objects of his hatred, as being contrary to his Nature; Grace then makes them the objects of his Love, as being agreeable to his Nature: he cannot but delight in his own Birth, and delight in the Seals of his own Spirit.

You

You could not but displease him by being in the Flesh: those that are in the flesh, cannot please God, Rom. 8. 8. you then please him by being in the Spirit. Shall the pleasure of the Father of Spirits, in his own Image, be of a lower degree than that of a natural Father in his Son, which bears the lineaments of his Body? He hath no pleasure in any thing in the World, if not in you. Sin soon deformed all after he had pronounced them good, and stopt the joy God had in his Works; 'tis by your Redemption by his Son, and your Regeneration by his Spirit, that the joy in his Works is restored to him: if he should not delight in you, what hath he in the World to please himself with? Your services please him; a new Spirit, a new Beauty is added to all your Addresses: a New Creature prays not as before, hears not as before, he refers all to God; there is a brokenness instead of pride, every Sacrifice is washed in contrition, a zeal of Spirit, a Heavenly warmth, a sweet and delightful savour ascends up to him. 'Tis you only that with Grace serve him acceptably, Heb. 12. 28. with such a Godly fear and frame wherein he takes a pleasure.

Well then: the New Creature is the delight of God, tho the scoff of men; the pleasure of him that commands the World, tho reproached by them that shall fill Hell with their Souls.

Comf. 3. How great a foundation then is laid in this for your happiness? New Creatures, Divine Nature, a relation to God, the delight of Heaven. If any man be in Christ, he is a New Creature; old things are past away, behold, all things are become new. New for them, as well as new in them. Distance and dissimilitude from God, is the foundation of all misery; a likeness then to him, is the basis of all blessedness. Divine Happiness is connatural to the Divine Nature, and due to it, as it were jure intrinseco; as New Creatures you are Heirs, as Sanctified Creatures you are made meet for the Inheritance; you have an hereditary right, and an aptitudinary right. Can any comfort be greater, than to have right to an Inheritance, and a fitness to enjoy it? Now are we the sons of God, 1 John 3. 2. we have this real relation; not only named so, but are so, which is a certain foundation of a happiness, which doth not yet fully appear to us. But such a knowledg we have, that when the Original of this New Nature shall appear, our imperfect likeness shall arise to a full perfection: we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is: upon the account of this relation we know there will be an exact likeness between him and us. I suppose it is properly meant of a likeness to Christ, we shall see him as he is; for the Apostle, Verse 5. refers it to Christ, without altering the person he had spoke of before; so that it is not meant of a seeing the Essence of God, but the sight of Christ. Where Lust reigns, the natural consequence is storms and dissatisfaction; he that hath the Image of the Devil, hath a model of Hell: the New Creature having the Image of God, hath a model of Heaven. A drop of Grace, is a drop of Glory; so much as there is of the new creation, so much of Heaven is put into the Soul. 'Tis a lively hope of Heaven here, and a full enjoyment of Heaven hereafter, that the Soul is begotten unto, 1 Pet. 1. 3, 4. The greater the progress in this state, the more lively are the hopes of it, and the nearer approaches of Heaven to the Soul; such a foundation of happiness, with the hopes and foresight of it, cannot but be attended with unconceiveable pleasure.

4. How highly comfortable is it to view your selves, and consider the draught of this Image, and the progress of the New Creation in your Souls? How comfortable is the Work of self-examination to such a Soul! With what pleasure may you look upon your present state, and be filled with ravishments at every view? When you look back upon your former condition, and think of your state of death, the noisomness of your hearts to God, the stiffness of your Souls against him, when you consider how Spiritual death reigned over every part; and now see your nature changed, your Souls upon a lively and quick motion to God, your relishes of the sweetness of Spiritual pleasures to be greater than those of sensual; how comfortable is it to behold those diffusions of God in your Souls, and to feel them full of Love to him, and full of Love from him? How comfortable to view the Original, and Copy from it, and to see how near the one doth resemble the other? To cast your eye upon the state of Wrath you were in by your first birth, and upon the ſtate of Grace you are in by the latter; to conſider your former drudgery under Sin, and your preſent freedom in the ſervice of Righteouſneſs: It would make you perform thoſe commands ſo often repeated, of rejoycing in the Lord alway, and ſhouting for joy, ſince mercy doth ſo compaſs you about, Pſal. 32. 11. Phil. 4 4. As upon the awakenings of Conſcience, and the exerciſe of its reflexive office, there muſt needs ariſe an anguiſh and torment in an unrenewed Soul: ſo upon the reflections of the ſame faculty in a New Creature, there muſt ſpring a ſparkling delight. As God by the reviews of himſelf, and contemplation of his own excellency, hath an infinite joy: ſo the New Creature by the views of it ſelf, hath a joy in its meaſure proportionable to that of God himſelf. As it is in it ſelf the Image of God, ſo it is a lower fruition of him. I enjoy my Friend ſomewhat in his Picture, when the Original is abſent. And this joy is greater, when a beam from Heaven doth ſhine upon this Image, and both illuſtrate and diſcover the beauty of it, which in the darkneſs of ignorance and miſtakes cannot be ſeen. But take heed that in theſe reviews you impair not your comfort by any proud and God-neglecting reflections: but with humble and debaſing thoughts of your ſelves, and thankful admirations of the Grace of God, and praiſes of him, for ſo excellent a draught in your hearts. 'Tis wonderful to perceive how by ſuch a carriage the comforts of Heaven flow in upon the Soul, when thus humbly and thankfully it opens it ſelf before God in this review. And let this add to your comfort, That if the reviews of ſo imperfect an Image in you, and the dark ſight of God, whoſe Image it is, be ſo delightful: how much more pleaſant will it be, when your Souls ſhall be elevated to the higheſt perfection, and the moſt ſatisfying fruition?

5. And how great a comfort is it to conſider, that this imperfect Image, which is the foundation of happineſs, will in time be perfect, and as fully reſemble him whoſe Image it is, as the Creature is capable of? There is a day of perfect and glorious Regeneration coming, wherein you will appear in all your Royalty as Heirs of God. The Divine Nature ſhall glitter without any filth of ſin to ſully it; Holineſs ſhall hold the Scepter without any Luſt to ſhake it. There is a day wherein Chriſt ſhall make all things new in the Church, and in the Soul; he ſits upon his Throne, and ſaith it, Revel. 21. 5. behold, I make all things new. It will be ſo new and admirable, that when you look back upon that mean dranght of it while you were in the World, you would think you never had a grain of the Divine Nature before in you. As the viſion of God will be perfect, ſo will your likeneſs to him, 1 John 3. 2. as it will be a Viſion without any Clouds, ſo it will be a likeneſs without any diſſimilitude, according to the creatures capacity. The Viſion of Chriſt here transforms us into a likeneſs to him in his Death and Reſurrection; the Viſion hereafter transforms us into a likeneſs to him in Glory. The cloſe look of the Soul upon God ſhall diveſt it of all carnal conceptions: The Underſtanding ſhall perfectly behold the Original; the Will cloſely embrace it; the Affections center in it without diſtraction; the whole Soul ſhall be changed from a leſs degree of Glory, to an unconceiveable perfection in it; changed from glory to Glory, 2 Cor. 3. 18. when the Well of living Water ſpringing up in thee to Eternal Life, ſhall ſpring into it. This Fire-Baptiſm will not leave, till it hath fully conſumed your droſs, and refined your Souls. That Spirit that begun the Work, will fill the heart with the Knowledg and Love of God, as his promiſe is to fill the earth, Iſa. 11. 9. He will not leave deſpoiling you of the oldneſs of the fleſh, till there be not a mite left; and clothing you with a newneſs of Spirit, till there be not a grain of the Soul free from this new enlivening. As he begun, ſo he will finiſh, in aboliſhing that which remains of Vanity, and in filling this Holy Temple with the Glory of the Lord. There is certainly as much power in the ſecond Adam to perfect, as well as to begin this New Creation; as there was in the firſt, to convey his foul and defiled Image to his poſterity. The honour of Chriſt, and the good of the New Creature, are concerned in it; the honour of Chriſt, in point of Power and Affection; the good of the New Creature, in point of happineſs; his honour would ſuffer, if he did not perfect what he had begun; As Moſes pleads with God for the perfecting the Iſraelites deliverance in bringing them into Canaan, that the Nations might not ſay, God was not able to deliver them, them, Numb. 14. 16. In point of Affection, he loves his Father, therefore the Image of his Father; he loves himself, therefore the Picture of himself; he loves his Spirit which glorifies him, therefore will perfect the draught he hath made. It will then in time be perfect, not a lineament of God but will be illustriously drawn; there shall be no more complaints of a body of death, nor any snarlings of Sin and Lust.

Upon these considerations you may apply the comfort this New Creation affords you:

(1.) Against troubles in the World. Old things are past away, even the old events and issues of your afflictions, they are no longer used meerly to trouble you or punish you, but to perfect this new creation, to engrave more deeply, or exercise this Divine Image. All things are but fellow-labourers to throw out the rubbish, and blow up this Divine Spark. Rom. 8. 28. They all work together for good, to them who are called according to his purpose. As regenerating Grace gives us a relation to God, so it should expel fear, Isa. 43. 1. Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by name, thou art mine. What reason is there to fear when he hath called you by name, in a special manner, not in a general way? What reason to fear when thou hast the badg of God upon thee, who hath new created thee? The Grace wherein you stand, or the state of Grace, should make you not only to rejoyce in the hope of the glory of God, but to glory in tribulations also, as well as the Apostle, Rom. 5. 2, 3. because it works patience, &c. It dresseth up the new creature, and draws the several parts of the gracious habit into exercise. Tho it seem strange, yet the glorying in tribulation is as proper an effect of this new creation, as rejoycing in hope of the glory of God. Grace being the foundation of your Glory in Heaven, cannot but be the foundation of glorying in every thing else which heightens it, and pusheth it nearer to its center. Let not affliction, crosses, reproaches, molest your New Nature; be new creatures as to your respects to them, as well as relation to God. Our Saviours Sonship, and the Meat the World knew not of, supported him under greater injuries than we can ever be subject to. What clouds of trouble should ever sadden that heart, which hath the living Image of God in his Soul? This alone should turn the Wormwood of affliction into Honey, and bitterness into sweetness.

(2.) You may apply the comfort of your New Creation against temptations. Will not the power of God be employed in the defence of that, which is his only Image in the World, since he knows that Satan is most active against it, because it is his Image? And upon the same account will not God be active for it? Surely that Spirit which begat it, broods upon its own birth, and watches for the defence of it against its mighty adversaries. Satan watches to cast dirt upon the Divine Nature; the Spirit watches to hinder it, and if cast on, to wipe it off, and restore it to its beauty. Can it enter into the heart of an infinite Affection, nakedly to expose his own work, his affectionate New Creature, made up of Faith in him, and Love to him, that which maintains his honour in the World, designs all for his Glory, values his honour above his own credit, yea his life; opposeth every thing that opposeth him; hates every thing that is loathsom to him, would endure any misery rather than displease him; I say, Shall a God of infinite tenderness expose this Creature to the violences and furies of Hell without any defence? What should we make of God, by entertaining such thoughts of him, but a hard Master, a cruel Tyrant, one that would make his own Work the sport of Devils, to stand by carelessly and see his Image trampled upon, and leave the best subjects he hath in the World to the mercy of his mortal enemy? Let not such a thought enter into any New Creature; nor let us believe, that the love in the heart of the New Creator is less than the power in his hand. It was the Sonship and Resurrection of our Saviour secured him against the counsels of Enemies, Psal. 2. 2, and 7. compared: thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee: So our communion with him in his Resurrection secures us against the malicious designs of Satan. Thou art my Son, this day have I Regenerated thee, is the voice of God to a New Creature; and by this relation his happiness is secured under the greatest assaults, if he keep up Faith, which will fetch vigour from the head. The Devil by his whole Legions of temptations, cannot more prevail against the seed of God, than Haman could againſt Mordecai, becauſe he was of the ſeed of the Jews, as his Wife prudently adviſed him, Eſth. 6. 13.

(3.) This comfort of the New Creation, is applicable againſt fears of falling away. Were Grace like a moral habit, acquired by moral acts, it might ſink under a force, it might be loſt: but it is a Divine Work, a New Creation in Chriſt, not any thing gained by moral Philoſophy, and a road of vertuous actions. Men may ſeem to begin in the Spirit, and end in the Fleſh. But doth the Spirit begin this Regeneration-work, to ſuffer it to end in the Fleſh? When the Apoſtle ſpeaks of mens works, he fears the conſequence; but when he ſpeaks of God's working in a man, he is confident of a good iſſue, Phil. 6. 6. God never begins, but he reſolves to perform and finiſh. As it is impoſſible for one united to Adam in a natural way, not to partake of his ſinful life; ſo it is impoſſible for one united to Chriſt in a gracious way, not to partake of his Spiritual life. And as every man is really in the Loins of Adam; ſo every Believer is, in a ſort, ſpiritually in the Loins of Chriſt, and is as truly denominated his ſeed; and as no Man can be cut off from the ſtock of Adam, but by the Grace of God; ſo no man can be taken off from the ſtock of Chriſt, when once implanted, but by the retraction of that Grace, againſt which there is ſufficient ſecurity in the Covenant of Grace, and ſeveral promiſes in Scripture, like Stars in the Heavens, ſet to give Light to this Truth. The New Creature under the Goſpel ſhall grow in beauty as the Lilie; in ſtrength like a Cedar; his beauty ſhall be as freſh as that of the Roſe or Lilie; his root as firm as that of a Cedar; and this from God, who will be as the dew unto it, Hoſ. 14. 5. I will be as the dew to Iſrael: he ſhall grow up as the lilie, and caſt forth his roots as Lebanon. As dew quickens the Plant, ſo will God enliven Iſrael; what withering can there be under ſuch an influence? If you have been made New Creatures in Chriſt, you are made ſtable creatures, his charge is as great to preſerve you, as it was to renew you. Beſides, the Divine Nature is ſo delightful a thing, that he that once is a poſſeſſor, hath no mind to be a loſer of it. He that hath once put off the Old Man, and put on the New, will have little heart to make another exchange, and diveſt himſelf of his beautiful Robe, to be cloathed again with the old tattered rags which he hath flung upon the dunghill. The New Creation is a fellowſhip with Chriſt in his reſurrection, Phil. 3. 10. and therefore in the conſequents of it; as Chriſt did not riſe to die again, ſo the Soul is not made new to become old again; Chriſt formed in the Soul is like Chriſt incarnate in the World; the Divine Nature may be obſcured, it may and will have its humiliations; it cannot indeed die; but tho it ſeem to die, it will have its Reſurrection, and afterwards its Aſcenſion into Glory.

4. 'Tis comfort againſt weakneſs of Grace, and ſtrength of corruptions. The whole frame of the New Creature is wrought at once: the Soul is infuſed at once; but not as Adam was, created in his full ſtature, and perfect ſtrength, and exerciſe of all his faculties: But as Adam's poſterity were generated, firſt infants, then men; others may be more honourable Creatures, but the weakeſt Grace is a New Creature; others may be more noble members, but every New Creature is a member of the Body: others may have more Grace, but not a better title; the weakeſt is a Heaven-born Heir, and hath the ſame title by the purchaſe of the Redeemer, the reality of the New Creation, and the Spirit of Adoption. I do not mean by the weakeſt Grace, a ſuperficial deſire, or a velleity not to ſin, and yet a daily running into it; but a Grace mating and maſtering corruption, tho reſiding with it; a Grace that is daily eating into the bowels of Luſt, and growing up to a ſharper animoſity and ſtrength againſt what is contrary to it. For the leaſt degree of Grace is prevalent againſt ſin, and is not over-powered by it, tho it be mightily oppoſed. The eſſence of Grace is the ſame in every New Creature, tho the degrees be different; 'tis one thing to have the nature of fire, another thing to have the ſtrength of it; a ſpark is eſſentially fire, and will burn, tho not ſo much as a flame. If the frame be new, tho the draughts be not ſo clear, nor the lineaments drawn with ſuch lively colours, yet there is a repreſentation; the firſt draught of a Picture bears a likeneſs to the perſon, but it will be more lively after the ſecond or third ſitting, when the Limner hath laid on his freſher colours.

(1.) If your complaints of the weakneſs of Grace and ſtrength of Corruption, be ſincere, 'tis a comfortable ſign you will hold out. Haſty pretenders, and proud boaſters are not durable; the ſeed ſown in the ſtony ground preſently ſprung up, Matth. 13. 5. grew faſter, as if it would outſtrip the common harveſt; but as ſoon withered; whereas that which was ſown in the good ground, ſprung up leiſurely to perfection, and endured the ſtorm.

(2.) You cannot reaſonably think, you ſhould preſently be rid of your Corruptions. Some ſpice of a cured Diſeaſe will remain in the Soul as well as the Body; and a certain Spiritual weakneſs after the raiſing of the New Creature. The Law in the mind doth not preſently raze out the Law of ſin in the members. There is a Diabolical Nature as well as Divine *. The Platoniſt could ſay, The vertuous man who doth ſomething ἀπερίπτως, is both a God and a Dæmon. Chriſt formed in the heart, doth not preſently diſpoſſeſs the Serpentine nature, but maſter it. A man reſtored to health from a ſharp Diſeaſe, may do the actions of a ſound man, yet not in that manner and ſoundneſs, for all his motions are infected with the relicks of that Diſeaſe which lately maſtered his Body. * Original Corruption is not as a Ciſtern, then it may be emptied, but a Spring; pump out all you can at one duty, it will riſe again, you will ſee it before the next ſervice; 'tis true, that he that is born of God, commits not ſin: he ſins not with ſuch a frame as he did before; but it is as true, that If we ſay we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, and there is no truth of grace in us, 1 John 1. 8. There will be a running iſſue, that you may frequently touch the hem of Chriſts Garment for a cure. The Soul of the beſt is never like to be without ſpot or wrinkle, till it be glorious, Eph. 5. 26.

* Photin. Enead. 1. lib. 2 cap. 6.

* Rogers, on Per. p. 181.

(3.) All Gods communications of Grace are gradual. Doth the Muſtard ſeed ſpring up in an inſtant to the tallneſs of a tree? Grace is ſown in an inſtant, but grows not up ſo ſuddenly. Chriſt formed in the heart, is like Chriſt in the fleſh; firſt in his Cradle, before he be upon his Legs. The New Creation is not a ſudden leap from Corruption to perfect Purity. The Day dawns in the heart, but the Light takes a time to expel the darkneſs. Prov. 4. 18. The path of the juſt is as the ſhining light, that ſhineth more and more unto the perfect day. The firſt appearance at the dawning, is an earneſt, that the victory will be compleat at laſt. God did not make a full diſcovery of Chriſt to Adam, his revelations of him grew brighter with every Age; the nearer his coming, the clearer was the foreſight of him. The Divine Nature hath its time of diſcovery in the creature, as it had in Chriſt the Original: there were Forty days between his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion, wherein he was but in the firſt degree of his exaltation. Chriſt riſen in the heart, will take ſome time before he aſcends and carries up the Soul to Spiritual heights with him.

4. Conſider well how it is with thy will. 'Tis not the having of Luſts, but the fulfilling of them, wherein our danger lies. Rom. 13. 14. We have then put on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when we make no proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil it in the luſts thereof, but endeavour to walk Holily. The Author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews could pretend to little more than Will, Heb. 13. 18. willing to live honeſtly, καλῶς, comely, beautifully: and herein Paul exerciſed himſelf, Acts 24. 16. He manifeſted this Will by compliance with all ſeaſonable occaſions to that purpoſe. Is there Grace in thy whole Soul? Is there an enlightned judgment to ſee the foulneſs of ſin, and the lovelineſs of Chriſt? Is there a renewed Will to encline to God, and to cloſe with the Redeemer? Is there a rectified Affection, conſiſting of love, deſire, delight, tho yet but weak in all the faculties? Are there diſſatisfactions in you upon Internal reviews? Have you not ſtrong bewailings and laments for the ſtrength of ſin, and weakneſs of Grace, and breathings after a more vigorous and active Grace? Let not then your complaints of the body of death ſtifle your praiſes of God for what he hath wrought in Chriſt in order to your full deliverance; they did not ſo in Paul, Rom. 7. 24, 25. let them not do ſo in you; take comfort in what God hath wrought, bleſs him for it, and ſollicite him to confirm that which he hath wrought in you, Pſal. 68. 24. He that provides food for the Ravens that cry, will not ſtop his ears at the voice of his own Image.

(5.) It is comfort againſt the fear of death. If you were born only of the Old Adam, you were ſpiritually dead, and you muſt eternally die; it were unavoidable, if not changed. But if born of an incorruptible ſeed, the diſſolution of your body ſhall be the conſummation of your glory. Death ſtrikes the outward man, and the New Creature elevates the ſoul. The New Nature will as naturally aſcend to Heaven, when it is unclothed of Fleſh, and hath left all the reliques of corruption behind it, as the pure flame aſpires into the air, and ſeems to long to embody it ſelf with the Sun, the firſt fountain of light: How joyfully will the Original and Copy meet? Phil. 1. 23. to depart from hence, is to be with Chriſt. The truth of Grace in the Creature, and the infinite righteouſneſs in the Creator, kiſs each other. How affectionately will God entertain that image of himſelf? How delightfully will Chriſt view himſelf in the ſoul, and the ſoul view it ſelf in the heart of Chriſt? The ſoul ſhall ſee Chriſt in glory, and Chriſt ſhall behold the ſoul in perfection, where there will be nothing but life and love, love and life for ever. Is death then to be feared, that brings the New Creature to this happineſs?

USE 3. Is for Examination. Of all things, this deſerves the ſtricteſt Enquiry, in regard of its abſolute Neceſſity, and in regard of its ſuperlative Excellency.

1. 'Tis poſſible to know it, and not very difficult to know it. You may know the acts of your own heart: Can you not view your own thoughts? Can you deſire, or love, or hate, or grieve, but you muſt know that you do ſo? Can you not tell what is the Object of your inclinations? What your affections run moſt greedily after? No man can be ſuch a ſtranger to his own ſoul, if he look into it. Can you not tell whether you are the ſame men as before; whether you love what before you hated, and hate that which before you loved? A ſoul may know whether it loves God ſupreamly or no, ſo as to appeal to God for the truth of it, as Peter to our Saviour, John 21. 17. Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee. 'Tis in this reflexive power, that a man excels a brute.

2. You muſt enquire into the effects and operations of it. Where there is this ſpiritual change, there is life: where there is a ſpiritual life, there will be ſpiritual Operations. You muſt enquire then, what ſenſe and motion you have, that is ſuperior to a life of Nature. This New Creation is not only the taking down the old frame, but ſetting up a new. The Old-Creature-frame will grow more unactive, the New-Creature-form more ſpritely. Regeneration is never without ſome effect; if we have not the Properties, we have not the Nature. If the Air be dark and pitchy, that a man cannot ſee his way, it is a ſign the Sun is not up, to enlighten that Hemiſphere. A thick darkneſs cannot remain with the Suns riſing. The works of darkneſs, with their power, cannot remain with a New-Creature ſtate. The old Rubbiſh cannot wholly remain with a new Building. Look well therefore, whether old Principles, Aims, Cuſtoms, Company, Affections, are paſſed away, and whether new Affections, Principles, Ends, be ſetled in the room. Be ſure to diſtinguiſh well between the form and the power, between a paint and life, and regard well your inward acts. The acts of the New Creature are principally in the proper ſeats of it, the Mind, the Heart, the Will, the Conſcience, the Affections. Outward acts are no ſign at all; no man can perfectly judg of another by them; nor any man judg of himſelf. As the ſtrength of Sin, ſo the ſtrength of Grace, the New Creature lies in the heart. Thoſe Waters which are bitter, are bittereſt, and thoſe which are ſweet, are ſweeteſt, at the Fountain; they loſe ſomewhat of their qualities in the ſtreams, by the mixture of other things with them.

3. In general obſerve, what contrariety there is to what you were before, and the very point wherein this contrariety doth conſiſt. 'Tis a ſpiritual Habit, a divine Nature, the Law of God in the Heart. It muſt principally be diſcerned in its motion to God, in its reſpect to God, whoſe Law, Nature, Habit it is, directly contrary to the ſinful Habit, the Law of ſin in the heart, the old ſerpentine Nature which moved to ſin. Let us ſee in general, how it was with Paul, who ſpeaks ſo much of the New Creature: He was quite another man after his being in Christ, than he was before: He was before an admirer of his own righteousness, a contemner of Grace, a persecutor of Christ and his Members. After the New Creation, his Pharisaical Plumes fall, his own righteousness is as dross, he lays it down at the feet of Christ; Grace is highly admired by him, and his whole labour is spent in glorifying Christ, and edifying his Church: He abhors that which before he delighted in: He did before his own will, and the will of his sect; now, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? He is now an admirer, where he was a despiser: His industry, passions, heart, are for Christ, as before they were against him: The Doctrine of the Cross is no longer folly, but wisdom: He glories as much in being persecuted for Christ, as in being a persecutor of him and his people: His ravaging Wolvish Nature is gone, and a Lamblike Nature in the place of it: He hath as much sweetness toward the people of Christ, as he had sourness against them: Of an Executioner, he becomes a Martyr; and would not only lose his life, but be an Anathema to do them good, whom before he hated. Christ was his Life, Christ was his Joy, Christ was his All, and nothing but Christ dear to him. A quite contrary strain. And this is a New Creature: And therefore examine your selves. Is there Faith instead of Unbelief, the Knowledg of God instead of Ignorance, a constant glowing Affection to him, instead of Enmity, or a coldness of Love? the Love of the Creator instead of that of the Creature? This is to have the Image of God instead of that of the Devil.

But in particular,

1. What fervent longings have you after a likeness to God? The first draught of this Image begets strong desires for a farther perfection. The sighs and groans for a likeness to God, are the first lineaments of God in the soul; and arise from some degree of affection to him, and delight in him. The breathings of the soul are for the living God, as David, Psal. 42. 2. Psal. 84. 2. for God, as a principle of Life and Spirit in him. This hungring and thirsting after righteousness, is a sign of righteousness already in the soul, and an earnest of a further fulness, Matth. 5. None can fervently, and unweariedly long for a Divine Nature, but such as have had some taste of it. The Divine Nature in the soul will be returning to that Nature, whence it derives its essential purity. The Principle coming from God, will be aspiring to that Nature which it is a part of, as Rivers to the Sea, and swell if they be hindered: He must needs long after a full draught, and can no more satisfie himself with imperfect lineaments, than a sick man can with an imperfect Cure. 'Tis to this end he breathes after Heaven, because it is a state of perfection; not from any carnal notion of it. He knows he is not already perfect, and therefore presses forward with eager desire and endeavour, if by any means he may attain the resurrection from the dead, Phil. 3. 11, 12, 13, &c. He doth not only desire a freedom from sin, but to be as pure and elevated in Affection to God, as an Angel. God is not only free from unrighteousness, but full of righteousness; And therefore those desires of a Divine Nature, are not limited to, and centered in a negative holiness. He would set himself no other pattern but God. 'Tis an excellent speech of an Heathen *, exhorting not only to live the life of a good man, which civil Vertue, and the vogue of men approved of, but to look above that, to the choicest desire of a divine life: For, saith he, our endeavours should be for a likeness to God, not to good men. To endeavour to be like to man, is to make one Image like another: But a New Creature aims at the highest Examplar; it aspires after no lower a Pattern than God himself, his Will, his Rule, his Glory, his Pleasure. Do the breathings of your Spirits rise as much for it, as the steams of your Lusts did before against it?

* Plotin. Ennead. 1. lib. 2. cap. 7. Ἡμεῖς δὲ τυτὲς: i.e. θεὸς ἀ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ἀγαθὸς ἢ ὁμοίωσις.

2. Put this Question to your selves; What inward authority hath God over your hearts? Is the government of God set up in your souls? Can you with joy, say, The Lord reigns, and none but he shall reign over me? The New Creature coming under another Government, hath frames suitable to it, and delightfully owns that supreme authority, and pleases himself more in a subjection to God, than the wicked can in their slavery to sin. Do you yeild your selves to God, and your members, as instruments of righteousness unto God? Are the motions of your your ſouls guided by him? You are then alive from the dead; 'tis the Apoſtles Aſſertion, Rom. 6. 4. Sin doth reſide; but which reigns, God, or Luſt? An Uſurpation may be on ſin's part, when no voluntary ſubjection on ours. Is it an abſolute, or only a partial reſignation of your ſelves to him? Do you give him a moiety, or do you give him the whole? Has he the ſole Soveraignty? or would you give him an Aſſociate? Are any evil ways hated, out of a reſpect to his Word, to his Authority, Wiſdom, Goodneſs, or a reſpect to your ſelves? Pſal. 119. 128. I eſteem thy precepts concerning all things to be right, and I hate every falſe way. Ver. 133. Order my ſteps in thy word, and let not any iniquity have dominion over me. Are Gods Dictates readily obeyed? Doth a free ſubmiſſion to his Authority, govern, and act thee in his ways? Do you count his Yoke eaſie, and his Burden light? Do you glory in the Chain of Grace, and count the ſervice of ſin as Iron Fetters? Is the Will of God above your own Wills: do you defie the one to obſerve the other? Is God's Will ſacred with you, when it thwarts your own, or only when it ſuits your intereſt? 'Tis not then the Authority of God which prevails with you, but the Authority of ſome extraneous thing, which hath the chief moving force. If ſo, there is no ſign of the New Creature in ſuch a frame.

3. How are your Affections to God? It is a New Creature we are ſpeaking of, and that is inward chiefly. Sin may be left in the practiſe, and not hated: Goodneſs may be practiſed, when it is not affected. Where then is the New Creature? 'Tis not only a change of Profeſſions. Simon Magus had changed that before his Baptiſm, but not his heart, either before or after, Acts 8. 21. The ſtrength of ſin lies in the Underſtanding, Will, and Affections. And 'tis there that the ſtrength of Grace muſt appear, and ſet up its Banners. Are your affections and luſts of your fleſh crucified? They muſt be ſo, if you are Chriſts New Creatures, Gal. 5. 24. The ſtrong ſtirring of natural Conſcience, may weaken a preſent reſolution to an act of ſin, but not an Affection to it, and to the habit of ſin. It may reſtrain from outward exerciſes, not from inward diſpoſitions. Natural Conſcience informs of the evil, but doth not confer upon us a diſaffection to that evil. What are the inclinations of your Affections; are they pitched upon God? What are they for duration; are they conſtantly in motion to him? Is it your pleaſure to think of him, to live to him? Are the remainders of unlikeneſs to him, your grief, your yet imperfect Image your delight, not becauſe it is imperfect, but becauſe it is his Image? Every ſigh, or a ſlight affection, is not a New Creature. It is a deep Engravement, a conſtant inclination, contrary to what it was before, as White to Black. Do your Affections correſpond with the Affections of God? Do you hate every thing that he hates? Or is there any one luſt thou wouldſt careſs, and hide among the ſtuff? Such a frame is not the New Creature-frame: God loves not one ſin, neither muſt we, if we be like him. Is the love to God and Chriſt, more ſetled, than love to Father or Mother, which is an inbred Affection, born with our Natures? Matth. 10. 37. It muſt be ſo ſupreme. What deſires have you to magnifie his Name? Do you love him ſo intenſly, as to part with your lives to glorifie and enjoy him? If you be New Creatures, God and his Glory will be dearer to you, than Friends, Credit, Life. He ſaid not amiſs, That no man is a true Chriſtian, who is not an habitual Martyr; that is, that hath not a diſpoſition to lay down his life for the honour of God. And that Apoſtle who hath ſpoke ſo much of the New Creature, had ſuch a raiſed Affection, Acts 20. 24. he would not count his life dear, ſo he might finiſh his courſe with joy; which was to teſtifie the Goſpel of the Grace of God. He could lay down his Head more willingly upon a Block, than upon a Pillow, if he might finiſh his courſe to his Maſters honour, and publiſh his Grace. Where there is no concern for the honour of God, there is little ſign of a likeneſs to him: for this is an eſſential part of true Chriſtianity. If we have a New Nature, we cannot but love that Nature, wherever we find it. And where we find it in a greater degree, and infinitely perfect, as in God, we cannot but love it there above all. Elſe we offer violence to the Divine Nature; and in not loving it in God, we love it not in our ſelves. 'Tis impoſſible there can be this Divine Nature, without ſpiritual Affections; and that the Image of God can be in us, without having having an intenſe love to him whoſe Image it is. If any thing then lie nearer the heart of any man than God, the Image of God is not in him: therefore look into your hearts; How doth your hatred break out againſt ſin? How is your ſorrow poured out for ſin?

4. How ſtand your Souls to inward and ſpiritual duties? How vile are you in your own eyes becauſe of ſin? What grief is there even for your leaſt imperfections? Are you every day defacing your Pride, and ſtrengthning your Humility? Pride is the great Fort of the Old Man; Humility the great ſecurity of the New. How are you in prayer? are you conſtant, are you fervent, have you daily converſes with God? I mean ſecret Prayer and Meditation; there are the moſt intimate converſes with God. I appeal to you that neglect thoſe duties; can you pretend to this New Creation? Do you think that the Image of God in the heart, would not often move to its Original? Can a likeneſs to God conſiſt with an eſtrangedneſs from him? Can any man live the life of God, that doth not care for the preſence of God, either ſpeaking to him, or thinking of him? Can that Law in the heart, which is put in, that we may not depart from him, conſiſt with this which is the prime departure, never to ſeek him, or to ſeek him coldly? All the affections of the New Creature bend to him, and center in him: can this be without a drawing near to him? The Spirit of Grace is followed with a ſpirit of ſupplication, Zech. 12. 10. the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplication. The Spirit is not a dumb Spirit in the New Creature. The firſt work in the heart, is to cry Abba, Father; Gal. 4. 6. God hath ſent forth the ſpirit of his ſon into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. The firſt impreſſion made by the Spirit, is upon the eye of the Soul to look to God, and the voice of the Soul to cry to him. 'Tis the firſt work of a Regenerate man, as Regenerate. 'Tis the Argument our Saviour uſes to Ananias, to have confidence, that Paul was not the ſame man as before, Acts 9. 11. Behold, he prays. Our Old Nature being made up of averſion from God, the proper language of that is, depart from us. The New Nature being made up of an inclination to God, the proper language of that is, 'tis good for me to draw near to God; for upon this renewing Grace, God is the proper center of the Soul; and the ſame principle which moves other things to the center, will move the Soul to God. 'Tis made the effect of a pure heart, 2 Tim. 2. 22. Peace with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart; and the Characteriſtical note of a Saint, 1 Cor. 1. 2. Saints, with all that in every place call upon the Name of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

5. What valuations and reliſhes have you of the word, and inſtitutions of Chriſt? As the life is, ſo is the food; a Spiritual appetite for Spiritual food, is a comfortable ſign of a renewed Nature. In every Nature, there is an averſion to what is deſtructive, an inclination to what is preſervative: every Creature doth as much deſire its proper food, as it abhors that Poyſon that would blaſt it. The New Nature hath a new taſte, his Palate is embittered to his former pleaſure, and refined and prepared for his new delight; he relliſheth what before he loathed; eſteems that ſweeteſt that before was unpleaſanteſt. The Law in the heart, being an impreſſion of the word, will anſwer it with a choice affection: the firſt cleanſing of the heart, and the progreſſive ſanctification of it, is wrought by the Word, Eph. 5. 26. That he might ſanctify and cleanſe it with the waſhing of water, by the word. The Image of God in the heart cannot but value the Image of God in his Law: ſince the Soul is brought to a love of God, it will love his operations, and all the methods of them, and therefore his Word. A rectified Judgment will have a rectified Affection: there will be a ſpiritual Palate, whereby it proves and approves what is the good, acceptable, and perfect will of God, Rom. 12. 2. What is pleaſing to God, is good and pleaſing to him. And the ſame Apoſtle ſets it as a ſign of a perfect Man, or a ſincere New Creature, to eſteem that the Wiſdom of God, which the World counts fooliſhneſs, 1 Cor. 2. 6. We ſpeak wiſdom among them that are perfect. The Spirit of Truth in the New Creature, will fill it with a ſtrong Affection to thoſe truths in the word. Truth in the heart, and truth in the word, being ſo near of kin, cannot be ſtrangers or unwelcome to one another. What ſympathy then is there, between the word and your hearts? What exerciſe of Grace in it? what improvement of Grace by it? Do you deſire it to ſatisfy your curiosity, or to further your growth? 1 Pet. 2. 2. As new born babes deſire the ſincere milk of the word, that you may grow thereby. Are you like the Plants, both cleanſed and quickned by the ſhowers, and diſcovering themſelves in a freſh verdure? How do you dilate your Souls for it? How do you work it upon your hearts? Do you deſire it ſhould be ſtampt upon you? Do you long for a more perfect intimacy with it? Do you prize it above the ſatisfactions of wealth and the pleaſures of ſenſe? Is it more excellent than gold, Pſal. 19. 10. and ſweeter than honey, Pſal. 119. 103? Do you ſpiritually concoct it, and turn ſpiritual Meat into a ſpiritual Juice, as the Stomach doth Meat into Chyle, and other parts of the Body, into Blood? Life can only do this. Do you love to have it dwell richly in you, and bring down the higheſt imaginations to the foot of it? Do you cut the throat of your deareſt Iſaacs, when the word commands you? Is it a pleaſure to you to ſee the face of God in his Ordinances? Is your pleaſure raiſed moſt by the ſpirituality of truth? The more ſpiritual any truth is, the more ſatisfactory it is to a ſpiritual taſte. Do your hearts burn within you at the warm breath of Chriſt? Are they not only warmed, but raiſed into a flame, and that laſting? Not like the Straw which doth blaze and vaniſh.

6. What holineſs is there in your hearts and lives? God cannot be otherwiſe than Holy, therefore holineſs is the perpetual concomitant of the Divine Nature; and ſo the Apoſtle makes it to conſiſt in eſcaping the pollutions that are in the world through luſt, 2 Pet. 1. 4. There is a principle which ſprings up in holy motions and thoughts. It is in the Soul the Image of God is ſtampt, and it is there that the New Creature doth chiefly exerciſe and preſerve it. Holineſs muſt be the proper effect of that which is planted by the Spirit of Holineſs. He that pretends to a likeneſs to God without it, fathers an irregularity upon him, and makes him a monſtrous begetter. 'Tis not born of the will of the fleſh, to follow ſenſual pleaſures, nor of the will of man to follow only rational delights; but of the will of God, and therefore follows that will it was born of, John 1. 13. Let thy kingdom come, thy will be done, is the Natural Language of the New Creature, and glad he is to have the Spirit point him to thoſe ways that are moſt conformable to the Divine Will: for it is not a ſtrained Holineſs, but Natural, ſuch a one as ariſeth from the fear of God in the heart, Jer. 32. 40. and a care to pleaſe God in his walk, 2 Cor. 7. 11. yea, what care? 'Tis Holy, as God is Holy, in ſome meaſure, and therefore like him whoſe infinite purity cannot endure pollution. And it can no more diveſt it ſelf of its inclinations to Righteouſneſs, than the Soul can ſtrip it ſelf of its Natural activity. There is a certain connexion between a heart of fleſh, and walking in Gods ſtatutes, Ezek. 16. 27. To what purpoſe doth God give it? either for his own work, or for the Devils? There is no need of it for the latter; the heart of ſtone would have done his work effectually; therefore for the ſervice of the former, and that conſtantly; for the new creature is created to good works, not to do them by fits and ſtarts, but to walk in them, Eph. 2. 10. and he is deſcribed by the Apoſtle, to be one that walks after the ſpirit, Rom. 8. 1. the ordinary courſe of his heart is Spiritual. How is it with you then; Is Holineſs your proper Element? Is it a death to you when any thing contrary to it buds up in your hearts? Is there a purity of heart joyned with a zeal for goodneſs, Tit. 2. 14? They go hand in hand, as being both the ends of our Saviours Death, and both the Works of the Spirit. Is there an angry deteſtation of the loathſomneſs of Sin, and a kindly Affection to the purity of Grace? It will be thus if the New Creation be wrought; for as in Original ſin there was the root of all evil, therefore all Holineſs may be oppoſed, and all ſin practiſed; ſo in the habit of Grace, there is the root of all Grace, therefore all ſin will be loathed, and every part of Holineſs will be loved. But on the contrary, if your Old Luſts be rather improved than impaired: if you are more charmed by Swiniſh pleaſures, and enamoured of them: If the enmity in your hearts, or the loathſomneſs in your lives remain, is there any thing of a New Creature in you? Judg your ſelves. Do you make as rich a proviſion for the fleſh as before? Is your heart and life ſet upon it with as much Affection? Are you joyful when employed in its drudgery? Is this to be a New Creature? Can there be ſuch darkneſs, if the Sun of Grace were riſen upon you? Such fruits evidence the ſtanding of the Old Root. He that hath the black mark of the Devil in his life, hath no reaſon to think he hath the Spiritual Badge of Chriſt in his heart, and if he do, he doth deceive him ſelf.

7. How is your diſpoſition againſt thoſe things which are contrary to a Divine Nature? No creature hath a greater Antipathy to that which is contrary to its Nature, than a Regenerate Man hath againſt that which is contrary to the Divine: 'tis as impoſſible there can be a friendly neighbourhood between the New Man and the Old, as between the Ark and Dagon, between heat and cold, which are alway quarrelling, yea, between Chriſt and Belial, 2 Cor. 5. 16.

(1.) Againſt the motions of ſin. An irreconcileable War is commenced between Grace and corruption; at the firſt inlet fleſh is in Arms to hinder; the ſpirit in Arms to maintain its ſtanding, Gal. 5. 17. the conteſt is in the whole Man: Grace being ſeated in the heart, ſends out its commands, and diſpatches Forces to every part, to meet with its Enemy *, as motion beginning at the center diffuſeth it ſelf through the whole ſphear, ſhaking every part to the circumference: Light will oppoſe Darkneſs in every part of the Air, they cannot ſhake hands together; the increaſe of one is the decreaſe of the other. Senſibility is a ſign of life, a dead man complains not of wounds and cutting; you may take out his Bowels, cut Limb from Limb; but a living man will complain of the leaſt prick of a pin, or a pinch. Natural Men cannot complain of that which they do not feel; there is a mighty friendſhip between a dead carcaſs and rottenneſs; nothing is noyſom to it. Loads of ſin may lie upon him, like Mountains upon a dead body, and no complaint; the motions of ſin work in his Members without reſiſtance, and bring forth their fruit unto death, Rom. 7. 5. But the New Creature counts the leaſt ſin that hath ſtolen in upon him, his torture, like the ſtone in the bladder, a worm in the root, and can find no reſt, till he routs the beginnings of the Diſeaſe. If there be no Antipathy then to that which is contrary to the life and being of a Chriſtian, 'tis a ſure ſign that there is nothing of a Divine life; for as a renewed man eſteems all the precepts of God to be right, and hates every falſe way, Pſal. 119. 128. ſo he muſt abhor every motion which would divert him from what he values, and entice him to what he hates. How are your underſtandings ſenſible of the firſt riſings contrary to the intereſt of the New Creature? Are they more ready to diſſent from them; your wills more ready to check them than before? What counterworkings againſt the fleſh with its Affections and Luſts? Are you ready with Weapons in your hand to ſtay the firſt ſtirrings of corruption? Are you ready to pluck thoſe buds, and fling them away with diſdain? Doth both your courage and ſtrength increaſe? Can you more readily be in Arms againſt the riſing of a Luſt, than formerly you were; and cannot without horror bear the approaches of them? Doth a little duſt of ſin got into your eye, ſet you a weeping before God?

(2.) How ſtand you affected to Spiritual ſins? Here you ſhould lay the great ſtreſs in your examination of the New Creation; for your lives may be the lives of Saints, while your hearts are the hearts of Devils; we may have no ſpots of the fleſh upon our Garments, and a world of them upon our Souls; ſpiritual ſins may revel, where the more fleſhly and ſenſual iniquities are excluded. There is a War in the heart of the New Creature, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſs, Eph. 6. 12. For we wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſs in high places. Or, wickedneſs ſpiritualized in the high places *, the choiceſt faculties of the Soul: Satan doth moſt excite thoſe ſins in the heart, and natural conſcience makes no reſiſtance againſt them. 'Tis only an enlightned conſcience that underſtands and abhors this darkneſs, and loaths thoſe ſteams which others cheriſh. Do you wreſtle againſt theſe which partake moſt of the Devils nature? Do you dandle them in your minds, or do you groan at the appearance of them? Do you fly from them, as you would do from a viſible apparition of the Devil? Theſe are moſt contrary to the Divine Nature and Life of God. And a renewed man can no more avoid conteſting with them, than the nature of a living Creature can with Poyſon. But if you can without any reluctancy play the wantons with theſe in your hearts; if you think pride, vain-glory, ambition, ſpeculative wickedneſs, &c. no evils; if your hearts never ſtart at the appearance of them; if you entertain them as welcome gueſts, tho you be never ſo free from the filthineſs of the fleſh, you have yet the ſtrength of Satan's image in you, nothing of a Chriſtian formed. A natural Man may quarrel with ſome ſins, not with all; renewed Men with all, becauſe all are Enemies to God, and to the life of Grace in the heart; he is always with Arms in his hand to extirpate ſin, and drive the Canaanite from his Forts, as well as the open field.

* Jackſon, Vol. 3. 4to. p. 495.

* Πρὸς τὰ πνευματικὰ πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ὑπερουρανίοις.

(3.) Are you in the like manner affected againſt temptations and occaſions of ſin? The ſtate of Regeneration makes the Soul more ſubject to the aſſaults of temptations than before, from the envy of Satan, who ſtomachs the happineſs of the New Creature. Do your Souls ſtart at the appearance of a temptation? Do you regard any enticement to a departure from God, as your torment? Do you diſcountenance it at the firſt approach, and give it no civiller entertainment, than get you behind me Satan? Chriſt in the fleſh did ſo, and Chriſt formed in the heart will do no leſs; if he happen to come near the way of evil men, he will obſerve the wiſe man's counſel, Prov. 4. 14, 15. He will avoid it, paſs not by it, turn from it, and paſs away. His Spirit will riſe againſt any thing that would intrude upon him, which looks unfriendly towards God. The nobleneſs of the New Nature will make him diſdain a ſordid temptation, and inſpire him with a Holy generoſity; and the ſtronger the Nature, the more vigorouſly will it oppoſe that which would deform it. And if any temptation break in upon it at any time, and maſter it, how reſtleſs is it to be delivered from it? Applies it ſelf with all its force to Heaven, complains againſt it, engageth Gods Power on its ſide, makes up the gap where ſin hath broken in, and fortifies the place to prevent a future aſſault. In ſhort, a natural man nouriſhes inward Luſts, meets motions to ſin half way, ſmiles upon an approaching temptation: A New Creature ſtarts at the firſt appearance for the moſt part, frowns upon Satanical ſuggeſtions, turns away his eyes from beholding vanity. One makes proviſion to maintain them, the other to deſtroy them; one ſubmits to the tempter, the other arms himſelf againſt him.

8. Put this queſtion to your ſelves, what delight do you find in God and his ways? This indeed is an evident ſign of the New Nature; by this men may judg of themſelves, if they will not deceive and flatter themſelves in their ſearch. This is the greateſt evidence of ſincerity in all the ways of God. For the Law cannot be in any mans heart, unleſs he delight to do the will of God. Pſal. 40.8. Thy Law is within my heart, I delight to do thy will, O my God. He will be carried out with a ſpiritual joy and triumph to the acting what is ſpiritually good, with a mighty pleaſure, as great as the Body takes in eating when it is hungry, or drinking when it is thirſty. It was thus with our Saviour in the fleſh, 'tis thus with Chriſt formed in the heart, 'tis his Meat and Drink to do the will of God; not ſo much in the New Creature as it was in Chriſt, becauſe in that there is a remaining principle of reſiſtance, in Chriſt none. 'Tis then, he can delight himſelf in the Lord, Iſa. 58. 14. and count him his exceeding joy, Pſal. 43. 4. As it is an argument that Seneca gives of the Divine Original of the Soul, That it is moſt pleaſed with Divine ſpeculations: 'tis no leſs an argument of the New Creation, when it is delighted not only with the ſpeculative, but with the practical contemplation of God, when the Soul that triumphed before in the pleaſures of ſin, can burn with an ardent love to God, and ſolace it ſelf in communion with him: and unleſs Holy ſervices be our delightful Element, we have not a likeneſs to that God, who is not only Righteous, but delights in righteouſneſs, loving-kindneſs and judgment, Jer. 9. 24. Every being owes ſo much reſpect to its own welfare, as not to act ſluggiſhly and drowſily in its main concern: for the ſame Love which excites it to perform thoſe things which are eſſential to its preſervation, will oblige it to act with the higheſt complacency: and the more conducing they are to the well being of the Creature, the more powerful is the joy which ſpreads it ſelf through the whole eſſence of the Creature; therefore Holy ſervices being as intrinſecal to a Holy principle, as the moſt inward Operations of any Creature can be to its Nature, will be done with a vigorous frame, and an edged intenſneſs of ſpirit. Without this, in ſome degree, nothing requiſite to the Operations of a

New Creature can be performed; without it we have no averſion to that which is contrary to the Law, nor an inclination to what is conformable to it. 'Tis a conſent of the will to the whole law, Rom. 7. 16. a delight of the affections in it; a conſent to it in reſpect of the goodneſs; a delight in it, (Verſe 22.) in reſpect of the Authority enjoyning it, as it is the Law of God: not principally as it is in ſome parts conformable to human reaſon, but as it is the Divine Will, whereby both the Soveraignty, Holineſs and Righteouſneſs of God is owned by the whole inward man; the Underſtanding, Will and Affections, conſpiring together with a ſtrong delight in God and his Law; hence you find David ſo often expreſſing his delight in it, Pſal. 119. 14, 35, 47, 70, 77, &c. And indeed ſo much of wearineſs as we have in any ſervice, ſo much of an Old Nature and a legal frame; ſo much as we have of Love and Delight, ſo much we have of a New Creature, and New Covenant-Grace. A natural man cannot have any of this choice joy in any ſpiritual ſervice, becauſe it is againſt his nature: No more than a Fiſh can delight to be upon the Land out of its proper Element; but a New Creature hath little delight in any thing, but as it regards God, and tends to him: other mens delights are terminated in the fleſh; but the Elevations of a renewed Soul are highly ſpiritual. How then is it with you? Are the duties of Religion, communion with God in them, your delightful Element? Is a flight of your Love to him, the acting for his Glory, as pleaſant as flattery to a proud nature, or gain to a covetous diſpoſition? Have you little ſatisfaction in what you do, but ſtill breathe and ſtrive after a higher frame, and cannot reſt, till with your choiceſt embraces of your Souls, you claſp about God himſelf? Oh, happy man! None but a Divine Nature could fill thee with ſuch pleaſing tranſports.

USE 4. Is of exhortation.

1. To thoſe who are New Creatures, that have ſome comfortable evidence in their Souls, that there is the Image of God renewed in them.

(1.) How ſhould you admire and glorify God? Is it poſſible that ſo noble a Work can be unattended with a ſpirit of gratitude? How ſhould you be filled with a ſenſe of Divine Goodneſs, and formed to ſet forth his Praiſe? Surely, this of thankfulneſs is not one of the leaſt good Works you are Created unto. Before, when you were alienated from the life of God, you were eſtranged from his Love and his Praiſe; you would never glorify him whom you did not affect; but ſince a Heavenly Nature is introduced, a Heavenly Work ſhould become the very life of your Souls; Tongues and Hearts ſhould be ſet on fire by Grace.

[1.] Has not God made you differ from the whole maſs of the corrupted World? There is as a great difference between a New and an Old Creature, as between the cleareſt Day and the darkeſt Night; as between Chriſt who is Glorified in Heaven, the Head of his own flock, and the Devil who is damned in Hell, the head of the unbelieving world; ſo they are oppoſed by the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 6. 14, 15. Might you not have run down the ſtream with others; lived only a Natural Life with others, and at laſt died an Eternal Death, and deſcended with all your Intellectual and Moral Endowments to the place only due to Corrupt Nature? But God, the God that is Bleſſed for ever, hath breathed into you a breath of Life, cauſed you to ſtand up before him with a reſemblance of his Nature, ſet you apart for himſelf, wrought you for Glory: and made you live another Life, a Life by the Faith of the Son of God. And is it not reaſon you ſhould differ from all the World in your praiſes of him, who hath made you differ ſo vaſtly in your ſtate and condition.

[2.] Hath not God in this beſtowed upon you a higher perfection than all Natural perfection in the World? The loweſt degree of ſenſe is more excellent than the higheſt inanimate perfection; therefore a Fly, in regard of Life, is more excellent than a Diamond, or the Sun it ſelf. The loweſt degree of Reaſon, is above the higheſt degree of Senſe: and the loweſt degree of renewing Grace, tranſcends the higheſt degree of Reaſon; becauſe this in the higheſt degree, is but Human and Natural; that in the loweſt degree, Spiritual and Divine. Therefore you owe more to God, for your Regeneration, than all Creatures of the World do for their Natural Exiſtence. He hath done more for you, in communicating to you his own Nature, than if he had made you Viceroys over Men and Angels, and put the whole created World under your feet, without inveſting you with this New Creation.

(3.) And this God hath done for you, when you were in the common lump, and had no more worth in your ſelves to move him to it, than the reſt of the World. No other motive on your part but miſery. All the World had the ſame; for it lay in the like condition. All that you had, all that you were, was proper to move him to a contempt of you, and a loathing you for ever. It was the invention of his own overflowing love, not any perſuaſion of your worth. What were you, and what was your Father's houſe, that he ſhould thus tranſlate you from the drudgery of ſin to the liberty of Grace, from a ſpiritual death to a divine life? Had God called you out of the Womb of nothing, unſhap'd, as the great Chaos, and asked you what degree of Creatures you were willing to be raiſed unto, would you have preſumed to deſire God to make you like himſelf? Yet God in Regeneration, raiſed you to a ſtate you durſt not ask, above a rational Creature, even to a divine, when he had no motive to any thing, but to turn you with Nebuchadnezzar, to graze among the Beaſts, and partake with Devils in the eternal miſery of that Image you had contracted.

(4.) 'Tis therefore a wonderful and miraculous change. If the framing the body of man be ſo wonderful a work, Pſal. 139. 14. and a curious piece of Embroidery, how much more admirable is this new formation of the ſoul into the likeneſs of God. If we ſhould ſee a ſilly Fly, or a poyſonous Spider, a clod of Earth, or a Glow-worm, transformed into a glittering Star, it would not be ſo great a miracle: It would be a change from one natural Image to another: But this is a change from Hell to Heaven, from being a limb of the Devil, to become a Member of Chriſt, from a worſe than Egyptian darkneſs, into a marvellous light. That is but a change of one innocent Nature into another; this a change of a Nature hateful to God, into a Nature delightful to him, a corrupt Creature into an holy one, a change of ſomething worſe than a bare Creature, into ſomething like the great Creator and Redeemer. This is your change; therefore the higheſt Obligation in the World, lies upon you to praiſe and glorifie God. 'Tis in the day of your Regeneration, that God hath rolled away the reproach of your corruption and death, as he ſaid of the Iſraelites when they were circumciſed in Canaan, Joſh. 5. 9.

To quicken you to praiſe,

[1.] Often reflect upon your former ſtate. Caſt your eyes back upon what you were, that you may be thankful for what you are. Ah! what was I once? An hater of God, and hated by him; one bearing the Image of Satan, and delighting in it; a noiſome heap of luſts, eſtranged from God, ſold under ſin, dead to goodneſs, an enemy to the Law; What a condition was I in then? Good Lord! how aſtoniſhing was thy mercy, how wonderful thy love, how great was thy power, to draw me out of this ſtate!

[2.] Review what you are. What am I now? Here is a new light in my Underſtanding, new inclinations in my Will: I can now look upon God with pleaſure, and run his ways with delight. Chriſt is my only joy, and Chriſt is my only gain: My Old Nature is wearing away, my New Nature is riſing higher and clearer: Now am I freed by the Blood of Chriſt, from my guilt, and by the Spirit of Chriſt, from my filth. What ſhall I render to the Lord for theſe ineſtimable benefits towards me? Oh bleſſed God! Oh dear Redeemer! Oh infinite condeſcending Spirit, to work theſe things for me, in me; to clear ſuch a naſty ſoul, Imprint ſuch an heavenly Image, conform me to ſo excellent a Pattern, and by Grace to fit me for a glorious Eternity! Let then the love of the Author, the excellency of the Work, the miſery of your former ſtate, the happineſs of your new, be joyned together in your conſiderations, to enhance your praiſe: And ſince you live the life of God, be ſure to live the life of thankfulneſs.

(2.) As it is your duty to admire, and glorifie God, for making you New Creatures; ſo it is your duty, and advantage too, to preſerve in its vigor this New Nature in you. When Adam's life was infuſed, he was to preſerve it by feeding

ing upon the Fruits of Paradiſe, Gen. 2. 29. And you muſt preſerve your ſpiritual lives, by the Fruits of divine Inſtitutions placed in the Church. The inner man is to be ſtrengthned: Paul prays to this purpoſe for the Epheſians, Epheſ. 3. 16. that he would grant you to be ſtrengthned with might by his ſpirit, in the inner man: Which is not as ſome underſtand it, a ſtrengthning of Reaſon, Mind, and Underſtanding. The Scripture, by Heart, underſtands the Mind, Will, and Judgment: But the Apoſtle joyns this inner man ſo with the heart (ver. 17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith), that he doth manifeſtly put a difference between this inner man and the heart, making one the ſeat, the other root in it. The Apoſtle wiſhes them not a ſtrength of the ſoul, but a ſtrength of the New Man, and Image of Chriſt in the ſoul. The Devil is a mighty enemy to it: He hath loſt a Servant: he will leave no ſtone unturn'd to recover him: His Servant will be his Judg; he will therefore endeavour to overthrow him. Go to God therefore for new ſupplies, in the caſe of Satan's aſſaults; deſire him to put a vigor into your Grace, water the ſeeds, and blow up the divine ſpark. Our Saviour deſired aſſiſting and ſtrengthning Grace for Peter, when he foreſaw the Devil's preparations to worry him, Luke 22. 31, 32. So ſhould we for our ſelves, and Chriſt will not be backward to ſecond us in it; yea, he will prevent us, and ſend in an Auxiliary force over and above the ſtanding habit, which makes up the New Creature. We need the Gales of Heaven to blow us forward, the concourſe of God to his gracious Creature, as well as his common concourſe to his natural. Is it not the higheſt Reaſon to engage all in the defence, and ſtrengthning that which is the delight of God, the happineſs of the ſoul, and the envy of the Devil? What is worth our care, if this be thought worthy of our neglect? Sloth in preſerving and ſtrengthning, argues a leſſer value of a thing. Would you loſe beauty for deformity, health for ſickneſs? Would you loſe the pleaſure of Heaven for the anguiſh of Hell? Preſerve this Image then from being defaced, and look that Satan draw no more black lines in your hearts. Skin for skin, and all a man hath, will he give for his life: Eat his own fleſh to preſerve his life, as long as he can. Oh then! if I may ſo ſay, ſoul for ſoul, and all that you have you ſhould give and employ, for maintaining this ſpiritual life, which is as much above a natural life, as the Sun above a Dunghill. Blow it up every day, dreſs the Lamps as the Prieſts in the Temple. 'Tis for want of this ſtrengthning it, that we have ſo little livelineſs in duty. 'Tis for want of this excitation, that we walk ſo often in darkneſs. What have we elſe to do but this? Preſervation, and ſtrengthning of life, is the chief deſign of men in the World. Is not a divine life of more worth? Let not then the cares of our bodies ſurpaſs thoſe for our ſouls, and our fondneſs to natural life, exceed our Affection to ſpiritual life. We know but in part, we ſee but as in a glaſs darkly. The inclinations of our hearts to righteouſneſs, are not in their full ſtrength.

(3.) Grow up to a taller ſtature. There muſt be a daily putting off the Old Man, and a putting on the New, a renewing the inward man day by day, 2 Cor. 4. 16. And tho at the firſt Regeneration, there is the forming all the eſſential parts of Grace, yet afterwards there is a daily augmentation (The Galatians were both knowing God, and known of him, Gal. 4. 9. yet of theſe did the Apoſtle travel, till Chriſt was formed again, ver. 19.) till the deſign of Chriſt be fully complied with, and the ſoul grown up to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fullneſs of Chriſt, by the participation of his Nature. As Providence is a continued Creation, ſo growth is a continued Regeneration. As a man grows in Reaſon by new improvements, ſo ought a Chriſtian in Grace, by new additions. Things are not ripened at once. The Spirits in raw and immature bodies are depreſt by groſs and earthy mixtures with them, till they are encouraged by the Sun and Showers, and thereby able to digeſt the crude parts, and arrive at perfection.

(1.) This muſt be. Job 17. 9. The righteous ſhall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands, ſhall be ſtronger and ſtronger. The New Nature can no more ſtand at a ſtay, than a living Tree can, till it come up to the meaſures of its Nature. 'Tis the Nature of Seed to propagate it ſelf, and ſpread its Vertue into Branches and Fruit: It will be aſpiring to that perfection which Nature hath allotted to it. If you do not grow, 'tis a ſign there is no life in you: 'Tis but a common gift, or a common Grace, at beſt; the counterfeit, not the reality of the New Creature: Living Natures do thrive; pieces of Art ſtand at a ſtay: He is no Member of Chriſt, but as a Wooden Leg or Arm, not knit by any vital hand, but ſome extrinſick ligaments, not fed with the increaſes of God, becauſe he doth not grow. To content our ſelves with a low degree of Grace, makes us unworthy of the benefit of Regeneration, and below thoſe that pretend to a likeneſs to God.

Branches

(2.) It muſt be uniform. As it is one habit which is infuſed, ſo it equally thrives in all the parts of it: An unequal growth is the effect of a Diſeaſe, not of Nature. As Nature cauſes a proportion of parts in the make, ſo likewiſe a proportion of parts in the growth. 'Tis not a growth in faith, and a decay in love; or a growth in love, and a decay in faith. To pretend to the one without the other, is to have an head without an heart, a life without Blood or Spirits. A natural man may grow in ſome Moral Ornaments, as a dead man in Hair and Nails: but a ſpiritual vitality ſhews it ſelf in an equal increaſe of all the Members in the New Creature. And it is beſt diſcerned by the thriving of thoſe Graces which are moſt contrary to your natural diſpoſition, which cannot ſo well be diſcerned in thoſe which have ſome foundations in moral Nature; as humility hath in a mild diſpoſition, which by the addition of Grace, advanceth to an eminent humility: But a New Creature thrives in thoſe Graces, which were moſt contrary to his corrupt Nature, now over-maſtered. The ſecond draught of a Picture, defaceth not one line or two of the former, but the whole frame, to make it more near the Original. And thus a New Creature ought to grow as the Vine, and revive as the Corn, in all the branches and fruits proper to its Nature, Hoſ. 14. 7.

(3.) By this we pleaſe God, and pleaſure our ſelves. The more illuſtrious any work is, the more glory redounds to the Artiſt. If the beginnings of the New Creation be ſo amiable, as to make Heaven it ſelf in love with it, how infinitely will God be pleaſed to ſee it grow to maturity, among the Whirlwinds, and ſtorms of temptations; every increaſe adding new colours and luſtre to this beauty, will renew the Jubilee in Heaven. Thus will God pronounce it good at firſt, and very good the nearer it comes to perfection, as he did in the Creation of the World. By this growth you will have a greater capacity for Heaven: For if the firſt New Creation capacitates a man for glory; the higher it ſprings, the more beautiful the Divine Nature grows; the nearer it is to glory, and the fitter to be planted in an eternal Paradice; the more a right to Heaven will appear to your ſelves.

(4.) A Fourth Exhortation: Behave your ſelves in your ordinary walk, as New Creatures of another rank from the World. 'Tis the Inference the Apoſtle makes from the new ſtate wherein the Epheſians were; For you were ſometimes darkneſs, but now light in the Lord: walk as children of the light, Epheſ. 5. 8. You muſt bring forth fruits meet for Regeneration, meet for him by whom you are renewed, as the ground doth herbs, meet for him by whom it is dreſt, Heb. 6. 7.

[1.] Adorn the Goſpel, whereby the divine impreſſion is made upon you. The Apoſtle argues againſt lying, and by the ſame Reaſon, againſt all ſin from this head, Col. 3. 9, 10. The Goſpel adorns the ſoul by its impreſſion; the ſoul ſhould adorn the Goſpel by its converſation, Tit. 2. 2. Adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. Let the writing of the Law in the heart, appear on the other ſide of the life; and the divine light in your hearts, ſhine in your outward man, as a Candle through a Lanthorn, that God may be glorified, Mat. 5. 16. Let not luſt and ſin, extraneous to the New Nature, bear any Rule in any action: Let no unworthy action reproach your profeſſion. Do nothing unbecoming one who is like him that rules the World, unbecoming that Word and Goſpel which God hath magnified above all his Name. Defile not your Garments; we can never walk with God but in white, Rev. 3. 4. in the whiteneſs of purity, not in the blackneſs of ſin. Do not any works of Satan, with the Nature of God

God upon you. Indeed we may be aſhamed, that when there is ſo much of the Image of Chriſt in the Goſpel, there ſhould be ſo little of the Image of Chriſt in our lives. Walk as thoſe that are enrolled among the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, as thoſe who have the honour to be of the Aſſembly of the First-born; live to God, not to your ſelves. The more wicked the Generation is you live in, the more it is your duty to ſhine, as the Lights of Heaven in the Darkneſs of the Earth, Phil. 2. 15. and the more it will be your commendation; as it was the praiſe of Job, that he was upright in the Land of Uz, among the race of prophane Eſau, not among the offspring of praying Jacob, Job 1. 1. that man was perfect, and feared God.

[2.] Live above Affections to a droſſy World, if you would honour your New Nature. An Earthly Spirit cannot be the effect of a Heavenly Birth: let not the rattles of your Childhood be your preſent pleaſure, or the bewitching World have any influence upon you. The World is no fit boundary for the Soul in its natural capacity, much leſs in its Spiritual; 'tis too empty for an Immortal Soul, much more for a Divine Nature. Let not any thing on this ſide God be your darling, but your footſtool, to mount you nearer Heaven. Value them only as they enable you to do the higher duties of Religion without diſtracting-cares, and are ſubſervient to the honouring God in the World. As the New Creature was not Redeemed with a vile price, ſo it is not endued with ſo ſordid a Nature, as to be much in love with theſe things. The conqueſt of this is one of the firſt fruits of the New Birth. 1 John 5. 4. Whatſoever is born of God, overcomes the world: there's a mighty antipathy between the World, and any thing that is the offspring of God. There cannot be ſo much ignorance of the things of another World, as to prize ſo vile a piece, as a Houſe with Walls and Furniture, infected with a ſinful Leproſie. Let the inward contempt of the blandiſhments of it grow up in you; diſtract not your ſelves with cares for it, but truſt in Gods Promiſe, and leave things to the conduct of his Wiſe Providence. 'Tis inconſiſtent with a New Nature to lie at the bottom of this great Sea, ſucking up Weeds and Sand, and never peep its head above Water, towards Heaven.

[3.] Be much in the thoughts and views of the Divine Original of your Nature. Shall the New Nature ſeldom look up to that place whence it deſcended, or caſt its eye upon that beautiful hand that framed it? Surely the New Creature cannot be ſo unnatural. Employ your Souls in exerciſes of an unbounded Love to God, a ſettled delight in him, a high eſteem of the Righteouſneſs of his Nature, and an habitual walking with him; let the eſteem of him, and vilifying your ſelves, be your daily employment. The looking upon him will transform you more into his Image: by this Spiritual converſe you will partake of a new brightneſs, and clearer lineaments. Every view will leave a greater perfection upon his Image in you, by a reflection of a glory, 2 Cor. 3. 18. By this your hearts will be more ſutable to thoſe regions of bleſſedneſs to which the Divine Image is haſtening: It will make you ſweat out ſome corruption every day, and advance you ſome ſteps toward the ſtate of Bliſs.

[4.] Fix your aims on a ſtate of perfection. You are to walk, not to ſtand ſtill. Never reſt, till all that Righteouſneſs which of right belongs to that Divine Nature in you, be conferred upon you; breathe after a more cloſe conjunction with the Original. Keep up in a due ſprightlineſs your deteſtations of ſin, which you had when you were firſt enlivened; with what a holy indignation you flung away your Luſts, with a Get you hence: and, what have I to do any more with Idols? Set an edg upon this hatred every day, ſharpen your indignation more and more. Preſerve in your Souls thoſe Affections which did riſe up in you, when the irreſiſtible charms of Divine Love did firſt allure you, when you firſt caſt your eyes upon this New Likeneſs and Image of God; quicken them daily, and preſs forward towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt.

[5.] Let your Affection be carried to every thing which partakes of the ſame Image. There is in all Creatures a kindneſs to thoſe of their own Nature: the moſt ravenous do not prey upon their own ſpecies: all men, deſcending from Adam, having the ſame nature, have ſome kindneſs to thoſe of their own kind: and all de-ſcending from Chriſt, have the ſame Nature, the ſame Affections and Inſtincts. 'Tis in Love and Holineſs wherein God doth decipher himſelf in the Soul; he would not be drawn in any other attributes in the heart of man: and thus in the Scripture he publiſheth himſelf in the abſtract, as Holineſs and Love, delighting to be imitated by his Creature in thoſe two perfections; God is love, and he that dwells in God, dwells in love, 1 Joh. 4. 16. Love is therefore the nature of the New Creature; and Love to the ſame Objects whereon Gods Love is pitcht, firſt himſelf, then his Image in his Creature. So the Love of God, and that of a New Creature, go hand in hand together: firſt, the Affections of the New Nature ſtream out to God, as the prime and Original beauty; then to all New Creatures, as they partake more or leſs of this Divine Image. This univerſal Charity to God, Grace, and good Men, is the inſeparably property of the New Creature, the higheſt perfection of it, and the beginning of a ſtate of Glory. Love all thoſe that partake of this Divine Nature.

[6.] Endeavour to propagate your New Nature to others. 'Tis the property of goodneſs to be diffuſive of it ſelf; and God, the higheſt goodneſs, is the moſt communicative; the Divine Nature ſhould imitate him in this. No Nature but delights to propagate it ſelf. The New Nature ought not to be ſluggiſh in it; ſince the great change lies in the end, ſince the Glory of God is ſet up as its main intendment, it will oblige it to propagate Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, whereby God is moſt glorified; for thereby the number is increaſed, to repreſent him on Earth, and praiſe him in Heaven. No ſooner was Paul renewed, but he endeavours to bring all the World into the ſame frame. The Apoſtate Angels, being revolted from God, labour to ſink all the World into the ſame diſpoſition. Fire communicates, by a touch, its own nature to all matter that comes near it, and turns the hardeſt Metals into its own likeneſs. So ought that Holy fire in a New Creature, to labour to convert every thing into its own flames. This is a peculiar mark ſet upon the Evangelical times, and the ſpecial fruit of a Goſpel-impreſſion. Iſa. 2. 3. Many people ſhall ſay, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the houſe of the God of Jacob. It ſhould be your endeavour, that all about you may be the better for you. Strive to affect your Children and Servants with a ſenſe of the corruption of Nature derived from Adam, and the neceſſity of being implanted in the New Head of the World, and partaking of another Nature from him: thus to be a fellow-worker with God, is the moſt abſolute work of Grace; as to beget in its own likeneſs, is the moſt perfect work of Nature.

And to perſuade you to walk and act as New Creatures: conſider,

[1.] The excellency of your Birth. 'Tis a Birth of Heaven, a reſemblance to God; do nothing below it, or unworthy of it. Is it fit for you to lie among the Pots, and ſmut your ſelves? The conſideration of the relation you bear to God, ſhould inſpire you with Heroick reſolutions for his Glory. You are the only perſons, that keep up Gods honour in the World, and his final anger from it. Whenever you are tempted, reflect upon your ſelves, as Nehemiah, Should ſuch a man as I do this, Nehem. 6. 11? Or as Joſeph to his Miſtriſs, Behold, my maſter hath committed all that he hath to my hand; behold, God hath put his Divine Nature in my heart, and ſhall I do this wickedneſs? Conſider in every action, what that God you call Father by Regenerating Grace, that Chriſt who is the great Exemplar and Copy of the Image in you, would do in ſuch caſes and circumſtances. How unworthy is it for a living man to do dead works? As your life ſprings from the higheſt principle, let it be employed for the higheſt ends. Was ever any Prince aſhamed of his honour? And ſhall any New Creature be aſhamed of the particular Badg of Heaven upon it: of that Righteouſneſs, which is the true Nobility of his Nature? Holineſs is the beauty of an intellectual and rational Creature; it muſt then be your higheſt honour to live comformably to the dignity of your Nature.

[2.] It was the intendment of God you ſhould walk in a nobler manner than the reſt of the World. Did God infuſe into Adam a Soul of a higher Nature than that of Beaſts, to enable him to live only the life of Beaſts? God intended by the infuſion infusion of this New Principle, that you should live above the sphere of humanity, and the rate of Man. How doth the Apostle chide the Corinthians, because they did not advance above the life of meer man? And therefore gives them a title chiefly belonging to the unregenerate World, 1 Cor. 3. 3. Are you not carnal, and walk as men? Our Saviour expects a more worthy carriage from his Children, than what barely Nature can teach them; He would have them as God, and imitators of him, Matth. 5. 44, 45, 46, 47. and do something peculiar to this New state, which cannot be done by any unregenerate man in the World. Your Holiness is not to be of the common level with the Morality of the World, but such as may set forth the praise of God, 1 Pet. 2. 9. they are a chosen generation, therefore should have choice conversations; a royal Priesthood, therefore Princes deportments; ἐξαγγείλητε. a Holy Nation and peculiar people, therefore should have Holy and peculiar behaviours: they should thus be publick Evangelists, to set forth the Graciousness and Righteousness of God. There is also the highest Obligation, because he hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light. God intended that their Conversations should be such as should amaze the World into a love of Holiness, and admiration of that Light which gives them such excellent directions, and that Nature which enables them to so exact a Walk. Gods Temples were not intended to be made dunghills.

[3.] Not to walk as New Creatures, is a dishonour to God. You that do not walk answerable to your high Calling, do more highly dishonour him than all other persons; you are quite contrary to his Image, and represent God to the World as they would have him, not what he is in his own Nature; for by a careless walk, the World will judg God to be like you, or you very unlike to God. Is God Holy, and you impure; God Merciful, and you revengeful; God, a God of Peace, and you fomenters of malice and contention? To pretend to his Image with such qualities, is to disparage his Nature, and rather degrade God to a likeness to the Flesh, than to mount up to a true resemblance of him, Psal. 50. 21. Thou thoughtest I was altogether such a one as thy self. 'Tis a disgrace to a Noble Father, to have a swinish, clownish, ill-bred person pretend to be his Son. But how much is the contrary a Glory to Christ, As delicious Fruit and choice Flowers credit the beams of the Sun? What a mighty pleasure is it to God to behold a sutable walk of his New Creatures? He loves them; and his countenance doth behold the upright, Psal. 11. 7. How much must he, who is Holiness it self, take complacency in the Holiness of it? If he he loves it while in a low degree, no question but he loves it more in a higher exaltation: How does the Holy Ghost repeat Enoch's walking with God twice in Gen. 5. 22. 24. to witness his pleasure in it?

[4.] Not to walk suitable to your New Creation, is a mighty disadvantage to your selves. Tho a New Creature doth not totally lose his Grace, if a temptation deflower his Purity, yet his Grace suffers an impair, and perhaps he may never recover the same degree of Grace and Comfort he had before. 'Tis a question whether David ever had his Sails filled with such strong Gales of the Spirit, after his fall, as he had before. The marks of a Disease will hang about us after the Disease is cured; and the same stock of health may never be restored again. If you do let your hearts run out at any time to any sinful pleasure, tho it may not raze out the Image, yet it will make you more unfit for those views of God which can only maintain it. When you come before him, after such a departure, how will your hearts recoil upon you? With what pleasure can you look upon him whom you have so abused in his Image in your Souls, and in his Image in his Law? Besides, every unworthy walk, detracts somewhat from the weight of that Crown, you might otherwise expect to be reserved in Heaven for you, and makes it of a greater allay: But if you keep close to the Law in the word, and the Law in your hearts, what communications will you have from God? What inward touches and feelings of him? How hastily will he run to meet you half way, and kiss you with the kisses of his mouth? Thou meetest him that rejoices and worketh righteousness, Isa. 64. 5. How intimately will he wind himself into the secret corners of your hearts, as John 14. 23. and make his abode with you; and like Fire in every part of Iron, fill every part of the New Man with a glowing and Divine heat?

[5.] Such an exact walk will mightily ſtop the current of ſin. It may juſtly be feared, the ſins of many have taken too much heart from the unſuitable carriages of profeſſors. But a walk according to the rule of the New Creation, might enflame others to Godlineſs, at leaſt ſtifle ſome corrupt motions, ſuſpend ſome inclinations to ſin, and for a time bind up the Devil in them. This is the greateſt Charity to the World; by other benefits we advantage particular perſons; by a Holy example, all that behold us. It ſtrikes an awful reverence into the hearts of men, as being a Ray of God; what the Goſpel enjoins, are things comely, and of good report, many of them lovely and illuſtrious, even in a carnal eye; therefore ſuch expreſſions of a Goſpel-impreſſion would engender admirations of it, caſt a luſtre upon the truth of God; men will look upon ſuch works with Reverence *, and glorify God in the day of their Viſitation or Converſion, as Calvin underſtands it. To be a Holy People, is to be ſought out, they are both joined, Iſa. 62. 12. Many by ſeeing the Holineſs of the Church in Goſpel-times, ſhall be induced to give up their names to the Lord: It will tend more to the Regeneration of others, than a Thouſand Sermons; It will raiſe the reputation of Chriſtianity, and cauſe them to believe it to be of a divine extract; It would ſtir men up to a Holy emulation to be like them. And beholding the Law of God tranſcribed in the life, it would convincingly anſwer the cavils of the World, and demonſtrate the commands they count grievous, to be in themſelves practicable. But whither is this Goſpel Ornament we have been ſpeaking of, fled? Where is it to be found? How few walk as New Creatures, as becomes the Goſpel, how ever they profeſs it, and pretend a zeal for it?

* As the word ἐποικοδομεῖτε ſignifies, 1 Pet. 2. 12.

Exhort. 2. To thoſe who lie ſtill buried in the ruines of the Old Adam: who carry the Image of Beaſts in their lives, or of Devils in their hearts, or both. Such I would adviſe, earneſtly to ſeek this New-Creature-ſtate. Let not your hearts be beſotted to a neglect of it, and ſtupified into endleſs torments, which will, as ſurely as you live, be the dreadful iſſue, if this be not attained: to be ſo long under the Goſpel, and retain the obſtinacy of an Old Nature to God, is a high aggravation. Talk not of ſparing the Old Man; 'tis your Enemy, wound it to death, uſe the utmoſt ſeverity towards it; put it off, leave not a rag, if poſſible, behind; ſend it away, as Abraham did Hagar, and without ſo much as a Bottle of Water, to deſpoil it of any hopes of return. But, alas, how do you cheriſh and hug this Enemy! How do you value it, as if it were a part of your ſelves; as if you could not live without Poyſon, or be happy without miſery! How do you bid the New Man ſtand far from you, as if it were a real torment to be in the arms of Chriſt, and the New Creation your Diſeaſe, not your Felicity! Tho you were the moſt unblameable in your lives, free from any pretence of an accuſation there, what were you without this change, but Devils in the garb of Angels of Light; Poyſon in fair Cabinets, and the natures of Serpents in the Bodies of Men? What is become of your Souls? Are they ſo immers'd in Fleſh, that nothing of Spirit can make impreſſions upon them? Have men quite forſworn the attaining any other excellency, than what meer Nature beſtowed upon them? What deformity do you find in God, that you ſlight his Image, which ſhould be imprinted on you? What frightful thoughts have you of the Spirit that ſollicites you? How come your Souls ſo ſenſleſs of their real happineſs? Oh, what a happy thing were it, if this day Chriſt were formed in all our hearts, that tho we are naſty dunghills, worſe than the Stable wherein our Saviour was born in the fleſh, we might become the Sanctuary of our great Lord and his Spirit; 'tis then, the Angels would renew their Song at the Birth of Chriſt in the heart, as well as that in the World, Glory to God in the higheſt, Peace and Eternal good will to ſuch a Soul. If you have any ſtruglings in your Hearts, any convictions upon your Conſciences, and make not a further progreſs, theſe will be ſo far from being your advantage, that they will add an Emphaſis to your damnation.

Let

Let me uſe ſome motives to preſs you:

(1.) Shall not the loathſomneſs and miſery of your preſent ſtate ſtartle you? 'Tis a Nature that makes you the children of wrath, Eph. 2. 3. Were your Old Natures acceptable to God, what need any change? But the requiring this change, demonſtrates the Old Nature to be abhorred by God. This Nature is the Devils filth, the Serpents Poyſon, a deformed Leproſy; 'tis the pain, anguiſh, torment, rack of every man that dies in it; it ſmells rank of Hell. Is not another Nature then deſirable? When you commit ſome grievous ſin, to which you are not accuſtomed, are you not dejected? do you not think worſe of your ſelves for it? And are you not pleaſed when you can eſcape it? If the reformation of one ſin be a deſirable thing, how much more the reformation of the whole Nature? For if a drop of that filth bubbling up in the life, be ſo loathſom, what loathſomneſs is there in the heart, where the fountain ſprings? What gall of bitterneſs muſt be in the Root, when a little of the fruit is ſo bitter to your taſte? * Corruption is the diſhonour of your Natures, the poyſon of your Souls, the cauſe of all your unhappineſs. 'Tis this that baniſhed you from Paradice, raviſhing away your pleaſures, ſubjected you to vanity, the wrath of God, the hâtred of Angels, and tyranny of Devils; 'tis this that hath deformed your Souls: deſpoil your ſelves of this curſed Old Man, give your ſelves no reſt till you have conquered it; never ſay, It is incorporated in your entrails and marrow. Where the queſtion is about your everlaſting happineſs, let no excuſe prevail.

* Daille, Sur. Colof. p. 247.

(2.) Shall not the excellency of another ſtate allure you? 'Tis the excellency of any piece of Art to come neareſt its Original; that Star is moſt Glorious, that doth moſt partake of the Suns light and power. The very Light of Nature tells us, the ſtate wherein we are, is not our perfection; ſomething the Soul flutters at beyond this, tho it naturally underſtands not what it is: Is it not then the happineſs of the Soul, to be reduced to its true center, to be reinſtated in an unſpotted Nature, to return to a due reſpect to thoſe ends for which it was made, to have the Underſtanding converſant about the lovelieſt Object, the Will enclined to the moſt amiable goodneſs, and the Affections twining about it, and growing up with it? Can it be any thing elſe but the highe ſtexcellency, to live the life of God; to have the Image of God wrought upon you, and your Souls conformed to his Holineſs? Can that be an imperfection, which makes you like an infinite Righteouſneſs? It was the higheſt perfection of man to be made according to the Image of God, wherein God, as in a Glaſs, might ſee a reſemblance of himſelf. Is it not then a deſirable thing, to have it drawn again with more lively and laſting colours, after ſin and Satan have ſo baſely defaced it? All other things are not the perfection of mans Nature; for whatſoever elſe there is, is poſſeſſed by Beaſts or Devils; the pleaſures of ſenſe, by Beaſts; the endowments of knowledg, by Devils; but the Divine Nature, by neither: This therefore, which neither Devils can be bleſt with, nor Beaſts capable of, is only the perfection of the Soul, more excellent than the Soul it ſelf, ſince that which perfects, is more excellent than that which is perfected by it. Original corruption deſtroys your health, ſullies your purity, enſlaves your liberty. Regeneration reſtores your health, expels your filthineſs, and knocks off your fetters. Let the excellency of this better ſtate prevail with you.

(3.) Will the honour of the thing allure you? Where ſhall you meet with ſo honourable a relation? 'Tis more honour to be a New Creature in rags, than a carnal Prince in Purple, tho the greateſt in the World, for you will then be ſetled Heirs of all the Promiſes. Is it not then more glorious to partake of the Nature of that God, who Created, and Commands the World; than by the force of the Old Nature to be ſlaves to ſordid Luſts, which are both a Drudgery and a Diſeaſe? As a Spirit is more excellent than the Body; ſo a Spiritual being and frame, is more honourable than a Fleſhly. *There is a greater relation between God and a New Creature, than between Natural Fathers and Sons: the Sons of Men have but a little particle of the vile matter and fleſh of their Fathers: but a renewed Man hath the whole Divine Spirit in him; and by vertue of this, all things will, one time or other, riſe up and call you bleſſed; You will be more allied lied to Jeſus Chriſt, by the inward formation of him in your hearts, than the Bleſſed Virgin by the conception of Chriſt in her Womb, Luke 11. 27. She was more happy by partaking of Chriſt in her heart, than by conferring a fleſh on Chriſt from her Body. What an honourable thing is it to be moulded into the Divine likeneſs! Can you be more Glorious, unleſs you were Gods?

(4.) Will pleaſure charm you? View it here. Pleaſure muſt neceſſarily follow this new ſtate, as Light the Sun; there is no ſtate without a pleaſure pertaining to it; pleaſures of ſenſe belong to a life of ſenſe; Intellectual pleaſures, to a life of reaſon; Divine pleaſures, to a Divine Nature. All the ways of wiſdom are ways of pleaſantneſs, Prov. 3. 17. An infinite perfection is attended with an infinite happineſs; the more lineaments then you have of the Divine perfection, the more taſts you will have of the Divine happineſs. God hath an infinite pleaſure in his own perfections: 'tis his felicity to enjoy himſelf, to view himſelf. Pleaſure then muſt naturally reſult from this Image drawn in the Soul; and as naturally, I conceive, according to the degrees of it, as the pleaſure God hath in his own Holineſs and Love. The pleaſure of Heaven is the perfection of holineſs; therefore there is a pleaſure alſo attending the draught of it here; an imperfect pleaſure from the imperfect form of it, as a perfect pleaſure from the compleating of it in Glory. What want can there be of pleaſure, if you come into this ſtate? Will you not be converſant about the higheſt Object, and that with your choiceſt faculties? Can this be without ſome communications of the pleaſure of God, as well as his Nature? You will find a pleaſure in the very ſtruglings to get into this ſtate, much more in it.

(5.) Do you profeſs your ſelves Enemies to the Devil? Why then will you gratify him by continuing in an Old Nature? He keeps a Jubilee when he can draw men into great ſins, and bind them under them; his main induſtry is to make men like himſelf, and continue them in that likeneſs. The whole World, that are not of God, lie wrapt up in the Devils Image, 1 John 5. 19. The whole world lies in wickedneſs, or in the wicked one *; More conſonant to the former Verſes. Satan and natural men lie nugging together, tho the latter dream not of it. His intent in aſſaulting man in Paradice, was to deſtroy the Righteouſneſs of his Nature; his deſign now is to hinder the reſtoration of it, by keeping men off from the means, making them have falſe thoughts of the unpleaſantneſs of it, as tho it were a ſtate injurious to mans tranquillity, by ſuppreſſing convictions which are the firſt portals to the courts of bleſſedneſs. Oh, gratify not the Devil; fly from his image, that you may fly from his miſery.

(6.) Why will you croſs your own ſentiments, when ſober reaſon in you may have leave to ſpeak? What do you think was the end for which you came into the World? Was it to ſerve the Devil, or God? Whoſe Image is it moſt rational for you to bear? Are there not innate deſires in man to be as God? Adam deſired it unlawfully: the ſame Spirit runs through the veins of his poſterity: God hath ſhown you a way in his Word, whereby you may Lawfully deſire it, and ſucceſsfully accompliſh it. Do not all Creatures, one way or other, inſtruct you in it? Do they not all run back to their Fountain? Rivers into the Sea, that they may have a new formation in it; Beams retracted to the Sun; and why not the Soul to God? Do they not all declare the Glory of God? And ſhall man ſtand alone? and what way is there for him to declare Gods Glory, but by the reformation of his Nature? You once had this deſirable Nature in your firſt head, and loſt it; you may have the re-poſſeſſion in the ſecond head, and for ever preſerve it: you cannot deny your Obligation to have it, therefore you cannot deny your duty to ſeek it: you know your Souls received their Original from him, you likewiſe know that there is an obligation to return to him. As the Spirit naturally returns to God who gave it; ſo it cannot be happy in that return, unleſs it firſt Morally return to God to be formed like him.

(7.) Nothing elſe can advantage you, if you want this New-Creature-ſtate. You can no more enjoy happineſs by Chriſt without it, than Adam did in Paradice in the preſence of God with the nakedneſs of his Nature. His being in Paradice, the richer part of the whole lower Creation, could neither heal him, nor content him, after after the loſs of the purity of his Nature; In that happy place his Conſcience rackt him; there he fled from his Creator, which in his innocent Nature he never attempted to do; and all the pleaſures of that place could not reſtore him to Gods favour, or his own peace, without the promiſe of a ſeed, and by that ſeed the reſtauration in part of his former Image.

(8.) Laſtly, Take this for your encouragement, 'Tis attainable by the meaneſt perſon. Col. 3. 11. In the New Creation there is neither Greek, nor Jew, circumciſion, nor uncircumciſion, Barbarian, Scythian, bond, nor free: but Chriſt is all, and in all: that is, there is no diſtinction of any; the eloquence of the Greek, or the rudeneſs of the Barbarian; the uncircumciſion of the Gentile, or the Circumciſion of the Jew; the baſeneſs of the ſlave, or the liberty of the free-man, doth neither advantage, nor diſadvantage them in this Work of the New Creation; and he names Scythians, as being the rudeſt and moſt unpoliſht among all the known Gentiles. No Natural endowments advantage us; no worldly indigencies hinder us. The Soul of the meaneſt is as capable of the New Creation, as the Soul of the higheſt: there is nothing required to the putting on the New Man, which is not attainable by the one as well as the other: yea ſooner by thoſe of the meaneſt endowments, as wanting that fuel for their pride, which is the chief hinderance to a Goſpel-impreſſion. God values nothing but his own Image, neither is he any more taken with the glittering parts and wiſdom of men, than our Saviour with the Glory of the Temple, which his ignorant Diſciples did ſo much admire. Daille, Ser. Coloſſ. p. 238, &c.

Queſt. But what means muſt be uſed, to obtain this excellent priviledg?

Anſw. 'Tis indeed the work of God, yet means may be uſed. * He that obſerves precepts of Morality, ſhall gain Moral Habits; and by practiſing acts of temperance, become temperate. So he that follows the rules given in the Word, for attaining the New Creation, ſhall have it produced in him; and the more aſſuredly, becauſe it is not produced by him, but by God, who is more able to create New Hearts in us, than the unregenerate Man is to work a Moral Reformation. * Jackſon, Vol. 4. ch. 21. p. 399.

For means:

1. Be deeply ſenſible of Original Corruption. View your ſelves in the Glaſs of Adam, reflect upon the fall, and the dreadful conſequents of it; take an exact account of the enmity of thy Nature, as the word repreſents it. We muſt acquaint our ſelves with our ſin and miſery, and have ſelf-emptying thoughts, before we can ſeek after a New Creature. Man is apt to think his Nature good enough; and this makes him the more miſerable and wretched; and cauſes him to think there needs no change, Rev. 3. 17.

2. Be deeply humbled before God. Lay your ſelves low before him, and abhor your ſelves in duſt and aſhes: complain of your Corrupt Nature; melt before God, diſſolve into tears. When you are weary and heavy laden, ſenſible of it by contrition, Chriſt will give reſt by Regeneration. The heart muſt be melted, before it be made new. Pride muſt be humbled; we muſt be vile in our own eyes, as well as vile in our own nature. The Lord is nigh to them that are of a broken heart, Pſal. 34. 18.

3. Often meditate of the excellency of this ſtate, as 'tis repreſented in the Word. Men hear and forget; they leave behind them what they have heard; they hide it not in their hearts, therefore doth not the Word profit them: think often of the honour of being a New Creature, as well as the neceſſity of being a New Creature; if you have any thoughts ariſing of reſting upon your knowledg, or morality, or good meaning, ſay to your Soul, as the Apoſtle in another caſe, Oh, my Soul, Covet earneſtly the beſt gifts, yet ſhow I unto thee a more excellent way. If any imagination ariſe, which flatters you with hopes of being in Chriſt without an inward change, regard it as an Angel from the bottomleſs Pit, ſent from the great Impoſtor to ſeduce you from your happineſs.

4. Fixedly reſolve not to be at reſt, till you procure it at the hands of God. Perhaps you may have had ſome reſolutions before, and ſome diverſion hath chilled thoſe purpoſes; waver not with uncertain velleities between inclination and averſion. Content not your ſelves with ſluggiſh wiſhes, and yawning deſires ſires; but put heart and hand to the Work. Set vigorouſly to it, and thoſe Sons of Anak, thoſe ſeeming terrifying difficulties will fly before you. Where doth the Scripture tell you, That God will neglect his laborious Creature, and ſtand by without aſſiſting him in his ſerious endeavours? No, no; God will not be wanting in his Power, nor the Spirit in his Operations, if we firmly purpoſe, and ſtrongly purſue; God is near to all that call upon him in truth, Pſal. 145. 18. that is, to all that call upon him with a true purpoſe and deſire for his mercy: he is near by his merciful preſence, not by his eſſential preſence only. Fool not away your Vows in vain mirth, nor drown your reſolutions in ſenſual pleaſures. Say as David in another caſe, I have ſworn, and will perform it, That I will in good earneſt endeavour that I may become a New Creature, Pſal. 119. 106.

5. Pray. Regeneration is againſt the inclinations of Old Nature; intermit not therefore to call earneſtly for help from Heaven; 'tis beſt attained upon the knee. God is the foundation of all vitality; the life of Grace is no leſs the effect of his breath than the Soul of Adam. Go to Chriſt, in whom, as in a ſteward, is treaſured up a fulneſs of Grace to diſpence to him that ſeeks it. Beg earneſtly of the Spirit, who is the Officer appointed, the great Limner to draw this Image in us. Why can you not go to Chriſt as well as the Leper, and lie ſobbing before him, Lord if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean, thou canſt change my Nature? Do it conſtantly, do it fervently, and take notice with what inſpirations you will be filled. But do you ſollicite him for this Mercy at all? Has God one breath from thee in a whole week to this purpoſe? Have you ſince you heard it preſſed from the neceſſity of it, made your caſe known to God? Has there been one groan, one ſigh for it? What a ſtupid Creature is man! time will not alway laſt; God will be ſollicited for it, and it is fit he ſhould. An Old Nature is like an Old Devil, it cannot be caſt out without faſting and prayer. The great changes of the Soul are chiefly wrought in Prayer, and the Word: our very looking up to God, and upon God, in humble Prayer, makes a gradual transformation in our Souls: we never are in the Mount with him, but our Souls (as Moſes his face) look quite of another hue and colour. By frequent converſe with Friends, we grow more into an imitation of the excellent qualities we perceive in them. Converſe with God in frequent Prayer and Meditation, and you will grow more and more into a Holy likeneſs to him.

6. Attend diligently upon the Word. To pray to God to renew you, and ſlight the Word which he hath appointed as an inſtrument to effect it, is to diſhonour God: for while you pray to him to be a Father to beget you, you contemn him as a Governor, by neglecting the means he hath appointed for ſuch ends. As the Devil formed himſelf in the Soul, by mans liſtning to, and ſucking in his temptation; ſo Chriſt forms himſelf in the Soul, by our ſucking in the Milk of the Word; as the diſpoſition of the Nurſe, is by the Milk, conveyed to the infant. 'Tis wrought by the Goſpel, 1 Cor. 4. 15. for in Chriſt Jeſus I have begotten you through the Goſpel. Not by the Word of God at large, which conſiſts of Law as well as Goſpel. So the Regenerations of old were wrought, not by the Law, but by that of Goſpel, mixed in that Adminiſtration. By this means you may get a Spiritual knowledg, and diſcard that ignorance which is the foundation of an alienation from the life of God, Eph. 4. 18. alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, becauſe of the blindneſs of their hearts. Study the promiſes, and plead them before the Lord, for by theſe you are made partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4. Reſiſt not any Divine impreſſions, by a ſluggiſhneſs and a liſtleſneſs. Be not in love with your Spiritual death, nor cheriſh the bondage to ſin in your will, when God makes motions to enliven and inlarge you. Welcome the breathings of the Spirit. Open your Souls, as ſome Flowers do for the Sun; drink in the drops of Heaven, as the Earth doth the Rain; and when the Spirit quickens you by its influences, quicken the Spirit by your earneſt Supplications, Cant. 4. 16. make much of him, perſuade his ſtay: breathe, oh Bleſſed Spirit, upon this Wilderneſs. Never leave till it be changed into a fruitful Garden, both pleaſant to, and fruitful for my Bleſſed Creator and Gracious Redeemer.

John I. 13.

Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

THIS Evangelist so plainly describes the Deity of Christ, and in so Majestick a style, in the beginning of the Chapter, that the accidental view of it in a Book lying open by neglect, was instrumental for the Conversion of Junius, that eminent Light in the Church, from his Atheism.

We shall take our rise only from Verse 9. That was the true Light, which lightneth every man that comes into the world. John Baptist, who Verse 6, &c. was to bear witness of this Light, was a light by our Saviours assertion, a burning and a shining light, John 5. 35. but not that true light which was promised, Isa. 49.6. to be a light to the Gentiles, and the salvation of God to the ends of the earth. The Sun is the true Light in the Heavens, and of the World; not but that other Stars are lights too, but they all receive their Light from the Sun. Christ is called the true Light, by nature and essence, not by Grace and Participation. 1 John 5. 20. We know him that is true: and we are in him that is true, even in his son Jesus Christ, the Natural Light and Son of God.

1. True, as opposed to the Types which were shadows of this Light.

2. True, as opposed to false. Philosophical Lights, tho esteemed so, are but darkness, and ignes fatui, in comparison of this.

3. True Original Light, ratione officii, illustrating the whole World with his Light; whatsoever is Light in Heaven or Earth, borrows it from the Sun; whosoever is enlightned in the World, derives from him. Which lighteth every man that comes into the World. Some join coming into the world, to light, and read it thus: He is the Light coming into the World, which lighteth every man. The Greek is something ambiguous, and it may be referred to Light, tho not so commodiously. But the translation which we have, hath been followed in all Ages of the Church; and is contended for only by those, who deny the Deity of our Saviour, or are somewhat affected to them that do.

ſires; but put heart and hand to the Work. Set vigorouſly to it, and thoſe Sons of Anak, thoſe ſeeming terrifying difficulties will fly before you. Where doth the Scripture tell you, That God will neglect his laborious Creature, and ſtand by without aſſiſting him in his ſerious endeavours? No, no; God will not be wanting in his Power, nor the Spirit in his Operations, if we firmly purpoſe, and ſtrongly purſue; God is near to all that call upon him in truth, Pſal. 145. 18. that is, to all that call upon him with a true purpoſe and deſire for his mercy: he is near by his merciful preſence, not by his eſſential preſence only. Fool not away your Vows in vain mirth, nor drown your reſolutions in ſenſual pleaſures. Say as David in another caſe, I have ſworn, and will perform it, That I will in good earneſt endeavour that I may become a New Creature, Pſal. 119. 106.

5. Pray. Regeneration is againſt the inclinations of Old Nature; intermit not therefore to call earneſtly for help from Heaven; 'tis beſt attained upon the knee. God is the foundation of all vitality; the life of Grace is no leſs the effect of his breath than the Soul of Adam. A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF THE EFFICIENT OF REGENERATION,

John I. 13.

Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

THIS Evangelist so plainly describes the Deity of Christ, and in so Majestick a style, in the beginning of the Chapter, that the accidental view of it in a Book lying open by neglect, was instrumental for the Conversion of Junius, that eminent Light in the Church, from his Atheism.

We shall take our rise only from Verse 9. That was the true Light, which lightneth every man that comes into the world. John Baptist, who Verse 6, &c. was to bear witness of this Light, was a light by our Saviours assertion, a burning and a shining light, John 5. 35. but not that true light which was promised, Isa. 49.6. to be a light to the Gentiles, and the salvation of God to the ends of the earth. The Sun is the true Light in the Heavens, and of the World; not but that other Stars are lights too, but they all receive their Light from the Sun. Christ is called the true Light, by nature and essence, not by Grace and Participation. 1 John 5. 20. We know him that is true: and we are in him that is true, even in his son Jesus Christ, the Natural Light and Son of God.

1. True, as opposed to the Types which were shadows of this Light.

2. True, as opposed to false. Philosophical Lights, tho esteemed so, are but darkness, and ignes fatui, in comparison of this.

3. True Original Light, ratione officii, illustrating the whole World with his Light; whatsoever is Light in Heaven or Earth, borrows it from the Sun; whosoever is enlightned in the World, derives from him. Which lighteth every man that comes into the World. Some join coming into the world, to light, and read it thus: He is the Light coming into the World, which lighteth every man. The Greek is something ambiguous, and it may be referred to Light, tho not so commodiously. But the translation which we have, hath been followed in all Ages of the Church; and is contended for only by those, who deny the Deity of our Saviour, or are somewhat affected to them that do.

How doth Chriſt light every man that comes into the world?

1. Naturally: ſo Calvin, the world was made by him, and therefore that which is the beauty of the world, the Reaſon of man, was made and kindled by him. As all the Light the World hath had ſince the Creation, flows from the Sun: ſo all the knowledg which ſparkles in any man, is communicated by Chriſt, even ſince the Creation, as he is the Wiſdom of God, and as Mediator, preſerving thoſe broken relicks of the fall: Prov. 20. 27. The ſpirit of man is the candle of the Lord, lighted and preſerved by him. The Light of Nature, thoſe common notions of fit and juſt in mens Conſciences, thoſe honeſt and honourable principles in the Hearts of any, thoſe beams of Wiſdom in their Underſtanding, tho faint, and like ſparkles raked up in aſhes, are kept alive by his Mediatory influence, as a neceſſary foundation for that reparation which was intended in his firſt interpoſition.

2. Spiritually: ſo not only the Socinians, but ſome very ſound, underſtand it, not that all are actually enlightned: But,

1. In regard of power and ſufficiency; he hath a Power to enlighten every man; able to enlighten not a few, but every man in the World: as the Sun doth not light every man, tho it hath a power to do ſo; and doth actually light every man that ſhuts not his eyes againſt it.

2. Actually: taking it diſtributive, not collective; that whoſoever is enlightned in the World, hath it communicated from Chriſt; as Pſal. 145. 14. The Lord upholds all that fall: and raiſes up all thoſe that are bowed down; as many as are upheld and raiſed, are upheld and raiſed by God. He doth indeed ſhine in darkneſs, his Light breaks out upon men, but they are not the better for it, becauſe the darkneſs comprehends it not: as when there is but one Schoolmaſter in a town, we uſually ſay, He teaches all the Boys in the Town; not that every individual Boy comes to School, but as many as are taught, are taught by him. I embrace the former, becauſe the Evangeliſt ſeems to begin with his perſon, as God; his office as Mediator, and then deſcends to his Incarnation; and it is a ſenſe which puts no force upon the Word. And I ſuppoſe that every man is added, to beat down the proud conceits of the Jews, who regarded the Gentiles with contempt, as not enjoying the priviledges conferred upon themſelves: but the Evangeliſt declares, That what the Gentiles had in Natural Light, and what they were to have in Spiritual Light, did, and was to come from him, who would diſperſe his beams in all Nations: Ver. 10. And therefore he was in the world, before his coming in the fleſh, in regard of his vertue and efficacy, by the ſpreading his beams over the World, enlightning men in all ages and places with that common Light of Nature; he was near to every man; in him they lived, and moved, and had their being; but the World by their Natural Wiſdom knew him not, and glorified him not. The world was made by him, yet the world knew him not. Ingratitude hath been the conſtant portion, of the Mediator, from the World; they knew him not in paſt Ages, knew him not in the preſent Age of his coming in the fleſh, they did not acknowledg him with that affection, reverence and ſubjection that was due to him.

He aggravates this contempt of Chriſt:

1. By the general right he had, he came to his own, Verſe 11. meaning the World *, it being put in the Neuter Gender; the whole Word was his propriety, and his goods, yet they knew not their own: In this worſe than the Ox and Aſſe.

* Εἰς τὰ ἴδια.

2. By the ſpecial priviledges conferred on thoſe to whom he firſt came, and from whom he ſhould have the moſt welcome reception; implied in theſe words and his own, οἱ ἴδιοι, in the Maſculine Gender, his own people that had been his treaſure, to whom he had given his Law, entruſted with the Covenants and Oracles of God, theſe received him not. His own, ſome ſay, as being peculiarly committed to him, the Angel of the Covenant; whereas other Nations were committed to Angels to receive Laws from them. His own fleſh and blood, who expected a Meſſiah, to whom he was particularly ſent, as being the loſt Sheep of the Houſe of Iſrael. Chriſt is moſt rejected where he proffers moſt kindneſs; Thoſe of Tyre and Sidon, thoſe of Sodom and Gomorrah, would not have uſed him ſo ill, as Capernaum pernaum and Jeruſalem, his own people. He deſcends to ſhow the loſs of them that rejected him; the benefit of thoſe that received him: Ver. 12. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his Name.

Where is:

1. The ſubject: thoſe that received him.
2. The benefit: the dignity of Sonſhip.
3. The manner of conferring this benefit, gave them power.
4. The inſtrumental cauſe: believe on his Name. Tho his own rejected him, they loſt a Dignity which was conferred upon thoſe that received him: he loſt not his pains, for he gathered Sons to God out of all parts of the World. To as many as received him. It was not now peculiar to the Jews, who boaſted of being Abraham's ſeed, and to have the Covenant entailed upon them, to be the people of God: It was now conferred upon thoſe who were before Lo ammi and Lo-ruhamah, Hoſ. 2. 23. It was nothing but Faith on his Name, that gave men the priviledg of being the Sons of God; and this was communicated to Gentiles as well as Jews. Power: Not a power, but a dignity, as the word properly ſignifies. Not a Power if they would, but a Will, for they were born of the Will of God. Faith brings men into a ſpecial relation to God. Which Faith is more than an aſſent and giving credit to God; for to believe on God, to believe on his Name, is a Phraſe peculiar to Scripture. To become the ſons of God. Some underſtand this of Sonſhip, by Adoption; but the following Verſe gives us light to underſtand it of a Sonſhip by Regeneration. St. Paul uſes the word Adoption: But St. John both in his Goſpel and Epiſtles ſpeaks more of the New Birth, and Sonſhip by it, than any of the other Apoſtles. Who were born not of Blood, or of Bloods. He removes all other cauſes of this, which men might imagine, and aſcribes it wholly to God. This place is variouſly interpreted. Not of blood. Not by Natural inſtinct, ſaith one: Not by an illuſtrious ſtock. The Jews imagined themſelves Holy by their carnal Generation from Abraham, in a long train of Anceſtors. Grace runs not in a blood. 'Tis not often a Flower growing upon every ability; not many wiſe, not many mighty. Not hereditary by a mixture of blood. Natural Generation makes men no more Regenerate, than the rich man in Hell was Regenerate by Abraham, his Natural Anceſtor, whom he calls, Father Abraham. Religious Parents propagate Corruption, not Regeneration: Carnal generation is by Nature, not by Grace; by deſcent from Adam, not by implantation in Chriſt. Abraham had an Iſhmael, and Iſaac and Eſau; man begets only a Mortal Body; but Grace is the fruit of an Incorruptible ſeed. Nor of the will of the fleſh. * Not by human Election. As Eve judged of Cain, that he ſhould be the Meſſiah; or Iſaac of Eſau, that he ſhould be Heir of the Promiſe, as the Jews ſay. || Not by a choice of thoſe things which are neceſſary, profitable, or delightful to the fleſh; not by a Will affected to the fleſh, or things of the fleſh. * Not by any ſenſual Appetite, whereby men uſed to adopt one to bear up their names, when they wanted Poſterity of their own. I would rather conceive it to be meant of the ſtrength of Nature, which is called fleſh in Scripture: not by legal obſervances; the Ceremonies of the Law being called carnal or fleſhly Ordinances, Heb. 9. 10. 'Tis not a fruit of nature, or profeſſion. Nor of the will of Man. Calvin takes the will of the fleſh, and the will of man for one and the ſame thing; the Apoſtle uſing two expreſſions only to fix it more upon the mind. I rather judg it to be meant thus: not by Natural principles, or Moral endowments, which are the flower and perfection of man, as man. 'Tis not Arbitrary of the will of man, or the reſult naturally of the moſt Religious Education. All the power of Regenerate men in the World joyned together cannot renew another: all the induſtry of man, without the influence of the Heavens in the Sun and Rain, cannot produce fruit in the Earth; no nor the Moral induſtry of men, Grace in the Soul. But of God; or the Will of God: his own Will; James 1. 18. Of his own will begat he us; excluſive of all other wills mentioned before. 'Tis the ſole efficiency of God, he hath the ſole hand in it; therefore we are ſaid, to be both begotten and born of him, 1 John 5. 18. 'Tis ſo purely Gods Work, that as to the principle, he is the ſole Agent; and as to the manifeſtation

* Mercer, in Hoſ. 2. 1.
* Amyraldus Fine Theſ. Salmur. Spirit. Adoption. Theſ. 6.

of it, he is the principal agent. Not of the will of the fleſh; that is only Corruption; nor of the will of man, that at beſt is but Moral Nature. But whatſoever the meaning of thoſe particular expreſſions is, the Evangeliſt removes all pretences Nature may make to the efficiency of this Regeneration, and aſcribes it wholly to God.

1. There's a removal of falſe cauſes.
2. A poſition of the true cauſe.
   1. The efficient: God.
   2. The manner: by an act of his Will.

Shewing thereby,

1. No neceſſity in him to renew us: no motive but from himſelf.
2. No merit on our parts. Man cannot merit, ſay the Papiſts, before Grace; no Child can merit his own Birth; no Man Grace.

'Tis ſubjectively in the Creature, not efficiently by the Creature, neither our ſelves nor any other Creature, Angels, Men, Ordinances.

Doct. 2. God alone is the prime efficient cauſe of Regeneration.

Doct. 1. For the firſt. Man in all his capacities is too weak to produce the work of Regeneration in himſelf. This is not the birth of a darkned Wiſdom, and an enſlaved Will. We affect a kind of Divinity, and would center our ſelves in our own ſtrength; therefore it is good to be ſenſible of our own Impotency, that God may have the Glory of his own Grace, and we the comfort of it, in a higher principle and higher power than our own. 'Tis not the bare propoſal of Grace, and the leaving the Will to an indifferent poſture, ballanced between good and evil, undetermined to the one or the other, to incline and determine it ſelf which way ſeems beſt to it. Not one will, in the whole rank of Believers, left to themſelves. The Evangeliſt excepts not one man among them; for as many as received Chriſt, as many as believed, were the Sons of God, who were born; which believers, every one that had this Faith as the means, and this Sonſhip as the priviledg, were born, not of the will of the Fleſh, nor the will of Man.

For the proof of this in general:

1. God challengeth this work as his own, excluding the Creature from any ſhare as a cauſe. Ezek. 36. 25, 26, 27. I will ſprinkle clean water upon you, I will cleanſe you, I will give you a new heart, I will put a new ſpirit into you, I will take away the heart of ſtone, I will give you a heart of fleſh, I will put my ſpirit into you. Here I will, no leſs than ſeven times. Nothing is allowed to man in the production of this work in the leaſt; all that is done by him, is the walking in Gods ſtatutes by vertue of this principle. The ſanctifying principle, the actual ſanctification, the reception of it by the creature, the removal of all the obſtructions of it, the principle maintaining it, are not in the leaſt here attributed to the will of man. God appropriates all to himſelf. He doth not ſay, He would be mans aſſiſtant, as many men do, who tell us only of the aſſiſtances of the Goſpel, as if God in the Goſpel expected the firſt motions of the will of man to give him a riſe for the acting of his grace; you ſee here he gives not an inch to the Creature. To aſcribe the firſt work, in any part, to the will of man, is to deprive God of half his due, to make him but a partner with his Creature. The leaſt of it cannot be tranſferred to man, but the right of God will be diminiſht, and the Creature go ſhares with his Creator. Are we not ſufficient of our ſelves to do any thing? and are we ſufficient to part ſtakes with God in this Divine Work? What partner was the Creature with God in Creation? 'Tis the Fathers traction alone, without the hand of free-will. None can come, except the father which hath ſent me, draw them, John 6. 44. The miſſion of the Mediator, and the traction of the Creature, are by the ſame hand. Our Saviour could not have come unleſs the Father had ſent him, nor can man come to Chriſt unleſs the Father draw him: what is that which is drawn, the will? The will then is not the agent, it doth not draw it ſelf.

2. The titles given to Regeneration evidence it. 'Tis a Creation; what Creature can give it ſelf a being? 'Tis a putting in a Law and a New Heart; what matter can infuſe a Soul into it ſelf? 'Tis a New Birth; What man did ever beget himſelf? 'Tis an opening the heart; What man can do this, who neither hath the Key, nor is acquainted with the Wards? Not a man knows the heart, 'tis deceitful above all things, who can know it?

3. The conveyance of Original Corruption doth in part evidence it. We have no more intereſt of our wills in Regeneration, than we had in Corruption; this was firſt received by the will of Adam our firſt head, thence tranſmitted to us without any actual conſent of our wills in the firſt tranſmiſſion; that is conveyed to us from the Second Adam, without any actual conſent of our wills in the firſt infuſion. Yet tho the wills of Adam's Poſterity are meer paſſive in the firſt conveyance of the corrupt habit from him by Generation, yet afterwards they are active in the approbations of it, and production of the fruits of it: So the will is meerly paſſive in the firſt conveyance of the Grace of Regeneration, tho afterwards it is pleaſed with it, and brings forth fruit meet for it.

4. Scripture repreſents man exceeding weak and unable to do any thing ſpiritually good. So then, they that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God, Rom. 8. 8. He concludes it by his ſo then, as in infallible conſequence, from what he had diſcourſed before. If as being in the fleſh they cannot pleaſe God, therefore not in that which is the higheſt pleaſure to God, a framing themſelves to a likeneſs to him. The very deſire and endeavour of the Creature after this, is ſome pleaſure to God, to ſee a Creature ſtruggling after Holineſs; but they that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe him. Can any good thing come out of Nazareth, was ſaid of our Saviour? So may we better ſay, Can any good thing come out of the fleſh, the enſlaved, poſſeſt will of man? If it be free ſince it was captivated by ſin, who ſet it free? Nothing can, but the Law of the Spirit of Life, Rom. 8. 2. To be ſinners, and to be without ſtrength, is one and the ſame thing in the Apoſtles judgment, Rom. 5. 6, 8. While we were yet without ſtrength; afterwards, while we were yet ſinners; he doth not ſay, We are without great ſtrength, but without ſtrength, ſuch an impotence as is in a dead man. Not like a man in a ſwoon, but a man in a Grave. God only is Almighty, and man all Impotency; God only is all-ſufficient, and man all-indigent. 'Tis impoſſible we can have a ſtrength of our own, ſince our firſt Father was feeble, and conveyed his weakneſs to us; by the ſame reaſon that it is impoſſible we can have a Righteouſneſs of our own, ſince our firſt Father ſinned, Iſa. 43. 26, 27. declare, that thou mayeſt be juſtified. Thy firſt father hath ſinned.

5. This weakneſs is univerſal. Sin hath made its ſickly impreſſions in every faculty. The mind is dark, Eph. 4. 18. he cannot know, 1 Cor. 2. 14. there's a ſtonineſs in the heart, he cannot bend, Zech. 7. 12. there's enmity in the will, he cannot be ſubject, Rom. 8. 7. As to faith, he cannot believe, John. 12. 39. As to the Spirit, the worker of Faith, he cannot receive; that is, of himſelf, John 14. 17. acknowledg Chriſt he cannot, 1 Cor. 12. 3. As to practiſe, he cannot bring forth fruit, John 15. 4. The unrighteouſneſs introduced by Adam, poured a Poyſon into every faculty, and diſpoſſeſt it of its ſtrength, as well as of its beauty: what elſe could be expected from any deadly wound, but weakneſs as well as defilement? The underſtanding conceives only ſuch thoughts as are pleaſing to the Law of ſin; the memory is employed in preſerving the dictates and decrees of it; the imagination full of fancies imprinted by it; the Will wholly ſubmitting to its Authority; Conſcience ſtanding with fingers in its mouth, for the moſt part not to ſpeak againſt it; the whole man yielding it ſelf and every member to the commands of it, and undertaking nothing but by its motions, Rom. 6. 19. Senault, Corrupt. p. 8.

6. To evince it, there is not one Regenerate man but in his firſt converſion is chiefly ſenſible of his own inſufficiency. And univerſal conſent is a great argument of the truth of a propoſition: 'tis a ground of the belief of a Deity, it being the ſentiment of all Nations. I do not ſpeak of diſputes about it from the pride of reaſon, but of the inward experience of it in any heart: what more frequent in the mouths of thoſe that have ſome preparations to it by conviction, than I cannot repent, I cannot believe, I find my heart rotten, and baſe, and unable to any thing thing that is good? There have been inſtances of thoſe that would elevate the power of man, and freedom of will in Spiritual things, who have been confuted in their reaſonings, and acknowledged themſelves ſo, when God hath come to work ſavingly upon them. Indeed this poverty of ſpirit, or ſenſe of our own emptineſs, inſufficiency and indigence, is the firſt Goſpel grace wrought in the Soul, and ſtands in the head of all thoſe noble qualifications in our Saviours Sermon, as fitting men for the Kingdom of God; Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven, Matth. 5. 3. And God in the whole progreſs of this work keeps believers in a ſenſibleneſs of their own weakneſs, thereby to preſerve them in a continual dependance on him; and therefore ſometimes withdraws his Spirit from them, and lets them fall, that they may adhere more cloſely to him, and leſs confide in themſelves.

2. What kind of impotency or inſufficiency is there in the Soul to be the cauſe of this work?

Anſ. 1. 'Tis not a Phyſical weakneſs for want of faculties. Underſtanding we have, but not a Spiritual Light in it to direct us; Will we have, but no freedom to chuſe that which is Spiritually good; *tho ſince the fall we have ſuch a free-will left, which pertains to the eſſential Nature of man, yet we have loſt that liberty which belongs to the perfection of human Nature, which was to exerciſe acts ſpiritually good and acceptable to God. Had the faculties been loſt Adam had not been capable of a promiſe or command, and conſequently of ever ſinning after. In Adam by Creation we were poſſeſt of it; in Adam, by his Corruption we were ſtript of it; we have not loſt the Phyſical but the Moral Nature of theſe faculties; not the faculties themſelves, but the Moral goodneſs of them. As the Elementary heat is left in a carcaſs, which yet is unfit to exerciſe any animal action for want of a Soul to enliven it; ſo tho the faculties remain after this ſpiritual death, we are unfit to exert any ſpiritual action for want of Grace to quicken them. If man wanted faculties, this want would excuſe him in his moſt extravagant actions: no Creature is bound to that which is ſimply impoſſible; nay, without thoſe faculties, he could not act as a rational Creature, and ſo were utterly uncapable of ſinning. Sin hath untuned the ſtrings, but did not unſtring the Soul; the faculties were ſtill left, but in ſuch a diſorder, that the wit and will of man can no more tune them, than the ſtrings of an untuned Lute can diſpoſe themſelves for harmony without a Muſicians hand.

* Ames Medul. lib. 1. cap. 12. Sect. 44.

2. Neither is it a weakneſs ariſing from the greatneſs of the Object above the faculty. As when an Object is unmeet for a man, becauſe he hath no power in him to comply with it; As to underſtand the eſſence of God; this the higheſt Creature in its own Nature cannot do, becauſe God dwells in unacceſſible light; and it is utterly impoſſible for any thing but God, to comprehend God. If man were required to become an Angel, or to riſe up and kiſs the Sun in the Firmament; theſe were impoſſible things, becauſe man wanted a faculty in his Primitive Nature for ſuch acts: So if God had commanded Adam to fly without giving him Wings, or to ſpeak without giving him a Tongue, he had not been guilty of ſin in not doing it; becauſe it was not diſobedience; for diſobedience is only in what a man hath a faculty to do: but to love God, praiſe him, depend upon him, was in the power of mans Original Nature, for they were not above thoſe faculties God endued him with, but very correſpondent and ſuitable to him: the Objects propoſed are in themſelves intelligible, credible, capable to be comprehended.

3. Neither is it a weakneſs ariſing from the inſufficiency of external revelation. The means of Regeneration are clearly revealed in the Goſpel, the ſound is gone into all the Earth, Rom. 10. 18. and the word of the Lord is an apprehenſible Object, 'tis near us, even in our mouths, Rom. 10. 8. the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightning the eyes, Pſal. 19. 8. If the Object were hid, the weakneſs lay not on the part of man, but on the inſufficiency of revelation; as if any thing were revealed to man in an unknown Tongue, there were an inſufficiency in the means of revelation.

But, 4. 'Tis a Moral weakneſs, The diſability lies chiefly in the will, John 5. 40. what is there, you will not come to me? is Verſe 44. How can you believe? You cannot cannot becauſe you will not. Carnal Luſts prepoſſeſs the heart, and make their parts in the will againſt the things of God: ſo that inward propenſities to embrace ſin, are as great as the outward temptations to allure to it, whereby the Soul is carried down the ſtream with a wilful violence. In this reſpect he is called dead, tho the death be not of the ſame Nature with a Natural death; for ſuch a one hath not the Natural faculty to raiſe himſelf; but this is an impotency ariſing from a voluntary obſtinacy; yet the iniquity of a man binds him no leſs powerfully under this ſpiritual captivity, than a Natural death and inſenſibility keeps men in the Graves: and thoſe fetters of perverſity they can no more knock off, than a dead man can raiſe himſelf from the Grave; by reaſon of thoſe bands they are called Priſoners, Iſa. 42. 7. and cannot be delivered without the powerful voice of Chriſt commanding and enabling them to go forth. Iſa. 49. 9. That thou maiſt ſay to the Priſoner, Go forth. The Apoſtle lays the whole fault of mens not receiving the truth, upon their wills. 2 Theſ. 2. 10. They received not the love of the truth; they heard it, they knew it, but they loved not that which courted them. *'Tis not ſeated in any defect of the will, as it is a power of the Soul, for then God who Created it would he charged with it, and might as well charge Beaſts to become men, as men to become Gracious. Man as a Creature had a power to believe, and love God; to reſiſt temptations, avoid ſin, and live according to Nature; but man as corrupted by a habit derived to him from his firſt Parents, and increaſed by a cuſtom in ſin, cannot believe, cannot love God, cannot bring himſelf into a good frame; as a Muſician cannot play a Leſſon when he hath the Gout in his fingers; when the eyes are full of Adultery, when the heart is full of evil habits, it cannot ceaſe to ſin, it cannot be gracious, 2 Pet. 2. 14.

Now theſe habits are either innate, or contracted and increaſed.

(1.) Innate. By Nature a habit of corruption, fundamental of all other that grow up in us. Man made a covenant with ſin, contracted a marriage with it; by vertue of this Covenant ſin had a full power over him: what the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the marriage between Man and the Law, Rom. 2. 1, 2, 3, 4. is applicable to this caſe: Sin as a Husband, by way of Covenant, hath a powerful dominion over the Will, and binds it as long as ſin lives; and the Will hath no power to free it ſelf, unleſs a higher Power make a divocre, or by the death of the Husband: this is the cauſe of mans obſtinacy againſt any return to God: the Will is held in the cords of ſin, Prov. 5. 22. The habit hath obtained an abſolute Soveraignty over it. Hoſ. 5. 4. They will not frame their doings to turn unto their God: why, for the ſpirit of whordoms is in the midſt of them; that is, in their hearts. This Adulterous or Idolatrous habit holds their wills in chains, and acts them, as a man poſſeſſed by the Devil, is acted according to the pleaſure of the Devil; the Devil ſpeaks in them, moves in them, and doth what he pleaſes by them. And which binds the Will faſter, this habit is not in a Natural Man by way of a Tyranny, but a voluntary Soveraignty on the part of the Will; the Will is pleaſed and tickled with it. As a Woman (to uſe the ſimilitude of the Holy Ghoſt in that place) is ſo over-ruled by her Affections to other Lovers, that ſhe cannot think of returning to her former Husband; but her unlawful Love plays all its pranks, and riſeth with that force againſt all arguments from honeſty and credit, that it keeps her ſtill in the chains of an unlawful Luſt: So this is not a habit which doth oppreſs Nature, or force it againſt its will, but by its incorporation, and becoming one with our Nature, has quite altered it from that Original rectitude and ſimplicity wherein God at firſt framed it. 'Tis a Law of ſin, which having raced out the purity of the Law of Nature, commands in a greater meaſure in the ſtead of it. Hence it is as natural to man, in his lapſed ſtate, to have perverſe diſpoſitions againſt God, as it is eſſential to him to be rational. And the Chariot of that weak remaining reaſon left us, is overturned by our diſtempered paſſions; and the nobler part of man is ſubject to the rule of theſe, which bear down the Authority both of reaſon and God too. That one ſin of the Angels, howſoever complicated we know not, taking place as a habit in them, hath bound them for ever from riſing to do any good, or diſintangling themſelves from it, and may perhaps be meant by thoſe chains of darkneſs wherein they are reſerved and held to the judgment of the great day, having no will to ſhake them off, tho they have light enough to ſeethe torment appointed for them.

(2.) New contracted and increaſed habits upon this foundation. Cuſtom turns ſin more into another Nature, and compleats the firſt natural diſorder. An unrenewed man daily contracts a greater impotency, by adding ſtrength to this habit, and putting power into the hands of ſin to exerciſe its tyranny, and increaſing our headſtrong Natures in their unrulineſs. 'Tis as impoſſible of our ſelves to ſhake off the fetters of cuſtom, as to ſuppreſs the unrulineſs of Nature. Jer. 13. 23. Can an Ethiopian change his skin? or a leopard his ſpots? then may you alſo do good that are accuſtomed to do evil. The Prophet ſpeaks not here of what they were by nature, but what they were by cuſtom; contracting thereby ſuch a habit of evil, that like a chronick Diſeaſe, could not be cured by any ordinary means. But may he not accuſtom himſelf to do good? No; 'tis as impoſſible as for an Ethiopian to change his skin. Thoſe habits draw a man to delight, and therefore to a neceſſity of ſinning. The pleaſure of the heart joyned with the ſoveraignty of ſin, are two ſuch ſtrong cords, as cannot be untwiſted or cut by the Soul it ſelf, no, not without an over-ruling Grace: It was a ſimple wound in Adam, but ſuch as all Nature could not cure, much leſs when we have added a world of putrifaction to it. The ſtronger the habit, the greater the impotency: If we could not raze out the ſtamp of meer Nature upon our Wills, how can we raze out the deeper impreſſions made by the addition of cuſtom? If Adam, who committed but one ſin, and that in a moment, did not ſeek to regain his loſt integrity; how can any other man, who by a multitude of ſinful acts hath made his habit of a Gyant-like ſtature, compleated many parts of wickedneſs, and ſcoft at the rebukes of Conſcience?

Let us now ſee wherein this weakneſs of our Wills to renew our ſelves, doth appear.

1. In a total moral unfitneſs for this work. Grace being ſaid to make us meet for our Maſters uſe, it implies an utter unfitneſs for Gods uſe, of our ſelves, before Grace. There is a paſſive capability, a ſtump left in Nature, but no fitneſs for any activity in Nature, no fitneſs in Nature for receiving Grace before Grace; there is nothing in us naturally which doth ſuit or correſpond with that which is good in the ſight of God: that which is Natural is found more or leſs in all men: But the Goſpel, which is the inſtrument of Regeneration, finds nothing in the Nature of man to comply with the main deſign of it: there is indeed ſome compliance of Moral Nature with the Moral Precepts in the Goſpel, upon which account it hath been commended by ſome Heathens; but nothing to anſwer the main intendment of it, which is Faith, the top Grace in Regeneration: this hath nothing to commend it ſelf to meer Nature, nor finds an internal principle in man that is pleaſed with it, as other Graces do, as Love, Meekneſs, Patience, &c. For Faith ſtrips a man of all his own glory, brings himſelf from himſelf to live dependently upon another, and makes him act for another, not for himſelf; and therefore meets not with any one principle in man to ſhow it countenance. No good thing dwells in the fleſh, Rom. 7. 18. there may be ſome motions lighting there, as a Fly upon a mans face; but they have no ſettled abode, and ſpring not up from Nature. If the Apoſtle, who was renewed, found an unfitneſs in himſelf to do that which was good, how great is that unfitneſs in a meer Natural Will, which is wholly under the power of the fleſh, and hath no principle in it correſpondent to Spiritual Truth to renew it ſelf? If this Regeneration had any foundation in Nature, it would be then in moſt men that hear the Goſpel, becauſe there is not a general contradiction in men to thoſe things which are Natural: but ſince there is no good thing dwells in any fleſh, how can it be fit of it ſelf to be raiſed into a conformity to God, which is the higheſt pitch of the Creatures excellency? The Scripture repreſents us not as Earth, which is fit to ſuck in ſhowers from Heaven; but as Stones, which are only moiſtned in the ſuperficies by the Rain, but anſwers not the intendment of it. Adamants are unfit to receive impreſſions; and the beſt Natural heart is no better, like a Stone, cold and hard. The Soul with its faculties, is like a Bird with its Wings, but clog'd with ſlime and clay, unfit to fly. A barren Wilderneſs is abſolutely unfit to make a pleaſant and fruitful Garden.

There

There is a contractedneſs of the heart till God enlarge and open it, and that in the beſt nature. Acts 16.14. Lydia, it is ſaid, worſhipped God, there was Religion in her, yet the Lord opened her heart for the Goſpel. Can any thing be more indiſpoſed than a Fountain that is alway bubbling up Poyſon? ſo is the heart of man, Gen. 6. 5. The leaſt imagination, riſing up in the heart, is evil, and can be no better, ſince the heart it ſelf is a maſs of Venom. If the renewed Natures find ſo much indiſpoſition in the progreſs of Sanctification, tho their Sails be filled with Grace, how great muſt it be where corrupt Nature only ſits at the Stern? As when Satan came to tempt our Saviour, he found nothing in him, no touchwood in his Nature to take fire by a temptation: So when the Spirit comes, he finds no tinder in man to receive readily any ſpark of Grace. This unfitneſs is in the beſt meer Nature, that ſeems to have but a drop of corruption: a drop of Water is as unfit to aſcend, as a greater quantity.

2. There is not only an unfitneſs, but an unwillingneſs. A ſenſleſs ſluggiſhneſs and drowſineſs of Soul, loth to be moved. No man doth readily hold out his arms to embrace the tenders of the Goſpel. What folding of the arms? yet a little more ſlumber, a little more ſin. Man is meer darkneſs, before his effectual calling; who hath called us out of darkneſs, 1 Pet. 2. 9. his Underſtanding is darkned; the Will cannot embrace a thing offered, unleſs it have powerful arguments to perſuade it of the goodneſs of that thing which is offered; which arguments are modelled in the Underſtanding; but that being darkned, hath wrong notions of Divine things, therefore cannot repreſent them to the Will to be purſued and followed. Adam's running away from God to hide himſelf, after the loſs of his Original Righteouſneſs, diſcovers how unwilling man is to implore Gods favour. How deplored is the condition of man by ſin! ſince we find not one prayer put up by Adam, nor can we ſuppoſe any till the promiſe of recovery was made, tho he was ſenſible of his nakedneſs, and haunted by his Conſcience: I was afraid, becauſe I was naked: and I hid my ſelf, Gen. 3. 10. He had no mind, no heart to turn ſuppliant unto God, he runs from God; and when Gods finds him out, inſtead of begging pardon by humble prayer, he ſtands upon his juſtification, accuſeth God to be the cauſe, by giving him the Woman, by whoſe perſuaſion he was induced to ſin. What Glaſs will better diſcover the good will of Nature to God, than the firſt motions after the fall?

3. There is not only an unfitneſs and unwillingneſs, but an affection to ſomething contrary to the Goſpel. The nature of outward Objects is ſuch, that they attract the ſenſitive appetite, corrupted by ſin, to prefer them before that which is more excellent: the heart is foreſtalled by an inordinate love of the World, and a pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs, 2 Theſſ. 2. 12. they believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs, a ſingular pleaſure. Where the heart and the Devil agree ſo well, what liking can there be to God or his Will? Where the amity between ſin and the Soul is ſo great, that ſin is ſelf, and ſelf is ſin, how can ſo delightful a Friend be diſcarded, to receive one he thinks his Enemy? * 'This weakneſs ariſeth from a love to ſomething different or contrary to what is propoſed. When a man is ſo tied to that Object which he loves, that he minds not that contrary Object which is revealed by a fit Light: As a man that hath his eyes or his heart fixed upon a fair Picture, cannot obſerve many things that occur about him; or if he doth conſider it, he is taken ſo much with the things he loves, that he ſeems to hate the other; that tho he doth count it good, yet compared with what he loved before, he apprehends it as evil, and judges it evil, meerly by the error of his mind, a practical, affected and voluntary ignorance. So tho a man may ſometimes judg that there is a goodneſs in the Goſpel, and the things propoſed, yet his affection to other pleaſures, which he prefers before the Goſpel, cauſes him to ſhake off any thoughts of compliance with it. Now all Natural men in the Irons of ſin, are not weary, but in love with their fetters, and prize their ſlavery as if it were the moſt glorious liberty.

'Ευδοκήσαντες.

* Teſtard. de grat. Theſ. 151.

4. There is not only unfitneſs, and unwillingneſs, and a contrary affection to the Goſpel, but according to the degrees of this affection to other things, there is a ſtrong averſion and enmity to the tenders of the Goſpel. This enmity is more or leſs in the heart of every unrenewed man: tho in ſome it is more reſtrained and kept down by Education, yet it will appear more or leſs upon the approaches of Grace, which is contrary to Nature: As a ſpark as well as a flame will burn, tho one hath leſs heat than the other; there is the ſame nature, the ſame ſeminal principles in all. The carnal mind, let it be never ſo well flouriſht by Education, is enmity to God, and therefore unable, becauſe unwilling to be ſubject to his Law, Rom. 8. 7. By Nature he is of the Devils party, and hath no mind the caſtle of his heart ſhould ever come into the hands of the right owner. 'Tis in every faculty. Not one part of the Soul will make a mutiny within againſt ſin, or take part with God, when he comes to lay ſiege to it; when he ſtretches out his hands, he meets with a rebellious and gainſaying people, Rom. 10. 21. It can converſe with any thing but God; look with delight upon any thing but that which is the only true Object of delight. It can have no deſire to have that Law writ in his heart, whoſe Characters he hates. All the expreſſions in the Scripture, denoting the work of Grace, import mans diſtaſte of it: 'tis to deny ſelf, crucify the fleſh; what man hath not an averſion to deny what is deareſt to him, his ſelf; to crucify what is incorporated with him, his Iſaac, his fleſh? The bent of a Natural heart, and the deſign of the Goſpel, which is to lay man as low as the duſt, can never agree. * A corrupt heart, and the propoſitions of Grace, meet together as Fire and Water, with hiſſing. The language of man, at the propoſals of the Goſpel, is much like that of the Devils, What have we to do with thee? Art thou come to deſtroy us? Luke 4. 34.

* Stoughton, Preachers dignity. p. 72.

5. This averſion proceeds on to a reſiſtance. No Rebels were ever ſtouter againſt their Prince, than an unrenewed Soul againſt the Spirit of God, not a moment without Arms in his hand: he acts in defence of his ſin, and reſiſtance of Grace, and combats with the Spirit, as his deadly Enemy; you always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt: as your fathers did, ſo do ye, Acts 7. 51. The animoſity runs in the whole blood of Nature. Neither the breathings of love, nor the thunders of threatnings, are liſtned unto. All Natural men are hewed out of one Quarry of Stone. The higheſt Rock, and the hardeſt Adamant may be diſſolved with leſs pains than the heart of man; they all, like a Stone, reſiſt the force of the Hammer, and fly back upon it. All the faculties are full of this reſiſtance: the mind with ſtout reaſoning gives a repulſe to Grace; the imagination harbours fooliſh conceits of it: in the heart, hardneſs and refuſing to hear; in the affections, diſguſt and diſpleaſure with Gods ways, diſaffection to his intereſt; the heart is lockt, and will not of it ſelf ſhoot one Bolt to let the King of Glory enter: What party is like to be made for God, by bare Nature thus poſſeſt? Nature indeed doth what it can, tho it cannot do what it would; for tho it reſiſt the outward means, and inward motions, yet it cannot efficaciouſly reſiſt the determining Grace of God, any more than the matter of the Creation could reſiſt the All-powerful Voice of God, commanding it to receive this or that form; or Lazarus reſiſt the receiving that life Chriſt conveyed to him by his mighty Word; God finds a contradiction in our Wills; and we are not Regenerate, becauſe our Will hath conſented to the perſuaſions of Grace: for that it doth not do of it ſelf; but the Grace of God diſarms our Will of all that is capable to make reſiſtance, and determines it to accept and rejoyce in what is offered. Nature of it ſelf is of an unyielding temper, and removes not one ſcale from the eye, nor any ſplinter from the ſtone in the heart; for how can we be the Authors of that which we moſt reſiſt and labour to deſtroy?

6. Add to all this, the power of Satan in every Natural man, whoſe intereſt lies in enfeebling the Creature. The Devil, ſince his firſt impreſſion upon Adam, hath had the univerſal poſſeſſion of Nature, unleſs any Natural man free himſelf from the rank of the Children of diſobedience. Eph. 2. 2. The ſpirit that now works in the children of diſobedience; where the ſame word is uſed for the acting of Satan, and likewiſe for the acting of ſin, in Rom. 7. 5. as it is for the acting of the ſpirit, Phil. 2. 13. In whom he works as a Spirit, as powerfully according to his created ſtrength, as the Holy Ghoſt works in the Children of obedience: As the Spirit fills the Soul with Gracious habits to move freely in Gods ways, ſo Satan fills the Soul (as much as in him lies) with ſinful habits, as ſo many chains to keep it under his own dominion. He cannot indeed work immediately

diately upon the Will, but he uſes all the ſkill and power that he hath to keep men captive for the performance of his own pleaſure, 2 Tim. 2. 26. *who are taken captive by him at his will, or for his will; 'tis in that place a dreadful Judgment which God gives ſome men up to, for oppoſing the Goſpel, taking away his reſtraints, both from the Devil and their own hearts; but more or leſs he works in every one that oppoſeth the Goſpel, which every unrenewed man under the Preaching of the Goſpel doth: he is the ſtrong man that keeps the Palace, Luke 11. 21. Can the will of man make a ſurrender of it, at Gods demand, in ſpight of its Governor? What power have we to throw off theſe ſhackles he loads us with? We are as weak in his hand as Birds in a Fowlers; what will have we, ſince we are his willing ſlaves? The darkneſs of Nature is never like by its own free-motion to diſagree with the prince of darkneſs, without an over-powering Grace, able to conteſt with the Lord as well as the ſlave: for by the fall he is become Prince of the lower Creation, and holds it in Chains too ſtrong for weakneſs to break. How great then is mans inability! How unreaſonable is it to think, that the Will of man, poſſeſſed with ſuch unfitneſs, unwillingneſs, affection to other things, averſion to the Goſpel, reſiſtance of it, and in the Devils Net, can of it ſelf do any thing towards its recovery, from that it counts no Diſeaſe, or to turn to that which it accounts its burden? If unſpotted and ſound Nature did not preſerve Adam in innocency, how can filthy and crazy Nature recover us from corruption? If it did not keep him alive when he was living, how can it convey life to us when we have not a ſpark of Spiritual life in us? Man was planted a noble Vine, but turned himſelf into a degenerate plant: nothing that hath decayed, can by its own ſtrength recover it ſelf, becauſe it hath loſt that ſtrength whereby it could only preſerve it ſelf.

* Εις τὸ ἐκεί-νου θέλημα.

1. Firſt, Man cannot prepare himſelf for Grace.
2. He cannot produce it.
3. He cannot co-operate with God in the firſt work.
4. He cannot preſerve it.
5. He cannot actuate it.

1. Man cannot prepare himſelf for the New Birth.

I ſhall premiſe a few things, for the better underſtanding of this:

(1.) Man hath a ſubjective capacity for Grace, above any other Creature in the inferior World; and this is a kind of Natural preparation, which other Creatures have not. A capacity, in regard of the powers of the Soul, tho not in reſpect of the preſent diſpoſition of them. A Stone, or a Beaſt, are not capable of habits of Grace, no more than of habits of ſin, becauſe they want rational natures, which are the proper ſeats of both: our Saviour did not raiſe Trees or Stones to life, tho he had the ſame power to do that as he had to raiſe Stones to be Children to Abraham; but he raiſed them that had Bodies prepared, in part, for a receptacle of a Soul. As there is a more immediate ſubjective capacity in a man newly dead, for the reception of life upon a new infuſion of the Soul, becauſe he hath all the members already formed, which is not in one whoſe Body is mouldred into duſt, and hath not one member organized fit for the acting of a rational Soul. Theſe faculties have a ſpring of Natural motion in them, therefore are capable of Divine Grace to make that motion regular: As the Wheels of a Clock out of order retain their ſubſtance and their motion, if the Weights be wound up; but a falſe motion, unleſs the diſorder of the Spring be mended. Man hath an Underſtanding to know; and when it is enlightned, to know Gods Law; a Will to move and run, and when inlarged by Grace, to run the ways of Gods commandments; ſo that he ſtands in an immediate capacity to receive the life of Grace upon the breath and touch of God, which a Stone doth not, not the moſt ſparkling Jewel any more than the meaneſt Pebble; for in this it is neceſſary, rational faculties ſhould be put as a foundation of Spiritual motion. Tho the Soul be thus capable, as a ſubject to receive the Grace of God, yet it is not therefore capable, as an agent, to prepare it ſelf for it, or produce it. As a piece of Marble is potentially capable of being the Kings Statue, but not to prepare it ſelf by hewing off its ſuperfluous parts, or to raiſe it ſelf into ſuch a Figure. If there were not a rational Nature, there were nothing immediately to be wrought upon. If there be not a wiſe Agent, and an Omnipotent hand, there were nothing to work upon it.

(2.) Beſides this paſſive capacity, there are more immediate preparations. The Soul, as rational, is capable to receive the truths of God; but as the heart is Stony, it is uncapable to receive the impreſſions of thoſe truths. A Stone, as it is a corporeal ſubſtance, is capable to receive the drops of Rain in its cavities; but becauſe of its hardneſs is uncapable to ſuck it in, and be moiſtened inwardly thereby, unleſs it be ſoftned. Wax hath a capacity to receive the impreſſion of the Seal, but it muſt be made pliable by ſome external agent to that purpoſe. The Soul muſt be beaten down by conviction, before it be raiſed up by Regeneration; there muſt be ſome apprehenſions of the neceſſity of it. Yet ſometimes the work of Regeneration, follows ſo cloſe upon the heels of theſe precious preparations, that both muſt be acknowledged to be the work of one and the ſame hand. Paul on the ſudden was ſtruck down, and in a moment there is both an acknowledgment of the Authority of Chriſt, and a ſubmiſſion to his Will, when he ſaid, Lord what wilt thou have me to do? Acts 9. 6. The preparation of the ſubject is neceſſary, but this preparation may be at the ſame time, with the conveyance of the Divine Nature: As a warm Seal may both prepare the hard Wax, and convey the image to it, by one and the ſame touch.

(3.) Tho ſome things which man may do by common Grace, may be ſaid in ſome ſort to be preparations, yet they are not formally ſo, as that there is an abſolute cauſal connexion between ſuch preparations and Regeneration. They are not cauſæ diſpoſitivæ of Grace, not diſpoſing cauſes of Grace. Grace is all in a way of reception by the Soul, not of action from the Soul. The higheſt Morality in the world is not neceſſary to the firſt infuſion of the Divine Nature. Mary Magdalen was far from the one, yet received the other. If there were any thing in the ſubject that was the cauſe of it, the tendereſt and ſofteſt diſpoſitions would be wrought upon; and the moſt intelligent men would ſooneſt receive the Goſpel. Tho we ſee them ſometimes renewed, yet many times the roughest tempers are ſeized upon by Grace: and the moſt unlikely Soils for fructifying, God plants his Grace in, wherein there could be no preparations before. 'Tis not with Grace as it is with Fire, which gives as much heat to a Stone as to a piece of Wood; but the Wood is ſooner heated than the Stone, becauſe it is naturally diſpoſed by the ſoftneſs and porouſneſs of its parts to receive the heat. Moral Nature ſeems to be a preparation for Grace; if it be ſo, it is not a cauſe howſoever of Grace, for then the moſt Moral perſon would be ſooneſt gracious, and more eminently gracious after his renewal, and none of the rubbiſh and dregs of the World would ever be made fit for the Heavenly building. There ſeems to be a fitneſs in Morality for the receiving ſpecial Grace, becauſe the violence and tumultuouſneſs of ſin is in ſome meaſure appeaſed, the flame and ſparks of it allaied, and the body of Death lies more quiet in them, and the principles cheriſhed by them bear ſome teſtimony to the Holineſs of the Precepts. But tho it ſeems to ſet men at a greater nearneſs to the Kingdom of God, yet with all its own ſtrength it cannot bring the Kingdom of God into the Heart, unleſs the Spirit opens the Lock. Yea, ſometimes it ſets a man further from the Kingdom of God, as being a great Enemy to the Righteouſneſs of the Goſpel, both imputed and inherent, which is the crown of the Goſpel; to imputed, as ſtanding upon a righteouſneſs of their own, and conceiving no need of any other; to inherent, as acting their ſeeming holineſs neither upon Goſpel-principles, nor for Goſpel-ends, but in ſelf-reflections, and ſelf-applauſes. What may ſeem preparations to us, in matter of Moral life, may in the Root be much diſtant and vaſtly aſunder from Grace; As a * Divine of our own illuſtrates it: Two Mountains whoſe tops ſeem near together, may in the bottom be many Miles aſunder. The foundation of that which looks like a preparation, may be laid in the very gall of bitterneſs; as Simon Magus deſiring the Gift of the Holy Ghoſt, but from the covetouſneſs of his heart. Other operations upon the Soul which ſeem to be nearer preparations, as convictions, do not infer Grace; for the heart, as a Field, may be plowed by terrors, and yet not ſown by any good Seed. Planting and Watering are preparations, but not the cauſe of fruit, the increaſe depends upon God.

* Mr. Burges.

(4.) There is no meritorious connexion between any preparation in the Creature and Regeneration. *The Pelagian opinion was, That by a generous Love of Vertue, we might deserve the Grace of God, and the farther assistance of the Spirit; we first (say they) put our hearts into the hands of God, that God may encline them which way he please; and by thus making our Wills depend on God, we merit help from God, and make our selves worthy of him. Whether this be the Opinion of any now, I know not. This is to assert, That man gives first to God, and then God to man in way of requital. What Son can merit to be born? What desert before Being? Nothing can be preexistent in the Son which merits Generation by the Father. The fair hand of Moral Nature can no more induce God to confer on man the state of Grace, than the Deed of Conveyance of a Mannor, fairly drawn, can dispose the Lord to pass it away. In what part of Scripture hath God indulged meer Nature with any Promise of adding Grace upon the improvements of Natural abilities? Whatsoever conditional promise there is, supposeth some Grace superior to Nature in the subject, as the condition of it; we do not find that God hath made himself a Debtor to any preparation of the Creature.

But there is no Obligation on God, by any thing that may look like a preparation in man. For,

[1.] If man can lay any Obligation on God, it must be by some act in all parts his own, for which he is not in the least obliged to God. Thinking is the lowest step in the Ladder of preparation; 'tis the first act of the Creature in any rational production; yet this the Apostle doth remove from man, as in every part of it his own act, 2 Cor. 3. 5. Not that we are sufficient of our selves to think any thing as of our selves, but our sufficiency is of God. The word signifies reasoning; no rational act can be done without reasoning; this is not purely our own. We have no sufficiency of our selves, as of our selves, originally and radically of our selves, as if we were the Author of that sufficiency either naturally or meritoriously: And Calvin observes, that the word is not ἐνταξικα but ἱκανότης, not a self-ability, but an aptitude or fitness to any gracious thought. How can we oblige him by any act, since in every part of it, it is from him, not from our selves? For as thinking is the first requisite, so it is perpetually requisite to the progress of any rational act, so that every thought in any act, and the whole progress wherein there must be a whole flood of thoughts, is from the sufficiency of God. We cannot oblige God after Grace, much less before; for when Grace is given, there must be constant effluxes of Grace from God to maintain it; and the acts of Grace in us are but a second Grace of God. How can we then oblige him by that which is not ours, either in the original or improvement? If when a man hath given to another a rich gift, he must also give him power to preserve it, and wisdom to improve it, the person cannot be said by his improvement of it to oblige the first donor. What hath any man that he hath not received? 1 Cor. 4 7. The Apostle excludes every thing in us from the name of a donation to God: If there be no one thing but is received from God, then no preparation to Grace but is received from him. The obligation then lies upon the receiver, not upon the donor. But may we not oblige God by the improvement of such a Gift? The Apostle includes every thing, challengeth him to name any one thing which was not received; which will contain improvements as well as preparations: if we have power to improve it, wisdom to improve it, hearts and opportunities to improve it, all these are by way of reception from God.

[2.] If man can lay any Obligation upon God, it must be by some pure spotless act. This cannot be; no pure act can spring from man. God hath taken an exact survey of the whole World in its dark and fallen state, and could not among those multitudes of acts which spring from the Will of man, find one piece of beauty, one particle of the Divine Image; for he hath pronounced this Sentence upon them, with repetition too, as his infallible Judgment, There is none Righteous, no not one. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable, there is none that doth good, no not one, Rom. 3. 10, 11, 12. The most refined Nature derived from Adam, was never found without fault; a pure vertue is a terra incognita. The productions of Nature are always evil; if not one action be fully good in the Nature ture of man, what meritorioufneſs can there be in any preparation of Nature for the Grace of God? Can the cleareſt vertue that ever was ſince Adam, oblige God to pardon its own defects, that is, the defects of that very act of vertue? much leſs can it challenge a higher degree of Grace to be tranſmitted to it.

[3.] If any preparation were our own, and were pure; yet being Natural, how could it oblige God to give a ſupernatural Grace? If there be any thing of meritorioufneſs, it is only ſomething of the ſame kind with the work in a greater degree: but there is no proportion between Natural acts, and Supernatural Grace. There is no one Scripture, or one example, declaring Grace to be given as a reward to meer Nature, or any act of Nature. God indeed out of his infinite Righteouſneſs, and Equity, and Goodneſs, hath rewarded ſome Moral acts with ſome Worldly advantages, or the withdrawing ſome Judgments threatned, as Ahab's reprieve from Judgment upon his humiliation, 1 King. 21. 27, 29. and the temporary Pardon to Niniveh, upon their ſubmiſſion to the Prophets threatnings, Jonah 3. 8, 9, 10. But what Obligation lies upon God to reward men doing thus with ſuperadditions of Grace? for there is no proportion between ſuch a Moral act, and ſo excellent a reward. We may as well ſay, that a Coal by glowing and ſparkling may merit to become a Star: or that the orderly laying the Wood and Sacrifice upon the Altar might merit the deſcent of Fire from Heaven to kindle it.

[4.] If there were any Obligation on God, by any preparations of Nature, then ſuch acts would be always followed with renewing Grace. There would be an Obligation on Gods Righteouſneſs to beſtow it; And if it ſhould be denied, the Creature might accuſe God of a failure in Juſtice, becauſe he gave not what was due. God ſure would obſerve that Rule of Juſtice which he preſcribes to man, not to detain the wages of a Hireling, no not for a night. Were Grace a Debt upon the Works of Nature, God were then Obliged not only to pay it, but to pay it ſpeedily, it being exact Righteouſneſs ſo to do. But we ſee the contrary. Publicans and Harlots are raiſed and beautified, while Phariſees lie buried in the ruins of Nature. Theſe preparations are many times without perfection. The pangs of conviction reſolve ſometimes into a return to the old vomit, and make no progreſs in a ſtate of Life and Grace. The Apoſtles rule will hold true in the whole compaſs of the work, Rom. 6. 11. If it be of works, then it is no more Grace. So much as is aſcribed to any work or preparation by the Creature, ſo much is taken from the Glory of Grace: and would make God not the Author, but aſſiſtant, and that too by Obligation, not by Grace.

[5.] From this it follows, That man doth not prepare himſelf by any act of his Will, without the Grace of God. What preparation can he make, who is ſo powerfully poſſeſt by corrupted habits, which have got ſo great an Empire over him, ſtruck their Roots to the very bottom of his Soul, entrenched themſelves in the works of cuſtom, that if he goes about to pull up one, his Arm ſhakes, and his Heart faints? How ſtrongly do theſe rooted habits reſiſt the power of Grace? How much more eaſily do they reſiſt the weakneſs of Nature in confederacy with them? What is ſaid of the remnant of Jacob, as a Dew from the Lord, as the Showers upon the Graſs, that it tarrieth not for man, nor waits for the ſons of men, Micah 5. 7. may be ſaid of the Grace of God, It waits not for the preparations and diſpoſitions of the Creature, but prevents them. 'Tis a pure Gift: tho we are active with it, yet we are wholly indiſpoſed for it. We can no more prepare our ſelves to ſhine as Stars in the World, than a dunghil can to ſhine as a Sun in Heaven. What preparations doth God wait for in the heart of an Infant when he Sanctifies it? If without Chriſt we can do nothing, John 15. 5. then no preparations without Chriſt; for they are ſomething, and very conſiderable too. There is no foundation to think there ſhould be any preparation in the Creature as of the Creature.

[1.] The firſt promiſe of Redemption and Regeneration, intimates no ſuch thing in man to either of them, Gen. 3. 15. I will put enmity, &c. the putting enmity into man againſt Satan is promiſed by God as his own Work; there was a friendſhip ſtruck up, a confederacy made, the Devil entertained as a counſellor; God would now break this League, he only puts enmity into the heart againſt Satan: It ſhall bruiſe thy head, &c. the bruiſing the Serpents head is wholly the act of Chriſt:

Chriſt: It, not the Man or the Woman, but the promiſed ſeed. As there were no preparations in the Creature to that which Chriſt acted in the fleſh; ſo there are no preparations in that Creature for what Chriſt is to do in his Spirit. He bruiſed Satan in his fleſh upon the Croſs without any preparations in the Creature; and ſo he bruiſeth Satan in the heart, by his Spirit, without any preparations on the Creatures part. For any thing I ſee, had man in the ſtate of Innocency been ſenſible that his dependency as to any good, and motion to good, ought to be upon God, and he to have waited upon God for his change, and confirmation, he might have ſtood: but when he would practically aſſert the liberty of his own will in a way of indifferency to good and evil, he fell. And by the way, thoſe that aſſert the freedom of their own Will Naturally, without the Grace of God, either common or ſpecial, ſeem to me to juſtify Adam's firſt affected independency of God.

[2.] God is as much in the New Creation, as he was in the Old. Not only the Creation of the matter, but the preparation of it to receive the form, was from God; neither the matter, nor any part of it, prepared it ſelf. If nothing prepared it ſelf to be a Creature, how can any thing prepare it ſelf to be a gracious Creature, ſince to be a New Creature is more than to be a Creature; and every preparation to be a New Creature, is more than any preparation to be a Creature. The New Creation differs, I muſt confeſs, from the Old Creation; but it is ſuch a difference which makes it rather harder than eaſier.

1. The Object of the Old Creation was nothing; the Object of the New is ſomething, but a thing that hath no more active diſpoſition to receive a New form, than nothing had.* * Daille.

2. The Object of the firſt Creation, was a ſimple and pure privation: the Object of the ſecond, is a contrary form, which reſiſts the work of God: there was only an action of Creation in the firſt; there is an action of deſtruction in the ſecond; the deſtruction of the Old form, and the Creation of a New: Is it likely that any Nature would voluntarily prepare it ſelf for its own deſtruction? God in the firſt creation found no diſpoſition in the ſubject to entertain a form; here he finds a contrary diſpoſition to reſiſt the form.

3. What preparation had any of thoſe we read of in Scripture from themſelves? What diſpoſition had Paul, when he was ſtruck down with a heart fuller of actual enmity than he had at his birth? Did the Apoſtles expect any call from their Nets, or ſet themſelves in a readineſs before they heard that call? A voice from Chriſt was attended with a Divine touch or power upon their hearts; both the preparation and the motion it ſelf took birth together. And what preparations are there in Scripture, but are attributed unto God? If a conviction be through and full, and conſequently a preparation, it muſt refer to that Spirit which our Saviour aſſerts to be the principal cauſe of it, John 16. 8, 9. When he is come, that is, the Comforter, he will reprove the world of ſin. 'Tis is laid wholly upon this, as the end of the Almighty Spirits coming, whereby it is not likely men would be convinced without him. Is there any deſire or prayer for it? Even this, if true, is from the Holy Ghoſt; no man can call Chriſt Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Cor. 12. 3. Did any of thoſe our Saviour cured of Bodily infirmities, prepare themſelves for that cure? Neither can any man prepare himſelf for his Spiritual cure.

[4.] What thing in all the Records of Nature ever prepared it ſelf for a change? All preparations in matter for receiving any form, ariſe not from the matter it ſelf, but from ſome other active principle, or the New form in part introduced, which by degrees expels the Old; as in Water, when heat comes in the place of cold, the preparation is not from the Water, but from the New quality introducing it ſelf: the grace of God is to the Soul, as form is to matter. The Body is formed in the Womb, for the reception of the Soul, but not by the Embryo, but by the formative vertue of the Parent, faſhioning the parts of the Body to make it a fit lodging for the Soul; or as ſome think, the Soul it ſelf, as the Bee, faſhions its own Cell; but howſoever it is not from it ſelf. The preparations of Lazarus to riſe, were from the voice of Chriſt, not from the ſtinking Body of Lazarus. The Nature of all is alike. That one Lute is better prepared for an harmonious touch; touch, is from the Muſicians skill, not any art of its own. If one man of the ſame Nature with another be endued with rich Morals, 'tis from the common Grace of God exciting Natural Light, and the common notions of fit and juſt: As the Reaſon one Vine of the ſame kind brings forth more generous fruit than another, is from the ſtronger influence of the Sun. All Nature aſſents to this truth, that nothing doth prepare it ſelf for a change.

[5.] If man did prepare himſelf for Grace, it would be a diſparagement to God, it would violate the Soveraignty of God. It would be derogatory to the Majeſty of God, to have his Grace depend upon the conditions and previous preparations in the Creature; It would lay the foundations of Grace in a mans ſelf, and impoſe a neceſſity in God to come in with further Grace, and make his actions dependent upon the actings of the Creature. The beginning of Faith would be from us, and the ſupplement from God; the work of Grace would be of him that wills and runs, and not of God that ſhews mercy, Rom. 9. 16. It would change the whole tenor of the Scripture, and make converſion not Gods drawing of us, but our traction of God: for he that doth diſpoſe himſelf to Grace, is in ſome ſort the cauſe of that Grace; as he that doth diſpoſe the ſubject for ſuch a form, is in a ſort the cauſe of that form. If the preparations were from the will of man, man would begin the nobleſt work that ever was wrought, and God would be made no more than an attendant upon the Creatures motion: whereas the very beginning in the will, as well as the perfection, is aſcribed to God, Phil. 2. 13. God works in you both to will and to do of his good pleaſure. Gods good pleaſure is the Original cauſe of this work upon the Will; not the Wills good pleaſure. The work then depending on Gods good pleaſure, excludes any dependency on the will of man: 'tis therefore called a Creation, to ſhew Gods independence upon any thing as to this work.

[6.] Where ſhould this preparation begin? in what part of the Soul? Shall it begin in the * Underſtanding? That hath loſt the reins whereby it governed the lower parts of the Soul. Nothing is more diſcompoſed in its acts than that faculty. * 'Tis well compared to a Charioteer or Coachman fallen from his Box, and his Feet entangled in the reins of the Horſes, which hurry him about: the ſenſitive appetite, like a wild Horſe, hath got the Bit between his Teeth, runs about, and draws the Underſtanding after it. Indeed a Charioteer, that hath loſt the government of his Horſes, endeavours to remedy that violence, he cries out, makes all reſiſtance, hath a will to help himſelf. But the Underſtanding is ſo far from reſiſting, that it takes pleaſure in the diſorder of the paſſions, it prompts the Will to follow them, and this is properly to be a ſervant to ſin. Shall it begin in the Appetite? How can that encline to range it ſelf to the order of Reaſon? It hath no reaſon it ſelf, it ſubmits not to the Laws of Reaſon, it hath got the maſtery of it, and hath preſcription for its dominion, of a long ſtanding, ever ſince the fall. The dominion of ſin is in the Underſtanding, Will, Appetite, whence all of them are called Fleſh; ſo that all the motions of the Soul depending upon them, the ſlavery muſt needs be voluntary. Therefore neither the Underſtanding conceives, nor the Will wills, nor the Appetite deſires any thing againſt themſelves: how then ſhould the Will, which is captivated by a corrupt Underſtanding and diſorderly Affections, recover it ſelf, when it muſt neceſſarily be under the guidance of one of theſe Jaylors? Suppoſe the Underſtanding were illuminated, are thoſe evil habits in the Will corrected barely by the illumination of the Underſtanding? If they are corrected, why doth not the Will alway follow the dictate of the Underſtanding? But, alas! thoſe evil habits determine the Will to evil, as good habits determine it to good: for it is the Nature of habits to encline the faculties to thoſe things which are ſuitable to the Nature of thoſe habits: therefore as long as it remains under the command of thoſe evil inclinations, it is impoſſible it ſhould paſs from evil to good: But that the Will hath evil inclinations, appears by the Scripture calling the whole Man Fleſh. Elſe Corruption would not be univerſally ſeated in the Soul, but only accidental in the Will, from the darkneſs of the Underſtanding. But certainly as Adam in innocy had an habitual holy diſpoſition in his Will: ſo man in his fall hath a corrupt inclination in his Will, an habitual quality, whereby he drinks iniquity like water, Job 15. 16. What power of the Will can take thoſe cords off which hold it Priſoner, whereby it muſt be prepared for a free motion?

To evidence this further, we ſhall conſider,

1. That man doth not naturally, neither can underſtand the new birth.

2. He cannot deſire it. Underſtanding and Deſire, are neceſſary preparations to any rational change a Creature can make in it ſelf.

[1.] Man cannot underſtand it. This is neceſſary to a change. Whatſoever is done by the Will, muſt be done by the impulſe of ſome other Faculty. Senſitive Appetite cannot inſtruct the Will to this Work. Senſe is not capable of Reaſon, much leſs of Religion, tho it be the portal to both. The Will can never be moved to any good thing, unleſs the mind propound it as good and amiable. The act of thinking muſt precede the act of believing; for we cannot believe without thinking of what we believe. 'Tis leſs to think than underſtand: If we cannot then do that which is leſs in the preparation, we cannot do that which is greater, eſpecially when it is impoſſible to will without thinking; and thinking is a neceſſary means to willing. He that cannot prepare himſelf for a good thought, how can he prepare himſelf for a gracious habit? What ability have we to any act of Faith, when we have no ability to any thought of Faith? We cannot by the ſtrength of Nature underſtand it, if we conſider,

(1.) The firſt blot cauſed by ſin, was upon the Underſtanding. Man was firſt deceived by the ſophiſtical Reaſonings of the Serpent: The firſt effect of ſin, was to ſpread a thick darkneſs upon Adam's Underſtanding: Tho the whole houſe, and every beam of it, fell together, yet this Faculty was firſt unfaſtened, and brought all the reſt to ruine. As ſoon as ever he ceaſed from glorifying God as God, a darkneſs was brought upon his fooliſh heart, Rom. 1. 21. When they knew God, they glorified him not as God, but became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkned: Where the Apoſtle deſcribes the ſtate of man in corrupt Nature, after his Fall. Folly firſt in the heart to deſire the Forbidden Fruit, and then darkneſs came upon the Underſtanding. Their διαλογισμοὶ, their Reaſonings became empty, and contradictory; their primitive light departed, and darkneſs, as a privation, took place. What true motion can there be in the Will, when there was ſo thick an obſcurity in the Underſtanding? Where there is but a falſe knowledg in the Mind, there can be no true motion in the Will. There muſt then be a reſtoration of this light, before there can be any preparation to a good act of the Will. Adam recovered not this light by his own ſtrength, no, nor by the outward declaration of the Goſpel in the Promiſe: for no outward Object propoſed to the Underſtanding, confers any power upon the Faculty. How can it then be recovered by our ſtrength, ſince we have rather added to the Scales than diminiſht them? For,

(2.) There is a darkneſs tranſmitted from him, to the underſtanding of every man by Nature. The light is darkned in the Heaven of the ſoul, the more ſpiritual part of the mind, Iſa. 5. 30. as the Prophet ſpeaks in another caſe. Our Underſtandings are ſo cloſed up with the thick ſlime of ſin, that we cannot ſee the beauty of Goſpel-Truths. Darkneſs comprehends not the light, John 1. 5. Tho the light of the Sun did ſhine a Thouſand times brighter than it doth, and ſtrike upon the face and eye lids of a man, with the greateſt glory, yet if there be a ſpot upon the Apple of his Eye, if he wants a ſeeing Faculty, he can apprehend nothing of it. Hence the Apoſtle prays for the illumination of the Underſtanding of the Epheſians, Eph. 1. 17, 18. and that they might have a ſpirit of wiſdom, and revelation in the knowledg of God. And our Saviour tells them, that they muſt be taught of God, John 6. 45. by an internal teaching of the Spirit, as well as by himſelf in an oral inſtruction. What a thick cloud was upon Nicodemus his mind, when he diſcourſed with him about Regeneration, who was the ableſt Teacher to illuſtrate it to his Fancy and Underſtanding? 'Tis not ſuch a darkneſs, as if he might underſtand the myſteries of Heaven, if he would exert the ſtrength of his own Reaſon. This would be only as a man ſhuttting his Eyes, who had had a viſive Faculty; but it is ſuch a darkneſs as cannot be expelled by fleſh and blood, or any thing ariſing from it: Fleſh and blood (ſaith our Saviour to Peter) hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in Heaven, Mat. 16. 17. Fleſh and blood includes every thing in oppoſition to God. Our Saviour had externally owned himſelf in the face of the Jews, to be the Meſſiah, the Son of God: but beſides this, there was an inward illumination granted to Peter, for the apprehending and embracing ſo great a Truth. There is not only a darkneſs upon the minds of thoſe who have no outward revelation of the Will of God in Chriſt, but upon thoſe who are in the midſt of the Sun-beams, Deut. 29. Yet the Lord hath not given you an heart to perceive, and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear, unto this day. They wanted not the Beams: No People in the World had the Ordinances of God beſides them: but they wanted an Organ fitted to receive and uſe them, which was not in their power, but is mentioned as the gift of God. God promiſes to make his People to know his ways. What needs that, if they could know them without him? We have indeed the light of the Goſpel; we have alſo a Faculty; but without an Eye diſpoſed for the light, we enjoy no benefit by it. Now who ever heard that darkneſs could prepare it ſelf for its own expulſion? It cannot comprehend the light, much leſs prepare for the reception of it: Who ever heard of one born blind, in a capacity to prepare himſelf for ſight? We are blind in Naturals, much more in Spirituals. The moſt poliſhed Reaſons among the Heathens, both for knowledg in Naturals, and prudence in civil Affairs, doated, and with all their Wiſdom knew not God.

(3.) There is an unſuitableneſs, and a contrariety in the mind of man to the Goſpel, which is the inſtrument of Regeneration. There is a mighty diſtance between the Spiritual Object, and the Natural Faculty. The Underſtanding, tho never ſo well furniſht with natural ſtuff, is but natural, and fleſh: the Object is ſupernatural and ſpiritual: therefore the richeſt meer Nature can no more attain to the knowledg of ſpiritual things, than the cleareſt ſenſe can attain to the knowledg of rational. Tho every man by nature hath the things contained in the law, Rom. 2. 14, 15. yet no man hath by Nature the things contained in the Goſpel. The Goſpel hath not the ſame advantage in the hearts of men as the Law hath; for it finds nothing of kin to it. Tho a natural heart hath ſome broken pieces of the Law of God depoſited in it, yet there is not the leaſt ſyllable of Chriſt, or Regeneration, writ in the mind by the hand of Nature. The Underſtanding therefore naturally cannot prepare it ſelf for the reception of the Goſpel, becauſe it hath not any principle in it which ſuits the Doctrine of it. It ſeems a ridiculous thing to the wiſeſt Carnaliſt, who receives not the things of God, becauſe out of the pride of natural wiſdom he counts them fooliſhneſs, 1 Cor. 2. 14. Hence not many wiſe are renewed in their minds. Had the Goſpel-Truth been as agreeable to Reaſon, as the other common Notions imprinted in man, it would have been preſerved in the World longer than it was; ſince, without queſtion, Adam did communicate to his Poſterity, the Notion of a Redeemer, which did ſoon die among them, becauſe not conſonant to that Reaſon they had derived by Nature from Adam. It was a knowledg given to Adam by Revelation, not imprinted in his Nature by Creation. Beſides, there is a contrariety in the mind to the Truth of the Goſpel. As we ſay of Liberty, ſo of Enmity, Tho it be formally in the Will, yet it is radically in the Underſtanding: The mind is the ſeat of thoſe Hoſtile Principles which act the will againſt God, Rom. 8. 7. The mind of man regards the things of God as unpleaſant, and an intollerable Yoke, and hard Bridle. Let Light, the moſt excellent thing in the World, glare upon a man that hath ſore eyes, he will turn away from it, or ſhut his eyes againſt it; For tho he underſtands the worth of it, yet it hath a quality offenſive to him: So is the Goſpel to thoſe Notions ſetled in the diſtempered mind. Men give not credit to the Declarations of the Goſpel: Who hath believed our report? hath been the the Voice of God's Meſſengers in all Ages, Iſa. 53. 1. No man, unleſs known by all never to ſpeak truth, but is more believed than the God of infallible and unerring truth. What Principles ciples then are there in the Underſtanding, to prepare it for the reception of that which is ſo contrary to its ancient inmates?

(5.) Hence it follows, that a natural mind hath no right notion of Grace. To the right Notion of a thing is required ſuitableneſs, pleaſure, and a fixedneſs of the mind upon it. A natural mind wants all theſe. How can it then prepare it ſelf for that which it hath no knowledg of? And without knowledg it cannot commend it to the Will. The Apoſtle aſſerts a plain cannot in this buſineſs, 1 Cor. 2. 14. He cannot know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned. Being deſtitute of the Spirit, they cannot diſcern the things of the Spirit. Senſe can diſcern things ſenſibly, not rationally: Reaſon can diſcern things rationally, but not ſpiritually. The light whereby a natural man judges of the things of the Goſpel, is a Star light, or a Moonlight, which gives not a diſtinct View of the Object. The evil diſpoſition muſt be removed from the mind, before the Object be entertained according to its worth. As if any natural Object have ſuch excellent qualities in it, that if it be embraced, it will draw the Will and Affections after it; yet if the mind be ill-diſpoſed, and doth not judg of the Object according to the merit of it, it will refuſe it: Offer a man Gold, who underſtands not the worth of Gold, it will not allure him. Man with his Eyes, is ſpiritually blind, and with his Ears is ſpiritually deaf. So God calls the Gentiles, which were to be brought to Chriſt for a reſtitution of their Eyes, Iſa. 43. 8. Bring forth the blind people that have eyes, and the deaf that have ears. Such can no more judg of the excellency of ſpiritual things, than a blind man can have regular conceptions of Colours, or a deaf man of the excellency of Muſick. If no man can call Jeſus Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Cor. 12. 3. If no man can have a magnificent conception, and ſpeech of Chriſt, but by the Spirit, giving him both that conception, and utterance, he cannot have a Notion of the formation of Chriſt in the heart, without the gift and impreſſion of the ſame hand. What preparations then can ariſe from Nature, when the mind can have no conception of Chriſt, but by the Spirit of God?

Well then, to conclude this: What preparations can there be in Nature, ſince we cannot underſtand the things of God, when yet we have more clearneſs in our Underſtanding to ſee them, than we have force in our Wills to love them and embrace them? 'Tis in the Underſtanding, that the common Notions; which are the grounds of knowledg, are depoſited. There is leſs of Ignorance in our Underſtanding, than of Enmity in our Will: The Eye can ſee further than the Arm can reach. If therefore we cannot think, or underſtand, by all that help of common Notions, without the Grace of God, how can we then prepare our Wills for it, to comply with it, and renew that Faculty which is chiefly poſſeſſed with a contrariery to it?

(2.) As we cannot underſtand it, ſo we cannot naturally deſire it. What is not ſpiritually diſcerned, cannot ſpiritually be deſired: Not but that according to thoſe unformed conceptions which men have of it by common Grace, there may be ſome weak Velleities; but they are wiſhings without a will, not deſires according to the value of the thing. Mercy firſt breathed on our firſt Parents, before they breathed after that. The firſt motion came from God. So ſoon were they turned obſtinate Enemies againſt their Creator, without any thoughts of turning ſuppliants, tho they had not loſt the conceptions of their late integrity; which if they had, they had been wholly inſenſible, without any trouble of Conſcience. What deſires can we naturally then have for it, who have far weaker conceptions of that happineſs, than they had immediately after they loſt it? We cannot deſire what we do not apprehend: A Beaſt cannot deſire to be a Man, becauſe he hath no conceptions of the excellency of the Humane Nature above his own. No Nature can ever affect that which is contrary to it: No fleſh can ever deſire its own crucifixion. If we ſeek we ſhall find, if we ask we ſhall receive; but who firſt toucheth the heart to ſeek or to ask? If we cannot think a good thought of our ſelves, how can we think ſo good a thought as a deſire of Regeneration? To ſay then we can deſire the New Creation of our ſelves, without ſome kind of Grace, is to aſſert another Doctrine than what the Apoſtle Paul aſſerted to thoſe already regenerate. The firſt Will, which is the neceſſary ſpring of all actions, is wrought by God, Phil. 2. 13. The frame of man's will and deſire, ſtands to another point, John 8. 44. The luſts of your father you will do. The beſt renewed man knows not what to pray for as he ought, without the inſtruction of the Spirit, Rom. 8. 26. We cannot give our hearts a lift to Heaven, or breathe out an unutterable Groan, without the help of an infinite Spirit. The root of man's Affections grows downward, not upward. What breathings can be expected in a ſoul choaked up with ſin? There was no motion of the Church, till the hand of her beloved was put in by the hole of the door, and made a motion in her bowels, Cant. 5. 4. The Church owed no obligation to her free will, and her own prediſpoſitions. There's not a ſmoke in the heart to Heaven, without a ſpark firſt from Heaven: not a ſtep, till God enlargeth the heart: Velleities are from common Grace, under the Preaching of the Word: Fervent and ſaving deſires are from ſpecial Grace, by the hand of the Spirit. So that there are no preparations from Nature to this, ſince both our apprehenſions of it, and deſires for it, ſpring not out of that Stock.

The Second main thing is this, As man cannot prepare himſelf for it, ſo he doth not produce, and work it in himſelf. This is evident from the former: If he cannot make any preparation which is the leſs, he cannot cauſe any actual production of it, which is the greater.

But to evidence it more, let us ſpend ſome time in this.

As it doth not depend upon the Will of man in the preparation, ſo neither in the production.

1. I ſhall evidence it, firſt by Arguments drawn from the conſideration of God.

If this work depended upon the will of man, as the firſt cauſe in the production, it would deprive God,

1. Of his Soveraign Independency. If man's Will were the firſt cauſe of Regeneration, God would not be the ſupreme independent cauſe in the nobleſt of his Works. This Work is nobler than Creation, in reſpect of the price paid for it. The World was made without the death of any thing to purchaſe the Creation of it. But the Divine Image is not reſtored without the Death of the Son of God; every line in this New Image being drawn with his Blood. Is there any thing happens in the World, but by the conduct and efficacy of his Providence? Do all the motions of the Heavens, the productions of Creatures, the univerſal events of Nature, depend upon the Will, Power, and Wiſdom of God? And ſhall the ſoul, the moſt excellent of the lower lower Creatures, bearing the characters of God's Wisdom and Goodness upon it (the acts of the soul in the way of Religion, being the noblest acts it can produce), be left wholly to it self in the production and management of these? Shall God, the supreme cause in every thing else, be an inferior, and secondary cause in this Affair? 'Tis not he that plants, nor he that waters, but God that gives the increase *. God is the first cause upon whom man depends in all kind of actions, much more in supernatural actions, chiefly in the Understanding and Will; upon which Faculties no creature can have any intrinsick influence, to cause them to exercise their vital acts. If the will of man were the first cause, God would be an attendant to the Creature in the noblest Works. God would not then be the first mover, but Man. The Will willing, would then be the cause of God's working; not God's working, the cause of the Will's willing and choice. Gods working would be consequent upon the Will; and so the effect of the Will's free motion. Man would then be the dispositiva causa, in relation to God. It would make God the second cause, and represent him expecting the Beck, and the preparations of man, before he did exert any act. It would make God to will that which Man wills, and make God to will that which man may reject. It would follow, that God concurs not to Regeneration by way of Soveraignty, but by way of concomitancy: It would not be a victorious, but a precarious Grace, which is against the whole tenor of the Scripture, which represents God, as holding in his hands the first links of all Second Causes, Rom. 11. 36. For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things. He is the first Governour of all the Wills and Powers of the Creatures; the first cause of all motions: he orders all, without being ordered by any. Now this is below the Majesty of God, to be conducted in his motion by the Will of the Creature; to have the purposes of his goodness brought into act, by an uncertain and slippery cause. How can it be conceived, that God should put his hand to the more ignoble Works of Nature, and turn over the noblest Work of the New Creation, to the Airy Will of the Creature.

To conclude: God must either be precedent in his Operation to the act of the Will, or follow it: If precedent, we have what we would: if subsequent, then God is a meer attendant upon the motions of the Creature, and a servant to wait upon man. This is to advance free will to the Throne of God, and depress God to the Footstool of will: This is to deify the Creature, by placing the Crown of the soveraign independency of God on the head of free will.

2. It puts a blot upon the wisdom of God. If God expects the determination of the Will of man, whether he shall act, or no, then God is disposed by the Will of man, to the intention of his end: But it is very inconsistent with that unfathomable, and unerring Wisdom, to have the attainment of his end depend upon an Agent wherein nothing is wrapt up but folly and madness, Eccles. 9. 3. This is to make his power depend upon weakness, and his gracious ends towards his Creature, hang upon the extravagancies of one distracted, which no wise man would be guilty of. Is God in all things else, a God of Power and Wisdom, working all things in Number, Weight, and Measure, springing up every motion in the lower World, by an unblamable Counsel? And shall he leave the forming of the image of his Son, wherein his Wisdom is most seen, to the slight irregular Will of man, which hath neither Weight, nor Measure in it self? This would make the immutable counsel of God, depend upon the mutability of the Creature, which would be inconsistent with the wisdom of man, who chuseth the firmest means he can, for the conduct of his designs: For if man wills this day, then God wills; if man reject it the next day, then he rejects that which God wills: So God's Will must be at uncertainty, according to the Will of man. How shall his counsel stand upon so tottering a bottom? How shall he do all his pleasure, if it were a meer dependant upon the pleasure of the Creature, contrary to what he is pleased positively to assert, Isa. 46. 10. My counsel shall stand, I will do all my pleasure. The Apostle doth couch these Two Arguments together, Eph. 1. 11. Who works all things according to the counsel of his own will: he argues first, from the power of God, who works works all things; whereby our own works, and power, are excluded, and God aſſerted to be the ſupreme cauſe of every thing, in an efficacious and energetical manner, as the word ἐνεργῶν ſignifies. (2.) From his Wiſdom; according to the counſel of his own will, wiſely and juſtly; and therefore not according to ours, wherein there is nothing but folly and evil. This excludes all our own Wills in the firſt Work. Now to aſſert, that this beautiful Image were brought forth upon the ſtage of the heart, by the will of man, as the firſt cauſe, would deſtroy God's Prerogative, and repreſent his Operations under the conduct of our counſel and will, not of his own. Certainly if there be a ſecret and wiſe Spirit of Providence, running through the whole World, to preſerve his Honour in his Works, as certainly there is; the moſt honourable declaration of them in the heart, cannot be thought to be left to the conduct of wild and hair-braind Nature.

3. If the Will of man were the prime cauſe of Regeneration, it would deprive God of his fore-knowledg, and preſcience: It would make that fore-knowledg which is certain, and infallible, meerly contingent: For if the Will of man were wholly left to its own determination, the motions of the Will were doubtful and uncertain, till the Will doth determine it ſelf; and ſo God's knowledg of them would be uncertain: for it is clear, that from a thing wholly uncertain, there cannot ariſe a certain knowledg. Therefore God could not be ſaid certainly to fore-know the converſion of man, if the efficacy of Grace depended upon ſo contingent a cauſe, as the liberty of man's Will; for then it might not be, as well as be; the Will might not embrace it, and ſo the knowledg of God be but meerly conjectural; a knowledg unworthy of a Deity, which muſt be ſuppoſed to be omniſcient; a knowledg depending upon a peradventure; or at beſt, 'tis but a very likely it will be ſo. This would be a debaſing the Deity to an opinionative knowledg, which could not be certain, becauſe depending upon ſo indetermined, and wavering a cauſe. * God cannot know this, or that man's Regeneration from eternity certainly, but he muſt ſee it infallibly in himſelf willing it, or in the cauſes of it, irreſiſtibly producing it. But if the efficacy of Grace depends upon the Will, then God doth not certainly determine the Regeneration of man: And for God to foreknow that which he himſelf hath not determined, and when nothing in the Creature, nor any thing in the circumſtances doth determine it, is to make God ſee that (as one ſaith) which neither in the creature, nor in himſelf, is to be ſeen.

* Ball of the Covenant, p. 341, 342.

Obj. Some may object, How doth God come to foreknow ſin, for that depends upon the liberty of the Will?

Anſ. It would be too long to enquire into this; I ſhall only at preſent ſay this: 'Tis certain God doth foreſee every ſin; otherwiſe the evil acts of men could not be predicted. Our Saviour could not then have foreknown what the Scribes and Prieſts would do to him, as he doth foretell, Mat. 16. 21. Chriſt began to tell them how many things he was to ſuffer of the chief Prieſts and Scribes. And ſince God cannot fail in his predictions, but they will certainly come to paſs, the hearts of the Jews could do no other thing, ſuppoſing the prediction, than what Chriſt doth here foretell; for their wicked Wills would certainly determine themſelves that way. And God by a concurrence of cauſes which he had linkt together in his hand, orders things ſo, that meeting with the corruption in their Wills, their Wills determine themſelves to ſuch actions there foretold: Yet is not God therefore the Author of ſin. For ſin being no poſitive thing, cannot have an efficient, but a deficient cauſe: And God determines the withdrawing of his common Grace, and the ordering of ſuch and ſuch circumſtances; and ſo did foreſee how a free Creature, with that corruption in his heart, would determine himſelf in ſuch occaſions, when involved in ſuch circumſtances. But now in the work of Regeneration, outward circumſtances cannot cauſe any determination of the Will, becauſe thoſe outward circumſtances of Grace, meet with nothing in the heart full of corruption, to take part with them, which outward circumſtances of ſin do. Therefore ſince there can be no foreſight of God in this caſe, depending pending upon the concurrence of outward circumſtances, unleſs there were ſomething in the heart which did ſuit them, the determination of the will cannot proceed from them, but from God himſelf, willing and determining the will by a poſitive influx of his grace. The determination of the will to ſin, comes from within, from its Natural corruption concurring with ſuch occaſions, which joyning together determine the will to it. Therefore God foreſees what a free Creature will do: but there being no principle in the will by Nature to correſpond with any gracious external circumſtances, it cannot determine it ſelf to grace, becauſe it wants a principle of determination within it ſelf, the corrupt habits determining it quite otherwiſe: ſin proceeds not ſo much from the liberty as the captivity of the will: and God knowing the corrupt frame, can foreſee what man in ſuch a frame will do upon occaſion: As we may eaſily reſolve that an habitual drunkard will be drunk, when he hath ſenſual Objects placed before him.

4. Another conſideration is this: To make the will of Man the Efficient of his Regeneration, is to make the truth of God a great uncertainty.

(1.) Firſt in the Covenant he made with Chriſt. If his having a ſeed depended upon the will of man, the promiſe of God to give him a ſeed might be null and void: for at leaſt it muſt be granted poſſible, that not one man under Heaven would have accepted of his terms; and then his coming to ſave had been in vain, becauſe there was a poſſibility, that not one man would have embraced the Salvation offered. Since the number of rejecters of him is greater than the number of receivers, 'tis likely the leſs number, if left to their own wills, would have followed the greater, ſince the prevalency of evil examples above good ones, is every day evident; It had not been then, the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand, Iſa. 53. 10, 11. but the pleaſure of man ſhall proſper in the hand of the will of man. The great reſolve of God, the Prieſthood of Chriſt, the deſign of drawing a Generation of perſons out of the world to praiſe him, had hung upon a meer hap-hazard, and a may-be, if it had depended only on mans will: And God ſhould have waited the leaſure of free-will, to ſee whether the moſt glorious deſign that ever was laid, ſhould proſper; and whether he ſhould have been a God of truth, or a liar to his Son. Tho our Saviour had laid the foundation of our Redemption in his own moſt precious blood, yet he muſt have depended on our will for the fruits of his purchaſe; it had been a great uncertainty, whether he had ſeen one grain of fruit for all his expence: he might have been a King without one ſubject, or the deſtruction of one Potent Enemy he came to conquer, not one ſin ſubdued, not one Devil caſt out of any Soul, this might have been; for tho by God he was made a King, yet according to the other aſſertion, it depended on the will of man, whether he ſhould have one ſubject to own his Authority: and if ſo, God had been very unwiſe to enter into Covenant with him; and Chriſt very unwiſe, to come upon ſuch grand uncertainties at the beſt, when it was a queſtion whether any one perſon ſhould have enjoyed the fruits of his death. How can it enter into any mans heart, that ſo great a contrivance as the ſending of Chriſt to be the means of Salvation, with ſuch great Promiſes to ſee the fruits of his death in a ſeed to ſerve him, ſhould depend in the main fruits and effects of it on any thing undetermined by the will of God; that ſo great a weight ſhould hang upon ſo thin a thread as the will of man?

(2.) In the promiſes he makes to men. How could God promiſe that ſo abſolutely as he doth, Ezek. 36. 26. A new heart will I give you; if this work did depend upon the will of Man which might fruſtrate the Truth of God in his Promiſe? and when God knew there was no principle in their hearts, that could riſe higher, than to ſhame and confuſion, not to ſo excellent a work as Regeneration, as is intimated, Verſe 32. Not for your ſakes do I do this: be aſhamed and confounded for your own ways, O houſe of Iſrael. What reaſon was there for God to depreſs them to confuſion, if they had had power to renew themſelves? If this Promiſe of God depended not upon any thing in them in the firſt making, it could not depend upon any thing in them in the full performance of it. We muſt either make God a lyer, or unwiſe, or remove any efficiency in the Will of Man Man as the firſt cauſe. What Blaſphemy would it be to ſay, that God was ſo unwiſe as to Promiſe that which depended upon the power of another, whether it ſhould be wrought or no; that God could not be certainly true to his Word, unleſs free-will aſſiſted him!

5. It diſpoils God of his Worſhip, in thoſe two great parts of it, Prayer, and Praiſe.

1. Prayer. With what face can any ſollicite God for that Grace, which he conceives to be in his own power to have when he will? 'Tis a mocking of him, to deſire that ſtrength of him which he hath given us already, inherent in our Nature. If it were the work of our Wills, It would require only the excitation of them, not any application to God. Who begs for what he hath? Who deſires an Alms that hath thouſands in his purſe? As prayer would be a vain thing in any man that ſhould deny a Providence over-ruling the Affairs of the World: ſo it would be as vain a thing to call upon God for Grace, if the whole affair of Regeneration were left to the conduct of mans Will. The end of Gods making Promiſes of a New Heart, and a New Spirit, is to be enquired after to do it for us, Ezek. 36. 26, 37. The Natural conſequent then of aſſerting the power of our own Wills, is not to call upon God, but direct our deſires to another cauſe, to ſollicite our own Wills, not God: It would not be then according to the language of the Church, Turn thou us, O Lord, and we ſhall be turned. Draw me, and I will run after thee, Lam. 5. 21. Cant. 1. 4. but I will turn to thee, and then ſhalt thou be turned to me; I will run after thee, and draw thee to my ſelf. The Royal Authority, and Power of God, and his Glory in granting, is the foundation of Prayer; therefore the Lord's-Prayer is concluded with this, as an argument to move God to grant what is askt, thine is the Kingdom, the Power, and the Glory, that is, thou art Rich, and Powerful, and haſt all ſorts of Bleſſings to beſtow; with what face can any one go to God with theſe words in his mouth, when he aſcribes the Kingdom, Power and Glory, in ſo great a work, to his own Will? We can never pray in confidence to God for it: for all confidence is wrought by a conſideration of the Will of him we pray to, to accompliſh what we deſire, and of his Power to effect it: What confidence then can we have in his Will particularly to work it for us, if we conceive he hath left it to our hands, as the proper work of our own Wills? This was the ground of our Saviours Supplications, with ſtrong cryings and tears, that God was able to ſave him, Heb. 5. 7. able Naturally, in reſpect of his Power; able Morally, in reſpect of his Truth to his Promiſe. If God were careleſs in this concern, and had caſt off all from his own hands, on the hand of free-will, God might well ſay to any Man, as he did to Moſes, Why crieſt thou unto me? Speak to the children of Iſrael that they go forwards, Exod. 14. 15. Why cry you to me, you may do it your ſelves? go forward with your own Wills. The Natural Language of man to God, would not be, Lord let thy Kingdom come, thy Will be done; give me a New Heart: but I will have thy Kingdom come, I will have thy Will be done, I will procure my ſelf a New Heart, I will change my Heart of Stone into a Heart of Fleſh.

2. Praiſe. It doth deprive God of this part of his worſhip alſo, Praiſe even for his greateſt Bleſſings. If our own wills did produce this work, the greateſt cauſe of glorying would be, not in God, but in our ſelves. We have as little ground to praiſe God, if it be our own work, as we have to pray to him for it. All that can be ſaid is, That we have ground to praiſe him for the means of Regeneration; and this is no more ground, than they have that are not Regenerate under the enjoyment of the ſame means. If a man could give himſelf a Natural being without God, he could be his own Creator, his own foundation: ſo if he could give himſelf a Spiritual Being, without the Grace of God, he would be a God to himſelf; for in this caſe he would really do more to his converſion than God. If God offer grace equally to all, and the pliableneſs of one mans will to receive it above another, were from himſelf, he would then owe an Obligation to himſelf, but no more to God than the other that rejected it owes. The Apoſtle by asking the queſtion, Who hath made thee to differ? And what haſt thou that thou didſt not receive? 1 Cor. 4. 7. Tho it be meant of a difference of gifts, gifts, yet it is argumentum minoria) Clearly implies, That what difference there was between them and others, was not of their own planting, nor grew up from the ſtock of Nature: But if Regeneration be wrought by a mans own will, 'tis not God that makes the difference, therefore the glory doth not belong to him. He is the Author of a general call, therefore the glory of that pertains to him, 'tis true; but yet as much from the damned that have lived under the Goſpel, as from the glorified Saints in Heaven, becauſe the ſpecial entertainment of this call, was not from the efficacy of Gods grace, but the liberty of mans will: for according to this aſſertion, the love of God would be equal both to the damned and ſaved, and would not ſhine with a fairer luſtre in Heaven than it doth in Hell. The Apoſtle wiſheth the Philippians to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling; and encourageth them by this argument, becauſe God is the Author of all that good which they do *. If the determination of the will then is from it ſelf, is it not a brave ground to glory in our ſelves? How ſhall any man give God the glory of his Salvation? If it be ſaid, God did enlighten their Underſtandings by the Preaching of the Goſpel, this is an illumination common to all; and the reaſon ſome believe and others not, is not from the Gift of God, but from themſelves; how can we give God a peculiar praiſe for that wherein there is no difference between the beſt and the worſt of men? But the Apoſtle ſaith, God gives us to will, that is, the Operation of our will, and not only the illumination of the Underſtanding; therefore that our wills do terminate in that which is good, we hold of God: the Apoſtle doth not ſay, God hath given us power to will, but produced the will in us, and that of his good pleaſure: If therefore God work no more in one than in another, there is no place for Gods good pleaſure, becauſe there is no difference. * Let us ſee with what kind of Language the praiſe of God would be clothed, according to the Doctrine of free-will. A renewed man may ſay thus: Lord, I give thee thanks, that thou haſt conferred upon me a ſupernatural grace: but thou didſt alſo give as much grace to my Neighbour: but I added ſomething to that which thou didſt ſupernaturally give me: and tho I received no more than he did receive from thee, yet I did more than he, ſince he remains in his ſin, and I am Regenerate; therefore I have no more Obligation to thee and thy grace, than he that believes not: for, Lord, thou didſt not make me differ from the other, becauſe he had equal gifts with me; but I made my ſelf to differ, becauſe I ſuperadded my own velle to thy Divine aſſiſtance. How much of the glory of God would be pared off by ſuch a half-witted praiſe as this? How low would be the acclamations of glorified Saints in Heaven? What foundation of pride in the Creature, contrary to the intendment of the Goſpel, which is chiefly to humble man, if man were the cauſe of the moſt excellent work in himſelf? It would write vanity in a great meaſure upon that excellent exhortation of the Apoſtle, Let him that glories, glory in the Lord, 1 Cor. 1. 31. ſince there would be a bottom for fleſh to glory in his preſence, contrary to the deſign of God in his Works, Verſe 29. which is, That no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence.

* Amiraut. Serm. in Phil. 2. 12, 13.

* Bannes, in 2da 2dæ Qu. 10. p. 248.

Arg. 2. The ſecond ſort of Arguments, is drawn from the nature and ſtate of man.

1. In Creation. Man did not create himſelf; to be a New Creature is more than to be a Creature. As man contributed nothing to Nature, ſo neither can he contribute any thing to Grace, any more than a paſſive capacity in reſpect of faculties, which yet are the gift of God to him; nothing of his own acquiſition. The Soul, tho framed with all its faculties, is as little able to engrave the Image of God upon it ſelf, as the Body of Adam, formed with all its parts and members, was able to infuſe a living Soul into it ſelf: there is no reaſon therefore to attribute our Creation to God; and Regeneration, the glory and excellency of a Creature, to our ſelves. I know ſuch ſimilitudes ought not to be ſtrained too high; yet when this Doctrine agrees with other parts of Scripture, we may form an argument from this Metaphor of Creation, whereby Regeneration is expreſt in Scripture. 'Tis confeſt by moſt, if not all, that no Creature, no not an Angel, can be an inſtrument in the very act of Creation of another thing, much leſs the chief efficient of its own Creation: for Creation is an act of Omnipotency, and an incommunicable property of the Deity, not to be delegated to any Creature. The creation of man, in a ſtate of ſuch perfection as to be endued with the Image of God, was a greater work than ſimply the Creation of his Body, or the eſſential faculties of his Soul, yea, greater than the Creation of the whole World, becauſe the attributes of God did more lively appear in him, and particularly his Holineſs: the reſtauration then of this Righteouſneſs to man, after it is loſt, is a greater work than the firſt Creation of his Body and Soul, it being the ſame thing with the, conferring at firſt his Original rectitude upon him: If man therefore could create this in his own Soul after it is loſt, he would do a greater work than ſimply the Creation of a World. Surely there is as much power and wiſdom required to the New-Creating-Righteouſneſs in the heart, after it is periſhed, as there was in the placing it there at firſt. And then it will follow, that none can New Create it but an infinite Wiſdom, Power, and Holineſs. If man therefore can Create it in himſelf, he muſt have a wiſdom, power and holineſs, equal to that of God his firſt Creator; for what could not be done by any Creature at the firſt conferring it, but it was neceſſary that it ſhould be a work of infinite Power, cannot be done by a leſs power now, becauſe the work is every whit as great; and no leſs power is requiſite to a ſecond Creation of a thing after it is periſhed, than was neceſſary to the firſt Creation of it, ſince this power of Creation cannot be derived to any Creature. As when life is gone from a Fly, and the Body of it dried and ſhrivelled up, all will grant, that the reſtoring life to this Fly muſt be done by an Omnipotent Power: the caſe is the ſame with us by Nature; Spiritual life, upon the fall, was wholly fled, no good thing dwells in our fleſh, Rom. 7. 18. not one thing ſpiritually good: that which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh; wholly fleſh in every part of it. If the making a living Fly or Worm is above the power of Nature, much more the Creating of ſo Glorious a Fabrick as Grace in the Soul. Man might as well have implanted the Divine Image in his Soul at firſt, as reſtore it after it was loſt. To aſcribe ſuch a power to man to raiſe himſelf, is a greater power than Adam had by Creation, becauſe to reſtore a mans ſelf from death to life, is greater than to preſerve the vital principle he hath already, and act Naturally from it.

2. In the ſtate of innocency. Let us conſider man in that, and it will appear he is unable to renew himſelf. If man did not keep himſelf up with ſo great a ſtock of Natural rectitude in Paradice, how can he recover himſelf, and that ſtock, after it is loſt? *Man in his beſt eſtate is vanity; all Adam, is all vanity: In the eſtate of pure Nature, he is vanity in reſpect of his mutability; much more vanity then in his fallen ſtate, from the experience of which Adam rightly called his ſecond Son Abel, vanity, Hebel, the word uſed here. How ſoon did the breath of the Serpent melt the impreſſion upon him? And if he did not by his innocent Will preſerve that purity which he had received, how can he by his corrupt Will recover that purity which he hath loſt? If Adam had had a will to perſevere, he might have ſtood, but in loſing his will he loſt his power: if he did not maintain his will in his rectitude, nor (as ſome ſay) could not without the Grace of God; how can he by the meer force of his own will, reſtore that loſt rectitude to himſelf? If an univerſal integrity ſtood in need of Grace to preſerve it, an univerſal depravation ſtands in need of a more vigorous force than that of our Will to eject it. If Adam, who had no diſorders in Nature to rectify, did not ſtand by his own Will, 'tis not likely that we, who have ſtrong habits to conquer, can be reſtored by the ſtrength of our own Wills; what Nature did not do when it was ſound, it is not likely to do a greater thing when it is wounded. We cannot now have more power than Adam had in innocency; but he was not then endued with a power to Regenerate himſelf if he ſhould fall, but death was pronounced both Spiritual and Eternal. If temptations corrupted him, and if he being in a good condition, did not maintain himſelf in it, but paſſed from a good condition to a bad: How can we, by the only liberty of our Will, paſs into a good one? * Are temptations leſs powerful now than before? Is the Devil leſs vigilant to take all occaſions to ſubvert us? Suppoſe our Wills were not ſo evil as they are, would it not be more eaſy for the Enemy to to draw the Will to himſelf, when it is irreſolved between two parts, when the guide of it is ſo eaſily clouded, than it was to draw Adam's Will to evil, from that good to which he might readily have determined himſelf? Adam had the greateſt advantages Humane Nature, in a natural way, was capable of: He was created with a fulneſs of Reaſon. But how long do we converſe with ſenſe, which faſtens upon temptations, before we come to a uſe of Reaſon? After we are come to ſome ſmatterings of Reaſon, and a growth in it, as we think, what whiſperings, and impulſes to ſin do we feel? What an eaſineſs to embrace Incentives, a deafneſs to contrary Admonitions? What languiſhing Velleities, and Palſie Deſires at beſt, for that which is good? a mighty miſt and darkneſs upon our Underſtandings, irreſolution in our Wills? How can we with all theſe Fetters, be able of our ſelves to put our ſelves into a better ſtate, and act againſt Nature, which is impoſſible any Creature can do, but by a ſuperior power?

3. Conſider man alſo in the ſtate of corruption.

1. If the will of man by Nature, were the cauſe of Regeneration, it would follow, that corruption were a cauſe of Regeneration. The imagination of the heart of man is only evil, and that continually, Gen. 6. 5. That which is evil therefore, cannot be the cauſe of that which is man's greateſt happineſs. All actions are according to thoſe innate qualities and habits which the Agent hath: All corrupted things act no otherwiſe than corruptedly, becauſe every act hath no more in it, than what the Principle, which is the ſpring of the action, conveys to it. If the heart then be wicked, it cannot do any thing but what is wicked; and a wicked act can never be the foundation of Regeneration. If a corrupt man, as corrupt, can be the cauſe of Regeneration, then he can act graciouſly, not only without a gracious habit, but by, and from a corrupt habit. If the acts are corrupt, the product of them muſt be corrupt: For man in renewing himſelf, muſt act either as corrupt or good: If as good, then he was renewed before he ſet about the renewing himſelf: the queſtion will then be the ſame; how came he by that reſtoration to goodneſs? If as corrupt, then corruption is the ſpring of the nobleſt happineſs of the Creature. It would then follow, that a man can perform acts of life, before he lives; that vital acts may be exerted by dead Principles; that ſanctification can grow up from an unſanctified root; and that the Will, with its old corruption, can be the cauſe of its elevation to another ſtate; and that the Old Creature can perform a New Creatures act, before it be a New Creature. Then a carnal mind, while it is carnal, may be ſubject to the Law of God, which the Scriptures ſay it cannot be, Rom. 8. 7. Then thoſe that are in the fleſh, may pleaſe God in an high manner, by the renewing themſelves. This would be more ſtrange, than if we ſhould ſee a Crab-Tree bring forth Pomegranates: A corrupt Tree would then bring forth good Fruit, and that the higheſt Fruit, contrary to our Saviour's aſſertion, Mat. 7. 18. It would follow, that the ſtony heart would be the cauſe of the fleſhly; and ſo an effect would riſe from a cauſe quite contrary to it, and the complying-Principle in man, be wrought by the reſiſting Principle. It is as much as if the Fire ſhould cool, and the Water burn, by their own innate qualities. * If the Will of man corrupted, be the cauſe of Principles of Grace, then the Old Creature brings forth the New: The Image of the Devil is the cauſe of producing the Divine Nature, and Hell the cauſe of an Heavenly Principle. It would follow, that an act of one kind can be produced by an habit of a contraty Nature, and that a man can act graciouſly before he be gracious. Before Grace, no action is eſſentially good, becauſe there wants a gracious Principle, whence it muſt receive its denomination as good. One act then of corrupted man, or a multitude of acts, cannot be the cauſe of Grace, becauſe they all center in that denomination of evil. How the acts of the Will, whereof not one can be called good, till the Will hath a good Principle, can produce ſo noble a work and habit as grace is, is not eaſily intelligible. Our being engrafted into the good Olive-tree, is contrary to nature, Rom. 11. 24. Nature cannot naturally contribute to that which is oppoſite to it. We are wild by Nature: Our new Implantation is contrary to Nature: A good Nature therefore cannot be the natural effect of a wild Nature.

2. Since corruption, the power of man is mighty weak in Naturals and Morals much more certainly in Spirituals.

(1.) In Naturals. No natural body that lies under a grievous Diſeaſe, can repair it ſelf by its own power, without ſome external aſſiſtance. A wounded Member muſt be beholding to Oils and Plants for a cure. No man can caſt out a Diſeaſe when he will: He may be ſick when he will, by eating that which is contrary to Nature; but the cure doth not depend upon his will, but upon Phyſick: Outward Medicines muſt recover that which he loſt by his own wilfulneſs. The Will indeed, is conditio ſine qua non; there muſt be a Will to uſe the means, or a man muſt be forced to uſe them; as we deal with mad men and children, which are unwilling to take Phyſick. But who ever heard of a man, that could cure himſelf by his own Will, without the application of Medicines? How can the ſoul then be reſtored to its vital integrity, by its own force? How can it change its own Temper, without ſome ſuperior power operating upon Nature? Man is like a wild aſſes colt, Job 11. 12. What wild Creature ever tam'd it ſelf? If any ſay, that the Will of man, by the uſe of outward Ordinances, can cure it ſelf, 'tis anſwered, Thoſe Ordinances are operative, not in a phyſical, but moral way: And therefore ſuch an Efficiency as is in Plants and Drugs, cannot be expected from them: There muſt be an operation of our own Wills, to make them efficacious: But what ſhall cure the Will, where the Diſeaſe principally lies, and the love of the Diſeaſe is ſeated? Who ſhall remove the beloved inclination from the Will? Can Nature caſt out Nature; or Satan caſt out Satan? What can make us willing? When we are made willing, the Cure is half wrought; as when a mad man is willing to be cured of his Infirmity, you can hardly count him any longer mad. The evil Principles in the Will, will never aim at their own deſtruction. If this Work of Regeneration were only the curing of a man that were ſick, or wounded, it could not be done by the power of man's Will, but by the application of ſome external Medicine, tho Nature did concur with it. But it is not a ſickneſs, but a death: therefore cannot come under the influence of the Will of man in the firſt Work. Shall a man have more power to cure his ſoul of mortal Sins, than to cure his body of mortal Wounds?

(2.) In Morals. * Whence comes that Intemperance, Incontinence, Luxury, which overflows mankind, who are carried to thoſe things which impair health, even in Meats and Drinks, againſt the reluctancy of Reaſon, whoſe Will is led not by Reaſon, but Appetite, and chuſe not like men, but beaſts, under the notion of pleaſant and guſtful? Is not this from the Will conducted by Appetite? The Temperance, and Continence, oppoſite to this, is not in Scripture counted part of the extraction of Nature, but the gift of God, 1 Cor. 7. 7. But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, another after that, ſpeaking of Continence: That which is God's Gift, is not meerly the Fruit of Humane Will. For in the Apoſtle's language, they ſeem to be oppoſed; viz. to be from God, and from our ſelves; to be God's Gift, and yet our own. In Epheſ. 2. 8. there is a plain Antitheſis; Not of your ſelves; 'tis the gift of God. 'Tis the ſame expreſſion of that moral Vertue of Continence, as it is of the Divine Grace of Faith: 'tis the gift of God. We are nothing in Morals without God, no more than a Beam is when the Sun is clouded, or withdraws its light. Shall we then allow a greater power to man in ſpiritual things, than the Scripture doth in Morals? Shall the one be the Gift of God, and the greater the Acquiſition of Nature? Cannot the Clay form it ſelf into a Veſſel of moral Honour? Shall it then be able to form it ſelf into a Veſſel of Grace? If we are not intrinſically ſufficient of our ſelves, to exerciſe a moral act, ſince our Natures are ſo over-grown with corruption, we are leſs ſufficient of our ſelves to exerciſe a ſupernatural act, without a divine motion. Can any thing aſſume an higher Nature than what it originally hath? Man hath aſſumed a lower Nature than that wherein he was created; which no Creature beſides him, in this lower World hath. Since he hath brutified himſelf, and cannot moralize himſelf without common Grace: how can he advance himſelf into a participation of the divine Nature, without ſpecial Grace? How can man ſo habitually evil, aſcend up to an higher Nature?

(3.) In this corrupt ſtate of man, any one ſin beloved, will hold a man down from coming to God. 'Tis impoſſible for a man wedded in his heart to his Riches, and be-mired in earthly confidences, to enter into a renewed Goſpel-ſtate. How hard is it, ſaith our Saviour, for them that truſt in riches, to enter into the kingdom of God? Mark 10. 24, 25. This one corruption commanding in the heart, will hinder any reſurrection by the power of Nature: For on man's part, Chriſt pronounces it impoſſible for ſuch an one to enter into the Kingdom of God, ver. 27. That is, into a Goſpel-ſtate, and that upon the ſcore of this ſingle ſin, which only appeared at this time in that young man. The like he pronounceth of another ſin, that of ambition, John 5. 44. How can ye believe which receive honour one of another? That one fancy of the Jews, of a Temporal conquering Meſſiah, did ſo poſſeſs their brains, that it barred the door againſt all the power of our Saviour's Miracles; and the bare objective propoſal of him, tho unanſwerable by reaſon, could not remove this rooted fancy. One ſin in the Will, hath more power than any imagination in the fancy. When Adam disfigured his Nature by one ſin, he had no ſtrength to recover himſelf, tho his righteouſneſs was but very lately fled from him. We need not queſtion his recovery of it, had it been in the power of his Will to will it, and the power of his Nature to regain it. If one ſin then in the Will is a bar againſt the power of Nature, what are all thoſe luſts which ſwarm in the heart of man, and ſwell up this lake of natural Venom in the ſoul? If one Fetter ſtakes down a man to an impotency, and impoſſibility, how great is man's weakneſs under all thoſe Fetters which every day he loads himſelf with? One ſtring about a Bird's leg will keep it from flying away, much more many.

(1.) If Regeneration depended on the Will of man, what is the reaſon more do not receive the Goſpel, than are ſeen by us to receive it? If the Faculty of believing were given to all, then all would believe upon the promulgation of the Goſpel, becauſe the Goſpel is the power of God to ſalvation, Rom. 1. 16. If it be the power of God in the outward preaching of it, then all would believe. If all do not believe, then ſome other ſecret power attends it, which makes it efficacious in one, not in onother: 'Tis to them that are ſaved only, the power of God, 1 Cor. 1. 18. to others, tho of great Reaſon, fooliſhneſs. If the ſtrength of Arguments be the cauſe in one, what is the Reaſon thoſe Arguments have not force upon another? What is that which makes the difference? All men have Reaſon; and what is common Reaſon, doth conduct all men more or leſs. If men could open the eyes of their mind, to underſtand the excellency of Goſpel-Propoſals, what is the Reaſon that among thoſe great multitudes, to whom it is preached, ſo few in all Ages have embraced it? Tho the things propoſed, are in themſelves ſo deſirable, and ſuit ſo well, in reſpect of the bleſſedneſs promiſed, to the natural deſire of man for happineſs. When it was preached by the Apoſtles, it was edged with Miracles, attended with a remarkable holineſs; yet they complained that few received their report. Even in that Age, and ſucceeding Ages, men have been ſo far from receiving it, that they have ſcoft at it, perſecuted with all their fury the profeſſors of it. It hath been thus deſpiſed, not only by the meaneſt, and blindeſt ſort of People, but by men of the moſt elevated Underſtanding among the Heathen Philoſophers, that could pierce into the depths of Nature; and by the Jews too, who had the Meſſiah promiſed to them, expected him about that time, had ſo many Prophecies deciphering him, which all met with their accompliſhment in his Perſon; who were alſo amazed at the Mira-

Miracles he wrought in his Life, and thoſe which accompanied his death. Doth not all this ſhow the Natural blindneſs of man, that there is need of ſome higher Power to open his Eyes, beſides the objective propoſal, that he may acknowledg the excellency of thoſe things which are preſented to him? Do we not find men ready to acknowledg reaſon upon other accounts, to be wrought into warm affections by pathetical ſpeeches? why are they not as ready in this, if it were in the power of their own Underſtandings and Wills? Do we not find the Wills of men averſe from it, tho in their Conſciences they approve of the Doctrines of it? What is the reaſon a man is renewed at one time, and not before, when he hath heard the ſame Arguments inculcated many a time? Many drops would not work it before, and one drop works it now in an inſtant. Is it from the power of reaſon in man? What reaſon is there then that he ſhould be maſtered by one reaſon now, who was not maſtered by the ſame reaſon, and many more as ſtrong, formerly? Whence comes that Light into the mind? What is the reaſon ſuch a man was not Regenerate before, when he hath in ſome fits meditated upon former Arguments, and afterwards one effects it, by a ſecret inſinuation without any previous meditation, and a ſudden turn of the Will is wrought? Can this be ſuppoſed to be from the Will principally? Rather from ſome Divine Spirit ſpreading it ſelf over the Soul, and opening the paſſages of it which were before ſhut. That place, Matth. 11. 21. where our Saviour ſpeaks of the Tyrians and Sidonians, if the Goſpel had been preached to them, they would have repented in ſackcloth and aſhes, doth not prove the power of man to renew himſelf, but that they would have teſtified ſome outward humiliation, as Ahab did at the threatning of Elijah; * or rather, Chriſt exaggerates the hardneſs of the Jews hearts, in comparing them with the Tyrians in an Hyperbolical manner of expreſſion; as we do when we reproach a man for unmercifulneſs, we ſay, Had I intreated a Turk or Barbarian as much, I ſhould have bended him: not that we commend the humanity of the Turks, but aggravate the cruelty of thoſe we have to do with. The propoſal of an Object is not ſufficient, without the inſpiration of a Will, whereby that concupiſcence which maſters that faculty, may be overpowred.

* Amiraut. de Evang. m. 6. p. 236.

(2.) If Regeneration were the fruit of mans Will, what is the reaſon that men convinced by the preaching of the Goſpel, and under great terrors too, find themſelves unable to turn to God? What is the reaſon they are not preſently renewed? Would they be torn with ſuch horrors, and bear about them ſuch racks in their Conſciences? Would they fill Heaven and Earth with complaints, were it in their own power to make themſelves ſuch as God commands them to be? If this were found in the more ignorant ſort of People, the reaſon then might be charged upon their want of knowledg; but men of great wits and inſight are filled with thoſe complaints when God begins to rebuke them: And ſuch as have a great deal of Grace, as David, when God charges ſin upon him, Pſal. 51. 10. Create in me a clean heart: renew in me a right ſpirit. Why ſhould they ſollicite God for renewing Grace, were it in the power of their own hand? Would any that fear God, as David did, mock him at ſuch a rate, as to deſire that of him which they are able to do without him? Were there a Natural power in man to turn himſelf, why did not Judas, after his Conſcience laſht him, go to his Maſters Knees to deſire pardon, rather than to the Gibbet? He had long experience of the Merciful diſpoſition of his Maſter; he had not Grace given him to encline his Will to ſuch an act: yet Peter was turned after his denial of his Maſter; was there any thing more by Nature in him, than in Judas? or did Peter do that by the ſtrength of his own Will, which Judas did not do? No; the Scripture aſſures us, it was from the prevalency of Chriſts Prayer, a ſecret influence from Chriſts look, ſtirring up that Grace that was already in his heart: he might elſe have gone out curſing his Maſter as long as he had lived. No man can come to me, exeept the father draw him, ſaith our Saviour. Tho he be convinced, there muſt be the Fathers traction, as well as conviction, to compleat the work: all drawing implies a reſiſtance, or at leaſt a heavineſs and indiſpoſition in the thing ſo drawn, to come of it ſelf. There is much difference between the propoſal of the Object, and the cauſe of our entertaining it.

The

The Object is the final cauſe which puts us upon motion; the Object moves the Will as an end, but it gives no power to move. If a man hear of an Alms to be diſtributed at ſuch a place, and he knows he ſtands in need of it, and hath a deſire to go to receive it: this knowledg of the neceſſity of it, will not give him Legs to go, if he be lame and unable to go: and he that doth go to receive the Alms, the deſire to receive the Alms puts him upon motion: but the intention of receiving the Alms was not the Efficient cauſe of that motion. If he had not had ſtrength in him from ſome other cauſe than the Alms, he could never have gone. Our motion to God muſt proceed from ſome higher cauſe than barely the propoſal of the Object, and a conviction by it.

4. Argument is drawn from the condition of the Regenerate themſelves. They are not able to rid themſelves of the remainders of ſin, much leſs can Natural men, of the body of ſin. From the impotency after Grace, we may rationally conclude a greater weakneſs in a Natural man that hath not one ſpark of Grace within, to be blown up from any breathing of Grace from without. The fleſh luſts againſt the Spirit in a Regenerate man; how peaceably doth it enjoy its dominion in a Natural man, where there is no Spirit to controul it, and luſt againſt it? Regenerate men cannot do the good they would, and they do the evil which they hate, Rom. 7. 15, 19. tho they have a Law of Grace in their mind, ſet up in contradiction to the Law of ſin in their members: How can a Natural Man then, do ſo good a thing as the renewal of himſelf, and the deſtruction of his ſin, who hath no will to the one, nor hatred of the other, who hath the Law of ſin flouriſhing in him, and delights to read the Characters of it, and perform the Wills of the fleſh? If there be ſuch an inability in a renewed man, who hath a reliſh of God and the goodneſs of the Law, who hath ſin in part mortified, and caſt out of the mind, to the members and ſuburbs; how much greater muſt the inability and reſiſtance be where there is nothing but oppoſing fleſh? What need the Apoſtle iſſue out ſuch heavy complaints, O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? Rom. 7. 24. if he had power in his own hands to free himſelf from this oppreſſing ſin? If Paul, a living-tree in Gods Garden, having both the root and ſap of Grace, be ſo wretched, ſo weak and unable to free himſelf from thoſe ſuckers: how wretched then is a dead rotten Stake, which hath no Spiritual root! How can he free himſelf from a total Spiritual death, when this great Apoſtle could not free himſelf from a partial Spiritual death, by all that ſtock of Grace already received? If a good man finds it ſo laborious a task, to engage againſt the reliques of Nature, and manage an open hoſtility againſt the wounded force of his ſenſual Appetite; much more is it a difficult task for a Natural man to row againſt the ſtream of unbroken Nature; when the Natural reſiſtance is in its full ſtrength, and the bent of Nature ſtanding point-blank againſt God. If a well-built, and well-rigged Ship, with her Sails ſpread, can only lie floating upon the Waves, and make no way, till a freſh Wind fills the Sails, ſurely the rough Timber that lies upon the ground can never fit and frame it ſelf into a ſtately Veſſel *.

* Gurnal, part. 1. p. 21.

5. 'Tis againſt the whole order which God has ſet in the World, for any thing to be the cauſe of it ſelf, or of a higher rank of Being, than what it has by Nature. No effect is nobler than its cauſe; Grace is more noble than Nature: a Seal cannot convey any other image than what is ſtampt upon it ſelf, and no further than its own dimenſions: neither can Nature ſtamp any thing of Grace upon the Soul, becauſe it hath no ſuch image engraven on it by God. Nature, tho never ſo perfect in its own kind, can never produce a thing of higher perfection than it ſelf: a Plant can never produce a Beaſt; nor a Beaſt, a Man; nor a Man, an Angel. No Natural quality can be changed in any ſubject by it ſelf, but by the introduction of ſome other quality ſuperior to it. The Fire can never freeze while it is Fire. Water cannot part with its coldneſs without ſome ſuperior acting upon it; and can thoſe that are Naturally bad, ever become Spiritually good, but by an Almighty Power? No Nature can exceed its own bounds, becauſe nothing can exceed it ſelf in acting. Whatſoever a Natural man doth, is but Natural, and can never amount to Grace without a change of Nature, and addition of a Divine vertue. If any thing could riſe above its own ſphere, it would would be ſtronger than it ſelf. Nothing can never make it ſelf ſomething; the beſt Apoſtle counts himſelf no better, 2 Cor. 12. 11. I am nothing, and intitles Grace the ſole benefactor of all his Spiritual good, 2 Cor. 15. 10. What thing ever gave it ſelf its own ſhape? Every piece of Art is brought into Figure by the Workman, not by its ſelf. Conformity to Chriſt is a fruit of the election of God; not firſt of the choice of our own Wills. Rom. 8. 29. Whom he did fore-know, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his ſon. The firſt link of the chain in the Providential and in the Gracious Adminiſtration, is in the hands of God. Hence in Scripture the gracious Works in the Soul, run in the paſſive, for the moſt part, ye are juſtified, ye are ſanctified, not you juſtify or ſanctify your ſelves. Tho ſanctification, and purging, and working out Salvation, is aſcribed to them that have received Grace and Life, as acting afterwards for ſuch ends, and producing ſuch effects by the ſtrength of Grace received from God, and Grace accompanying that firſt Grace in its acts.

As we have proved, that man by his own ſtrength cannot renew himſelf; let us ſee whether he can do it by his additional capacities.

1. Man by the help of inſtituted priviledges doth not produce this work of Regeneration in himſelf without a ſupernatural Grace attending them. Ordinances cannot renew a man, but the Arm of God which doth manage them, edgeth them into efficacy: as the Arm that wields the Sword, gives the blow. Means are the ſhowers of Heaven, but they can no more make the heart fruitful, till ſome gracious principle be put in, than the Beams of the Sun, the Dews of Heaven, and the Water pots of the Clouds, can make a barren Ground bring forth Flowers without a change of the Nature of the Soil, and new Roots planted in it. All the Spectacles in the World cannot cure a mans Eyes, he muſt have a viſive faculty to make uſe of them; our faculty muſt be cured, before we can exerciſe it about Objects, or uſe means proper to that faculty, All perſuaſions will not prevail with a dead man: the faireſt Diſcourſes, the moſt undeniable Arguments, the moſt moving Rhetorick, will not ſtir or affect him, till God take away the Stone from the Grave and raiſe him to Life. The report of the Prophets will do no good without the revelation of Gods arm, Iſa. 53. 1. becauſe all thoſe things do not work in a Phyſical way, as Drugs and Plaiſters, which attain their end without any active concurrence of the Patient; but in a Moral way, the Will therefore and Nature muſt firſt be changed before thoſe can do any good. You can never by all your teachings teach a Sheep to provide for Winter, as an Ant doth, becauſe it hath no ſuch inſtinct in its Nature. If any thing were like to work upon a man, the moſt ſtupendous Miracles were moſt likely to produce ſuch an effect upon the Reaſons of men: yet thoſe ſupernatural demonſtrations without a man only, cannot make him believe a truth. Miracles are a demonſtration to the Eye, as well as Preaching to the Ear: tho they be confeſt to be above the ſtrength of Nature, yet all the ſpectators of them are not believers, John 12. 37. But though he had done ſo many miracles before them, yet they believed not: Many of thoſe that ſaw our Saviours Works did not believe his Doctrine; nay, they irrationally aſcribed them to the Devil, when they could find no reaſon in the Nature of them to charge them upon ſuch a ſcore. The raiſing Lazarus from the dead, was as high a Miracle as ever was wrought; yet tho many of them believed, yet others did not, but accuſed him to the Phariſees, who thereupon more vigorouſly took counſel to put him to death, John 11. 45, 46, 47, 53. tho they acknowledged that he did many Miracles; they had reaſon as well as others; the Miracles were undeniable, as being acted before many Witneſſes: the Natural force of them upon all reaſons was equal, the conſiderations ariſing from them unanſwerable. There were evil habits in the will not removed by Grace, which reſiſted the unanſwerable reaſon of the Miracles. What made the difference between them and thoſe that believed? Why did not the Wills of the Enemies follow the undeniable reaſon, as well as the Wills of others? Miracles may aſtoniſh men, but cannot convert them, without a Divine touch upon the heart, 2 King. 18. 39. The people were aſtoniſhed by that wonderful Miracle of fire falling from Heaven, and conſuming the Sacrifice, and licking up the Water in the trench; and ſome reverential reſolutions were produced in them, they fell upon their Faces and ſaid, The Lord he is God, they ſhowed their Zeal in taking Baal's Prophets, and helping, or at leaſt ſuffering Elijah to ſlay them; yet thoſe people revolted to Idolatry, and continued ſo till their captivity. The eaſineſs of Faith upon the apparition and inſtruction of one riſen from the dead, was the Opinion of one of the damned, Luke 16. 30. If one went to them from the dead, they will repent: But this Opinion was contradicted by Abraham, Ver. 31. who poſitively aſſerts, If they did not hear Moſes and the prophets, they would not be perſuaded though one roſe from the dead. If their Wills were obſtinate againſt the means God had appointed for their converſion, the ſame Wills ſo corrupted would be as obſtinate againſt the higheſt ſort of Miracles. If that then which is above the hand of Nature to act, and bears the Characters of Omnipotency upon the breaſts of it, doth not work upon mens hearts and wills of themſelves, ſurely Nature it ſelf cannot turn the heart to God.

Faces

The two great diſpenſations of God, are Law and Goſpel, neither of theſe can of themſelves work this.

(1.) The Law. * The Law will inſtruct, not heal. It acquaints us with our duty, not our remedy; it irritates ſin, not allays it; it exaſperates our venom, but doth not tame it; tho it ſhows man his miſerable condition, yet a man by it doth not gain one drop of Repentance. It tells us what we ſhould do, but corrects not the enmity of our Nature whereby we may do it. The Apoſtle takes notice of the enmity of man to the Law, Rom. 5. 6, 7. yet enemies, yet ſinners. That yet, may refer to what he had ſpoken of the Law in the Chapter before. Tho men had had ſo much time from the fall to recover themſelves, and had ſo many advantages by the Law and the Ceremonies of it, yet all thoſe Years ſpent from the foundation of the World, had produced no other effect, than the weakning of them: As Creatures that are wounded, by their ſtruglings waſte their own ſtrength. Yet ſinners, till this time ſinners, whereby the load of ſin which lay upon the World, was made more heavy by the continual addition made to thoſe heaps. The offence did rather abound by the Law, than was diminiſht, Rom. 5. 20. The law was given, that ſin might abound: tho it made a clear diſcovery of the Will of God, yet it rather aggravated ſin; it added no power to perform that Will. The motions of ſin were exaſperated by it, ex accidenti, and brought forth fruit unto death: all the means by the Law for the repreſſing of ſin, did rather enflame it: ſin could not be overcome by it, becauſe the Law was weak through the fleſh, that is, had not ſo much power as ſin had; it was like a little Water put upon Fire, which did rather enrage than quell it, Rom. 7. 8, 9. ſin revived when the Law came, it had a new life; and the Apoſtle found himſelf utterly unable to over-power it. There were, Verſe 5. motions of ſin, παθήματα, not only a power in ſin, but an enraged power, which adds to the ſtrength of a perſon; ſin ſlew him: taking occaſion by the commandment, Verſe 10. and a dead man is wholly at the diſpoſing of his conquerors. The Law was holy, it had an impreſſion of Gods Holineſs upon it, Rom. 7. 12, 13, 14. there was alſo equity and conveniency in it, it was juſt and good: and tho theſe were conſiderations enough to ſpur men on to rid themſelves of this Tyrant ſin, yet they could not, they had not ſtrength enough to do it: tho it was holy, juſt and good, yet it was not ſtrong enough to reſcue them; and the reaſon of it, the Apoſtle lays upon the difference in the Nature of both, Ver. 14. We know that the law is ſpiritual, but I am carnal, ſold under ſin; there was an enmity in his Nature to it, and therefore he muſt lie under the power of it, till a mighty deliverer ſtept in to conquer it. Do we find any better effect of the Ceremonial Law, which was the Goſpel in a maſk, and which was the inſtrument of all the Regenerations among the Jews? How few do we find renewed among them under that means which they enjoyed ſolely, and no other Nation in the World partners with them in it? How frequent were their Revolts, and Rebellions and Idolatries, inconſiſtent with Regeneration, we may read in Joſhua and Judges. The inefficaciouſneſs of means appears evidently in that Nation which had greater advantages than any in the World beſides: The Covenants, Sacrifices, Oracles of God, warnings by Prophets, yet ſo frequently over-grown with Idolatry from the time of their coming out of Egypt to the Babyloniſh captivity, and Ten Tribes wholly caſhiered for it.

(2.) The Goſpel. Tho the veil of Ceremonies be taken off from it, and it appeareth open faced; yet till the veil be taken off the underſtandings of men, it will produce little fruit among them, 2 Cor. 3. 14. The Goſpel is plain, but only to him that underſtands, Prov. 8. 9. As the Sun is clear, but only to him that hath an Eye to ſee it. The Goſpel it ſelf cannot remove the blindneſs from the mind. The propoſal of the Object works no alteration in the faculty, without ſome acting on the faculty it ſelf. The Beams of the Sun ſhining upon a blind man, make no alteration in him. The Jews, to whom the Goſpel was Preached by our Saviour himſelf, could not believe, becauſe God blinded their eyes, &c. John 12. 39, 40. There muſt be a ſupernatural power beſides the propoſal of the Object, to take away this blindneſs and hardneſs which is the obſtruction to the Work of the Goſpel: Tho the Son of God is come, and the Goſpel be Preached, yet the underſtanding whereby we know, is given us by him, 1 John 5. 20. And we know that the ſon of God is come, and hath given us an underſtanding, that we may know him that is true: the Light of the Goſpel ſhines upon all, but all have not an Eye given them to ſee it, and a Will given them to embrace it. * The meer Doctrine of it doth not Regenerate any man: ſome have taſted of the Heavenly Gift, that is, have had ſome underſtanding of Chriſt, who is the Heavenly Gift, the ſon given to us, Iſa. 9. 6. and are partakers of ſome common illumination of the Holy Ghoſt, yet are not Regenerate. Was not the Goſpel Preached to the Jews, even by the mouth of our Saviour whom they Crucified? And was it not Preached to the Gentiles by the mouthes of thoſe Apoſtles whom they perſecuted? Were there not propoſals that ſuited the Natural deſires of men for happineſs? yet did not many that ſeemed to receive it, receive it not in the love of it? If God himſelf ſhould appear to us in the likeneſs of a man, and Preach to us as he did to Adam, if he did not over-power our hearts with an inward Grace, he would do us no good at all by his declarations. We do not read of any work immediately upon Adam, at the promulgation of the Goſpel by God himſelf: tho it appears, that afterwards there was, by his inſtructing his Sons to Sacrifice, and his expectations of a Meſſiah. But we certainly know that our Saviour, God manifeſted in the fleſh, declared the Goſpel in his own Perſon, and found no ſucceſs, but where he touched the heart inwardly by the Grace of his Spirit. All meer outward declarations are but ſuaſions, and meer ſuaſion cannot change and cure a Diſeaſe or habit in Nature. You may exhort an Ethiop to turn himſelf White, or a lame Man to go: but the moſt pathetical exhortations cannot procure ſuch an effect, without a greater power than that of the Tongue to cure Nature: you may as well think to raiſe a dead man by blowing in his mouth with a pair of Bellows. Judas had enjoyed the beſt means that ever were, yet went out of the World unrenewed: and the Thief upon the Croſs, who never perhaps was in any good company in his life till he came to the Croſs, nor ever heard Chriſt ſpeak before, was renewed by the Grace of God in the laſt hour.

* Cocceius, de Fœdere, c. 15. pag. 472, 473.

2. Neither can a man renew himſelf, by all his Moral works, before Faith. Our Calling is not according to our Works, but according to Gods own purpoſe and Grace, 2 Tim. 1. 9. Paul, before his converſion, was blameleſs as to the Righteouſneſs of the Law, Phil. 3. 6. yet this was loſs; a bar rather to Regeneration, than a means to further it. For all this legal comelineſs, he ranks himſelf, before his converſion, in the number of the dead, Eph. 2. 5. When we were dead in ſins: not you, but we; putting himſelf into the Regiſter of the dead. Whatſoever works a man can Morally do before Faith, cannot be the cauſe of Spiritual Life; they are not vital Operations; if they were, they were then the effects of Life, not the cauſe: the Scripture makes them the effects of Grace; created to good works, Eph. 2. 10. What is an effect, cannot be the cauſe. The beſt works before Grace are but a refined ſenſuality, they ariſe from ſelf-love, center in ſelf-ſatisfaction, are therefore works of a different ſtrain, from thoſe of Grace, which are referred to a higher end, and to Gods well-pleaſing. In all works before Grace, there is no reſignation of the Soul to God in obedience: no ſelf-denial of what ſtands in oppoſition to God in the heart; no clear view of the evil of ſin; no ſound humiliation under the corruption of Nature; no inward purification cation of the heart, but only a diligence in an external poliſhing. All thoſe acts cannot produce an habit of a different kind from them. Let a man be ſtilted up with the higheſt natural excellency; let him be taller by the head and ſhoulders, than all his Neighbours in Morality, thoſe no more confer life upon him, than the ſetting a Statue upon an high Pinacle, near the Beams of the Sun, inſpireth it with a principle of motion. The increaſing the perfection of one ſpecies, can never mount the thing ſo increaſed, to the perfection of another ſpecies. If you could vaſtly increaſe the heat of fire, you could never make it aſcend to the perfection of a Star. If you could increaſe meer Moral Works to the higheſt pitch they are capable of, they can never make you gracious, becauſe Grace is another ſpecies; and the Nature of them muſt be changed, to make them of another kind. All the moral actions in the World, will never make our hearts of themſelves, of another kind than moral. Works make not the Heart good, but a good Heart makes the Works good. 'Tis not our walking in God's Statutes materially, which procures us a new heart; but a new heart is in order before walking in God's Statutes, Ezek. 36. 27. Our Regeneration is no more wrought by Works of our own, than our Juſtification. The Rule of the Apoſtle will hold good in this, as well as in the other, Rom. 11. 6. If it be of grace, it is not of works; otherwiſe grace is no more grace: And Faith is the gift of God, not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt, Epheſ. 2. 9. And the Apoſtle, Titus 3. 5. oppoſeth the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, to works of righteouſneſs. He excludes Works from being the cauſe of Salvation. And would they not be the cauſe of Salvation, if they were the cauſe of the neceſſary condition of Salvation?

Propoſition 3. As man cannot prepare himſelf to this Work, nor produce it, ſo he cannot co-operate with God in the firſt production of it. We are no more co-workers with God in the firſt Regeneration, than we were joint purchaſers with Chriſt in redemption. The converſion of the Will to God is a voluntary act; but the Regeneration of the Will, or the planting new habits in the Will, whereby it is enabled to turn to God, is without any concurrence of the Will: Therefore ſay ſome, we are active in primo actu, but not in primo actus; or we are active in actu exercito, but not in actu ſignato. Some ſay, the habit of Faith is never created ſeparate from an act; as the Trees at the Creation of the World, were created with ripe Fruit on them; but the Tree, with the power of bearing Fruit, and the Fruit it ſelf, were created at one and the ſame time by God. Yet tho the habit be not ſeparate at firſt from the act, yet there is no co-operation of the Creature to the infuſion of that habit; but there is to the act immediately flowing from that habit: For either that act of Grace is voluntary, or involuntary: If involuntary, it is not a gracious act: If voluntary, as it muſt needs be, ſince the tone of the Will is changed, then the Creature concurs in that act: For the act of believing, and repenting, is the act of the Creature: 'Tis not God that repents, and believes in us; but we repent, and believe, by vertue of that power which God hath given us. In the firſt act therefore, there is a concurrence of the Creature; otherwiſe the Creature could not be ſaid to repent and believe, but ſomething in the Creature, without, or againſt the Will of the Creature. But in the firſt power of believing and repenting, God is the ſole Agent. Jeſus Chriſt is the Sun that heals our Natures, Mal. 4. 2. the Rain that moiſtens our hearts, Pſal. 72. 6. He ſhall come down like rain upon the mown graſs. What co-operation is there in the Earth with the Sun, to the production of Flowers, but by the ſoftneſs it hath received from the Rain? It would elſe be parcht up, and its Fruits wither. The Holy Ghoſt doth by his own power, make us good Trees; but we afterwards, by vertue of that power, work together with him, in bringing forth good Fruit *. Yet this is alſo a ſubordinate, not a co-ordinate working; rather a ſub-operation than a co-operation.

1. The ſtate wherein man is at his firſt renewal, excludes any co-working with God. The deſcription the Apoſtle gives of a ſtate of Nature, excludes all cooperation of the Creature in the firſt renewal, Tit. 3. 3. For we our ſelves were ſometimes fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another. And Epheſ. 2. 2, 3. Among whom we all had our converſations in time paſt, in the luſts of our fleſh, fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, and of the mind. Every man is naturally taken up in the fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh; not only the Gentiles, to whom Paul writes, but himſelf; for he puts himſelf, and the reſt of the Jews in the number. In the ſecond verſe it was ye walked, in ver. 3. 'tis we all, and in Tit. 3. 3. we our ſelves. We who had the Oracles of God, that had greater Priviledges than others, were carried out with as ſtrong an impetus naturally, till Grace ſtopt the Tide, and after ſtopping, turn'd it againſt Nature. When the Mind was thus prepoſſeſt, and the Will made the luſts of the fleſh its Work and Trade, there was no likelihood of any co-operation with God, in fulfilling his deſires, till the bent of the heart was changed from the fleſh, and its Principles. The heart is ſtone before Grace. No ſtone can co-operate with any that would turn it into fleſh, ſince it hath no ſeed, cauſes, or principles of any fleſhly Nature in it. Since we are overwhelmed by the rubbiſh of our corrupted Eſtate, we can no more co-operate to the removal of it, than a man buried under the Ruines of a fallen houſe, can contribute to the removal of that great weight that lies upon him. Neither would a man in that ſtate help ſuch a work, becauſe his luſts are pleaſures; he ſerves his luſts which are pleaſures as well as luſts; and therefore ſerved with delight. There is naturally in man, a greater reſiſtance againſt the work of Grace, than there is in the natural coldneſs of Water, againſt the heat of the fire, which yet penetrates into all parts of the Water.

2. Regeneration is a new Principle. What Operation can there be before a Principle of Action? All co-operation ſuppoſeth ſome Principle of Working; as actus ſecundus ſuppoſeth actum primum. But a man before his firſt Regeneration, is blind in his Mind, perverſe in his Will, rebellious in his Affections, unable to know the Truth, unable to do good, dead in ſin. If he does co-operate with God before the habit be ſetled, then we can act before we have a power to act. We can pleaſe God in taking his part, and joyning iſſue with him, before we have a gracious Principle, which is contrary to the Scripture, which tells us we are firſt begotten of God, before we can keep our ſelves, or exert one act for the bettering our ſelves, 1 John 5. 18. He that is begotten of God, keeps himſelf. The preſervation of our ſelves, and every act tending thereto, follows the infuſion of the firſt Principle. And the Apoſtle Paul implies, That God works in us to will before we work, Phil. 2. 12, 13. Work out your own ſalvation with fear and trembling; for God works in you both to will and to do, &c. The Apoſtle ſuppoſeth not any Operation in them before, becauſe he ſuppoſeth not their working without God's giving them a Will, the act of Volition. The working of the Creature ſuppoſeth ſome Divine Work firſt upon the Will. Did the duſt of the ground whereof Adam's body was formed, co-work with God in figuring it into a body? or doth the body contribute any more than a paſſive receptivity to the infuſion of the rational ſoul? Lazarus did not concur with Chriſt, till his powerful voice infuſed life and ſtrength into him. His riſing and walking, was from a power conveyed, wherein Chriſt did work; but there was no co-working in him, in the conveyance of that power. We do not ſay, that a man co-works with the Sun in enlightning a Room, becauſe he opens the Shuts which barred out the light; the opening whereof is no cauſe of the Sun's ſhining, but a conditio ſine quâ non. But do we ſo much in the firſt renewal? 'Tis God alone, who darts his Beams, and opens our hearts too, to admit him; Acts 16. 14. 'tis ſaid, the Lord opened Lydia's heart. The Will cannot concur in the actual infuſion of a gracious Principle, becauſe it hath no ſpark in it ſelf by Nature, ſuitable to that Principle which is bringing in, into the ſoul. The ſhining of God into the ſoul, is compared to the chaſing away that darkneſs which at the firſt Creation was over the face of the deep, 2 Cor. 4. 6. For God who commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledg of the glory of God. What co-working was there in that darkneſs, to remove it ſelf, but a neceſſity upon it to obey the command of God, who had the ſoveraign power over his own Works? If the Creature did co-work with God at firſt, it could no more be ſaid to be dead, than a man aſleep may be ſaid to be dead; and Grace were only an awakening, not an enlivening.

3. If there were any co-working of the Will with God, in the firſt infuſion of Grace, God would not be ſo much the Author of Grace, as he is of Nature in any other Creature. The Creature would ſhare with him in the firſt Principle of its action, which no Creature in the World can be ſaid to do. It would rather be a Concourſe of God, than a Creation. But all the Terms whereby God ſets forth himſelf in the Work of Regeneration, import more than a bare Concourſe, or a co-operation with the Creature. I will take away the heart of ſtone; I will write my law in their hearts; I will put my ſpirit into them, are loftier expreſſions than are uſed to ſignifie a co-working only. He appropriates the whole Work to himſelf, without intereſting the Creature in any active concurrence, any more than at his Creation.

4. If the Will of man did co-work with God in Regeneration, it would then ſhare part of the glory of God. The whole glory would not belong to God, which he challengeth to himſelf in Scripture. He were then but an half Saviour, an half New Creator. We ſhould be in joint Commiſſion with him, by the power of our own Wills, in the firſt motion. If Creation and Reſurrection, are acts of an Almighty Power, man co-operating with him in the very act of Creation and Reſurrection, would partake with God's Almightineſs; and in ſome ſort, be co-equal with him, and a joint Partner with God, in a Work which required Almightineſs for the effecting it. Surely ſince the ſame power which raiſed Chriſt from the dead, works firſt in every believer, for his ſpiritual Reſurrection, he contributes no more to it, than the body of Chriſt in the Grave did to its Reſurrection, which was a Work not of his Humanity, but Divinity. Plucking out of the Power of Satan, is an effect of the Power of Grace, and God's Gift, 2 Tim. 2. 25, 26. God firſt gives repentance, that they may recover themſelves out of the ſnare of the Devil. A Slave, whoſe hands and feet are loaden with Fetters, can contribute nothing to his deliverance, but a Will and Deſire to be delivered; nor that, if he be in love with his Fetters, which is the caſe of every one of us by Nature, who are as fond to be in the Devil's cuſtody, as he is to have us. What co-operation can there be in this caſe? Whatſoever is an act of Mercy, and an act of Truth in God, he is to have the ſole praiſe of: It doth not in any ſort belong to the Creature. The Pſalmiſt emphatically excludes man from it, Pſal. 115. 1. Not unto us, O Lord, not to us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's ſake. Not unto us, twice repeated, but to thy name give glory. Do believers beg of God the giving glory to himſelf, and not unto them; and will they contradict their prayers, by ſharing the praiſe with God? This is expreſt for deliverances: Much leſs doth any praiſe and glory belong to the Creature, for the moſt excellent deliverance of all, from the power of Sin, Satan and Death.

5. How can man co-work with God in the firſt Regeneration, when they muſt needs acknowledg that in the progreſs of it, they are oftener hinderers, than furtherers of it? If God did not work more ſtrongly in us, than the beſt of us do in our ſelves, and breathe a willingneſs into our Wills, after Regeneration, we ſhould come ſhort of ſalvation for all the firſt ſtock. How often do the beſt complain of their diſability? Is it not frequent in the mouths of Chriſtians in all Ages, as well as of Paul, Rom. 7. 18. To will is preſent with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not. How eaſily are our purpoſes ſhaken, and our ſtrength ſtaggers? Can we then co-operate with God, when we have no purpoſe, no ſtrength? Let every man's experience ſpeak for himſelf, how apt he is to check the motions of the Spirit; to let our Saviour ſtand and knock, and not open. What ſtrugglings of the body of Death! What indiſpoſitions in an holy holy courſe! Is there not often a kind of ruſtineſs of ſoul, cold damps in ſpiritual duties? What faint hands in any holy Work! What ebbs and floods, ups and downs in his heart! What feeble knees in his Walk! What hung-down heads in laying hold of Chriſt in repeated acts of Faith! What frequent returns of Spiritual Lethargies! and all this after habitual Grace. If our co-operations with God after Grace received, are but a remove from non-acting, next Neighbours to no working at all, we muſt conclude it to be worſe with man before Grace was ſetled in the ſoul; and that there was no active concurrence with it in any manner of acting: otherwiſe there would be as much co-operation before the implantation of habitual Grace, as after; which is hard to be imagined, that a man ſhould be no ſtronger with Grace received, than under the want of it.

Propoſition 4. Man by his own ſtrength cannot actuate Grace after it is received. To what purpoſe did the Saints of old pray to quicken them, if they ſtood not in as much need of exciting Grace from God, as of renewing-Grace, Pſal. 80. 18. Quicken us, and we will call upon thy name. Pſal. 119. 25, 27. and many places in that Pſalm. The New Creature is little better than an Infant in the beſt, and cannot go, unleſs God bear it in his arms, as he ſpeaks of Ephraim, Hoſea 11. 1, 3. They cannot move, unleſs led by the Spirit. The Child hath a Principle of motion in it, but cannot go without the aſſiſtance of the Nurſe; nor the Soul, without the aſſiſtance of God, actuate that Principle of Grace. Habitual Grace is the Inſtrument, not the principal Agent. A Sword, tho it hath an edg, cuts nothing till it be moved by ſome ſtrong arm. The firſt Principle of the motion of Grace, reſides in God. Purification in its progreſs is attributed to Faith as an Inſtrument, but to God as a principal Agent. 'Tis ſaid; Acts 15. 8, 9. God gave them the Holy Ghoſt, as he did to us, and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith. Yet the Will of man concurs in this actuating of Faith, as a ſubordinate cauſe, 1 John 3. 3. A man is ſaid to purifie himſelf by hope. A well rigged Soul, with its Habit of Grace ſpread, as well as a Ship with its Sails, muſt wait the leaſure of the Wind, before it move. Paul acknowledges his acting for the ſervice of God, to be not from himſelf principally, 1 Cor. 15. 10. Yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. It was the Grace of God uſed me as an Inſtrument: the glory muſt not ſtick to my fingers: It was the Grace of God with me, affording ſtrength and help to that Grace which was in me. If this concourſe of God be neceſſary in all natural actions, 'tis much more in the ſpiritual frame of the ſoul, to keep it up, and to keep it acting. 'Tis not we that work to will and to do, but God works to will and to do. 'Tis to be conſidered, That the Apoſtle writes to them that are in a ſtate of Grace, exhorting them to a progreſs in ſalvation, depending upon God, who works the after-Will, and the after-doing, as well as the firſt Will and compliance with the Grace of God. Do we not find renewed men not able, with all the Grace they have, to quicken themſelves ſometimes in duty? What is the reaſon they lie ſpiritleſs before God, often with breathings, ſighs and groans for quickening, and it is far from them? They ſtir themſelves up, meditate, ſummon up all the powerful conſiderations they can, yet find themſelves empty of a ſpiritual vigor. Surely there is ſome principal power wanting, to ſpirit their Grace, and make them leap in Duty; ſome inviſible ſtrength hath withdrawn it ſelf, which did before conduct, and breathe upon them, and fill their ſouls with a divine fire. They find it not in the power of the hand of their own Will, to actuate, and quicken the Grace they have; much leſs is it in the power of any man's hand to renew himſelf. The Work of Grace is not only a Traction at the firſt, but a continual Traction; as Conſervation is a continual Creation. Draw me, and we will run after thee, Cant. 1. 4. The Church there ſpeaks it as regenerate, deſiring a continual Traction from God, as the firſt ground of her Race after Chriſt. Life ſhe had, for ſhe promiſeth to run: yet this Race ſhe could not begin, nor continue, without Traction from God.

5. Propoſition. Man cannot by the power of his own Will preſerve Grace in himſelf. Our Saviours Prayer to his Father, John 17. 11. 15. to keep them, imports, that they were too weak to keep themſelves. Unleſs the Lord keep the city, in vain doth the watchman wake, Pſ. 127. 1. Unleſs God preſerve the Soul, all the watchfulneſs of habitual Grace will be to little purpoſe. All Creatures, if God hide his face, are troubled, Pſal. 104. 29. much more the New Creature, whoſe ſtrength doth more neceſſarily depend upon God, becauſe of its powerful oppoſites. Were it not for the aſſiſting Grace of God, the unruly luſts in our hearts would ſoon bear down habitual Grace in the beſt. How many temptations are prevented which we cannot foreſee? How many corruptions are reſtrained which the beſt Grace cannot fully conquer? How is the tide and torrent of theſe Waters beaten back, which otherwiſe would go over our heads? The poor will of Adam preſerved him not againſt a temptation, when he had no in dwelling corruption to betray him: nor did the Will of the Angels, who had no temptation, keep them from forſaking their habitation. How can any renewed man alive, with all his Grace, meerly by the ſtrength of his own will, keep himſelf from ſinking down in the Lake of his Old corruption? * He that would ask the fallen Angels in the midſt of their torments, what was the reaſon of their fall? Would receive no other anſwer, but that their ſtrength was unſucceſsful, becauſe it depended upon their own Will. The knowledg of the Goſpel and Evangelical impreſſions, are never like to keep up without the Holy Ghoſt, 2 Tim. 1. 14. That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep, by the Holy Ghoſt, not by thine own ſtrength. If we cannot keep a form of ſound words, which as it is knowledg, is more agreeable to the Natural Appetite of man, without the Holy Ghoſt, much leſs can we preſerve Grace in us, which is more ſtomackt by corrupt Nature. Neither are good frames like to be preſerved in us without Gods keeping, 1 Chron. 29. 18. keep this in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people: our hearts will not let any good motion ſink into them, unleſs God give a pondus to his own motion. If then Regenerate men are unable of themſelves to actuate and preſerve Grace received, much more inability is there in a Natural man to gain that which he hath not a ſpark of in his own Nature, but an enmity to.

* Senault. Chriſtian Man, pag. 203.

Queſt. But, do you diveſt man of all power, all freedom of will? is heable to do nothing in order to Regeneration?

Anſw. We do not diveſt man of all power: therefore before we conſider what power belongs to man, we may conſider,

(1.) Man ſimply in his fall. So man loſt all his Natural ability by his firſt ſin, and was the meritorious cauſe of his loſing ſupernatural Grace, which God by a judicial act removed from him: and in this ſtate man had no ability unto any thing Morally good. Nothing was due to Adam but the ſtate of the Devils, who have no Affection to any thing Morally good, but alway do that which is in its own Nature evil, and alway ſin with evil intentions. Adam would have been thus, had the threatning according to the tenor of it, been executed: there had been no common Affections, no more Light in his Underſtanding than what might have ſerved for his torment: As wicked men, after death, are deprived in a judicial way, of that Light in their minds; thoſe velleities and good motions which ſometime hovered in them, thoſe Affections which were here exerciſed, now and then, towards God. The Sentence given againſt Adam is then pronounced againſt them, and they laid under the final execution of it, which was to die the death, Gen. 2. 17. thou ſhalt ſurely die: a death of all Morality, all Affections to any thing that hath the reſemblance of goodneſs: It might be a prediction of what would be in courſe, as well as what would be inflicted in way of judicial recompence. None of theſe things can be looked for in Adam, or any of his Poſterity, as fallen; not a grain of Life, or any thing tending that way, was due to him, but only death.

(2.) Man is to be conſidered as reſpited from the preſent ſuffering this Sentence by the intervention of Chriſt: Whereby he is put into another way of probation. So thoſe common notions in our Underſtandings, and common motions in our Wills and Affections, ſo far as they have any thing of Moral goodneſs, are a New

Gift

Gift to our Natures by vertue of the Mediation of Chriſt. In which ſenſe he may be ſaid to taſte death for every man, Heb. 2. 9. and be a propitiation for the ſins of the whole world. By vertue of which promiſed death, ſome ſparks of Moral goodneſs are preſerved in man. Thus his life was the light of men; and he is the light that lightens every man that comes into the world; which ſets the Candle of the Lord in the ſpirit of man a burning and ſparkling, John 1. 9. and upholds all things by his Mediatory, as well as Divine Power, Heb. 1. 3. which elſe would have ſunk into the Abyſs. By vertue of this Mediation, ſome power is given back to man, as a new donation, yet not ſo much as that he is able by it to Regenerate himſelf: and whatſoever power man hath, is Originally from this cauſe, and grows not up from the ſtock of Nature, but from common Grace.

Which common Grace is either,

1. More general to all men. Whereby thoſe Divine ſparks in their underſtandings, and whatſoever is Morally praiſe-worthy in them, is kept up by the Grace of God, which was the cauſe that Chriſt taſted death for every man, Heb. 2. 9. that he by the grace of God ſhould taſte death for every man; whereby the Apoſtle ſeems to intimate, That by this Grace, and this Death of Chriſt, any remainders of that Honour and Glory wherewith God Crown'd man at firſt, are kept upon his head: as will appear, if you conſider the Eighth Pſalm, whence the Apoſtle cites the words, which are the ground of his Diſcourſe of the Death of Chriſt.

2. More particular common Grace to men under the preaching of the Goſpel. Which Grace men turn into wantonneſs or laſciviouſneſs, Jude 4. Grace they had, or the Goſpel of Grace, but the wantonneſs of their Nature prevailed againſt the intimations of Grace to them. Beſides this common Grace, there is a more ſpecial Grace to the Regenerate, the more peculiar fruit of Chriſts Mediation and death for them. All this, and whatſoever elſe you can conceive that hath but a face of comelineſs in man, is not the birth of fallen Nature abſtracted from this Mediation. Therefore when the Gentiles are ſaid to do by Nature the things contained in the Law; 'tis not to be underſtood of Nature meerly as fallen, for that could do no ſuch thing; but of Nature in this new ſtate of probation, by the interpoſition of Chriſt the Mediator, whoſe Powerful Word upheld all things, and kept up thoſe broken fragments of the Two Tables of the Law, tho dark and obſcure. And conſidering Gods deſign of ſetting forth the Goſpel to the World, there was a neceſſity of thoſe Relicks, both in the Underſtanding, and Affections, and Deſire for Happineſs, to render men capable of receiving the Goſpel, and thoſe inexcuſable that would reject it. So that by this Mediation of Chriſt, the ſtate of mankind is different ſince the fall from that of the evil Angels or Devils. For man hath, Firſt, a power of doing that which is in its own nature good. Secondly, A power of doing good with a good intention; not indeed Supremely for the Glory of God, but for the good of his Country, the good of his Neighbours, the good of the World, which was neceſſary for the ſodering together humane Societies, ſo that ſometimes even in ſins man hath good intentions. * Whereas the Devil doth always that which in its own Nature is evil, and always ſins with evil intentions. Without this Mediation, every man had been as very a ſlave to ſin, as the Devil: tho he be naturally a ſlave to ſin, yet not in that full meaſure the Devil is, unleſs left in a judicial manner by God upon high provocations.

* Dr. Jackſon, Vol. 2. fol. p. 3091.

There is then a liberty of Will in man; and ſome power there is left in Man. And here I ſhall ſhew,

1. What kind of liberty this is.
2. That there is ſome liberty in man.
3. How far the power of man by common Grace doth extend.

Queſt. Firſt, What kind of liberty this is.

Anſw. 1. The eſſential liberty of the Will remains. Liberty is of the eſſence of the Will, and cannot be taken away without extinction of the Nature of man: 'tis free from compulſion, otherwiſe it were a not Will, which liberty doth not conſiſt in a choice of good or evil. For even under this depravation it cannot chuſe evil, quà malum, as ſuch. It can chuſe nothing but what appears to it under under the notion of good: tho it many times embraceth that which is materially evil, yet the formal conſideration upon which it embraceth it, is as good, either in reality or in appearance: as the ſight in every colour ſees light. And when it is carried out to that which is really evil, and only apparently good, 'tis by force of thoſe habits in the Underſtanding, which make it give a falſe judgment; or, by the power of the ſenſitive Appetite, which hurries it on to the Object propoſed, but alway it reſpects in its motion every thing as good, either an honeſt, pleaſant or profitable good.

2. Tho the eſſential liberty of the Will remains, yet the rectitude whereby it might have been free only to that which was really good, is loſt. Man by Creation had a freedom of Will to chuſe that which was really good, yet had a mutability, and could chuſe evil; and by chuſing evil, rather than good, ſank his Poſterity into this depraved liberty which now remains. * Tho ſince the fall man is preſerved in his Natural freedom, and cannot be forced; yet he hath not a power to Will well; becauſe that Righteous principle whereby he did Will well, is departed from him: yet becauſe the eſſential freedom due to his Nature remains, whatſoever he Wills he Wills freely; ſo that tho ſomething the Will Wills may be materially good, yet it Wills that good in an ill manner; for being overcome Naturally by ſin, man can do nothing but according to that Law, which ſin as a Maſter that hath conquered him, impoſeth upon him, 2 Pet. 2. 19. they themſelves are the ſervants of corruption; for of whom a man is overcome, of the ſame is he brought in bondage. And of all men in a ſtate of Nature, tho under common Grace, the Apoſtle pronounceth, Rom. 3. 11. that there is none that ſeeks after God, that is, in any thing they do, tho never ſo good, they ſeek not God, but themſelves: there is no fear of God, no reſpect to God before their Eyes, Ver. 18. whence it comes to paſs, that by reaſon of this dominion of ſin, nothing can be done well: hence man is ſaid to be dead: not that the life which doth conſtitute the Nature of the Soul is taken away; but that which renders it fit for performing actions pleaſing to God: for ſuch a life doth conſiſt not in the Nature of the Soul or Will, but in that habitual integrity which was in man by Creation. As the Body when 'tis dead, doth not ceaſe to be a Body, but ceaſeth to be animated by the ſeparation of the Soul from it: ſo the Soul may be truly ſaid to be dead, tho the power of the Soul be not taken away. If the Spiritual rectitude in that power which did conſtitute it Spiritually living, be departed, by the removal of this Righteouſneſs the Will is not free to Spiritual things, tho it be to Natural: 'tis free among the dead, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of himſelf, Pſal. 88. 5. free to dead works, not to living; to this or that dead work, to any work within the verge of ſinning: as a Bird in a large Cage, may ſkip this way and that way by its natural ſpontaneous motion, but ſtill within the Cage.

* Ames Medul. lib. 1. cap. 13. Theſ. 10.

3. Therefore tho man hath loſt this liberty to good, he retains a freedom to the commiſſion of ſin under the neceſſity of ſinning. This freedom is a power of Choice and Election of a thing, which differs from that ſpontaneity which is in Beaſts, who act by inſtinct, without any reaſoning in the caſe, becauſe they want a reaſoning power. Tho man be under a neceſſity of ſinning, yet it is not a neceſſity of conſtraint, but a neceſſity of immutability, which is conſiſtent with liberty, tho the other be not. A Creature may be unchangeably carried to good or evil, and yet be free in both; to good: as the Angels and Glorified Saints cannot Will to ſin, becauſe their Wills are immutably determined to good: they cannot but praiſe and love God, yet they freely do both: and our Saviour did freely do that good which he could not but do, by reaſon of his Hypoſtatical union; otherwiſe he could not have Merited, for all Merit requires the concurrence of the Will. To evil: The Devils cannot Will to do good, becauſe their Wills are unchangeably determined to evil, yet they ſin as freely as if there were no immutable neceſſity upon them. So man cannot but Naturally ſin in all that he doth, yet he is not conſtrained to ſin, but ſins as freely and voluntarily as if there were no neceſſity upon his Nature to corruption; as freely as if God had not foreſeen that he would do ſo: Man ſins with as great a pleaſure, as if he were wholly independent upon the Providence of God: and the more a man is delighted with ſin, the greater freedom there is in it. Hence the Scripture lays ſin upon the choice of man, Iſa. 66. 3, 4. They have choſen their own ways, and their ſoul delights in their abomination. They were their own wayes; that is, ways proper to corrupt man; but they choſe them, and delighted in them. Man is voluntary under his depravation, free in his averſion from God. A free Neceſſity, a delightful Immutability. The Will cannot be compelled to will that which it would not, or not to will that which it would. When ſin ariſeth from a ſetled Habit, the freer is a man in his ſin; and tho he cannot act otherwiſe than according to that habit, yet his actions are moſt voluntary, becauſe he is the Cauſe of that Habit which he acquired by evil acts, and by ſucceeding acts teſtifies his approbation of it.

2. That there is ſome liberty in man; ſome power in man. * Not indeed ſuch a power as the Jews thought man had naturally, of exerciſing himſelf about any thing that God ſhould reveal, without the infuſion of a new power, to enable him to act that which God required by ſupernatural Revelation. Some Power and Liberty muſt be allowed,

(1.) To clear the Juſtice of God. No juſt man will puniſh another for not doing that which was ſimply, and phyſically impoſſible; and ſhall not the Judg of all the Earth do right? 'Tis a good ſpeech of Auſtin; If there were not the Grace of God, how could the World be ſaved? If there were not Free Will, how could the World be judged? If man were diveſted of all kind of Liberty, he might have ſome excuſe for himſelf; but ſince the Scripture pronounceth men without excuſe, Rom. 1. 20. ſome power muſt be granted to clear the equity of God's Juſtice. No man ſins in that which he is under an inevitable conſtraint to do, and ſo would be unjuſtly puniſhed. It doth not appear, that God doth condemn any man ſimply, for not being regenerate but for not uſing the means appointed to ſuch an end, for not avoiding thoſe ſins which hindered his Regeneration, and which might have been avoided by him, if he would, tho indeed every unregenerate man will be condemned. The pouring out the Wrath of God upon man, is principally for thoſe ſins which they might have refrained, and had ſufficient Reaſon againſt, Epheſ. 5. 6. For becauſe of theſe things; that is, for thoſe groſs ſins which they might have avoided, mentioned ver. 5. comes the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience, ἀπειθίας; men that would not be perſuaded, which obſtinacy was in their Will. As theſe are the Cauſes of God's Wrath, ſo theſe will be alledged as the principal Reaſons of the laſt Sentence. And our Saviour in his laſt Judgment, doth not charge men with their Unregeneracy, but with their Omiſſions of what they might have done, and that eaſily; and Commiſſions which they might have avoided, Matth. 25. 41, 42, 43. with their not feeding his members when they were hungry, &c. which were things as much in their power, as any thing in the World. And the Reaſon Chriſt renders of the Sentence paſſed upon men, to depart from him, was their working of iniquity, Matth. 7. 23. Depart from me you that work iniquity; that work it voluntarily, and Work that you might have forborn. Tho Unregeneracy doth exclude a man from Heaven, as a condition without which a man cannot come there; yet nothing of this is mentioned in the laſt Sentence. If man had a firm Will to turn to God, and had not then a power conferred upon him to turn, I know not what to ſay: but man hath no Will to turn; yea, he hath no Will to do thoſe things which he might do. Suppoſing man hath a power to avoid ſuch and ſuch ſins, he is juſtly puniſhed for not making uſe of that power: Nay, ſuppoſing he had no power to avoid them, yet if his Will be ſet to that ſin, he is juſtly condemned, not for want of power, but for the delight his Will took in it. From which delight in it, it may be gathered, that if he had had a power to have ſhunned it, he would not have ſhunned it. If a man be aſſaulted by Murderers, that will cut his Throat, if he will not uſe his power againſt them, but take a pleaſure in having his Throat cut, is not this man a ſelf-murderer both in the Judgment of God and Man? Let me uſe another illuſtration, Since the end of all our preaching, ſhould be to humble Man, and clear God: If a man be caſt out of an high Tower, and be pleaſed with his fall, would he not be juſtly worthy of it, and to be neglected by men, not becauſe he did not help himſelf in his fall, for that was not in his own power; but becauſe he was mightily pleaſed, and contented with his fall, and with ſuch a pleaſure, that if he had been able to have helped himſelf, he would not. So tho man be fallen in Adam, yet when he comes to diſcern between good and evil, he commits the evil with pleaſure: So that ſuppoſing he had no power to avoid ſins; yet he is worthy of puniſhment, becauſe he doth it delightfully: Whence it may be concluded, if he had had power to avoid it, he would not, becauſe his Will is ſo malignant.

(2.) Without ſome liberty in the Will, free from neceſſity of compulſion, man would not be capable of ſin, nor of moral goodneſs. No humane Law doth impute that for a Vice, or a Vertue, to which a man is carried by conſtraint, without any power to avoid. Where any thing is done without a Will, 'tis not an humane action. Beaſts therefore are not capable of ſin, becauſe they want Reaſon and Will. If man had not liberty of Will, he would be as a beaſt, which hath only a ſpontaneous power of motion without Reaſon. Sin could not be charged upon man, as God doth all along, Pſal. 95. 10. It is a people that do err in their hearts. And Pſal. 119. 21. Thou haſt rebuked the proud that are curſed, which do err from thy commandments. It had been no error in them, if they had not done it voluntarily. The erring from God's Commandments, ariſeth from pride of heart; they had not elſe deſerved a rebuke. Who would chide a Clock for going wrong, which hath no voluntary motion? Man without a liberty of Will, could not be the Author of his own actions; and ſin could no more be imputed to him, than the irregular motion of a Watch can be imputed to the Watch it ſelf, but rather to the Workman, or Governor of it. Without a voluntary power, man would be as an Engine, moved only with ſprings: and humane Laws, which puniſh any Crime, would be as ridiculous as Xerxes, whipping the Sea, becauſe it vvould not ſtop its Tide. Neither vvere any praiſe due to man for any moral Vertue, no more than praiſe is due to a lifeleſs Picture, for being ſo beautiful, or to the Limner's Penſil for making it ſo: The praiſe is due to the Artiſt, not to the Inſtrument.

(3.) Without ſome liberty and power of motion in the Will, all the Reaſon of man, and thoſe Notions in the Underſtanding, left by the vertue of Chriſt's mediatory interpoſition, would be to no purpoſe. The Reaſon vvhy men do err, is becauſe they do not take right vvays of judging according to thoſe means they have: Ye err, ſaith our Saviour, not knowing the Scripture, nor the power of God, Mat. 22. 29. They have a Faculty of judgment and means vvhereby to judg, vvhich vvould prevent errors. There is therefore ſome ſuitable povver in man, to followv the Judgment of Reaſon, if he vvill. He vvould be in vain endovved vvith that power of Reaſoning, if there were not a power of motion in ſome meaſure ſuitable to that Reaſon. The authority of judging in the Underſtanding, would be wholly inſignificant; all Debates about any Object propoſed, would be to no end, if the Will had not a liberty to follow that Judgment. How can God make Appeals to men, as he doth, if they had not a power of judging that they ought to have done otherwiſe, and might have done otherwiſe than they did? Tho man hath not a ſufficient light left in his Nature for ſalvation, yet he hath ſuch a light of Reaſon in him, to which he might be more faithful in his motions than he is; otherwiſe the Apoſtle could not have argued from that light the Heathens had, to their Conviction, as he doth, Rom. 1. 19, 20, 21, &c. and manifeſts their unfaithfulneſs to that Truth which God had manifeſted to them, and manifeſted in them in their Nature. Moſt ſins do ariſe from the neglect of being guided by that light which is in Men.

(4.) The Glory of God's Wiſdom in the Government of the World, would not have been ſo conſpicuous, if ſome liberty had not been allowed to the Will. * 'Tis no great matter to keep in order an inaninate thing; as a Clock that muſt obey a neceſſity: God would have been but like a good Clock-keeper only (as one ſaith). But how much doth it make for the Wiſdom of God, to make the free motions of his Creature, the various humors in the Will of man, center at last in his own glory, contrary to the Will and Design of the Creature; that they have their natural motions, their voluntary motions; and God superintends over them, and moves them according to his own Will, regularly according to their Nature, without crossing them? The determinate Counsel of God, in the Death of our Saviour, and the Free Will of Pilate,* and the Jews, meet in the same point. God acting wisely, graciously, justly; their Wills acting freely and naturally, reduced without injury to their Nature, to the due point of God's Will.

Quest. 3. The Third Question: How far doth the power of man by common Grace extend?

Answ. As in a body deprived of the soul, there is some power of growth left in the Hair and Nails; so some power is left in the soul, tho it be spiritually dead. As a regenerate man by special Grace, hath a power of doing that which is spiritually good; so a natural man by common Grace hath a power of doing things morally good, if he will. God keeps the Key of regenerating Grace in his own hands, and unlocks what hearts he pleases, and brings in a vital Spirit into whom he pleases: but there is by common Grace an ability in men to do more than they do, but that they harbour, cherish, and increase those vitious inclinations in their own souls. But let it be remembred, that this power is not to be abstracted from God's common Grace, as the power of a renewed man after Grace, is not to be abstracted from special Grace; nor the natural powers of motion to the actual motion, not to be abstracted from God's general providential concourse.

(1.) Man hath a power by common Grace to avoid many sins. I say, a power by common Grace: For sometime upon the neglecting the conduct of natural light, God pulls up the Sluce of his restraining-Grace; lets out the Torrent of their natural corruption upon them, which forcibly hurries them to all kind of Wickedness; as 'tis said, Rom. 7. 24, 26. Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleaness, through the lusts of their own hearts: for this cause God gave them up to vile affections. Wherefore, and for this cause; that is, for going contrary to that natural light they had, God let the lusts of their own hearts, which he had restrained, have their full swinge against them. In this case sin can no more be avoided, than a man can stop a Torrent.

Again: Tho a man, as he is in a state of Nature, cannot but do evil, yet he is not necessitated to this or that kind of sin, but he may avoid this or that pro hic and nunc in particular, tho he cannot in general: As a man who hath the liberty of walking where he pleases in a Prison, he may chuse whether he will come into this or that Walk within the liberty of the Prison; but let him move which way he will, he is a Prisoner still.

Quest. If it be said, If a man hath power to avoid this or that sin, why may he not avoid all?

Ans. I answer, If he had power to avoid all, he would be restored to the state of Adam. * But the reason is this: The power to avoid this or that particular sin, ariseth from a particular cause, the natural subjection of Appetite to Reason, the lightness of temptation; or if the temptation be more vehement, the stirring up Reason, and pressing Considerations against it: But the power to shun all sin, depends upon the subordination of the Faculties one to another, in the due order of their Creation, and an universal subjection of them to God. Tho a man by a careful Watch, may withstand a particular temptation, yet as long as he is alienated from God, and hath corrupt habits in him, which are prone to sinful acts, he will one time or other, by some sudden temptation, be carried out according to his natural inclination, before he is able to premeditate, and set Reason on work. And sometimes the motions to sin come in such Troops, that he cannot stir up his force against all; so that while he is combating against one, another comes behind, and surpriseth him. As another Romanist illustrates it *: A Vessel hath Three holes to leak at, a man with Two hands, may stop Two of them, which he will; but the Third will remain open of necessity. None will say, that the Devil can avoid all sin in general, and become holy for the

* Fitz Herbert Policy and Religion, part 2. chap. 16. Sect. 13.

the future, becauſe his Will is determined to ſin; but this or that individual act of ſin he may: For he may chuſe whether he will aſſault this man, or that, with ſuch a temptation; or whether at this time or another: As if two commands were given to the good Angels, and it be left to their Wills, whether they will do that or the other, tho they cannot but do good, becauſe their Wills are ſo determined, yet they have a liberty to chuſe which command they will at preſent follow. And the reaſon of this, is this: There is no Phyſical neceſſity upon a man to this or that ſin, as there is that the fire ſhould burn. Luſts only ſuffer themſelves; they have no force upon a man, but by his own Will; they have no authority from God to compel him; then God ſhould be the Author of ſin. Satan can give no Commiſſion to them to break open our hearts. And tho he be a ſtrong Adverſary, he cannot break them open.. If the door be open, it is our own act. Is there any neceſſity upon a man to run into this or that infectious company, or drink brim-full Cups, till he hath drowned both his Reaſon and Sentiments of Morality? Hath he not power to quell many incentives to ſin? Show me that man in the World, that upon ſerious conſideration would ſay, 'tis utterly impoſſible for him to avoid this or that particular ſin, when he is tempted to it. What men do in this caſe, they do willingly, tho a ſtrong temptation may be the firſt motive of it: 'Tis ſaid, Hoſ. 5. 11. Ephraim willingly walked after the commandment, tho the firſt motive to it was the command of their Prince Jeroboam.

To evidence this, let me do it by ſome Queries, which may both ſatisfie, that we diveſt not man of all power, and prevent the ill uſe men may make of this Doctrine, to encourage ſluggiſhneſs.

1. Cannot you avoid this or that foreſeen occaſion of ſin? Cannot he that knows how prone he is to overthrow his Reaſon, when the Wine ſparkles in the Glaſs, avoid coming within the ſight of it? What force is there upon his legs to go, or his hands to take the Cup? Can we not ſtarve thoſe affections we have to this or that particular ſin, by neglecting the means to feed them? If a man ſtood by with a drawn Sword to ſtab you, if you went into ſuch a place, could you not forbear going in? What is the Reaſon? Fear. And why might not a natural fear of God, heightned by conſideration, be of as much force with you, as the fear of man, unleſs Atheiſm hath ſwallowed up all ſentiments of a Deity? Do you not rather wiſh for opportunities, and court a temptation? Put your heads out of the Window with Siſera's Mother; why is the Chariot of the Devil ſo long a coming? 'Tis ſaid, Prov. 21. 10. The ſoul of the wicked deſires evil.

2. Have you not a power to avoid groſs ſins? Is there any force upon men, to open, ſenſual ſins? Have they not a power to abſtain from fleſhly luſts? Has not the Will a commanding power over the Members? What hinders it from exerciſing that power? The Members are not forced, but they are yielded up by conſent of the Will to ſin, Rom. 6. 19. Had not Achan as much natural power to forbear taking the Wedg of Gold, and the Babyloniſh Garment, as the reſt of that vaſt number of the Iſraelites? Not one of their hands touched any of the Spoil? Had he not as much power as any of them, to have reſtrained his hands, tho he could not quench his covetouſneſs? The Law of Nature tells us, we ought not to do that to another, which we would not have done to our ſelves. Have we not as much power to obſerve this, as the Gentiles, who did by Nature the things contained in the Law? Why may not a man's Will command his Tongue to ſpeak that which is true, as well as that which is falſe? Is there not power to controul it from ſpeaking Blaſphemy, and belching out curſed Oaths? Cannot you command the hand to forbear ſtriking another wrongfully? Has not a Murderer power to keep his Sword in his Scabbard, as well as to ſheath it in his Neighbours Bowels? Can any man ſay, that there was one groſs ſin in the whole courſe of his life, but he had a power to avoid it if he would? Forbearance of groſs ſin conſiſts in a naked omiſſion, and a not acting, which is far more eaſie than a poſitive acting; and every man hath a power to ſuſpend his own act.

3. Did

3. Did you never reſiſt a temptation to a particular ſin? Why may you not then reſiſt it afterward, if you will, ſince the ſame common Grace attends you? If the Will be diſengaged one moment from a ſin, under a great temptation, why not another moment from ſin, under a leſs temptation? No temptation can over-power your ſtrength, unleſs the Will freely ſhake hands with it, Acts 5. 3. Why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Ghoſt? His meaning is not, why Satan hath done it; for Ananias could not render a Reaſon of that; but why didſt thou ſuffer Satan to fill thy heart? If you have given a check to Satan before, is it not as eaſie to ſay again, Get thee behind me Satan?

4. Have you not power to ſhun many inward ſins? Man, where he hath leaſt power, yet he hath ſome; viz. over his thoughts. We cannot indeed hinder the firſt riſings and motions of them, which will ſteam up from the corrupt fumes, and lake, whether we will or no: but cannot we hinder the progreſs of them? Is there not a power to check the delight in them, if we will, or divert our thoughts another way, not liſten to their ſuggeſtions, and hold no inward converſe with them? Tho you cannot hinder their intruſion, may you not hinder their lodging? How long ſhall vain thoughts lodg within you? Jer. 4. 14. Sure we have a power by common Grace, to forbear any converſe with the motions of fleſh and blood.

5. When you do ſin, had you not many aſſiſtances againſt it, which if you had hearkned to, you might have avoided it? Were there not previous diſſwaſions from that inward Monitor, Conſcience? When ſin hath been enticing you on one hand, and Conſcience warning you on the other, have you not more willingly liſtned unto the pleaſant reaſoning of ſin, than the wholeſome admonitions of Conſcience? Can you not as well liſten to what Conſcience, as to what ſin doth propoſe? But have you not willfully ſcorn'd its judgment? Have you not raged againſt it with a confidence in ſin (which is the caſe of the fooliſh ſinner Prov. 14. 16. The fool rageth, and is confident), and would not conſider any of the ways of God it minded you of, Job 34. 27. and gave no more regard to its ſober Dictates, or its louder preſſings, than you have to the barking of little Curs in the ſtreet? Why could you not with thoſe aſſiſtances have avoided that particular act of ſin? The fault was clearly in your Wills. Can you not rather chuſe a Cup of Wine, than a Cup of Poyſon? clear ſtreams, than muddy Waters? Beſides thoſe aſſiſtances, you might have had more, if under the batteries of temptation you had ſought to Heaven for them. Might you not then have avoided this or that ſin, when you had ſuch aſſiſtances, and might have had more?

6. Have you not avoided ſin upon leſs accounts and conſiderations? * The Heathen Philoſopher could obſerve, that men may live better than they do: The Wreſtlers and Champions in the Olympick Games, lived moſt temperately and continently during that time, to be more fit for the gaining the prize. May not rational conſiderations do as much, if excited in your minds, as an ambitious deſire of honour and affection to victory did in them? Had not Saul a power to withdraw his hand from the unrighteous perſecution of David before, as well as when he was ſenſible of David's kindneſs in ſparing his life when he might have killed him? A Drunkard under the Diſeaſe and Pain cauſed by his ſin, can forbear his Cups: Doth his Diſeaſe confer any power upon him, more than he had before? No. Why could he not then have forborn his Drunken Revellings? Can men be reſtrained from ſome ſins by the eye of a man, the preſence of a child? What power do their eyes confer upon them? They only excite that which they had before. Cannot men forbear a ſinful act for a ſum of money, if it were proffered them, or in the preſence of a King, who is ſaid to ſcatter away evil with his eyes, Prov. 20. 8. or in a viſible and imminent danger? If a Gibbet, or a Stake were ſet before men, that they ſhould be immediately Executed, if they did not forbear ſuch a ſinful action, or if they did not go to hear a Sermon? Can any be ſo fooliſh, to think that the gliſter of Gold, the penalty of the Law, the ſight of a Gibbet, ſhould confer a power upon you, which you were not before fore poſſeſt with? 'Tis not then the want of power to avoid ſin, but the want of will.

7. Why doth Conſcience check any man after the commiſſion of ſin, if it were not in his power to avoid it? All thoſe actions which fall under the cognizance and check of Conſcience, are actions in our own power, and within the verge of our Wills. For the pain of Conſcience is of another kind than that pain or grief which is raiſed by thoſe accidents we could not avoid. It ariſeth from the liberty of the Will, and galls the Soul when it conſiders, that that which it hath done, was in its power to be done otherwiſe. This is the common Language of men upon the regrets of Conſcience: I might have done otherwiſe, I was warned by my Friends; I ſlighted their warnings, I had reſolutions to the contrary, but I ſtifled them. All men have laid the fault upon themſelves; and what is univerſal conſent, hath a truth in it: the Conſciences of all men would not gall them for that which they had no power to decline. Indeed if men were neceſſitated to ſin, they could not be tormented in Hell, for the torment there is Conſcience acting rationally, and reflecting upon them for their wilfulneſs in the World: If man had not a power to refuſe ſin, Conſcience would have no ground for any ſuch reflections to rack and torment them. And it is obſervable, that natural Men ſomewhat awakened upon a death-bed, are not ſo rackt by their Conſciences ſimply for not being Regenerate, as for not avoiding thoſe ſins which were hinderances, and not uſing thoſe means which were appointments of God for ſuch an end, becauſe thoſe were in their power; but they wilfully embraced the one, and as wilfully refuſed the other.

2. Propoſition. Man hath a power by common Grace, to do many more good actions, (actions materially good) than he doth. Evangelical works we cannot do without union to Chriſt; ſo himſelf ſaith, without me you can do nothing, John 15. 5. nothing according to the order of the Goſpel, nothing Spiritually, nothing acceptably, becauſe no ſuch fruits can ariſe, where Faith, the Root of ſuch Works, is wanting. Tho man be much crippled in regard of Morals, yet he is not wholly dead to them, as he is to Spirituals. A man may break off his ſins by Moral Righteouſneſs, and his iniquity by ſhowing mercy to the poor; by taking off the Yoke of oppreſſion, and reſtoring of what he hath rifled; which counſel Daniel gives to Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 4. 27. Tho a ſick man cannot do all the acts of a ſound man till he be perfectly cured; yet he hath ſome power of acting ſome things like a ſound man, remaining with his Diſeaſe. The young man in the Goſpel (yet out of Chriſt) morally kept the Law; ſo may men under the Goſpel keep the outward and material part of the precept. There are not only ſome common notions left ſince the fall, but alſo ſome ſeeds of Moral Righteouſneſs in the Nature of man. The Gentiles did not only by Nature in part reſtored know the things written in the Law, but they did by Nature do them, Rom. 2. 14. upon this ſtock they bore many excellent fruits. What Patience, Chaſtity, contempt of the pleaſures of the World? What Affections to their Country, and bowels of compaſſion to men in miſery? And what Devotion in the external Worſhip of their gods, according to their light, were exemplary in them, tho only under the conduct of Nature? And theſe works, tho they were not according to the exactneſs of the Law, and failed alſo in the manner of them, and could not pleaſe God for want of Faith, yet ſo far as they were agreeable to the Law of Nature, and in regard of the materiality of them, were not offenſive to God: this Moral Righteouſneſs of theirs was only external, and rather an image of Righteouſneſs, than a true one. Abimelech had a natural integrity, which God acknowledges to be in him, and did ariſe from his Moral Nature, tho he alſo appropriates to himſelf the reſtraint of Abimelech, and his concurrence with an approbation of that Moral Integrity: Gen. 20. 6. I know that thou didſt this in the integrity of thy heart: for I alſo withheld thee from ſinning againſt me, therefore ſuffered I thee not to touch her; נתתיך I gave thee not up to touch her. If men did nouriſh a Moral Integrity, which they might do, God would concur with them to preſerve them from many crimes. If thoſe which were only under the guidance of natural light, had ſo much power to do many Moral acts by a common Grace; Is mans power leſs under the Goſpel, whereby they have an addition dition of a greater light to this natural? If man was able to do ſo much by the Light of Nature, there can be no inability brought upon him under the Light of the Goſpel, unleſs men by their ſluggiſhneſs and obſtinacy, provoke God judicially to deprive them of that power, and withdraw his hand from them, and ſo give them up to all kind of wickedneſs, as it is the dreadful caſe of many in theſe days. Man may keep the Law of Nature better than he doth; and for not keeping that, he is condemned *.

* Preſton, Vol. 3. pag. 39.

3. Propoſition. Men have a power to attend upon the outward means God hath appointed for Regeneration. Tho man cannot renew himſelf, yet he hath a natural power to attend upon the means God hath afforded. Tho a man hath not power to cure his own Diſeaſe or heal his Wound, yet he hath power to adviſe with others, and uſe the beſt Medicines for his recovery. There is not an outward duty a renewed Man doth, but a Natural man hath power externally to do it; tho what is eſſentially good in all parts, cannot be done without ſpecial Grace, yet what is externally good may be done by the aſſiſtance of common Grace. Have you not Paſſions, Fear, Love, Deſire, Grief? Why cannot you exerciſe them about other Objects than ordinarily they are employed about? Why can you not make Hell the Object of your Fears, and Heaven the Object of your Deſire? Why might not Eſau have wept for his ſins as well as for the loſs of the Bleſſing? Might he not have changed the Object if he would? Why may we not exerciſe our inward Affections more in our attendance on God? Is not a little excuſe ſufficient to put off from duty, a great excuſe not ſufficient to keep you from committing ſin? Great buſineſs muſt be laid aſide for ſin, not the leaſt laid aſide for God; every little thing is a Lyon in the way then; do you not many times rack your minds to invent Pleas for neglect of duty? Why can you not ſet them on work to conſider reaſons to move you to ſervice? Have we not power to be more ſerious in the uſe of means than we are? We can be ſo when ſome Affliction preſſes us, or Conſcience gnaws us: neither of theſe furniſhes us with a new power: Conſcience is like the Law, acquaints us with our duty, but gives us no ſtrength. The charge God brings againſt Ephraim, was, That he would not frame his doings to turn towards God, Hoſ. 5. 4. he would entertain no thoughts, not one action that had the leaſt proſpect towards Repentance; he would uſe no means for that end, or have a look that way. If a man will not do what is in his power, 'tis a ſign he will not be renewed. Can he pretend to a deſire to live, who will not eat, and endeavour to prevent foreſeen dangers? Or can he pretend to a deſire to build, that will not uſe materials when he may?

There are two great means: Hearing the Word, and Prayer.

(1.) Hearing the Word. Have not men power to go to hear the Word, to hear a Sermon, as well as to ſee a Play? Have they any ſhackles upon their Feet that they cannot carry them to a place of Worſhip, as well as to a place of Vanity and Sin? Can you not as well read the Scripture as a Romance? Hath not the Will a deſpotick power over the members of the Body? How came Herod to have more natural power to hear the word, and to hear it with pleaſure, Mark 6. 20. than other men have? May you not ſtrive againſt diverſions, reſiſt carnal affection, rouze up your Souls from their lazineſs, and endeavour to cloſe with the word? How ſmilingly would God look upon ſuch endeavours? If men do not, 'tis out of a natural ſluggiſhneſs and enmity of Will, not for want of power if they would; men do not what they might. Certainly he doth no more deſire Regeneration, who neglects and deſpiſeth the great inſtrument of it, than he can be ſaid to deſire his own preſervation, who neglects Medicines proper for the cure of his Diſeaſe.

(2.) Prayer. I do not mean a Spiritual Prayer, which is by the ſpecial aſſiſtance and in-dwelling of the Holy Ghoſt; but of a natural Prayer by common inſtinct; ſuch a one as the Apoſtle puts Simon Magus upon, who he knew was deſtitute of any Air of the Spirit to breathe out, as being in the gall of bitterneſs, and bond of iniquity, Acts 8. 22, 23. yet ſuppoſeth him to have a power in ſome manner to expreſs his deſires to God: or ſuch a power that was common in Heathens upon any diſtreſs to run to their Altars, and fill their Temples with cries to their their Gods. You cannot pray in the Holy Ghoſt; but you may ſend up natural and rational cries to God. Did not Jonah's Mariners cry every man to his God? Have you not as much power to cry to the true God, as the Heathens to falſe ones? There is the natural Prayer of thoſe Mariners, as well as the natural Integrity of Abimelech, which was not a New-Covenant-Integrity. Can you not be as devout as the Publican, and cry with more ſeriouſneſs of Affection than generally men do; Lord be merciful to me a ſinner? When men are upon a Death-bed, ready to take their leave of the World, they can then cry; 'tis not their Death-bed inſpires them with power, more than they had before; but they have more mind, and ſee a greater neceſſity of crying to God. They have more power in the time of their health, by how much the habit of ſin wanted that ſtrength which hath been acquired by a continuance of acts till the time of their ſickneſs; For the fewer ſins have been committed, the leſs is the power impaired. Tho God hath kept other things in his hand, yet he hath given us a power of begging, if we will uſe it as a means to obtain them. Can you not kneel down before God, and implore his aſſiſtance? Can you not acknowledg before him, that it is impoſſible for you to change your ſelf, but that your eyes are upon his Grace; that you cannot attain by your own ſtrength a ſpiritual heart; that you will ſeek no where elſe for it, but from his hand; and that you will not be at reſt till he hath put in his hand, and dropped upon your hearts? Can you not thus cry out, Oh that I were a renewed perſon! as well as cry out, Oh that I were rich and honourable in the World! Had Paul a new Tongue, when he cried out, Who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? Was it not the ſame Member, wherein he had breathed out threatnings againſt the Diſciples?

4. Propoſition. Man hath a power to exerciſe conſideration. He hath ſeminals of Jus and Aquum, and a power of judging according to them, Luke 12. 57. Yea, why even of your ſelves judg you not what is right? Our Saviour checks them for not making uſe of their natural power, in the ſearching their own Conſciences, and judging their own Acts, as well as they did in diſcerning the face of the sky, and what Weather would follow. There is a power of conſideration in a rebellious heart; for God acknowledges it in a rebellious Nation, Ezek. 12. 3. It may be they will conſider, tho they be a rebellious houſe.

1. Can you not reflect upon your ſelves? Every man hath a reflexive Faculty; otherwiſe he is not a man. Reflexion is the peculiar priviledg of a rational Creature, without which he is not rational: The Phariſees could reflect upon themſelves, and ſay, Are we blind alſo? John 9. 40. Can you not then take a ſurvey of your paſt lives; caſt up the Accounts of your Souls, as well as your Books? Can you not view your particular Crimes, with the aggravations attending them? Yea, you can, if you would. Can you not look back upon the means you have neglected, the love you have ſlighted, and the light you have ſhut your eyes againſt? As long as a man hath Reaſon, he may uſe his Reaſon in theſe things, as well as in others. Why may he not reflect upon himſelf in ſpiritual Concerns, as well as civil Affairs in the World? Cannot he by comparing the Face of his Soul with the Glaſs of the Word, underſtand his own ſtate, and by ſelf-reflection, come to an underſtanding of his own loſt condition and weakneſs?

2. Can you not conſider the Word? Cannot your Reaſons be employed about the Objects the Word offers, as well as the Objects the World offers? Tho you cannot act ſpiritually in the Duties of Religion, can you not act rationally in them, as Men? Are you endued with a rational ſoul, to conſider the propoſals of Worldly Affairs and Concerns, and can you not exerciſe the ſame power in conſidering the propoſal made to you by the Goſpel? The Goſpel is not only ſpiritual, but rational. As long as you have a thinking Faculty, can you not conſider what the reaſonable meaning of it is? Tho you have not a ſpiritual Taſte, you have a rational Underſtanding: Why may it not be buſied about one Object as well as another? The natural repentance of the Ninivites at Jonah's preaching, implied the conſideration of his threatning Sermon. Why is there not a power in you to think of what is propoſed to you out of the Word, as well as you can think of what you read of a Mathematical, or Philoſophical Book, or ſome Hiſtory? The power is the ſame in both, the faculty the ſame. As the Object propoſed adds no power to the Faculty, ſo it takes away no power the Faculty already hath. Surely man is not ſuch a block or ſtone, but he may turn theſe things over and over, preſs them upon his own ſoul, which may make way for the ſenſibleneſs of his ſtate, and putting the Will out of its ſinful indifference. What any natural man hath done, that may all under the ſame means do, if they will. Why may not the vrieſt Wretch among us, humble himſelf at the hearing of the Word, as well as wicked Ahab? 1 Kings 21.27, 29. When Ahab heard theſe words, he rent his clothes. Seeſt thou, how Ahab humbleth himſelf! He diſcovered an external humiliation, after the conſideration of the threatning denounced by the Prophet.

3. Can you not cheriſh, by conſideration, thoſe motions which are put into you? There is not a man but the Spirit ſtrives with, one time or other, Gen. 6. 3. Hath not man a power to approve any good counſel given him, if he will? Have you not had ſome ſupernatural motions lifting you up towards God, and preſſing Obligations upon you, to walk more circumſpectly? Why might you not have cheriſhed them, as well as ſmothered them? Why could you not have conſidered the tendency of them, as well as have conſidered how to divert and drown them, by engaging in ſome ſenſual Luſt? Was the power of conſideration loſt? No: You could not then have caſt about in your minds, by what means you ſhould be rid of them, or how you ſhould reſiſt them. Have you not willfully rejected them, even when conſideration hath been reviv'd at a Sermon? And yet you did induſtriouſly let that good motion die for want of blowing up the ſpark, by following on the conſideration which was raiſed upon its feet. When you have begun well, who did hinder you from a further obedience? This perſwaſion comes not of him that calls you, Gal. 5. 7, 8. There was no neceſſity upon you, to fortifie your ſelves in your corrupted Habits againſt the attempts of the Spirit. Could you not as well have fallen down before the Throne of Grace, to have begged Grace to ſecond them, as kickt at them, and ſpurned them away? Was it want of power to do otherwiſe? or was it not rather your own obſtinate willfulneſs? Since I appeal to you, whether your own Conſciences have not tugged at you, and ſpurred you on at ſuch ſeaſons, why could you not then beg of God, that ſuch a good motion might not have departed out of your Coaſts? Becauſe a man cannot renew himſelf, therefore to lye down in ſluggiſhneſs, is not the deſign of this Doctrine.

4. Can you not conſider thoſe notions you have by natural light? Man hath a Conſcience which minds him of moral good, and pulls him from evil. No man can deprive himſelf of theſe. It will check in thoſe things wherein others commend us, and commend us in thoſe things wherein others accuſe us. May we not obſerve the motions of Conſcience within us? May we not conſider the charge it brings againſt us for any act committed, ſo as to avoid the like for the future; and the excuſations of Conſcience, in commanding us, ſo as to do the like acts for the future? As we have a Law vvithout us, vvhich vve may conſider, ſo vve have a Conſcience vvithin us, vvhich vvitneſſeth to the equity of the Lavv, accuſing us for vvhat vve do contrary to it, and excuſing us for vvhat vve do in obſervance of it, Rom. 2. 15. and this in man's corrupt ſtate. Cannot man then obſerve the Dictates of Conſcience? Can he not find out the ſenſe of this Lavv in his mind, tho it be much blurr'd? Cannot he act like a man, in following the Dictates of this rational Principle, as well as like a beaſt follow the allurements of ſenſe? No rational Principle in man, puts him upon evil, but upon moral good: Whatſoever draws him from good, or puts him upon evil, are Principles common to him with one brute or other, profit, pleaſure, honour, all which are found in ſome Beaſt or other. Why may not a man then conſider the rational reports of his own Conſcience, as well as the brutiſh whiſperings of ſenſe? But doth not man endeavour to ſhuffle off his Conſcience, and is mighty jolly when it keeps ſilence, or when he can ſtop its mouth with an excuſe? Do not men willfully choak the ſentiments of it, and keep the Truth depoſited in their ſouls, in unrighteouſneſs, Rom. 1. 18. and like the ſcorner, hear not its rebukes, Prov. 13. 1.? Whatſoever man hath by the Reliques of natural light, he may think of: He knows by Nature there is a God; he knows ſomething of his Attributes, and of his Law: May not thoſe be his morning-thoughts? Is he not ſtirred up ſometimes to contemplate on them? May he not do it at other times, ſince this common Grace is always with him, and leaves him not, till he leaves valuing and embracing its divine aſſiſtances? Let it be remembred, that in all this which man may do, the power is to be aſcribed to common Grace through a Mediator, keeping up by his interpoſition the Pillars of the Earth, and preſerving ſome Reliques of natural light, and the ſeeds of moral righteouſneſs in man: Not in the leaſt to be aſcribed to bare Nature and that man's corrupt Will, ſtuft with ſinful Habits, is the cauſe he makes no uſe of this power.

Queſt. 2. If we have not an ability to renew our ſelves, why doth God command us to do ſo? And why doth God make promiſes to men, if they will turn? Is not this a cruelty? as if a man ſhould command another to run a Race, and promiſe to reward him if he did, and yet bind him with Fetters, that he cannot run? Both the command would be unjuſt, and the promiſe ridiculous.

Anſ. In General. God may command, and his command doth not ſignifie a preſent ability in man.

He may command, becauſe we have Faculties ſuited to the command, in reſpect of their ſubſtance. For the death of a ſinner was not a Phyſical death, but a Moral. Man loſt not his Faculties, but the rectitude of them: he loſt the purity of his ſight, the integrity of his Will, but not the Underſtanding and Will it ſelf.

(2.) God's command doth not ſignifie a preſent moral ability to perform it. God's command, which acquaints us with our preſent duty, is no argument of a preſent power: For if a command ſignified more than the duty man owes, it ſignified more than a command in its own Nature could ſignifie. God's command to us to renew our ſelves, implies no more an ability inherent in the Creature to do ſo, than Chriſt's Voice to putrifying Lazarus; Lazarus ariſe, come forth, John 11. 43. implied a power in Lazarus to raiſe himſelf; or his ſpeech to the Palſie Cripple, Ariſe, take up thy bed, implied a power in himſelf to do it himſelf, before a ſupernatural conveyance of it. Do not men exhort every day to Sobriety, thoſe that have contracted a profound Habit of Drunkenneſs and Luſt, that Philoſophy doth acknowledg 'tis not poſſible for them to abſtain from; yet no man accuſeth thoſe that exhort them, of Impertinence, nor thoſe that chaſtiſe them, of Injuſtice God's Commands are not the Meaſures of our ſtrength, but the Rule of our duty, and do not teach us what we are, but what we ſhould be.

But to clear this more particularly:

God may command, tho Man hath not a preſent moral ability to renew himſelf. For

[1.] Firſt: Man once had a power to do whatſoever God would command him; he had a power to cleave to God. He had not elſe, in Juſtice, been capable of any ſuch injunction: There had been ground of a complaint, and charge againſt God, if man had been created defective in any of thoſe abilities neceſſary for his obedience to this Command. The Command is juſt; God would not elſe have impoſed it, becauſe of his righteouſneſs; And every man's Conſcience teſtifies, That it is highly juſt he ſhould honour God, love God, and cleave to God. If it were juſt, then Man was capable to perform this Command; for Man, as a rational Creature, is capable of a Law, and cannot be governed otherwiſe: and no Law could be given ſo proper for him, as to ſtand right to his Creator. Since therefore the Law was juſt in it ſelf, and ſince God did juſtly impoſe it, Man was certainly created by God in a capacity to obſerve it. No queſtion but God, who furniſht other Creatures with an ability to attain their ſeveral ends, and perform the Orders God had ſet them in at the Creation, was not leſs indulgent to Man. He that was not deficient to the lower Creatures, would not be deficient to the nobleſt of his ſublunary Works. He would have been worſe in his rank, without a ſufficient ſtock, than other Creatures were in theirs. There would not have been a Phyſical goodneſs and perfection, ſuitable to his ſtation in the World, and his excellency above other Creatures. How could God then have pronounced him good, among the reſt of his Works, if there had been in his Creation, a natural inability to anſwer the end of his Creation? If God had created man in ſuch a ſtate, that he could not do righteouſly, and yet commanded him to do righteouſly, and becauſe he did not, puniſh him; he would have been unjuſt: As if a man ſhould command another, to reach a thing too high for him, and that when his hands were tied behind him, and becauſe he did not, beat him: This would have been the caſe, had not man had power at firſt to do righteouſly. Had man preſerved himſelf in that created ſtate, no juſt Command of God (and it was impoſſible any unjuſt Command ſhould have proceeded from Infinite Righteouſneſs) would have been too hard, and too high for him.

2. God did not deprive man of this ability. Man was not ſtript of his Original Righteouſneſs by God; for Man had loſt it before ever God ſpake to him, or paſſed any Sentence upon him after his Fall, Gen. 3. 10. I was naked. If God had taken it away, without any offence of Adam, he might have expoſtulated the caſe. It had been alike unjuſt, as if God had never given him power at firſt to obſerve the Command he enjoyned him. It would have been unreaſonable to require that of man, which God himſelf had made impoſſible. * But God did not take away Man's Original Righteouſneſs. If God had taken it away before Man's Fall, then Man was unrighteous before he fell: And God taking it away from him while he was perfect, had made him of an holy and righteous man, unholy and prophane: As he that deprives a Malefactor of his ſight, for his demerit, makes him of ſeeing, blind. If God took it away after he ſpake to Adam in the Garden, it would then follow, that Adam was righteous after his Fall, till God deprived him of it, and ſo was innocent while he was ſinful, and ſtrong while he was weak. God did not take it away from him before, but had told him, that the loſs of it would be the natural conſequent of his eating the Forbidden Fruit, Gen. 2. 17. Nor after; for after, we find only Temporal Puniſhments threatned. God indeed did judicially deny him the reſtoration of it, which as a Governour and a Judg he might juſtly do, reſolving to govern him in another manner than before. So that it would be an unjuſt imputation on God, to ſay, God cut off man's legs, and then commanded him to run, and come to him. What if God did foreſee that man would fall, was God therefore the cauſe of his Fall? God's preſcience, tho it is infallible, is not the cauſe of a thing, no more than our fore-knowledg that the Sun will riſe to morrow morning is a cauſe of the riſing of it.

* Trigland de grat. p. 275.

3. Therefore ſince God did not deprive Man of it, it follows, That man loſt it himſelf; and not barely loſt it, but caſt it away. He did voluntarily, by an inordinate intention of Will, caſt away this Original Perfection, and fell a hunting after his own inventions, Eccleſ. 7. 29. He did not ſtick to that Command God had given him; nor implore God's aſſiſtance of him, as by his natural ability he might have done. He conſulted not with his Command upon the temptation, but was very willing to caſt off that righteouſneſs wherewith God had endowed him for an affected Godhead. Man readily ſwallowed the Bait; he did not debate the buſineſs with Eve; She gave to her husband with her, and he did eat, Gen. 3. 6. So that the fault was wholly in himſelf, and his preſent ſtate voluntarily contracted: For tho the Devil tempted him, yet he had no power to force him: He was eaſily overcome by him; for it was not a repeated temptation, but a ſurrender at the firſt parley.

4. Therefore God's right of commanding, and Man's obligation of returning, and cleaving to God, remains firm. God's right ſtill remains. God gave him a portion to manage, tho man prodigally ſpent it: God may challenge his own. Cannot a Maſter juſtly challenge that Commodity he ſent his Servant with Money to buy, tho he ſpent it in Drunkenneſs and Gaming? God gave Adam a ſufficient ſtock; he trifled it away: Muſt God's Right ſuffer for his folly, and man's

Crime

Crime deprive God of his power to command? The Obligation to God is natural; therefore indelible: The corruption of the Creature cannot render this first Obligation void. Righteousness is a Debt the Creature, as a rational Creature, owes to God, and cannot refuse the payment of it without a Crime. Who deprived him of the power of paying himself? Should this voluntary imbezelment prejudice God's right of exacting that which the Creature cannot be excused from? A Debtor who cannot pay, remains under the Obligation of paying. The Receipt of a Sum of Money, brings him into the relation of a Debtor, and not his ability to pay what he hath received. Such a Doctrine would free all men who were unable to pay, from being Debtors, tho the Sums they owed were never so vast. That Judg would be unjust, that would excuse a prodigal Debtor, because he could not pay when sued by his Creditor. No doubt but the Devils are bound to serve God, and love him, tho by their revolt they have lost the Will to obey him. If because we have no present power, our Obligation to turn to God, and obey him, ceased, there would be no sin in the World, and consequently no Judgments. Who will say, That if a Prince had such rebellious Subjects, that there were little hopes to reclaim them, he should be therefore bound not to command them to return to their duty and obedience? If it be reasonable in a Prince, whose Rights are limited, shall it not be reasonable in God to exact it, who hath an unbounded right over his Creature? Either God must keep up his Law, or abrogate it; or which is all one, let it lie in the dust. His Holiness obligeth him to keep up his Law; to abrogate it therefore, would be against his Holiness. To declare a willingness that his Creature should not love him, should not obey him, would be to declare that which is unjust, because Love is a just Debt to an amiable Object and the chief good, and Obedience to a Soveraign Lord. Must God change his Holiness, because man hath changed his state? The Obligation of Man remaining perpetual, the Right of God to demand, remains perpetual too, notwithstanding the Creatures casting himself into an insolvent condition. If Man still owes this duty to God, why may not God exact his Right of Man? Much more may God call for a right use of those Means and Gifts he hath, as a Benefactor, bestowed upon Man since his Fall. No Man will deny this Right to God, upon serious thoughts. These New Gifts and Means, were given him not only for himself, but for his Lord, to improve for his Glory. God may justly require the right use of those Moral Principles, and Evangelical Means, for the ends for which he appointed them.

5. It will appear more reasonable, because God demands no more; nay, not so much as he required of Adam in innocency. 'Tis but obedientia redintegrata, a return in part to that perfect holiness which was inherent in Man, and to that obedience in part, which was in a greater measure due to God: As when a Prince demands the return of Rebels, he demands a restoration of that subjection which they paid him before. God required a perfect obedience in the first Covenant; he requires not so much in the second, so that for want of it a Creature shall be cast off; But a sincere obedience is required, tho not in degree perfect. Adam had a fundamental power in him, to perform that obedience which is required in Faith and Repentance, the Two great parts of Regeneration. Faith is nothing but an embracing, and accepting of Christ the Mediator. Adam had a power of believing and accepting Christ for his Head, had he been proposed to him in Paradise, as the Mediator of consistency and confirmation, and the Vinculum of holding him for ever close to God. Had not Adam a power to accept him under this Notion, as well as the good Angels have accepted him for their Head, and worship him as Mediator; that is, pay him an obedience as Mediator, when he comes into the World? Heb. 1. 6. Had he not a fundamental power to grieve, tho since sin was extraneous to a state of Innocency, he could not have exercised that grief for himself, Repentance being extraneous to obedience, and unmeet for him in a sinless state? Suppose God had commanded him to grieve for the sins of the fallen Angels, Adam having this Passion in his Nature, might have done it: He might have known what sin was in them, and might have grieved ved for the diſhonour of God by them; even as our Saviour did grieve for the ſins of others, Mark 3. 5. who knew no ſin himſelf: And in grieving for his own ſin, there was only a change of the Object.

6. 'Tis yet more reaſonable if we conſider, That every natural man thinks he hath a power to renew himſelf, and turn to God when he will. Practically, tho not all of them notionally. What reaſon then hath Man to quarrel with God, and accuſe him of demanding that which he thinks he can give to God, and will not at preſent, but take his own time to do it when he ſees it fit? This practical Opinion runs in the Veins of every natural Man, under the Goſpel, as well as in the Heathens, which appears by the general wilful delays of Men about their eternal concerns, by their vows and reſolutions upon the blows of Conſcience of reforming their lives, and becoming new Men, without having recourſe to the Grace of God, or taking any notice of him in their reſolves. This I think is a clear caſe. Yet a little more ſleep, ſaith a man, that thinks he can riſe time enough when he will, and diſpatch his buſineſs in a moment, Prov. 6. 10. With what face can Man accuſe God of not giving him power, when he thinks he hath power enough himſelf? Or be angry with God for demanding his Debt, when he thinks himſelf in a ſolvent condition? No Man will blame another for requiring that of his Servant, which his Servant boaſts he hath power in himſelf to do. The Iſraelites thought ſo when they ſaid, Exod. 24. 3. All the words which the Lord hath ſaid, we will do; without any applications to the Grace of God to enable them. All men are like Iſrael in this; only the Regenerate are moſt ſenſible of their own impotence, and ſcarce any man elſe.

7. From all this it follows, That God is not bound to give Grace to any, and where he doth beſtow it, 'tis an act of his Sovereign pleaſure. If God hath given man power, and never took it away, but it was caſt away by man, therefore Gods right is not prejudiced, but he may juſtly demand of man what once he gave him power to do, eſpecially ſince it is leſs than what man at firſt owed him; and when man thinks he hath power to pay him, it will evidently follow, That God is not bound to give any new power. If God were bound to give a new power to accept of the Goſpel, he were then unjuſt not to confer it; if he be not bound, it is of meer Grace that he beſtows it. God propoſeth pardon to all upon ſuch conditions, but he is not bound to give the condition to any: he commands all to renew their obedience to him, but he is not bound to renew any one perſon. He gives the command to turn, as a Law-giver and Governor; he gives the Grace to ſome to turn, as a Benefactor. 'Tis Grace therefore, not Debt. When God confers it, it is an act of his compaſſionate Mercy; when he denies it, 'tis an act of his juſt Soveraignty. He may, if he pleaſe, ſuffer all Nations to walk in their own ways, Acts 14. 16. Yet if he pleaſe to propoſe the means of Grace to any, the very knowledg of thoſe Myſteries of Heaven is a peculiar Gift, as well as the outward propoſal, Matth. 13. 11. To you it is given to know the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. If we improve Reaſon to the higheſt, God is not obliged to give us Grace, no more than if a Beaſt improved Senſe to the higheſt, he were bound to give him Reaſon. Tho if there could be a man found in any Age of the World, who did improve Reaſon to the utmoſt of his power, I would not doubt Gods giving him the addition of ſupernatural Grace, out of the largeneſs of his Bounty, tho ſtill there is no Obligation upon God, becauſe man doth no more than his duty.

And that God doth not give Grace to all to whom the means are offered, and yet doth command them to turn and promiſe to receive them,

(1.) It doth not entrench upon his ſincerity in his propoſals. * His propoſals are ſerious, tho he knows man will not receive them without an over-powering Grace: and tho he be reſolved not to give the aſſiſtance of his Grace to every one under thoſe means, but leave them to the liberty of their own Wills. The Goſpel is to be conſidered as a command ordering men to believe, or as a promiſe alluring men to be renewed, by repreſenting to them the happineſs of ſuch a ſtate. Conſider it as a command, God is ſerious in it, tho he reſolve not to give Grace to all to whom the Precept comes; for under this conſideration of a command, command, 'tis a declaration of mans Duty, and a demonstration of Gods Soveraign Authority. Doth Gods resolution of not giving Grace weaken the Obligation of man to his duty, or diminish Gods Authority, or give ground to man to charge him with insincerity? Consider it as a Promise, doth it hinder Gods seriousness in it, if he resolve not to give the condition of it to all? 'Tis sufficient to show Gods seriousness in it, to declare, that if men will be Regenerate, it will be very pleasing to him: that he will make good to them what he hath promised: that if they be renewed, he will make good every tittle of the Promise to them; and if they will seek, and ask, and knock, he will not be wanting to them to assist them.

(2.) It doth not disparage his Wisdom to command that to man, which he knows man will not do without his Grace, and so make Promises to man upon the doing it. If man indeed had not a faculty naturally fitted for the Object, it might intrench upon Gods Wisdom, to make Commands and Promises to such a Creature, as it would be to command a Beast to speak. * But man hath a faculty to Understand and Will, which makes him a man; and there is a disposition in the Understanding and Will, which consists in an inclination determined to good or evil, which makes us not to be men, but good or bad men, whereby we are distinguished from one another, as by Reason and Will we are from Plants and Beasts: now the Commands and Exhortations are suitable to our Nature, and respect not our Reason as good or bad, but simply as Reason: these commands presuppose in us a faculty of Understanding and Will, and a suitableness between the command and the faculty of a reasonable Creature. This is the reason why God hath given to us his Law and Gospel, his Commands, not because we are good or bad men, but because we are men endued with Reason, which other Creatures want, and therefore are not capable of Government by a Command. Our Blessed Lord and Saviour did not Exhort Infants, tho he Blessed them, because they were not arrived to the Use of Reason; yet he Exhorted the Jews, many of whose Wills he knew were not determined to good, and whom he told, That they would die in their sins. And tho God had told them, Jer. 13. That they could no more change themselves, than an Ethiopian could his skin; yet he Expostulates with them why they would not be made clean, Verse 27. O Jerusalem, wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be? Because, tho they had an ill disposition in their judgment, yet their judgment remained, whereby to discern of Exhortations if they would. To present a consort of Musick to a deaf Man that cannot hear the greatest sound, were absurd, because sounds are the Object of Hearing; but Commands and Exhortations are the Object not of this or that good constitution of Reason, but of Reason it self.

* Amiraut. Ser. Sur. 2. Phil. 13. p. 383.

(3.) Neither doth it disagree with his Justice. 'Tis so far from being unjust for God to demand what Men are obliged to do, tho he know that they will not do it, that God would be unjust, to himself if he did not demand it, if he let Men trample upon his rights without demanding restitution of them. If a Prince sets forth Edicts to Rebels to return, and promise them pardon upon their returning, tho he knows they are Rebelliously bent, that they will not entertain a thought of coming again under his Scepter, but will still be in Arms, and draw down his wrath upon them; will not all interpret this to be an act of Clemency and Goodness in the Prince? Neither is God an accepter of persons, because he doth not give Grace unto all; for may he not do with his own as he please without injustice? Those to whom we give Alms, have reason to thank us; those to whom we give not an Alms, have no reason to complain; we have gratified the one, but we have done no wrong to the other. We are all by Nature criminals, deserving death; should God leave us in that deplorable estate wherein he found us, can we accuse him of injustice? Those that by Grace are snatcht out of the Pit, have reason to acknowledg it an admirable favour, as indeed it is: those that are destitute of Grace, and by their own wilful rejection left to sink to the bottom, cannot impute their unhappiness to him: for he left them not without witness, he presented them the Word, exhorted them to hearken to him; but instead of paying their duty, they fiercely rejected him, abhorred his Exhortations, and gave themselves over to sin and vice. If a Man proclaim by a Cryer, That

ſuch that can bring ſuch a mark, ſhall receive ſuch an Alms: he ſends this private mark to ſome, they come and receive an Alms; had he not power to do what he pleaſed with his own, to ſend his diſtinguiſhing token to whom he pleaſed? What injuſtice is done to the other, to whom he ſends not this mark?

We have ſhown that God may Command. Let us ſee why God doth Command, when he knows man hath no power to renew himſelf?

The firſt reaſon is,

1. To make us ſenſible of our impotency. The deſign of God is not to ſignify our power to perform it, but ſenſibly to affect us with our inability, that we may be the better prepared for a remedy. As the Moral Law was given with ſuch terrifying marks, to make Men deſpair in themſelves; and the Ceremonial Law annext to it, to give ſome glimps of a Mediator, in whom they might have ſtrength. And therefore when the Iſraelites were ſo affected, Deut. 18. 16, 17, 18. as to deſire not to hear the voice of the Lord, in that manner, nor to ſee that great fire any more which attended the Law, that they might not die: he commends them for it, Verſe 17. They have well ſpoken that which they have ſpoken. God is highly pleaſed with this ſenſe of their own inability to anſwer the terms of the firſt Covenant, ſince it makes them fly for help and ſupply to the Prophet of the ſecond Covenant. *The Cabaliſts therefore ſay, That the Law was given to take away the Venom of the Serpent; that is, not that we ſhould fulfil the Law, but that we might learn how far we were ſwerved from the duty we owed to God, and how unable to gain the happineſs we had loſt. A conceit of ſelf-ſufficiency ſecretly lurks in every one of us: we ſhould think our ſelves gods to our ſelves, if we ſaw not the Picture of our own weakneſs in the ſpirituality of the command. Therefore tho we cannot our ſelves perform this command of Regeneration, 'tis neceſſary it ſhould be directed to us, to make us abject in our eyes, and ſtrip us of all confidence in the fleſh, which is the firſt ſtep toward a being endued with the Spirit; to make us hang down our proud Plumes, and ſink into that deſpair in our ſelves, which is neceſſary to the ſuperſtructure of a ſaving Faith. 'Tis neceſſary the Law ſhould be commanded to make ſin appear exceeding ſinful, to give us a true proſpect of our ſelves in the Glaſs of the command: the Rectitude of it, ſhows us our crookedneſs; the Holineſs of it, our impurity; the Juſtice of it, our unrighteouſneſs; the Goodneſs of it, our wickedneſs; and the Spirituality of it, our carnality and fleſhlineſs. God doth not command us (tho we have no power) to upbraid and triumph over us, but to lay us low, and humble us.

* Mornæ de Religio. Chriſtian. cap. 31. pag. 360, 361.

2. To make us ſenſible of the Grace of God, and urge us to have recourſe to it. 'Tis neceſſary that man ſhould underſtand the perfection of Divine Righteouſneſs, and what the condition of man was before the fall, that thereby he may underſtand the neceſſity of the remedy, and be more willing to come under Gods Wing, than Adam was to keep under it; but without a ſenſe of his own weakneſs man would never come near to God. God commands us, not that he expects we ſhould renew our ſelves, for he knows we cannot; but that being acquainted with our own feeble frame, we ſhould implore his Grace to turn us, and have recourſe to him, who delights to be ſought unto and depended upon by his Creature. That this command of renewing our ſelves, and returning to our due obedience is given to this end, is evident by the promiſe of the Goſpel, which did accompany the command, both to encourage and direct men where to find aſſiſtance for the performance of what the firſt Covenant exacts, and the ſecond accepts. Therefore with the commands of the Law, there is the Promiſe of a great Prophet to teach them, an ordaining Typical Sacrifices to relieve them; and the Goſpel under the maſk of the Ceremonial Law attended the fiery and impoſſible commands of the Moral. God might have exacted his right without making any Promiſe, it had been ſummum jus; but God exacts not his right now, but with a Promiſe, where there is jus in one, and remiſſio juris in the other. And very frequently in the Scripture, where the command is given to ſhow us our duty, yet a Promiſe is joyned to it, to ſhow that tho Obedience be our duty, yet Sanctification is Gods Work, as Lev. 20. 8. Ye ſhall keep my ſtatutes and do them: whereupon it immediately follows, I am the Lord which ſanctify you. The Precept, is to acquaint us with our duty; the Promiſe, to acquaint us with the ſight of a Gracious ability: the Precept minds us of our Debt, the Promiſe minds us of the means to pay it: what is required in the Precept, is encouraged in the Promiſe. Every Precept, being a part of the Law, is to ſhut us up to Faith, and to bring us to Chriſt, Gal. 3. 23, 24. God makes us amends; that as he requires of us what we loſt by anothers fault, he hath provided us a remedy by anothers Righteouſneſs, which we never performed; and by his own Spirit, which we never purchaſed, if we will but ſeek it. If God did Work it in us without commanding us to work it our ſelves, we could not have a foundation to make ſuch ſenſible acknowledgments of his Grace and Omnipotent Kindneſs. 'Tis our work as a due Debt; 'tis Gods Work as a fruit of his Grace, Iſa. 26. 12. Thou haſt wrought all our works in us. The Promiſe therefore of a New Heart, and a New Spirit, is made indefinitely, none are named in it, nor any excluded, that will but ſeek it. And ſuppoſing they are Predictions rather than Promiſes, yet they run in the nature of a Promiſe: they are to be pleaded, for God will be enquired after concerning them; and the fulfilling of them to the Soul is as pleadable, as the fulfilling other Propheſies to the Church; the grounds of the plea are the ſame in both, the Truth of God, Ezek. 36. 37. Thus ſaith the Lord God, I will yet for this be enquired of by the houſe of Iſrael, to do it for them: Which may reaſonably be concluded to reſpect the whole Antecedent Promiſing-Diſcourſe of God.

Precept

3. Theſe Commands and Exhortations are of uſe to clear the Juſtice of God upon obſtinate ſinners. God is a Judg, and Judges by Law; Commands therefore are neceſſary, becauſe a rational Creature is only governable by Law. If God were not a Law-giver, he could not be a Judg, his Judicial proceedings depend upon his Legiſlative power. Men being to be judged by their Works, muſt have ſome Law as the rule of thoſe Works; and his Law is no more than the firſt Law in innocency; that is, to return to Obedience and Righteouſneſs: Theſe Commands and Exhortations are the Whips and Scourges of perverſe Conſciences, whereby they are galled while they obey not the motions of them, and render them inexcuſable, and unworthy of Mercy, in deſpiſing the conditions God requires of them, and make the caſe of Sodom, more tolerable in the day of judgment, than the condition of ſuch men, Matth. 11. 24. We are apt to bring an unreaſonable charge againſt God of cruelty and injuſtice, as tho his puniſhments did not conſiſt with Righteouſneſs; God therefore ſhows us our duty, and demands it of us, and 'tis confeſt by us to be our duty; man is therefore deſervedly puniſhed, becauſe he doth wilfully cheriſh the Old Nature in him, the fountain of all ſin: he hath the Truth, and he holds it in poſſeſſion, but in unrighteouſneſs; therefore the wrath of God is juſtly revealed from heaven againſt that unrighteouſneſs of his, Rom. 1. 18. * God calls ſinners, tho he knows they will not renew themſelves; as men ſend Servants to demand the poſſeſſion of a piece of Ground, tho they know it will not be delivered to them; but they do it, that they may more conveniently bring their Action againſt ſuch a perſon that will not ſurrender: So upon Gods command to men to be renewed, his Juſtice is more apparent upon their refuſal. As he ſent Moſes to Pharaoh, tho he knew before, that Pharaoh would not hearken to him. * This puniſhment is only accidental to the Goſpel, it becomes the ſavour of death, per accidens, becauſe of the unbelief of thoſe that reject it: the Goſpel is deſigned for the Salvation of men, not for their Condemnation. If the corruption of man produceth condemnation to himſelf, muſt God abſtain from doing good to the World? There is not a man but abuſeth the Light of the Sun which ſhines upon him, and the Mercies God gives him, and thereby brings wrath upon himſelf; and God knows they will do ſo; would we have God therefore to put out the Light of the Sun, and diveſt the Earth of its fruitfulneſs? Shall God lay aſide his right of commanding, and take away the preaching of the Goſpel, and ſo excellent a thing as the happy revelation of his Gracious Promiſes and Exhortations, becauſe many men by their wilfulneſs bring the juſt wrath of God upon them for their refuſal? Will any man accuſe our Bleſſed Lord and Saviour, when he comes to Judgment, that he did them wrong to come and die for mankind, and cauſe the news and ends of his Death to be publiſhed, and exhort ſinners thereupon to believe in him? Surely mens Conſciences ſhall be full of convictions of their own wilfulneſs, and the equity of Gods Juſtice thereupon.

4. The Commands and Exhortations are of uſe to bring men to God, according to the Nature of rational Creatures, and alſo to keep them with God. Man not having loſt his reaſon, tho he hath loſt his rectitude, cannot be drawn to God in a rational way, but by Cords proper to man: for he is a Creature governable only by Laws, and therefore muſt have Laws ſuited to his Nature; and Commands and Exhortations are ſo: for the weakneſs brought upon men to anſwer them is by their own defection. * God doth not bring men to him by inſtinct, as he brought the Beaſts to Adam, or the Creatures into Noah's Ark: ſuch a converſion would not be reaſonable, nor ſpiritual, nor agreeable to God, no more than the Obedience of the Beaſts to Noah. God therefore draws men by Commands, and Promiſes, and Exhortations thereupon convenient to the Nature of man, accommodated to the rational capacity of the Creature: for man being Created after the Image of God, ought to be conducted and governed after another manner than other Creatures. The Grace of God therefore Working ſuitably to the Nature of man, cannot be conceived by us in any other way than in this of Commands and Exhortations. And when men are renewed, the Commands for perfect Regeneration are ſtill incumbent upon them, (tho they cannot attain it in this life) to ſtir up their hearts to an exerciſe of that Gracious ability they have to walk in the ways of Holineſs, and to that end to a reliance on the Grace of God. The Promiſes are given to them to inflame them to a love of Holineſs, and to ſhew them where their chief ſtrength lies: this appears plainly to be the intent of the Spirit of God in that Command and Promiſe, Phil. 2. 12, 13. work out your own ſalvation. For it is God that works in you to will and to do. He writes to thoſe already Regenerate: Work out your Salvation, uſe your Gracious power, and be encouraged by the aſſiſtance God gives you. Uſe your own power as if there were no Grace to help you in the performance; depend upon the Grace of God which works in you both to will and to do, as if you had no power at all of any motion in your ſelves.

* Goodart, de Providence. pag. 172, 173, 174.

So that to ſum up the whole of this later Diſcourſe, the impotence of man doth not excuſe him.

1. Becauſe the Commands of the Goſpel are not difficult in themſelves to be believed and obeyed. If we were commanded things that were impoſſible in their own nature, as to ſhoot an Arrow as high as the Sun, or leap up to the top of the higheſt Mountain at one ſtart; the very command carries its excuſe with it, in the impoſſibility of the thing enjoyned: but the Precept of Regeneration, and reſtoring to Righteouſneſs, is eaſy to be comprehended, 'tis backt with clear and manifeſt reaſon, and propoſed with a Promiſe of happineſs, which is very ſuitable to the Natural Appetite of our Souls. To command a thing ſimply impoſſible, is not congruous to the Wiſdom, Holineſs and Righteouſneſs of God: It would not be Juſtice but Cruelty: no wiſe man will invite another by any promiſes to do that which is ſimply impoſſible; no juſt Judg will puniſh a man for not obſerving ſuch a Precept; no Righteous and Merciful perſon would impoſe ſuch a command. But theſe Commands of the Goſpel are not impoſſible in their own Nature, but in regard of our perverſity and contumacy. The Command of Righteouſneſs was poſſible when firſt given, and impoſſible ſince, by our own folly; impoſſible in our voluntary corrupted Nature, and by reaſon of our voluntarily cheriſhed corruption: the change is not in the Nature of the Law, but in the Nature of the Creature; and what is impoſſible to Nature, is poſſible to Grace; and Grace may be ſought for the performance of them.

2. Becauſe we have a foundation in our Natures for ſuch Commands, therefore mans weakneſs doth not excuſe him. It had been unjuſt for God to have Commanded Adam in innocency to fly, and give him no Wings: this had been above Adam's Natural power, he could not have done it, tho he would fain have obeyed God, becauſe his Nature was deſtitute of all force for ſuch a Command. It would be ſtrange if God ſhould invite the Trees or Beaſts to repent, becauſe they have no foundation in their Nature to entertain commands and invitations to Obedience and repentance; for Trees have no Senſe, and Beaſts have no Reaſon to diſcern the difference between good and evil. If God did command a Man that never had eyes, to contemplate the Sun, Man might wonder, ſince ſuch a Man never had Organs for ſuch an action. But God addreſſeth himſelf to Men that have Senſes open to Objects, and Underſtandings to know, and Wills to move, Affections to embrace Objects. Theſe Underſtandings are open to any thing but that which God doth command; their Wills can will any thing but that which God doth propoſe. The Command is proportioned to the Natural Faculty, and the Natural Faculty proportioned to the Excellency of the Command. We have Affections, as Love and Deſire. In the Command of loving God, and loving our Neighbour, there is only a change of the Object of our Affections required. The Faculties are not weak by Nature, but by the viciouſneſs of Nature which is of our own introduction. 'Tis ſtrange therefore, that we ſhould excuſe our ſelves, and pretend we are not to be blamed, becauſe God's Command is impoſſible to be obſerved, when the defect lies not in the want of a Natural Foundation, but in our own giving up our ſelves to the fleſh, and the love of it, and in a wilful refuſal of applying our Faculties to their proper Objects, when we can employ thoſe Faculties with all vehemence about thoſe things which have no commerce with the Goſpel.

3. Becauſe the means God gives, are not ſimply inſufficient in themſelves. God doth afford men Beams of light: He makes clear diſcoveries, as 'tis Rom. 1. 19. He hath ſhowed it to them; 'tis manifeſt in them *. He diſplays in their hearts ſome motions of his Spirit, produceth ſome Velleities. The ſtanding of the World under the cries of ſo many hideous ſins, is a daily Sermon of God's Kindneſs and Patience, in bearing up the Pillars of it, and is a ſtanding exhortation to Repentance, as Rom. 2. 4. The forbearance, long-ſuffering, and goodneſs of God, leads to repentance. The Object is intelligible: the Word is near us, in our mouths, in our hearts: 'tis apprehenſible in it ſelf. Rom. 10. 6, 7. The Revelation is as plain as the Surface of the Heavens, Pſal. 19. 1, 2, 3. applied to the preaching of the Goſpel, Rom. 10. 18. That Men are not renewed, and turned to God, is not for want of a ſufficient external Revelation, but from the hardneſs of the heart; not from any inſufficiency of the means, but the pravity and wickedneſs of the ſoul, to whom thoſe means are offered. The Commands and Means of the Goſpel, are no more weak in themſelves, than the Law was; but weak through the Fleſh, by reaſon of the inherent corruption Man hath faſtened in himſelf, Rom. 8. 3. Would not the hundredth part of any Revelation of ſome worldly Object, connatural to Mans corrupt heart, be ſufficient in it ſelf to put him upon motion to it, and embraces of it? The inſufficiency doth not lie in the external Means: For the Goſpel is an act of Mercy and Grace; the Call is an act of Kindneſs: 'Tis clear to Man, that God offers; 'tis clear that God will accept, if Man will embrace his Counſel; and ſhall this be ſaid to be inſufficient, becauſe Man will reject it?

4. Becauſe this impotence in Man, is rather a Wilfulneſs than a ſimple Weakneſs, therefore Man's pretended Weakneſs doth not excuſe him from the Command. 'Tis not a Weakneſs ariſing from a Neceſſity of Nature, but an Enmity of Will, whereby ſome other apparent good is beloved above God, and ſome Creature preferred before him. * There is a double impotence, meræ infirmitatis, which is a want of power in the hand, when there is a readineſs in the Will to perform; or malignitatis, which is ſeated in the Will and Affections; whereby tho a man hath a power to perform, yet he cannot becauſe he will not: He will abhor any return to God, and will not be whetted by his promiſe to any endeavour. A ſimple impotence deſerves pity; for it is a rational excuſe; but an obſtinate perverſity is ſo far from an excuſe, that it is an aggravation. The deeper the habit of Obſtinacy, the more inexcuſable the perſon. * What a ridiculous excuſe would this be, to ſay to God, (1.) That I ought not to be obliged to reſtore my ſelf to righteouſneſs, and obey the Command of the Goſpel, becauſe I am of ſo perverſe a Diſpoſition, that I will not obey, and will not be reſtored: Or (2.) That God is bound to reſtore to him that Will to obey and renew himſelf; otherwiſe he is guilty of no Crime. The firſt would be ridiculous, and both impious. What hinders any Man from being regenerate under the Call of the Goſpel, but a Moral Weakneſs, which conſiſts in an imperious inclination to evil, and a rooted indiſpoſition in corrupt Reaſon and Will, to believe and repent? And here the Scripture lays it, upon the hardneſs of the heart, Rom. 2. 5. and a rebellious walking after our own thoughts, Iſa. 65. 2. I have ſpread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walk in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts. We are impotent and cannot, becauſe we are rebellious and will not. For ſince Man hath an Underſtanding capable to weigh Arguments on both ſides, and ſee the advantage of the good propoſed, and the diſadvantage of the evil tempting, if he doth the evil, and refuſes the good, is not the fault clearly in his Will? And when by a cuſtom in ſin, we ripen the power of our evil habits, we contract an impoſſibility of doing the good required, and caſting out the evil forbidden; this doth in no ſort excuſe us, becauſe it is an inability contracted by our ſelves. * God himſelf threatens puniſhment to the Iſraelites, when he confeſſeth, that they could not attain to Innocence, Hoſea 8. 5. My anger is kindled againſt them; how long will it be e're they attain to innocence? יוכלו; How long can they not? Purity or Innocence: They had raiſed ſuch an habit in them, by caſting off voluntarily the thing that is good, ver. 3. that they could not diveſt themſelves of it; which was ſo far from excuſing them, that it ſharpened the anger of God againſt them.

* Trigland de grat. p. 303.

* Trigland de gratia, p. 303.

* Quando vitium conſuetudine & progreſſu corroboratum velut naturaliter inolevit, a voluntate ſimpſit exordium, Aug. Civ. Dei. lib. 12. cap. 3.

5. This Weakneſs doth not excuſe from obedience to this Command, becauſe God denies no Man ſtrength to perform what he commands, if he ſeek it at his hands. No Man can plead, that he would have been regenerate, and turned to God, aud could not; for tho we have not power to renew our ſelves, yet God is ready to confer power upon us, if we ſeek it. Where did God ever deny any Man ſufficient ſtrength, that did wait upon him in ſerious and humble ſupplications, and conſcientiouſly uſed the Means to procure it. A Man cannot indeed merit Grace, or diſpoſe himſelf for it: ſo that it muſt by a Natural Neceſſity come into his ſoul, as a form doth into matter upon diſpoſitions to it. But if a Man will do what he can do, if he will put no Obſtacle to Grace, by a courſe of ſin, would not God out of his infinite bounty to his Creatures, and out of that general love whereby he would have all men ſaved, and come to the knowledg of the Truth, give him ſpecial Grace? Hath not our Saviour made a promiſe in his firſt Sermon to the Multitude, that God will give good things to them that ask him, with a much more than Men give good gifts to their children, Mat. 7. 11. They were not only his Diſciples that he preached that Sermon to, but the Multitude, comparing it with Matth. 5. 1. and Math. 7. 28. Hath not God declared, that he delights not in the death of a ſinner, Ezek. 33. 11. and doth he not out of his Infinite Goodneſs, condeſcend to beſeech us to be reconciled to him? Will not the ſame infinite Goodneſs bow it ſelf down to form a New Image in them that uſe the means to be reconciled and conformed to him, as much as they can? Has not our Bleſſed Saviour already given a Teſtimony of his Affection to ſuch endeavours, in loving the young man for his outward obſervation of the Law, Mark 10. 21. who wanted but one thing only to paſs him into a gracious ſtate, the refuſal whereof barred him of it? And ſhall not he have a choicer Affection to thoſe that ſtrive to obſerve the Rules he hath left in his Goſpel? Will he not be pleaſed with ſuch motions in his Creatures towards their own happineſs? Will he not further that wherein he delights? Think not therefore to juſtifie your ſelves at the Bar of God for your ſloth, becauſe you are too weak to renew your ſelves. It will not help you then. The Queſtion will then be askt, Did you ever ſeriouſly beg it, as for your lives? Did God ever deſert you when you would fight againſt ſin, when you ſet your ſelves ſeriouſly and dependently on him for Grace? God gives us Talents, but by our ſloth we imbezel them. 'Tis upon that ſcore Chriſt lays it, Matth. 25. 26. Thou wicked and slothful servant; God hath not Promised to furnish you with more Talents, when you improve not the Talents you have already; non-improvement of them cuts off all Pleas men may make against God upon the account of their impotence. As there never was a renewed man, but acknowledged his Regeneration as a fruit of Gods grace: so there was never any man that can say, He did use his greatest industry in Trading with the Talents God intrusted him with, and God refused him the supply of his special grace. If you have not a new heart and a heart of flesh, ask your own hearts, whether ever you did seriously enquire of God to do it for you? God never fails them that diligently seek him.

For the Use of this:

1. For Information.

1. See the strange misery of Man by his Fall. We cannot be the Authors of strength to our own souls, since we are despoiled of that vital Principle, which constituted us spiritually living in the first Creation. How are we sunk many degrees below other Creatures, who alway have, and still do answer the ends of their Creation; when we, wretched we, have lost both the will and power to answer the end of ours? We can understand, will, move, but not as man in innocency could. In our selves we are nothing, we have nothing, can bring forth nothing Spiritually good and acceptable to God; a meer composition of enmity to good, and propensity to evil, of weakness and wickedness, of Hell and Death. A fardle of impotence and conceitedness, perversity and inability, every way miserable, unless infinite compassion relieve us: we have no more freedom than a chain'd Gally-slave, till Christ Redeem us; no more strength than a putrified Carcass, till Christ raise us. An unlamented hardness, an unregarded obstinacy, an insensible Palsie spread over every part, a dreadful cannot, and will not, triumphing in the whole Soul. The heart turned into pleasure with its own wounds and chains, is an amazing misery both to good men and Angels, because it is so great, and yet unbewailed. To see a man endued with a Soul so rare, even with its crack, that the Heathens thought it to be a Particle of God, an Understanding that can peer into Heaven, fathom the Earth by contemplative inquisitions, yet cannot strike up a spark of enlightned reason about everlasting happiness; that that Reason which understands a Worldly interest, should be so blind, so weak, about a Heavenly bliss! A short-sighted mind, that cannot cast a look so high as to Spiritual things, nor rise up in one Holy thought without the grace of God: a perverse Will, that cannot commission one Spiritual desire: A weak Arm, that cannot strengthen it self to grasp and hold one Spiritual Gift; a dry Wilderness, that cannot issue out a tear, till God open the Fountain of the great deep of grace to flow in upon it: A hard heart that relents not under afflictions on Earth, nor could under the flames of Hell without grace! What a woful thing is it to be miserable, and have no strength to be happy! to look into a Law, and behold it wholly Spiritual, and to reflect upon our Souls, and behold them wholly carnal! Rom. 7.14. to find a command of Regeneration in the judgment of our own Consciences, just for God to impose, good for us to receive, and an utter inability to square our selves according to it!

2. See the vast power of sin. * 'Tis this that hath cast its infectious Roots so deep in our Souls, that it is impossible for us to pluck up this degenerate Plant. The first defection from God was of that Nature, that it did per se, of it self, produce an inability in us, as sickness doth in a Body, or disjoynting a member doth weakness in a man: otherwise man, after he had sinned, had been sound in strength, and had had a power to do good, till God by punishment had taken away that power, and inflicted a contrary weakness, which would be very absurd to affirm. Adam threw off the Royal Robe of Righteousness; and in all those Ages which are run out since, man could not find by all the inquiries of Nature, how to put it on again without a supernatural strength. This sin that hath taken hold of us, keeps us down, that we cannot lift up our heads to Divine Knowledg, or reach out our hands to perform any Divine Precept; 'tis this has emptied us of our Treasure, stript us of our strength, made us as poor as Job upon the Dunghill, and as feeble as the Cripple at the Pool: and which is worse than this, hath not only deprived us of our health and ſtrength to cure our ſelves, but of our Will to be healed by another: and poſſeſt us with ſuch a phrenzy, that we are friends to our Madneſs, and Enemies to thoſe that would deliver us from it; we are all poſſeſſed with a Legion of Devils, that makes us cry out againſt Chriſt, before we be turned to him, Mark 5. 7. 'Tis this firſt Poyſon diffuſing it ſelf in the heart of Adam, has made us all by Nature a generation of Vipers, and infected our very Tongues, that we cannot, being evil, ſpeak that which is good; that is, perfectly and ſpiritually good, as 'tis Matth. 12. 34. O generation of vipers, how can you, being evil, ſpeak good things? And Poyſoned our Souls at the very root, that not one Grape of grace can grow upon the Thorn of Nature: All the Coin of our actions bears the impreſſion of the evil treaſure in our hearts, Luke 6. 43, 44, 45.

3. We may from hence ſee the groundleſneſs of any conceits riſing in us, of the power and freedom of our own Wills to any thing Spiritually good. This conceit reigns in moſt mens hearts Naturally: 'tis a Legacy left to our Natures by the Will of Adam: the not ſubmitting our Wills to the Will of God, in a way of humble waiting upon him, is the ſource of the miſery of Mankind; ſuch imaginations will creep up in our hearts, that our Underſtandings can aſpire to all knowledg, our Wills ſpring up in Grace as Naturally as a clear Fountain in pure Waters. The cauſe of ſuch conceits, is the ignorance both of the depth and largeneſs of the wound Original ſin hath made in all our faculties. Paul, while a Phariſee, without queſtion, was of this mind, and cried up the liberty of the Will, as much as he cried down the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion: he was alive without the law once, Rom. 7. 9. But when he takes out the Leſſon of the ſinfulneſs of Natural concupiſcence, Rom. 7. 7. the experience of his ſlavery, and being ſold under ſin, grew up with the notion of the extent of Original corruption, and he found himſelf a meer dead man, as may be obſerved in ſeveral paſſages in Rom. 7. Every man is born with this conceit, ſince we find the only peculiar Nation God had in the World aſſerting it, in the whole body of them, in the Face of God, Exod. 24. 3. When Moſes told them all the Words and Judgments of the Lord, all the People anſwered with one voice, All the words which the Lord hath ſaid, will we do. And Verſe 7. All that the Lord hath ſaid, will we do, and be obedient. Not one man among them duly ſenſible of Natural ſlavery, nor making any Application to God for grace to keep them: but as confident of the ſtrength of their mutable Wills, as if they had as much power as the firſt Man in innocence: this vain confidence hath its bitter Root in the imagination of all Iſrael; and that it may not appear to be a ſudden and raſh Paſſion, they aſſert it again more ſolemnly upon ſecond thoughts, Verſe 7. All that the Lord hath ſaid, will we do, and be obedient.

(1.) 'Tis a high piece of pride. To boaſt of a great Eſtate, when a man hath not a Farthing in his Purſe, is very ridiculous; or for a Slave to brag of Liberty with his Chains upon his Hands and Feet. What a vain ſelf-reflection is it, when we are bound Naturally in our ſins, as a Slave in his Shackles, with Satans padlock upon us, till the Son make us free indeed? John 8. 36. 'Tis the very Moth of Pride which eat out the beauty of Adam's garment; who whilſt he would ſtand upon his own bottom, laid the ſcene of his own ruin: he affected to be his own conductor, and proved his own cut-throat; and aſpiring to an independency on God, fell down into the Dungeon of ſlavery to, and dependency upon Satan. 'Tis a Pride like that of Adams; an invaſion of God's Property; an Affecting to be that by our ſelves, which we can only be by Chriſt. 'Tis an Arrogance like that of the Babel-Builders, to think by this ſlime of Nature to raiſe up a Spiritual Building as high as Heaven. We ſin over again, more formally, the ſin of Adam, by affecting an equality with God.

(2.) 'Tis a diſparagement to God. 'Tis an unqueſtionable Idolatry, and never yet practiſed, to ſet up any Creature as the Author of the temporal good of the whole World. Is it not more, to ſet up many Thouſands of free-Wills, as the Authors of the Spiritual good of the Creature, to make every man's Will an Idol? Is the robbing God of the glory of his grace leſs criminal than the diveſting him of the glory of his outward Work? Or are the Works of grace in the Soul more more inconſiderable than thoſe of Nature? It diſparageth Gods grace: it makes his grace ſubſequent, not preventing: it makes the higheſt Spiritual Work to be the ſeed of man, not the ſeed of God. If this conceit takes place in your Hearts, God is like to be without much praiſe from his Creature. Peter will be no more beholden to God than Judas; Paul, no more than Simon Magus; both had the outward revelation, and ſo both owe a praiſe to God; but what further Debt of praiſe did Paul owe to God, if his Regeneration ſprang forth into being by the power of his own Will, without any further contribution from God than an objective propoſal? It takes off the Crown of glory from the Head of Chriſt; for tho it will be acknowledged, that he bruiſed the head of the common Serpent by the Power of his Death, yet the deſtruction of the works of the Serpent in our hearts, which is our immediate happineſs, was wrought by the ſeed of free-will. It would be ſtrange, that the Apoſtle Paul ſhould be ſo over-ſeen, to give ſuch praiſe to the grace of God manifeſted to him, if he had not been particularly beholden to that for the turning of his heart. By this God is beholden much to the Creatures Will, in being a great cauſe of keeping up the intereſt of God in the World, which had no footing, notwithſtanding his Revelation, without the compliance of mans Will, untouched by any ſupernatural grace. Such a conceit of mans power ſeems to envy God the glory of his whole grace. And ſuch a bitter Root of this, I doubt, may be one ſecret cauſe that we are ſo Heart-tied and Tongue-tied in the praiſes of God for his grace.

(3.) It takes away a great part of the Glory of the Spirits Work in the World. Was his convincing the World of Sin and Righteouſneſs, only external by the objective propoſals of the Word, and fitting the Apoſtles for the propagation of that convictive revelation? Was he to ſtand only as a ſpectator, to behold which way the motion of free Will would caſt the ballance? Is he to preſerve grace in the heart? and is there not more need of his Creating it there, than preſerving it after? Is there more danger of the Devils quenching the flame, kindled in the Soul, than there was of its firſt touch upon the heart? Is he a Spirit of grace only to propoſe it, not to work it? The Spirit makes no verbal propoſal of it, that is by man; if an inward propoſal barely by applying it to the Underſtanding, has not man as much power to do that, as to work it in his Will? How can it be a Well of Water ſpringing up to Eternal Life, if it works nothing efficaciouſly upon the heart? This ſecret pride and conceit in the heart may be a cauſe, we make ſo few Applications to the Spirit of God, taking little notice of him in our attempts.

(4.) It puts a bar to all Evangelical Duties. It makes us cleave to our ſelves rather than to God, and preſume upon our own ſtrength rather than rely upon his. The Heathens (as Seneca) aſſerted, That it was a ſilly thing for a man to deſire that of Heaven, which he had power to do without it. Why ſhould we go to him for renewing grace, when it is in our own power to renew our ſelves? May it not be ſaid to us, as it was in another caſe, Why trouble you the Maſter? As long as we think we can ſpin a Righteouſneſs out of our own Bowels, we will never go to Chriſt for a Robe of his Weaving, tho never ſo Rich: And while we think we can rear a ſtately Spiritual building by our own skill, we ſhall never deſire the Art of another Work-man. Our Saviour would have nothing to do with his fulneſs, if we ſtood in no need of it: and what need had we of it, if we could diſpatch this great buſineſs of Grace our ſelves? This ſecret imagination in the heart is one cauſe of the neglect of Duties, eſpecially Prayer, or of a ſlightneſs and coldneſs in it.

(5.) This conceit endangers a mans deſtruction, by encouraging a delay of uſing the means neceſſary to this Work in Gods ordinary courſe. What Senſualiſt would not delay uſing means for Repentance, who conceits he can repent when he will, and that to Will is in his own power? This makes men think they have a Key to unlock Heaven at their pleaſure, and have the command of the Treaſuries of grace: and therefore are afraid to attend upon Evangelical means, for fear they ſhould be put upon ſerious reflections too ſoon. The common ſentiments of men are a ſad evidence of this: you ſhall hear many acknowledg their weakneſs in other things, things, but not in this: they cannot leave ſuch a courſe of ſin, they cannot pray with ſo much affection, yet their hearts are right; they can repent and believe when they will; that is in their own power, which makes them ſluggiſh and careleſs at the calls of God. But what a folly this is, let Solomon witneſs, who ſets the Fools Cap upon ſuch confidence; He that truſts in his own heart, is a fool, Prov. 28. 26. 'tis to truſt in a Weathercock, that is mutable with every wind of temptation. To depend upon our Wills, is to depend upon the oldeſt and the moſt certain Bankrupt in the World, that broke as ſoon as it was ſet up, many Ages ſince, and never recovered it ſelf. Who told you, therefore, that you can melt the Stone within you at your pleaſure? that you can caſt the ſtrong man out of your wills without a ſtronger than he? But ſuppoſe the grounds were rational, and that you had a power to cure your ſelves: the conſequent is very irrational, for that cauſe to delay it; for what man, in his wits, would endure a wound or deformity many Years, becauſe he can heal or beautify himſelf at his pleaſure in a moment? Take heed therefore of ſuch fancies of your own power to Regenerate your ſelves, and upon that account to neglect that which you have power to do: but imitate Ephraim with all ſpeed, notwithſtanding your cheating imaginations, and cry out, Turn thou me, and I ſhall be turned, Jer. 31. 18.

4. It informs us, That Regeneration is not wrought meerly by Moral ſuaſion, or only by Exhortations: then it would principally be the work of the Will of man. Our Saviour had a Will to Preach to all in Jeruſalem, but he had not a Will to quicken all, John 5. 21. the ſon quickens whom he will: ſo that it depended upon his inward Operation, not only upon his outward Exhortations. 'Tis true, there is a ſuaſion in the Ear by the Word, but the perſuaſion is in the heart by grace: the ſuaſion in the Word may cauſe ſome rational reflections as a Moral cauſe, but no Spiritual motion towards God as a Phyſical cauſe. Men are not diſputed or exhorted, but created into grace: the propoſal of a good by the Underſtanding is not alway embraced by the Will, unleſs it be a good ſuitable and connatural to thoſe habits in the Will; where, therefore, there is no ſuitable habit planted in the Will, rational reflexions in the Mind and Conſcience are not like to prevail much.

(1.) If it were only by ſuaſion and exhortation, the moſt Eloquent Preaching were like to do moſt good. Whereas it never was Gods Method to found Converſion upon the words of mans wiſdom, tho enticing in themſelves, but upon the demonſtration and power of the ſpirit, 1 Cor. 2. 4. The moſt Eloquent Preaching would then moſt fill the Goſpel-Nets. And the reports of that Rhetorical Prophet Iſaiah would have been ſoon believed, which were not ſo, becauſe the arm of the Lord was not alway revealed with them, Iſa. 53. 1. If any words, as words, were like to have an edg to cut deep into the Soul, they muſt be the Words of our Saviour; ſince never man (even in the Judgment of ſome of his Enemies) ſpake as he ſpake: But though his lips were full of grace, Pſal. 45. 2. moſt of his Hearers hearts were empty of it under his Miniſtry: not the Eloquence and preſſing Reaſons of Chriſt, nor the wrath of God revealed from Heaven can reclaim the heart of man, without the power of grace. The Phariſees were prouder under Chriſts melting Bowels; and the Jews harder under Gods wrathful blows, Iſa. 1. 5. neither hearing nor feeling will prevail upon hardened Souls.

(2.) What bare Exhortations can work upon a dead man? Can a well-compoſed Oration, ſetting out all the advantages of Life and Health, raiſe a Dead Man, or cure a Diſeaſed Body? You may as well Exhort a blind man to behold the Sun, and prevail as much. No man ever yet imagined, that the ſtrowing a dead Body with Flowers would raiſe it to Life, no more can the urging a man, Spiritually Dead, with Eloquent motives, ever make him to open his Eyes and ſtand upon his Feet. Did our Saviour come out of his Grave, or could he ever have done it by meer ſuaſion, without the power of God to raiſe him? Eph. 1. 19, 20. The Working of mighty power is a title too high for the capacity of meer Moral Exhortations. A meer ſuaſion doth not confer a ſtrength, but ſuppoſe it in a man, for he is only perſuaded to uſe the power which he hath already.

(3.) Doth

(3.) Doth not dayly experience testify the contrary? Have you never discourſed with ſome prophane looſe fellow, ſo preſſingly, that he ſeemed to be Planet-ſtruck at every reaſoning, ſhaken out of his excuſes for his ſinful courſe, yet not ſhaken out of his ſin: that you might as ſoon have perſuaded the Tide at full Sea to retreat, or a Lyon to change his Nature, as have overcome him by all your Arguments? Have you not ſeen many at a ſtand in ſin by the force of ſome convincing Reaſons, return again to their vomit? Have not many, tears at command in any thing that concerns themſelves, the loſs of ſome Eſtate, or ſome dear Friend; but in the things of God, in his diſhonours, as dry as the parched Earth? That you may almoſt as ſoon extract Water out of a Rock, as repentance for ſin out of their ſtony hearts. So that it is not the faint breath of man, or the rational conſiderations of the mind, are able to do this work, without the mighty pleadings and powerful Operations of that great Paraclet, or Advocate, the Spirit, to alter the temper of the Soul.

(4.) There is no likelihood that any man in the World would be renewed, if it were only by Moral ſuaſion. Satan's Logick would be ſtronger than God's; his Arguments would more ſuit our imagined intereſt, and our real enmity againſt God: his perſuaſions would find more kindred in the principles of our minds, and habits of our Wills to take fire by him, than the ſuaſory allurements of God, which will meet with nothing in our hearts but contrariety to them. The deceitfulneſs of ſin within us, and the ſubtilty of Satan without us, both being active as well as perſuading adverſaries, would fix us in our Rebellion, without a contrary power, as well active as exhortative: and God would do no more towards our reſtoration, than Satan doth towards our deſtruction, ſince the Devil can only propoſe to us, not by any Phyſical touch incline our Wills. We are wholly enclined to him in our own Natures, in love with the Knife that cuts our throats, and too fond of our Shackles ever to knock them off. The Will is ſo enamoured with its corrupt habit, that were this work left barely to ſelf-will, and no o her power employed in it than exhortative, not one perſon were ever likely to come into God.

(5.) If it were wrought by ſuaſion, the Will would have the whole praiſe of the Work. For ſuaſion or Exhortation is nothing elſe, but the propoſing Arguments to the underſtanding; but the motion according to thoſe Arguments is wholly from the Will, which hath a power to receive them or refuſe them. God indeed would be the firſt Speaker, but not the firſt Agent: God would be only the aſſiſting cauſe, as all Moral cauſes are; he would only aſſiſt the motion of the Will, not cauſe it. The motion of the Will is a Phyſical act: if then the Phyſical act be from the Will, and God only the Moral cauſe, the Will will be the greateſt ſharer in the Work; for Moral cauſes are in vain, without a Phyſical effect in thoſe things they work Morally upon: As all the reaſoning of one man with another will be to little purpoſe, if there be not a Phyſical motion of the Will of that perſon to comply with the others reaſonings. If therefore the reaſoning part be only from God, and Phyſical motion from man; the moſt debauched wretch, under the Preaching of the Goſpel, is as much beholden to God, as the higheſt Believer, who had both the ſame Suaſions and Exhortations: for tho the ſuaſion was from God, the perſuaſion was from their own Wills: God only made the Revelation, and was afterwards a ſpectaor, not an actor. Parken's, Theſ. Amef. contra Grevinc.

(5.) Information: We may draw a concluſion hence, whereby to judg of the truth of Doctrines. Man cannot renew himſelf. Whatſoever Doctrine doth depreſs and humble man, and advance the Glory of God, is true, it anſwers the main deſign of the Goſpel, which all centers in this, That man is to be laid low, and God to be exalted, as the chief cauſe. It pulls man from his own bottom, and tranſfers all the glory man would challenge, into the hands of God; it lays man in the duſt at Gods foot-ſtool. That Doctrine which croſſes the main deſign of the Goſpel, and encourageth pride in man, is not a ſpark from Heaven: no fleſh muſt glory in Gods preſence, 1 Cor. 1. 29. The Doctrine of juſtification by Works, is thrown down by the Apoſtle with this very Argument, as a thunderbolt, Rom. 3. 27. Where is boaſting then? 'tis excluded by faith; that is, by the Doctrine of the Goſpel; boaſting would be introduced by aſcribing Regeneration to Nature, as much much as it is excluded by denying Juſtification by Works: the Doctrine of the Goſpel would contradict it ſelf, to uſher in boaſting with one hand whilſt it thruſt it out with the other. Our Saviour gave this rule long ago, that the glorifying God is the evidence of truth in perſons; he that ſeeks his glory that ſent him, the ſame is true, John 7. 18. By the ſame reaſon alſo in things and Doctrines; and indeed, Chriſt ſpeaks it in relation to his Doctrine, as appears, Verſe 16, 17. All truth gives God the præeminence in all gracious Works: the firſt Creation, the progreſs and top-ſtone are the works of this great Bezaliel, this mighty Artificer, both the firſt draught and the laſt line. To confound Nature and Grace together, is to join the Creature in commiſſion with God, and make them coheirs in the Glory which is only due to the only Wiſe and Almighty Creator.

USE 2. Is for Exhortation. 1. To the Regenerate. If this Doctrine be true,

1. Then, Aſcribe nothing to fleſh. (1.) Not to your ſelves. No more praiſe is due to us, than to Gold for being melted by the fire, and wrought by the Workman into a Veſſel of honour: 'tis due to the skill of the Artificer, not to the Veſſel it ſelf. When the reparation of human Nature was to be wrought by the Goſpel; when the crooked ſhould be made ſtraight, and the rough places plain, then ſhould fleſh be as graſs, when the ſpirit of the Lord ſhould blow upon it, yea, the People, thoſe that are Gods peculiar ones, by reaſon of priviledges, are graſs, Iſa. 40. 4, 6, 7. they ſhould be nothing in themſelves, that God might be all in all: the Spirit of God blows upon all their ſelf-confidences. If God be the God of all Grace, what ſhare have our Wills in it then? He calls, he opens the heart, he ſtrengthens, he perfects; all the grace we have is his treaſure, 1 Pet. 5. 10. He firſt delivers from Egypt; preſerves in the Deſert; conducts to a footing in Canaan. Grace triumphs in the whole Work from Dan to Beerſheba, from the beginning of the Work to the end. What glory can belong to us? We Will, 'its true, but God gives that Will; we work, but God beſtows and ſtands by that power to Work; what have we then to do with the praiſe? 'Tis in his light we ſee light, Pſal. 36. 9. The Rays whereby we have a glimps of him, are not darted from us to him, but from him to us. The Light in the Air ſprings not from it ſelf, but from ſome other Body enlightning it: how can any good be aſcribed to us, where there is nothing but inſufficiency and defect? 'Tis to be-lye the Lord, to entitle a Work of Omnipotency to ſo infirm a cauſe. 'Tis worſe than the Phariſee, who in the midſt of his boaſts of his own Moral Righteouſneſs, thought a tribute of praiſe due to God; Lord, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, Luke 18. 11. Shall we entitle God the Author of our beings, and our ſelves the Creators of our Spiritual beings? Is it leſs to have an elevation of our faculties, and an animation of them by a new virtue, than to have ſimply the faculties themſelves? If the Creature be unable of it ſelf to move without a dependance on God in way of common Providence; much more unable is it to move without dependance on God in a way of Supernatural vitality. The glory of the act is as little due to man, as the glory of the firſt habit.

Now 1. Review your ſelves, conſider what you were before Regeneration, what after it; and then how can you aſcribe any thing to your ſelves?

(1.) What you were before Regeneration? Was not ſin as deeply rooted in you, as any other, which made you as uncapable to raiſe your ſelves as the wickedſt man in the World? Were you not Priſoners in Chains, Captives under Locks and Bolts, when Grace firſt ſet up its Standard for your recovery? How thick was the darkneſs of your Minds? How ſtout the perverſity of your Wills? How impetuous the violence of your ſinful affections? Did they not all conſpire together to make as ſtout a reſiſtance againſt the Work of the Goſpel, as any others? Can you then ſay, That becauſe God ſaw you more inclinable to Grace than another, that he drew you? You were Created; did you bring Clay enough to compoſe the leaſtParticle of fleſh about you? You are new Created; what part of the new man was formed by your direction? Did you bring grace enough of your ſelves to form one Holy thought, or ſend out one Holy deſire? Did your own Will ſingle you out of that multitude of degenerate men of better natures than yours, left ſtill in their own nothingneſs? Was it nothing but your own Will that planted you in the Nurſery of the inviſible Church, that made you capable of a

Divine

Divine Union? were not other mens Reasons as strong as yours? the means they enjoyed greater? their Moral disposition sweeter? what was the reason their Wills did not bend themselves, as well as yours? What is the reason they did not hold out their hands to catch this all-necessary Grace? Did this noble birth cost none any pains but your selves? Was this goodly Fabrick reared by your own Wills? Look on it, me thinks 'tis a piece too comely and noble for humane skill.

(2.) What are you since your Regeneration? What, do you find no rebellion of the Law in your members against the Law of the mind? Are there not powerful allurements of the flesh? Are your thoughts alway flying up to God, and hovering about him? Are you alway nimble in your praise of him? Or not rather lifeless many times under the breathings of the Spirit? Why are you thus? Did you first by your own force begin this noble conquest of sin? And can you not by the same power make a better progress? Did you breathe a Life into your selves when you had not a spark; and can you not blow up this spark into a greater liveliness? Surely then this work was not at first the birth of your own Wills. Do you not yet find some scale and thick matter upon your Understandings, that you cannot pick off? some darkness in your minds, as there is some in the Air after it is enlightned? Are there not obstructions in your Wills? No shackles upon the executive power? Can you not remove that darkness, with that great light you have? nor unlock those Fetters by the strength of your habitual Grace? Can then the first powerful entrance of it, the fall of the first scale from the Understanding, be judged to be the work of your own hands? Or the first teeming of your Wills, with grace, to be the effect of your own power? View your selves well in both states, and you will find no ground whereon to build so much injustice towards God, and pride in your selves, but must needs acknowledg, that God, and not your selves, have wrought all your works in you, Isa. 26. 12. not only your Temporal advantages, which the Church there means, but your Spiritual, and much more Spiritual than Temporal.

To stave off any ascribing to your selves, consider,

[2.] He that ascribes it to his own Will, hath great reason to question whether he be Regenerate or no. He may well doubt whether he understands or feels what it is; since those in Scripture who have been most experimented it it, and therefore are the most competent Judges, have most highly magnified the grace of God, and most deeply vilified themselves: they have given the glory of it so intirely to God, that they have not let a grain of it stick to their own fingers. Thus David often Thou hast quickned me. The Apostle Paul owns his effectual call to be owing to the grace of God, Gal. 1. 15. and to an abundant grace in Christ, 1 Tim. 1. 14. he was a persecutor, but his Faith and Love was from the abundance of the grace of God, and that in Christ too, not from any thing in Nature. Peter is not behind him in the admirations of it, 1 Pet. 1. 3. Blessed be the God and father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again: And 'tis that the Church in the times of the Gospel Prophesied of, Psal. 100. 3. 'tis he that hath made us, not we our selves: made us his People, as it follows, we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture: not we our selves. When ever the naughtiness of their hearts hath been ready to lanch out to self-praise, they have turned the tide quickly to the grace of God. When Paul had owned grace as the cause of his Spiritual Being, 1 Cor. 15. 10. and began to speak of his labouring more abundantly than they, he flies back in haste, as one that had gone beyond his line, Yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me; another yet not I, Gal. 2. 20. I live, yet not I, but Christ lives in me: there's no mention of any in Scripture, that ever in this case did Sacrifice to their own Net.

[3.] If a man be Regenerate, such a boasting of himself is very dangerous. Tho it may not rifle you of the New Nature, yet by the just Judgment of God it may cloud the comfort of it: If such a man be renewed, this pride is but a Prologue of some dark veil to be drawn between him and the light of Gods countenance, between him and the sight of his own grace. A swelling up in pride presageth a sinking down in desertion. If God be not owned by you to be the God of all grace in you, he will not own himſelf to be the God of all comfort to you. Grace follows Humility, and ſome ſhewd ſhock attends Spiritual pride: 'tis ſuch an Idolatrous robbing God of his glory (whereof he is moſt jealous) and giving it to another, that he will not let it paſs without a remark. The clouding of your grace will be the fruit of the ſmothering of his glory. For ſince the main intendment of the Goſpel is to humble, God will humble you if any grace be in you. If the Spirit of grace hath breathed upon your Souls to renew you, he will blow upon your graſs to conſume it, Iſa. 40. 7. he will pull down thoſe proud thoughts, and ſtrong holds, and cauſe your vain confidences to wither and come to nothing. Aſcribe it not therefore to your ſelves: be not ſo preſumptuous, as while you allow God to be the Author of the Being and Motion of a little Fly; to cry up your own Wills, as the chief cauſe of grace, a work more excellent than the material World.

(2.) Aſcribe nothing to inſtruments, either men or means. 'Tis not of the Will of man, not anothers Will. Without the efficacious working of the Spirit, the Goſpel it ſelf is but as a dead Letter, the Spirit only quickens it. It is not outward teaching and blowing, which of it ſelf will kindle theſe ſparks; an Inſtrument cannot act without the ſtrength of an Agent to manage it; the Chizzel forms the Stone into a Statue, but according to the skill and ſtrength of the Artificer moving it. 'Tis not the breath of man, and a few words out of his mouth, can produce ſo great a work as the new Creation: this might be a reaſon why God choſe ſo weak an inſtrument as man to preach the Goſpel, to evidence that the great work was not from the weakneſs of man, but the power of God.

2. Exhortation. Let us be humbled under our own natural impotence and inability, and keep up this Humiliation. There is danger of the Phariſees pride climbing up into the heart, even after Regeneration. Renewed men have inſtructions to Humility above other men; their ſin may ſtrike them low, becauſe it is the growth of their own Nature; their grace may keep them low, becauſe it is no plant of their own ſetting: ſin, becauſe it is Originally theirs; grace, becauſe it is Originally none of theirs; 'tis no beam of their own Underſtanding, no ſtream from the fountain of their own Will. If we think believingly and fruitfully of Chriſt at any time, we cannot but think of our own weakneſs; nothing in him but minds us of it; our weakneſs to obey the Law was the cauſe of his coming; our weakneſs to ſatisfy God was the cauſe of his dying; our inability to repair and ſupport our ſelves, was the cauſe of his fulneſs. His death minds us of our impotence to redeem our ſelves; his grace minds us of our impotence to renew our ſelves. The more we grow up in the New Birth, the more deeply ſenſible ſhall we be of our impotence; oh, let this Text be writ in our hearts, not of the Will of the fleſh, nor of the Will of man.

3. Reſolve nothing in your own ſtrength. The power to believe and be renewed, is a power given, not inbred, Phil. 1. 29. our ſtrength is depoſited not in the crackt Cabinet of our own Wills, but in the treaſures of Chriſt. Our purpoſes are weak without grace to ſtrengthen them, our reſolutions vaniſhing without grace to eſtabliſh them. If we ſhould be left to the ſails of our own faculties without the breath of the Spirit to fill them, we ſhould lie wind-bound. The Will can never in this life be ſo firm, but the allurements of the great tempter will make inroads upon us, and overſet us, without the ſpecial grace of God to eſtabliſh and ſtrengthen us. As we are not to do any thing for our own glory, ſo we are not to do any thing in our own ſtrength. As we muſt not be our own end, ſo we muſt not be our own principle: the power the beſt have, is but derived; the ſtream muſt know it is but a ſtream ſtill. The actual exerciſe of Paul's ability grew from ſtrength in another hand, I can do all things through Chriſt ſtrengthning me Phil. 4. 14. all things by him, nothing by himſelf. When the Iſraelites went out with God, no Sons of Anak, no Walls of Jericho, nor Chariots of Iron could ſtand before them. When they truſted in themſelves, nothing could be reſiſted by them. The Devil was certainly none of the loweſt rank of Angels: he had a great clearneſs of gifts, yet he falls for cleaving to his own will and ſtrength, not to the grace of God. And Adam in depending upon on himſelf, loſt himſelf and his Poſterity; for us to undertake the government of our ſelves, is like a Ship without a Pilot, to be daſht ſoon againſt a Rock: To lean on our own wiſdom and will, is to lean on broken Reeds, deceitful ſupports: ſelf confidence is the worm of grace: conceit of a Spiritual fulneſs in our ſelves is the way to an emptineſs of Spiritual comfort. Self-will, and ſelf-wiſdom, are the great Idols of the Soul, and ſome little Images of them are in the hearts of the beſt men, which they are ready ſometimes to fall down before and worſhip: they would oppoſe temptations themſelves, do duties themſelves by the ſtrength of habitual grace, without regard to the ſtrength of God the great ſupport of it.

4. Therefore live dependently upon God. Do you not find how apt you are to ſtagger at every temptation? How weak your Wills are to good? How eaſily your purpoſes are broken; the thoughts of God few and diſtracted, your motions heavy in Divine ways? Is there not then need of a conſtant looking unto God, as they did upon the brazen Serpent, for the healing of our Natures, while the wound remains imperfectly cured? All Bodies on the Earth, tho they have a principle of motion in themſelves, yet dependently upon the Heavenly Bodies. If the motions of the Heavens ſhould ceaſe, that all motions in the Earth would ceaſe too, is the Opinion of Philoſophers. Without dependance on the grace of God, and fullneſs of Chriſt, we ſink into weakneſs and impotency, as a beam expires into duskineſs upon the Clouding of the Sun. 'Tis God only can be a dew to Iſrael, Hoſ. 14. 5. Think not of bringinging forth the after-fruits of grace without his influence, no more than you could plant in your ſelves the firſt root of grace without his power: the ſame breath of the Spirit muſt blow the fire up as well as kindle it. As by our own Wills we ſhould never turn to God, ſo without the continuance of efficacious grace, we ſhould quickly ſtart from God. As you have received Chriſt, ſo walk in him, Col. 2. 6. you received him by Faith; walk in him by Faith. This is the reaſon of the different thrivings of one Chriſtian above another, under the ſame means; one endeavours to act upon his own bottom; the other clings to the Vine. Chriſt knew the things of God by lying in the boſom of the Father; we come to know and do the things of God by lying in the boſom of the Son. All natural effects, if taken off from the influence of their own cauſe, by which they live and increaſe, loſe their power and dye: The Soul ſeparate from God by non-exerciſe of Faith, loſes its ſtrength, becomes ſtiff and unactive. How often do we return to our wonted coldneſs, bring forth lazy fruits, creep like Snails in the ways of God, without the ſpur of quickning grace? And we want it, becauſe we do not ſeek it; for tho we be armed with the whole Armor of God, Helmet, Shield, Breaſt-Plate; yet Prayer and Supplication muſt be added as a mark of our neceſſary dependance, Eph. 6. 18. Praying alway with all prayer and ſupplication: Then will the Spirit endue us with a freſh vigor, confirm our languiſhing Wills, reſtrain the flames of Natural Corruption, and excite the Fear and Faith of God in the heart.

2. The ſecond branch of the Exhortation, to thoſe yet in a Natural condition.

1. Endeavour to be ſenſible of your Natural impotence. Be deeply humbled at the Feet of God, ſtrip your ſelves (as much as in you lies) of the conceitedneſs of reaſon, and pride of Will. Every man is born with high conceits of himſelf and his own power; it being a Natural evil, ſhould coſt us the deeper Humiliations; conſider your ſelves by Nature under the dominion of ſin, the demerit of wrath, the curſe of the Law, the hatred of God, and a feebleneſs to help your ſelves in this wretched condition. View your ſelves often in the glaſs of the Law, bring the Spiritual Word and the Carnal Heart together, and behold the beauty of the one, and deformity of the other; let all the naſty corners of the heart come under the examination of that purity, and then let the Carnal mind hang down at the thoughts of your inability to frame your ſelves according to a Spiritual Law. The view of our Natural condition cannot work Regeneration in us, but it is ſome kind of preparation towards it. The Law is a School-Maſter to drive to Chriſt, Gal. 3. 24. It works not this grace, but but it fires a man out of himſelf, ſhows him how much he differs from the Holineſs of God, and is an occaſion for caſting about and looking after ſome remedy, whereby he may be made like to God, and of earneſt crying for the ſhowers of grace. Be ſenſible alſo of your contrariety to the grace of God; our wilfulneſs againſt it is worſe than our emptineſs of it; God will teach the humble his ways, Pſal. 25. 9. thoſe that are ſenſible of their own inſufficiency to guide themſelves.

2. Make uſe of the power you have. Man (as hath been ſhown) hath ſome power by thoſe reſtored relicks of Nature; there is no Plea therefore to lie ſnorting upon a Bed of ſluggiſhneſs. We muſt not expect a Divine aſſiſtance will fly to us from Heaven, while we play the ſluggards. Tho God doth rouſe up ſome on the ſudden, before any previous act of their Wills, yet we muſt not expect God will uſe the ſame methods to all; our own power muſt be ſtirred up and exerted as much as may be. To be faithful in a little, is the way to be made Ruler over much; tho the top of Nature cannot merit grace, yet if Nature ſtruggles to come to the top, it may find an inviſible hand helping it up ſtep by ſtep. The damnation of moſt men will not be for the fault of their firſt Parents, but for the abuſe of their own power, the perverſeneſs of their Wills, and neglect of what they might have done towards the ſeeking of God. Tho Moſes had a promiſe of victory over Amalek, yet Joſhuah muſt fight, and the Iſraelites ſtand to their Arms; God ſaves not men in ways encouraging their lazineſs. The ſluggard deſires and hath nothing; but the ſoul of the diligent ſhall be made fat, Prov. 13. 4. The ſluggard hath nothing but lazy wiſhes, not active endeavours. If it be not worth the having, why do you deſire it? If it be worth the deſiring, why not worth the ſeeking?

(1.) Avoid thoſe ſins you have power to avoid. Every ſin, tho never ſo little, doth increaſe our weakneſs, as every wound doth the Diſtemper of the Body; it makes us weigh down towards the center of ſin. Every grain caſt into the Scale makes it the more unable to riſe. As a vertue which is riſen to that height that it cannot degenerate into vice, is moſt worthy of praiſe: So the vice that poſſeſſes the Soul ſo deeply as to incapacitate it to the doing good, being contracted by our ſelves is the more worthy of wrath.

(2.) Uſe the means appointed by God. Tho we are Torches, which cannot light our ſelves, yet we may bring our ſelves to the word which may both melt and kindle us. Tho the giving Rain, and the increaſing the Fruits of the Earth be from God, yet no man ever held plowing, and ſowing, and pruning unneceſſary. The work of grace is the work of the Spirit, who is a wind which blows where it liſts, John 3. 8. But may we not wait for thoſe gales? May we not ſpread our Sails, and watch for the ſucceſsful breathings? How do you know, but whilſt you are waiting upon God in an humble poſture, God may unlock your hearts, and pour in the Treaſures of his grace? Acts 10. 44. While Peter yet ſpake thoſe words, the Holy Ghoſt fell on all them which heard the word. If you will not harden your hearts to day, God may ſoften your hearts to day, Heb. 3. 15. to day, if you will hear his voice: theſe are the times wherein God parlies with the Soul, and enclines it to the happy ſurrender. Tho the power is Gods, as the Water is the Fountains, yet he hath appointed the channels of his Ordinances through which to convey it. Miniſters by whom you believed, 1 Cor. 3. 5. The Goſpel begets inſtrumentally; God principally, 1 Cor. 4. 15. God calls by the Goſpel, 2 Theſ. 2. 14. As God is the Governor of the World, yet 'tis by inſtruments and ſecond cauſes, which he claſps together to bring about his own deſigns. He that doth not uſe theſe means, may fear that God will never work ſavingly upon him; for it is an utter refuſing any acceptance of this grace, or any thing tending to it: this is to be peremptory, never to do our ſelves any good, or receive any from God: In deſpiſing the means, you deſpiſe the goodneſs of God. As God gave up the Heathens to themſelves, becauſe they were unthankful, Rom. 1. 21. for that Light of Nature and means which they had: ſo if we uſe the means of the Goſpel with thankfulneſs to God, God may give himſelf up to us. But by neglect of them we take the larger ſtrides to deſtruction; and the ſame dreadful ſentence may be pronounced againſt us as againſt them in Ezek. 24. 13.

becauſe I have purged thee, that is, offered thee means whereby thou mighteſt have been purged, and thou waſt not purged, thou ſhalt not be purged from thy filthineſs any more; but in thy filthineſs thou ſhalt dye. The uſing the means afforded by God, hath a common illumination, and a taſte of the heavenly gift attending it, Heb. 6. 4.

[1.] Uſe the means fervently. With as much ardor as you ſet upon any thing of Worldly concern: do it with all your might, ſince the eternal bleſſedneſs of your Soul depends upon it; Eccleſ. 9. 10. Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: ſtir up your Souls to Hear and Meditate, as David doth to Bleſs, Pſal. 103. 1, 2. Bleſs the Lord, O my Soul: and all that is within me, bleſs his holy Name. Employ all your faculties in this uſeful Work; bring your hearts as near to the Word as you can, ſcrew up your affections to what you Meditate upon, check your hearts when they begin to rove. Conſider your own particular caſe in any thing you hear; and let the Word be as a delightful Picture in the view of your minds continually; let every Evangelical Object excite your inbred Affections.

[2.] Uſe the means dependently. Objective propoſals are not uſeleſs, becauſe God hath Ordained them, tho they are not always ſucceſsful, unleſs God doth influence them. The means do not work Naturally, as a Plaiſter cures a Wound, or a Hatchet cleaves Wood; nor neceſſarily as fire burns; for then they ſhould produce the ſame effects in all, as fire doth in combuſtible matter; but as God pleaſes to accompany them with his grace, and edg them with efficacy: they muſt be uſed with an eye to God: building with one hand, and wreſtling with God with the other: men ſpeed beſt in Ordinances as they ſtrive in prayer. There are promiſes to plead before you come to hear, Exod. 20. 24. In all places where I record my Name, I will come unto thee, and bleſs thee. The Promiſe was made to the whole Nation of Iſrael, the viſible Church, therefore pleadable by every one of them; and fix it upon your hearts, that as the death of Chriſt only takes away the guilt of ſin, ſo the grace of Chriſt only takes away the life of ſin, and the death of nature.

2. Pray earneſtly. Intreat God to ſend his grace; beg of him to iſſue out a Divine force, and a quickning power, to enlighten your minds, and encline your Wills. Lie at his feet, groan, wait till this work be wrought in your Soul: how do you know, but while you are looking up to God, God may come down to you; Can a man be wounded, and not cry for Plaiſters? Can he be ſhipwrackt and not cry out for ſome Veſſel to relieve him? Let ſuch a voice frequently iſſue from you, What ſhall I do to be ſaved? Is there no Balm for a wounded Soul, no Hope for a diſtreſt ſinner? no City of refuge for one purſued by wrath and vengeance? Do you pray for daily Bread? Why do you not for ſpecial grace? Are there no rational Pleas you can urge? Is there not a fulneſs of Arguments in the Word? Why do you not then uſe thoſe Arguments God hath put into your hands? Why do you not ſpread his own Word before him? Put him in mind how his thoughts were buſie about the Work of Redemption, and that the Regeneration you deſire of him, was the great end of that, and a thing pleaſing to him? Why do you not reaſon with God, To what purpoſe he ſent his Spirit into the World, but to do this Work in the hearts of men, which you are now ſolliciting him for; and that you come not to beg any Alms of him, but what he freely offers himſelf? You may daily read ſuch Arguments in the word, where a revelation is made of them; you may daily plead them: if you do not, 'tis not your cannot, but your will not. Cry out of the blind eyes you cannot unſcale; the Iron ſinew you cannot bend; the falſe heart that will not go right; and the fallen nature which cannot reach ſo high as a Holy thought. Surely God will not be deaf to the Natural Prayers of his rational Creatures, put up to him with a Natural integrity; no more than he is to the cries of Animals, to the voice of the Lyon ſeeking for his prey, into whoſe mouth he puts, by his Providence, what may ſatisfy it. God gives the Spirit to them that ask him, not to the idle, lazy, and peeviſh reſiſter of him and his grace. If you have power to Regenerate your ſelves, why do you not do it? If you have not, why do you not ſeek it? Is the way of Heaven ſhut to you; or rather, do you not ſhut your own hearts againſt it?

it? have you ſought it earneſtly, and can you ſay God denies it you? No man can ſay ſo; there is a promiſe for it, James 4. 8. Draw near to God, and he will draw near to you; he ſpeaks it to ſinners, as it follows, cleanſe your hands you ſinners. You can pray for other mercies, why not principally for this particular determination of your Wills to God, above all other things? Lord give me to Will and to do. Never leave off praying till God hath crowned your Petitions with ſucceſs: and be encouraged to ſeek to him, whoſe great buſineſs in the World was to deſtroy the works of the Devil, whoſe principal work was the Spiritual death of man. If you have ſuch earneſt deſires in your Souls that you would rather have it than the whole World, and eſteem it above all Worldly Wealth or Honours; be of good comfort, ſome of the rubbiſh of Nature is removed: the ſteams of ſuch deſires ſhall be welcome to God; and the Spirits Commiſſion ſhall be renewed to breathe further upon your Souls. Deſire as vehement as hunger and thirſt, ſhall be ſatisfied, if our Bleſſed Saviours Promiſe be true, who never deceived any, or broke his Word, Matth. 5. 6. Bleſſed are they that hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs: for they ſhall be filled: a fulneſs attends a ſenſe of emptineſs, accompanied with hungring deſires. But I am afraid few people put up their Petitions to God for it; that I may ſay, as Daniel of his Nation, All this evil of unrighteouſneſs and ſin is come upon us by our depraved Natures, yet made we not our prayer before the Lord our God, that we might turn from our iniquities, and underſtand thy truth, Dan. 9. 13.

3. Nouriſh every motion and deſire you find in your hearts towards it. Have you not ſometimes motions to go to the Throne of Grace, and beg renewing grace of God? Do you not find ſuch tugs and pulls in your Conſciences? Is there not ſomething within you ſpurs you on? Kick not againſt it, nor reſiſt it, no nor ſmother any ſpark of an honeſt deſire in your hearts; be conſtant obſervers of Leſſons, your Natural Conſciences, or what ever any other principle ſets you: Natural Notions are not ſo blotted, but they remain legible, would men be more inward with themſelves, than abroad with the Objects of ſenſe, which draw their minds from pondering that decalogue writ in their Souls. There is not the wickedſt man under the Goſpel, but hath ſometimes more bright irradiations in his Conſcience than at other times, but they are dampt by a noiſom ſenſuality: he hath ſome velleities and heavings, ſome ſtrugglings againſt the ſollicitations of unrighteouſneſs, ſome aſſents upon the preſenting of vertue; for as grace is not always ſo powerful in a good man as to ſtifle temptation, ſo neither is corruption ſo powerful in a wicked man as alway to beat back thoſe motions to good, which riſe up in his Soul, whether he will or no: As the Law of the mind is not alway ſo Soveraign in a gracious man, but that it is affronted by the Law of the members: ſo neither is the Law of the members ſo abſolute in a wicked man, but that it is ſomewhat checked by the Law of Nature in the mind. Are there not upon hearing the Word, or reflecting upon your ſelves, ſome wiſhings, ſome inward velleities which partake of Reaſon, and the Nature of that faculty which repreſents the neceſſity of it to you? As there is ſome kind of weak knowledg left in us ſince the fall, there is alſo ſomething of a weak deſire; cannot theſe deſires be improved and repreſented to God? Why is not the grace of God fulfilled in you? Becauſe you perſevere not in theſe deſires, you quench the ſparks of the Spirit, and willingly give admiſſion to Satan to chaſe them out. Shut not your eyes then againſt any Light, either without or within you, which may provoke God to withdraw this grace from you. How do you know but upon uſing the means, praying earneſtly, obſerving inward motions, God may give you an actual Regeneration? The neglect of theſe is a juſt Reaſon for God to refuſe you any further gift; and may take off all things which you may think to bring againſt him in your own defence. The uſe of them hath been beneficial to many, and no example can ever be brought, that God hath condemned any that conſcienciouſly uſed the means of Salvation. Therefore I ſay again, If any man uſes the means, prays earneſtly for this grace, obſerves the motions of the Spirit in him; he will not want a ſuperadded grace from an infinitely good, tender and merciful God.

A DIS-

John I. 13.

Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

TWO Doctrines were raised from these words.

1. That Man in all his capacities is too weak to produce the work of Regeneration in himself.

This I have dispatcht, and now proceed to the

2. Doct. God alone is the prime efficient cause of Regeneration.

'Tis Subjectively in the Creature, Efficiently from God. Ezekiel's dry Bones met not together of their own accord, Ezek. 37. 5, 6. or by chance, but were gathered by God, and inspired with life; and not only the last act of life, but the whole formation of them in every part, he doth particulaaly own as the act of his own power; And doing every part of it by degrees, they should know by that admirable Work upon them, that he was God. I will cause breath to enter into you, and you shall live. And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring flesh upon you, and cover you with skin; and you shall live, and you shall know that I am the Lord. This Work doth as much discover the Glory of his Deity, and speaks him God in a more illustrious manner than the Creation of the World. We know him to be the Lord Jehovah by his Creation of the World; but a clearer knowledg of him in his Power is added by his Regeneration of the Soul. The sinews, flesh, skin, all the preparations to grace are from God; as all the preparations of that mass of Clay, for the breath of life in Adam, were from the Power of God, as well as the living Soul it self. Most do understand it of the recovery of the Jews from the Captivity of Babylon: but certainly it hath a higher import, and respects the time of the Gospel, and the renewing of life in the Soul of all the Israel of God. (1.) Because the Prophecy extends further than the Two Tribes captivated in Babylon; for Verse 11. The Bones are said to be, The whole house of Israel, who despaired of ever seeing any good, complaining that their Bones were dried, Verſe 11. our hope is loſt, we are cut off for our parts. Which could not be rationally the complaint of the Jews, who had a Promiſe that after 70 Years Captivity, they ſhould return, and therefore their caſe was not ſo deſperate. (2.) Becauſe, Verſe 14. he ſpeaks of putting his ſpirit into them; meaning thereby, that Work he had ſpoken of in the former Chapter, Ezek. 36. 7. which certainly being a Covenant of grace, reſpected the times of the Goſpel. If it be ſaid, That it is meant of forming the Church; it muſt alſo be meant of forming every member of it, ſince the leaſt member of Adam was formed by God, as well as the whole body. Certainly if renewed men after ſome great falls, having ſtill the root of habitual grace in them, cry to God out of a ſenſe of their own inſufficiency, for the Creating a clean heart, as David doth, Pſal. 51. 10. Create in me a clean heart, O God: and renew a right ſpirit within me. If he then who had this root remaining, and had ſome ſparks which preſently were blown up upon Nathan's ſpeech to him, cries out for a New Creation; What need hath he then of an Almighty breath, who hath not any warm aſhes of grace, or any one ſtring of a Spiritual root in his his Soul? Whatſoever therefore is Holy, Good, and Spiritual in us, we owe to the New Creating grace of God. All graces are his χαρισματα, his free donatives, over and above his common largeſſes to Nature, a Preſent from his infinite liberality.

I ſhall ſhow,

1. That God is the Efficient.
2. That 'tis neceſſary He ſhould be ſo.
3. From what Principles in God it flows.
4. How God doth it.
5. The Uſe of it.

1. That God is the Efficient.

1. God doth always appropriate this Work to himſelf.

(1.) In the firſt Promiſe, Gen. 3. 15. I will put enmity, &c. In which Promiſe is included the whole Work of Redemption, and New Creating man under another Head, with another Nature, which ſhould not comply with the deſigns of Satan, or gratify the great Enemy of God and mankind, by unravelling the Work of God, and ſubjecting himſelf to miſery. It was neceſſary to our happineſs, that the League between Satan and us ſhould be broken; that we ſhould turn to God; hate the works of the Devil, and join with the intereſt which Satan endeavoured to overthrow: And God Promiſes that he would do it, he challengeth it as his own Work; I will put enmity: he leaves it not to Men or Angels to begin this Hoſtility. Every one therefore that is at a true variance with Satan, is Gods Workmanſhip created in Chriſt by a ſecond creation, as well as he was Created to a Natural life in Adam by the firſt Creation, and created to good works, that he may walk in them, Eph. 2. 10. That is, is faſhioned by God to walk in ways contrary to thoſe of Satan, which is the greateſt enmity we can expreſs to the Devil, who envied God a ſervice from the Holineſs of Adam's Nature: and Satan having made that conqueſt, and gained man to be his Friend, 'tis not eaſy to conceive how any lower power could unfaſten this knot, and ſet them at variance, ſince the Devil had both wit enough to humour man, and ſtrength enough to keep him.

(2.) In the times of the Goſpel. No leſs than ſeven times, I will, he doth affix to his Promiſe of the Covenant, as hath been obſerved before, Ezek. 36. 25, 26, 27. What ſeed was left to keep up the Name of God among the Jews, was of his begetting, Rom. 9. 29. Except the Lord of ſabaoth had left us a ſeed; cited out of Iſa. 1. 9. Their ſtanding was not of their act, but Gods: And 1 King. 19. 18. I have left me ſeven thouſand, all the knees that have not bowed to Baal; others were left to themſelves, theſe were ſignally wrought upon by his grace. Others are but inſtruments; God is the principal Agent in all the ſeed of the Church, ſcattered in the whole Earth, Hoſ. 2. 23. I will ſow her to me in the Earth; alluding to the name Jezreel, which ſignifies the ſeed of God. If ever the Sons of Japhet dwell in the Tents of Shem, it muſt be by God's perſuaſion, Gen. 9. 27. The word rendred enlarge, ſignifies to allure. The ſpirit of grace is of God's effu-effusion, Zech. 12. 10. 'tis Gods pouring out a Spirit of grace on them, before their looking up to God. (Where by the way observe a signal testimony of the Deity of Christ; They shall look upon me whom they have pierced; he that pours upon them the Spirit of grace, is he whom they pierced, which was the Lord Jehovah, Verse 8. For where in your Bibles, Lord is written in great Letters, the Hebrew word there is Jehovah; the highest Name of God is here attributed to Christ.) And even in the last times he will still be the only Agent in it. When God speaks of the Jews dispersion, under which they are at this day, he owns this work upon their hearts, at last, to be an act of his own power, and of covenant-mercy, Deut. 30. 6. The Lord thy God will circumcise thy heart, &c. which some of the Jews understand of the time of the Messiah: God will challenge this Work as his own right to the end of the World.

2. Christ appropriates it to God, and acknowledges it to depend only upon his Will. Had any other cause been in conjunction with God, our Saviour would not have deprived it of its due praise, nor with so much thankfulness and amazement admired the gracious pleasure of his Father, as he did, Matth. 11. 25. At that time Jesus answered, and said, I thank thee, O father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. At that time, after he had been discoursing of the Judgments upon them for their refusal of the Gospel, worse than upon Sodom and Gomorrah. It was Gods pleasure not to reveal it to them; and Gods Justice to punish them for refusal, because they wilfully refused it: the outward teaching was to all, in the Ministry of Christ; the inward revelation only to few, according to the good pleasure of God: Christ was the outward teacher, but God the inward inspirer: that others are not renewed by him, is not because he cannot, for he is Lord of Heaven and Earth; but because he will renew some and not others: our Saviour refers it here only to the good pleasure of God: he had erred much in ascribing it to God, if he had had the assistance of any other cause. Why this part of the Clay he had Created was formed into the Body of Adam and not another, had no other cause but his pleasure: why this part of corrupted Adam is formed into a Temple, a Divine Image, and not another, can be ascribed to no other but the same cause. He that formed Adam in the Earthly Paradice, forms every Believer in the Church, the Spiritual Paradice, and neither hath a co-worker nor motive without himself.

3. The Scripture every where appropriates it to God. They are therefore called his Saints, Psal. 34. 9. as being Sanctified by him, as well as belonging to him; his People, the branch of his planting, the Work of his hands, peculiarly his, as being Created for his Glory, That I may be glorified, Isa. 60. 21. Their fitness by Grace for Glory is the Work of his Hands. The vessels of wrath are fitted for destruction, not by God, but by themselves, Rom. 9. 22. But the Vessels of Mercy are prepared by him, Verse 23. He had before prepared unto glory. Adam lost himself, but whosoever of his Posterity are recovered, are wrought by God for Glory, 1 Cor. 5. 5. 'Tis observable that the Apostle ascribes this in the whole frame of it to God, 1 Cor. 1. 30. But of him are you in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, &c. because he would remove all cause of boasting in the Creature: he did not only set forth Christ at first as a Principle of Righteousness, and Redemption, and Sanctification, but engrafted in him, whosoever is in him, for the enjoyment of those priviledges, and made him not only in general to the World, but to us, in the particular Application, a Principle of Sanctification, as well as Righteousness. Union with Christ, engrafting in him, new Creation, putting into another state, are all purely the Work of God. He hath no sharer in it. As Christ trod the Wine-press alone, in the Work of Redemption: so God engrafts men alone, into this Vine. As Christ was the sole Worker of Redemption, so is God the sole Worker of Regeneration; In him we are Created, but solely by Gods skill: Christ the Vine, and Believers the branches; the one planted, and the other engrafted by the same husbandman, John 15. 1, 2. he only planted and dresst Christ for us; he only plants and dresseth us in Christ. 'Tis by his own will, not any other, that he begat us, James 1. 18. Of his own will, his own good pleaſure was the motive, his own ſtrength the Efficient: Hence he is called the father of Spirits, Heb. 12. 9. not ſo much (as ſome interpret it, and that moſt probably) as he is the Father of Souls by Creation, as by Regeneration, which adds a greater ſtrength to the Apoſtles Argument for ſubmiſſion to him, and patience under his ſtrokes. He keeps in his own hand the Keys of the Heart, no leſs than the Key of the Womb, which was alway acknowledged to be in the Hands of God. 'Tis with this Prerogative of God that Jacob ſilenceth Rachel, when ſhe ſo impatiently cried out for Children, as if ſhe had a reſolution to kill her ſelf, if ſhe had them not; with this, Am I in God's ſtead? Gen. 30. 1, 2. He only opens the Womb of the Soul as well as that of the Body, Impregnates it with Grace, and brings forth the fruit of Holy actions, as Philo in his Allegory deſcants upon the place. The Jews perhaps meant no leſs in that ſaying in their Cabala *: Abraham had not had Iſaac, if a Letter of the Name of God had not been added to his name; the Power of God, a Letter of his Name muſt go to Regeneration. 'Tis appropriated to none but God in Scripture. To the whole Trinity without the conjunction of any Creature. To the Father as the Author, therefore called, Our Father. To Chriſt, as the Pattern; to the Spirit, as the Inſpirer of that grace whereby we are made the Sons of God. The very Heathen have acknowledged this: ſome Philoſophers have affirmed, That the great vertue wherein they placed the happineſs of man, could not be had but by the favour of God; and all thought their Heroes to be born of their gods.

And the Scripture affirms that,

(1.) All preparations to this Work, as well as the Work it ſelf, are of God. The removing indiſpoſitions, and the putting in good inclinations, is the Work of the ſame hand: the taking away the heart of Stone, as well as the giving a heart of Fleſh. He removes the rubbiſh, as well as rears the building; razeth out the old ſtamp, and imprints a new; deſtroys ſin, which is called the Old Man, and reſtores the New by the quickning of the Spirit. The preparations of the duſt of the ground to become a human Body, had the ſame Author, as the Divine Soul wherewith he was inſpired.

(2.) All the parts of the New Creature are of God. Faith which is the principal part of it, is the faith of the operation of God, Col. 2. 12. not but that Love and other Graces are wrought by God; but in this grace which is a conſtitutive part of the New Creature, God comes in with a greater irradiation upon the Soul, becauſe it hath not one fragment or point in Nature to ſtand upon, Carnal Reaſon and meer Moral Righteouſneſs being Enemies to it: whereas all other Graces are but the rectifying the Paſſions, and ſetting them upon right Objects. Yet all theſe too own him as the Author. Our knowledg of God is a Light growing from his knowledg of us; we know God becauſe we are known of him, Gal. 4. 9. The elective act of our Wills is but a fruit of his choice of us, John 15. 16. You have not choſen me, but I have choſen you; our willing of him, is a birth of his willing us; our love, a ſpark kindled by his love to us. God firſt calls us my People, before any of us call him, my God, Hoſ. 2. 23. The Moon ſhines not upon the Sun, till it be firſt illuminated by it. God firſt ſhines upon us, before we can reflect upon him: he calls us, before we can ſpeak to him in his own Dialect: our coming is an effect of his drawing; and our power of coming, an effect of his quickning. Every member in Adam was a fruit of his power as well as the whole Body; every line drawn in the New Creature, is done by his Pencil, as well as the whole frame.

(3.) The acts of the New Creature. God doth not only give us the habit of Faith, but the act of Faith, Phil. 1. 29. Unto you it is given in the behalf of Chriſt, not only to believe, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake: by believing, is meant, the act of believing; as by ſuffering, is meant, not only the power of ſuffering, but actual ſuffering: as the fruits upon the Trees, at the firſt Creation, were Created, as well as the Tree which had a power to bear. The very attention of Lydia to the Goſpel preached by Paul, was wrought by God, as well as the opening of her heart, Acts 16. 14. Our walking in his Statutes is a fruit of his grace, as well as the putting in his Spirit to enable us thereunto: the very act of motion is made by the head and heart; if there be a failing of Spirits there, if any obſtruction ction that they cannot reach the indigent part, the motion ceaseth. David acknowledged God his continual strength in his holy pursuits, My soul follows hard after thee, Psal. 63. 8. but what was the cause? thy right hand upholds me; his life and power issued out from the right hand of God. The graces of Gods people stand in need of the irradiations of God, like the Urim and Thummim, before any counsel could be given by them.

(4) The continuance both of the power and acts, are from God. Habitual grace is called the fear of the Lord put into the Soul; the continuance of it is by his constant sustentation, 'tis that we may not depart from him, Jer. 32. 40. from upon him, from leaning upon him, or believing in him, as the word * imports. If that fear put in did once depart from us, we should no longer cleave to God: we stick to him only because he ties us to himself, and cannot be continually with him unless he holds us by his right hand, Psal. 73. 23. The grace that is wrought, as well as the Gospel, which instrumentally wrought it, is kept by the Holy Ghost, 2 Tim. 1. 14. he begins every good Work, and he performs it. He was the sole active cause in the Creation of the faculties, and the principal cause in preserving them: he is the sole cause of the elevation of the faculties, and the preservation of them in that elevated state: As the vertue of the Loadstone is not only the cause of the first attraction of the steel, but of its constant adhesion; therefore it is said, 1 Cor. 1. 21. That God doth establish us, not hath done: to note the continual influence of his grace upon us. 'Twas the dropping of the two olive-trees that constantly fed the lamps in the candlesticks, Zech. 4. 2, 3. Take this New Birth in all the denominations of it, 'tis altogether ascribed to God. As it is a call out of the World, God is the Herald, 2 Tim. 1. 9. As it is a Creation, God is the Creator, Eph. 2. 10. As it is a Resurrection, God is the quickner, Eph. 2. 5. As it is a New Birth, God is the begetter, 1 Pet. 1. 3. As it is a New Heart, God is the framer, Ezek. 36. 26. As it is a Law in the Heart, God is the Pen-man, Jer. 31. 33. As it is a translation out of Satans kingdom, and making us Denizons of the Kingdom of Christ, God is the Translator, Col. 1. 13. As it is a coming to Christ, God is the drawer, John 6. 44. As it is a turning to God, God is the attracter.

2. The second thing, 'tis necessary God should be the Efficient of Regeneration. He is, or none.

1. In regard of God.

(1.) As he is the first cause of all things. He is the Creator of the lowest Worm, and the Highest Angel; the glimmering perfections of the least Fly, as well as the more glittering eminencies of the Angelical Nature, are distinct beams from that Fountain of Light and Power; shall not he then be the cause of the Divine motions of the Will, as well as of the Natural motions of the Creatures? Every perfection in a rational Creature, or any other, supposeth that perfection to be somewhere essentially; every impression supposeth a stamp that made it; every stream a fountain from whence it sprang; every beam a Sun, or some lucid body from whence it darts. Whence should this gracious Work then be derived? Not from nature, which is contrary to it; not from Satan, who is destroyed by it: It must be then from God, since it must have some stable and perfect cause. He who was the cause of all the grace in the head, is also the cause of all the grace in the members: the same Sun that enlightens the Heavens, enlightens the Earth: the grace that Christ had was the gift of God, John 3. 34. much more must it be his gift to us, tho we had Souls as capacious as his. If the head derived not his grace to himself, the members cannot; for Christ being a Creature, in regard of his humanity, must necessarily be dependent; for to make any Creature independent upon God, is to advance it above the degree of a Creature-state, and make it Gods fellow, yea, to have a Godhead in it self, as being the first principle of its own being. To say, Any Creature can move to God, without being moved by God, or live without his influence, is to make the Creature independent on God in its Operations; and if it be independent in its Operations, it would be so consequently in its Essence *. Besides, if it be not Created by him, it may subsist without him, it stands in no need of his quickning. The Believers in Scripture were very unadvised then to pray to God for his quickning and establishing grace, if he he were not the enlivener and Author of it. His Power works in preſervation as well as Creation, John 5. 17. and whatſoever is dependent on him in preſervation, is dependent on him in creation and the firſt framing. And if it doth not depend upon him in preſervation, it is not his Creature, but it is a God. All Creatures have a dependence upon ſomething immediately ſuperior to them. The Moon receives her Light and chief beauty from the Sun, which elſe would be but a dusky body; the Earth, its influence from the Heavens. In Artificial things, the little Wheels in a Watch depend upon the greater; that upon the ſtring; that in its motion upon the hand that winds it up. The higher any Creature is, the more immediately it depends upon God in its production; the Waters brought forth the Fiſh; but God himſelf formed Man.

(2.) As he is the Promiſer of it. The Divine Promiſe is only fulfilled by a Divine Operation; 'tis neceſſary then for the honour of his Truth to be the performer of it. All his Promiſes concerning this matter run in that ſtrain, I will, Hoſ. 2. 19. I will betroth thee to me for ever; I will betroth thee to me in righteouſneſs, in judgment, in loving kindneſs, and in mercy. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulneſs, and thou ſhalt know the Lord. The Lord promiſeth by this of knowing him, all gracious Works upon the Soul, Regeneration, Faith, &c. for this knowledg is an effect of the Covenant which God Promiſes in that great Copy of it, Jer. 31. 34. they ſhall all know me, from the leaſt of them to the greateſt. 'Tis not a ſimple abſtracted knowledg, for ſo the Devils know God, and Chriſt Crucified; but ſuch a knowledg that implies Faith and Love, and a new frame of Soul. 'Tis neceſſary his power ſhould make good what his goodneſs hath promiſed. It was not neceſſary any word of promiſe ſhould go out of his mouth, there was no engagement upon God to do it; but it is neceſſary this promiſe ſhould be performed: tho he were free before he promiſed, yet he is not free after he hath promiſed, becauſe his Truth ingageth him to perform it, and perform it as his own act, as much as his Mercy moved him to promiſe it as his own act. As mercy made it, ſo his mercy is as preſſing for the performance: and there comes in a ſuperadded Obligation from that of his Truth over and above his mercy, to perform it in the ſame manner he promiſed it, and in all the circumſtances of it. So that ſuppoſing (which cannot be ſuppoſed) that his mercy ſhould repent of making it, he would not be true if he did not perform it. Beſides, it conſiſts not with his Truth, not to perform that by himſelf, which he hath promiſed by himſelf; nor with his Wiſdom to leave that to an uncertain cauſe at the beſt, and further, a cauſe utterly unable (as every Creature is) to produce that which he hath promiſed to do with his own hand, as the cleanſing the Soul, pouring clean Water upon it, pouring out a Spirit of grace, writing the Law in the heart, which imply his own act principally in this affair, in concurrence with the means he hath ordained to that end. The performance of Gods Promiſe is as infallible, as the cauſe that made the Promiſe. No power can perform that for another which he promiſes himſelf to do; for the thing it ſelf may be done by another, yet not being done by the party promiſing to do it, 'tis not truly done, and in conformity to the promiſe made. If it were poſſible then to be done by any but a Divine hand, it would not be done truly, becauſe God promiſes it as his own act, and therefore the working it muſt be his own act in conformity to his Truth.

(3.) As he hath the fore-knowledg of all things. 'Tis neceſſary God ſhould foreknow every thing future, and that ſhall come to paſs; this is a perfection neceſſarily belonging to God; and to imagine the contrary, is to frame an unworthy notion of God, and infinitely below the Great Creator and Governor of the World. He therefore Wills every thing; for if he fore-knew any thing before he willed it in its ſelf, or in its neceſſary cauſes, he fore-knew nothing. If he did not Will it, how can it come to paſs? Therefore he did not fore-know that it would come to paſs. If he did fore-know it, then he willed it, otherwiſe his foreknowledg depended upon an uncertain cauſe; and he might have judged that to come to paſs which never might; unleſs the cauſe be determined by God, 'tis meerly contingent. He Willing therefore a Work of grace in ſuch and ſuch perſons, did fore-know that it would be wrought, becauſe he did Will that it ſhould be, and his Working is done by an act of his Will, Rom. 8. 29. Whom he did fore-know, he did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his ſon. The fore-knowledg of God being ſtable and infallible, and being in this caſe a fore-knowledg of what makes highly for the glory of all his Attributes, can have no dependance upon an uncertain and fallible cauſe, but upon a cauſe as ſtable as his fore-knowledg, which is his Will, himſelf. His fore-knowledg of this is not a fore-knowledg of it in any created cauſe, but in himſelf as the cauſe. Becauſe, as it will appear further, no created cauſe could accompliſh it.

2. In regard of the ſubject of this New Birth.

(1.) In regard of the ſubject ſimply conſidered; the heart and will of man: none can work upon it but God, or have any intrinſick influence to cauſe it to exerciſe its vital acts. Angels, tho of a very vaſt power, cannot work immediately upon the heart and will of any other Creature, to encline and change it, by an immediate touch. All that they can do towards any moving the will, is by preſenting ſome external Objects, or ſtirring up the inward ſenſitive Appetite to ſome paſſion, as anger, deſire; whereby the Will is enclined to Will ſomething. But the ſtirring up thoſe natural Affections in an unregenerate man, can never encline his Will to good; for being the Affections of the fleſh, they are to be crucified. Angels alſo may enlighten the Underſtanding, not immediately, but by preſenting ſimilitudes of ſenſible things, and confirming them in the fancy: but to remove one ill habit from the will, or encline it to any good, is not in their power. God gave an Angel power to purge the Prophets lips with a coal from the Altar, Iſa. 6. 6, 7. but that was done in a Viſion; and a ſymbol or ſign only that his uncleanneſs was removed. A Coal could have no vertue in it to purge Spiritual pollutions from the Spirit of a man. Neither can man change the Will; men by allurements or threats, may change, or rather ſuſpend the action of another; as a Father that threatens to diſinherit his Son; or a Magiſtrate, that threatens to puniſh a ſubject for his debauchery, may cauſe a change in the actions of ſuch perſons; but the heart ſtands ſtill to the ſame ſinful point, and may be vicious under a fair diſguiſe. He only that made the Will, can encline and turn it as the rivers of waters; the heart of the king is in the hands of the Lord, Prov. 21. 1. and ſo is every mans heart kept in the hands of him that created it, both Cabinet and Key. No man knows the heart, no; the heart it ſelf knows not every thing which is in it. God knows all the Wards in the heart, and knows how to move it. If a man could turn the heart of another, it could only be in one or two points; it cannot be conceived how he ſhould alter the whole frame of it, make it quite another thing than it was before. The ſpirit of man being the candle of the Lord, Prov. 20. 27. not to give light to him, but lighted by him, can only when it is out, be re-lighted, and, when it burns dim, be ſnuft by the ſame hand. Or, ſuppoſe for the preſent, he could do this, it muſt be with much pains and labour, many exhortations and wiſe management of him upon ſeveral occaſions. But to do this by a word, in a trice, to put a Law into the heart in a moment; and give the hidden man of the heart poſſeſſion of the Will, that a man knows not himſelf how he came to be changed: this whole work bears the mark and ſtamp of God in the forehead of it. Men may propoſe Arguments to another, and he may underſtand them if he hath a capacity: but no man can ever make another have a capacity, who is naturally uncapable; 'tis God only can make the heart capable of underſtanding, he only can put a new inſtinct into it, and make it of another bent: 'tis he that renews the ſpirit of the mind to enable it to underſtand what he doth propoſe, and elevates the faculty to apprehend the reaſon of it.

θεῖον δὲ τὴν θεῖν τὰς ψυχάς. Athanaſ.

(2.) In regard of the ſubject, extreamly ill qualified. Can any queſtion the Divinity of the work, when Stones are made Children to Abraham? When Waters of Repentance are drawn out of a hard Rock? Aaron's dry rod made to bud and bloſſom, and bring forth fruit? Numb. 17. 8. When Souls deeply allied to the Kingdom of darkneſs are tranſlated into the Kingdom of Light? To ſee habits ſtrengthned by cuſtom, in a conſumption; and hearts filled with multitudes of Idols in ſeveral ſhapes, caſting them out with indignation, and flouriſhing with new ſpringing graces! 'tis too great a Miracle to be wrought by the hand of any Creature. *Could any thing, but the Arm of the Lord, change the

the temper of the Thief upon the Croſs, to advance further in the ſpace of an hour in the Kingdom of God, than all the Apoſtles had done in the Three years converſe with their Maſter; to confeſs him, when one of the moſt eminent of them had denied him; to be more knowing in an inſtant, than they had been in a long time; and acknowledg his ſpiritual Kingdom, when they even after his Reſurrection, and juſt before his Aſcenſion, expected a temporal one? Acts 1.6. Wilt thou at this time reſtore the kingdom to Iſrael? If a Socrates, or a Cato, or thoſe braver Lights among the Heathen, were turned to God, the intereſt of God in the work might upon ſome ſeeming ground be queſtioned; but when the Leviathans in ſin, Drunkards, Extortioners, Adulterers, men guilty of the greateſt contempt of God, and the light of Nature, in whom luſt had kept a peaceable poſſeſſion in its Empire for many years, are throughly changed, who can doubt but that ſuch muſt indeed be waſht and ſanctified by the Spirit of our God? 1 Cor. 6. 11. What can this be but the will of God, ſince their hearts were ſo delightfully filled with evil, that they had no room nor love for any holy thought? 'Tis not conceivable, that where ſin hath made ſuch a rout, and cut and ſlaſht all Morality in pieces, things ſhould be ſet in order there, but by a power ſtronger both than ſin, and the law, from whence ſin derives its ſtrength. 'Tis no leſs than a divine Miracle to renew an habituated ſinner.

(3.) In regard of the nature of this new birth. 'Tis a change of Nature; a Nature where there was as little of ſpiritual good, as there was of Being in Nothing before the Creation. 'Tis a change of ſtone into fleſh; a heart that like a ſtone hath a hardneſs and ſettledneſs of ſinful parts; a ſtrong reſiſtance againſt any Inſtrument; an incorporation of ſin and luſt with its nature; where the heart and ſin, ſelf and ſin are cordially one and the ſame, none can change ſuch a Nature but the God of all grace, who hath all grace to conteſt with all the power of old Adam. No man can change the nature of the meaneſt creature in the world; he may tame them, bring them to part with ſome of their wildneſs, but he cannot transform them: if no man can transform the loweſt creature from one nature to another, much leſs can any but God transform man into another Nature.

This Nature is changed in every believer; for it is impoſſible a man ſhould ſtand bent to Chriſt with his old Nature predominant in him, any more than a pebble can be attracted by a Loadſtone, till it put on the nature of Steel; an unrighteous Nature cannot act righteouſly; it muſt therefore be a God who is above Nature, that can clothe the ſoul with a new Nature, and encline it to God and goodneſs in its operations. Now to ſee a lump of Vice become a Model of Virtue, for one that drunk in iniquity like water, to change that ſinful thirſt for another for Righteouſneſs; to crucifie his darling fleſh, to be weary of the poyſon he loved, for the purity he hated; to embrace the Goſpel-terms, which not his Paſſion but his Nature abhorred; to change his hating of duty, to a free-will offering of it; to make him ceaſe from a loathing the obligations of the Law, to a longing to come up to the exactneſs of it; to count it a burden to have the thoughts at a diſtance from God, when before it was a burden to have one ſerious thought fixed on him, ſpeaks a ſupernatural grace tranſcendently attractive, and powerfully operative. Heavy elements do not aſcend againſt their own nature, unleſs they be drawn by ſome ſuperior force: To ſee a ſoul weighed down to the earth, to be lifted up to Heaven, muſt point us to a greater than created ſtrength that cauſed the elevation. Theſe acts are ſupernatural, and cannot be done by a natural cauſe; that is againſt the order of working in all things; for then the effect, as an effect, would be more noble than its cauſe.

(4.) In regard of the ſuddenneſs of it. Peter and Andrew were called, when they thought of nothing but their Nets; and Paul chang'd by a word or two, who before was not only unwilling, but rebellious; ſome have gone into a Church Wolves, and returned Lambs. This change comes upon ſome that never dreamt of it, and hath ſnatcht them out of the arms of Hell; upon others who have reſiſted with all their might any motion that way, and were never greater enemies to any, than to thoſe that would check their ſinful pleaſures with ſuch admonitions; and yet theſe have been on the ſudden ſurpriz'd. What ground is there to aſcribe any of this, but to a divine work? Many have dropt in unto a Sermon with no intention to ſtay, who have felt Gods hook in their ſouls; have leapt, like fiſh, out of their element for a while, while, and God hath catcht them in his hand. Have you never heard of ſome who have gone to make ſport with a convincing Sermon, or to ſatisfie luſt with unclean glances, who have been made priſoners by grace before their return? This quickneſs of the ſoul in coming to Chriſt, was promiſed to be the fruit of the Goſpel, Hoſ. 3. 5. They ſhall fear the Lord and his goodneſs, when they ſhould ſeek the Lord and David their King; the word פחד ſignifies not only to fear, but to haſten; both ſignifications may be joined together in the ſenſe of the Verſe; they ſhall make haſte to fear the Lord and his goodneſs; ſurely the power that performs it, is the ſame with the goodneſs which promiſed it. Thus ſome of the Diſciples have followed Chriſt at the firſt call, and moved readily to him, as Iron to the Loadſtone. For a man that was at a great diſtance from God, and any affection to him, to be filled on the ſudden with a warm love and zeal for him, when nothing of intereſt could engage him (and ſometimes it hath been with loſs of Friends, Eſtate, yea life too) is as great a diſcovery of a divine hand, as if a Fly were chang'd into the ſhape and ſpirit of a Hero; becauſe a ſpiritual change is more admirable than a natural; and the more, by how much the enmity which was greater, is driven out, for a choice affection to riſe up in its ſtead; the ſeaſon when ſuch a work is wrought, is more ſignificant of a Divine force, when men have been in the heat and ſtrength of the purſuit of their ſinful pleaſures, being then torn out of the embracements of Luſt with an outſtretched Arm of God.

(5.) In regard of the excellency of the New birth. Is it reaſonable to think, that the image of God ſhould be wrought by any other hand than the hand of God, or the Divine nature be begotten by any thing but the Divine Spirit? Since none but man can beget a Child in his own likeneſs, none but God can impart to a Soul the Divine nature. 'Tis not a change only into the image of God with ſlight colours, an image drawn as with Charcoal; but a glorious image even in the rough draught, which grows np into greater beauty by the addition of brighter colours: Changed (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 3. 18.) into the ſame image from glory to glory; glory in the firſt lineaments, as well as glory in the laſt lines. Is it not too beautiful then, even in the firſt draught, to be wrought by any Pencil but a Divine? 'Tis next to the formation of Chriſt, for it is an initial conformity to him. God is the fountain of all our good things: If every good and perfect gift comes from him, James 1.17. ſhall not the beſt of Beings be the Author of the beſt of Works? If believers are light in the Lord, Eph. 5. 8. they are no leſs light from him and by him who is the Father of lights. 'Tis a heavenly calling, Heb. 3.1. therefore a heavenly birth. The new heart, the ſpiritual houſe wherein God dwells, as well as in the Heavens, was not made with a leſs power and skill, than the earth, which is his footſtool, or the heaven, which is his throne. If none be able to make God a footſtool, much leſs a Throne; as Jeruſalem, the Church, is called in the times of the Goſpel, Jer. 3.17. The Embroideries and Ornaments of the Material Tabernacle were not made by common Art, but by a Bezaliel inſpired by the Spirit of God, Exod. 31.3. Can any but himſelf rear up a Temple for the God of Heaven to dwell in? 1 Cor. 3.9. Or is the Spiritual houſe of God fit to be made by any but that God that dwells in it? It was according to the image of God that we were firſt created; 'tis according to the image of Chriſt that we are new created, Rom. 8. 29. Who underſtands the image of the Son but the Father? Who knows the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him? The New Creature according to the Copy, can only be wrought by him to whom the Copy is only viſible. 'Tis for the honour of God to allow him to be the framer of all creatures in the rank of Beings. Is it not a diſhonour to him, not to acknowledg him the framer of the Nevv Creature in the rank of Spiritual beings; ſince the later is more excellent than the Treaſures of the earth, or the Stars of heaven, than body or ſoul; ſince the image of God conſiſts not ſo much in the ſubſtance of the ſoul, as in a likeneſs to God in a holy nature? Eph. 4. 24. To be a righteous regenerate man, is more excellent than to be a man; the moſt glorious effect then muſt have the moſt glorious cauſe. One beam of this Divine image is too excellent to be the workmanſhip of any but a Divine hand. The very firſt regenerate thought, to the laſt dropping off of impurity, is from the ſame hand. The firſt drawing us from ſin, much more the ſtripping us of it, is more admirable than the drawing us out of nothing.

(6.) The end of Regeneration manifeſts it to be the work of God. It is to diſplay his goodneſs. Since this was the end of God in the firſt Creation, 'tis much more his end in the ſecond. What creature can diſplay Gods goodneſs for him, or give him the glory of it, without firſt receiving it? Goodneſs muſt firſt be communicated to us, before it can be diſplayed or reflected by us. The light that is reflected back upon the Sun by any earthly body, beams firſt from the Sun it ſelf. Both the ſubject and the end are put together in Iſa. 43. 20, 21. The beaſts of the field ſhall honour me; the dragons and the owls: becauſe I give waters in the wilderneſs, to give drink to my people, my choſen: this people have I formed for my ſelf, they ſhall ſhow forth my praiſe. The Gentiles ſhall have the Goſpel, who are beaſts of the field for wildneſs, Dragons for the poyſon of their nature, Owls for their blindneſs and darkneſs. The waters of the Goſpel ſhall flow to them, to give drink to their ſouls. This people have I formed for my ſelf. Even Beaſts, Dragons, Owls, if formed for himſelf, they could not be formed but by himſelf, who only underſtands what is fit for his own praiſe. How can ſuch uncapable ſubjects be formed for ſuch high ends, without a ſupernatural power? So in Iſa. 60. 21. The branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified. Planted by God, that God might be glorified by them. As God only is the proper Judge of what may glorifie him; ſo he is the ſole Author of what is fitted to glorifie him. Nothing lower than the goodneſs of God can inſtill into us ſuch a goodneſs, as to be made meet to praiſe, ſerve and love him; ſuch a holineſs as may fit us to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light, and enjoy him for ever. As infinite wiſdom formed us in Adam, and moulded us with his own hand to be a model of his Perfection; ſo are we no leſs his workmanſhip in Chriſt by a ſecond creation to good works; which as they are ordained by the will of God, ſo they are wrought in us by the skill and power of God; what is ordained poſitively by him and for him, is wrought by him. The whole World conſiſts but of two men and their Offſpring, the firſt man Adam, the ſecond man Chriſt; both they, and all in them, created by God. 'Tis a forming a creature for himſelf, for his own delight. What delight can God take in any thing but himſelf, and what is like himſelf? Man in his beſt eſtate is vanity. As his being is, ſo are his operations. Vanity, and the operations flowing from thence, are no fit object for the delight of an infinite Excellency and Wiſdom. What pleaſure can he have in thoſe things which are not wrought by his own finger? Who knows how to dreſs any thing ſavoury and pleaſant to God, but his own grace? Can a finite thing touch an infinite being to enjoy him without the operation of an infinite virtue? Can God delight in any thing principally but himſelf, as he is infinitely good; or in other things but as they come neareſt to that goodneſs? Whatſoever hath a reſemblance to a ſuperior being, muſt be brought forth into that likeneſs by ſomething ſuperior to it ſelf.

Now ſince the ends of this work are ſo high as to fit us for his praiſe, his delight, and a fruition of him; ſince it is to bring the intereſt of God into the ſoul, ſet him up higheſt in the heart, who before was trampled under our feet; enthrone him as King in the ſoul, cauſe us to oppoſe all that oppoſeth him, cheriſh every thing that is agreeable to him, this muſt be his work or the work of none.

7. The Weakneſs of the means manifeſts it to be the work of God. How could it be poſſible that ſuch weak means that were uſed at the firſt plantation of the Goſpel, ſhould have that tranſcendent ſucceſs in the hearts of men, without a divine power? That a doctrine attended with the croſs, reſiſted by Devils with all their ſubtilty, by the fleſh with all its luſts, the world with all its flatteries, the wiſe with all their craft, the mighty with all their power, ſhould be imprinted upon the hearts of men; a doctrine preached by mean men, without any worldly help, without learning, eloquence, craft, or humane prudence; without the force, favour, or friendſhip of men, ſhould get place in mens hearts, without a divine inſpiration, cannot well be imagin'd. If it be ſaid there were miracles attending it, which wrought upon the minds of men. It is true. But what little force they had in our Saviours time, the Scripture informs us, when they were aſcribed to Beelzebub the Prince of Devils: Tho Miracles did attend it after the aſcenſion of our Saviour; yet the Apoſtle aſcribes not ſo much to them as the means, as he doth to the fooliſhneſs of preaching; it was that which was the power of God, 1 Cor. 1. 18. it was that whereby God ſaved them that believe, 1 Cor. 1. 21. But the greateſt change that ever was wrought at one time, was at the firſt deſcent of the Spirit, by a plain diſcourſe of Peters, Acts 2. extolling a crucified God before thoſe that had lately taken away his life, thoſe that had ſeen him dye, a doctrine which would find no footing in their Reaſons, fill'd with prejudice againſt him, and had expectations of a temporal Kingdom by him: Muſt not this change be aſcrib'd to a higher hand, which removed their rooted prejudices, and vain hopes, and brought ſo many as Three thouſand over at once? If there be diverſities of operations, it is the ſame God that works all in all, 1 Cor. 12. 6. He conveys this treaſure in earthen veſſels, that the power might appear to be of God, and not of men, 2 Cor. 4 7. Such weak means as earthen veſſels, cannot work ſuch miraculous changes. Therefore perhaps it was that the preaching of Chriſt in his humiliation had ſo little ſucceſs attending it, that nothing ſhould be aſcribed to the word it ſelf, but to the power of God in it; to evidence that ſucceſs depended on the good pleaſure of God, who would not make his preaching in perſon ſo ſucceſful as that in his Spirit; which appears by Chriſts thankſgiving to his Father for revealing theſe things to babes, and not to the wiſe; even ſo Father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight, Luke 10. 21. Have you never heard of changes wrought in the ſpirits of men againſt their Worldly intereſt, when they have been made the ſcorn of their Friends, and a reproach to their Neighbours? Can the weakneſs of Means write a Law ſo deep in the heart, that neither ſly allurements, nor bluſtering temptations can raze out? That a Law of a days ſtanding in the heart, ſhould be able to mate the powers of Hell, the cavils of the fleſh, and diſcouragements from the World, when there are no unanſwerable Miracles now to ſeal the Goſpel, and ſecond the propoſals of it with Amazement in the minds of men? The weakneſs of the means, and the greatneſs of the difficulties, ſpeaks it not only to be the finger but the arm of God, which cauſes the triumphs of the fooliſhneſs of preaching. When the propoſal croſſes the intereſt of the fleſh, reſtrains the beloved pleaſure, teacheth a man the neceſſity of the contempt of the World, and that men ſhould exchange their pride for humility, the pleaſure of ſin for a life of holineſs; for a mannot only to ceaſe to love his vice, but extreamly to hate it; to have divine flights, when before he could not have a divine thought; to put off earthly affections for heavenly; and all this by the fooliſhneſs of preaching; it is an argument of a divine power, rather than any inherent ſtrength in the means themſelves.

(8) The differences in the changes of men, evidence this to be the work of God, and that it is from ſome power ſuperior to the means which are uſed. As God puts a difference between men in regard of their underſtandings, revealing that to one man which he doth not to another; ſo he puts a difference between men in regard of their wills, working upon ſome, and not upon others; working upon ſome that have known leſs, and not working upon ſome that have known more; ſome embracing it, and others rejecting it. We may ſee

(1.) The Difference of this change in men under the ſame means. One is ſtruck at a Sermon, when multitudes return unſhaken; why is not the caſe equal in all, if it were from the power of the word? How ſucceſful is Peters diſcourſe, cloſely accuſing the Jews of the murdering of their Lord and Saviour, which is the occaſion of pricking three thouſand hearts? Yet Stephen uſing the ſame method, and cloſe application of the ſame doctrine, Acts 7. 52. had not one Convert upon Record. While Peter's hearers were prickt in their hearts, theſe gnaſht with their teeth, v. 54. The corruption of the former was drawn out by the pricking of their ſouls; the malice of the latter exaſperated by the cut of their hearts. What reaſon can be render'd of ſo different an event from one and the ſame means in ſeveral hands, but the over-ruling pleaſure of God? The reaſons were the ſame, ſet off with the ſame human power; the Hearers were many of the ſame Nation, brought up in the reading of the Prophets, full of the expectations of a Meſſiah; they had both Reaſons and natural deſires for happineſs, as well as the other; yet the one are turned Lambs, and the others worſe Lions than before; the bloody Fury of the one is calmed, and the mad rage of the other is encreaſed. The grace of God wrought powerfully in the one, and lighted not upon the other. Two are grinding at the ſame Mill of Ordinances, one is taken, and another left. Man breathes into the ears, and God into what heart he pleaſes.

2. The differences in the change of men under leſs means. One is chang'd by weaker means; another remains in his unregeneracy under means in themſelves more powerful and likely: ſome are wrought upon by whiſpers, when others are ſtiff under thunders: The Ninivites by one ſingle Sermon from a Prophet are moved to repentance; the Capernaits by many admonitions from a greater than all the Prophets, ſeconded with Miracles, are not a jot perſuaded; ſome remain refractory under great blaſts, while others bend at lighter breathings. One man may be more acute than another, of a more apprehenſive reaſon; yet this man remains obſtinate, whilſt another becomes pliable. Whence doth this difference ariſe, but from the Will of God drawing the one, and leaving the other to the conduct of his own Will, ſince both will acknowledg what they are adviſed to, to be their intereſt, to be true in it ſelf, neceſſary for their good, yet their affections and entertainment are not the ſame? Some of thoſe Jews who had heard the doctrine of Chriſt, ſeen the purity of his life, and the power of his Miracles, admir'd his Wiſdom, yet crucified his perſon; they expected a Meſſiah, yet contemn'd him when he came; when the poor Thief, who perhaps had never ſeen one Miracle, nor heard one Sermon of our Saviour, believes in him, acknowledges him to be the Son of God, whom he ſaw condemned to the ſame death with himſelf; and dyes a Regenerate man under great diſadvantages: A Figure (ſaith one) of all the Elect, who ſhall only be ſaved by Grace, and a clear teſtimony of an outſtretched arm of Grace. Thoſe that our bleſſed Saviour admoniſht only as a Doctor and Teacher, were unmov'd, none ſtirred but thoſe he wrought upon as a Creator.

3. Difference of the ſucceſs of the ſame means in different places. How various was the ſucceſs of the Apoſtles in ſeveral parts of their circuits? Paul finds a great door of Faith open'd at Corinth, and in Macedonia, and his Nets empty at Athens; multitudes flocking in at one place, and few at another. He is entertain'd at Corinth, ſton'd at Lyſtra, Acts 14. 19. in danger of his life at Jeruſalem; while the Galatians were ſo affected with the Goſpel, that they could have pull'd out their eyes for him. The Apoſtle was the ſame perſon in all places; the Goſpel was the ſame, and had a like power in it ſelf; men had the ſame Reaſons, they were all fragments from the lump of Adam; the difference muſt be then from the influence of the divine Spirit, who rain'd down his grace in one place and not in another; on one heart, and not on another; who left darkneſs in Egypt, while he diffus'd light in Goſhen.

4. Difference in the ſame perſon. What is the reaſon that a man believes at one time under the propoſal of weak arguments, and not at another under ſtronger? 'Tis not ex parte objecti, for that was more viſible and credible in it ſelf, when attended by ſtrong arguments, than when accompanied with weaker. Perhaps God hath ſtricken a mans conſcience before, and he hath undone that work, ſhaken off thoſe convictions: he hath contended with his Maker, and muſtered up the power of Nature againſt the Alarums of Conſcience; ſtruggled like a wild Bull in a Net, and broke it, and blunted thoſe darts which ſtuck in his ſoul; he hath afterwards been ſcrew'd up again, and the Arrow ſhot ſo deep, that with all his pulling he could not draw it out: What but a divine hand holds it in, in ſpite of all the former triumphs of Nature? How come convictions at laſt to be fixed upon men, which many a time before did but flutter about the ſoul, and were ſoon chaſed away? And God by ſuch a method keeps up the honour of his grace in men after Regeneration, and teaches them the conſtant acknowledgment of his Power in the whole management. Do we not daily find, that the ſame Reaſonings and Conſiderations which quicken us at one time in the ways of God, ſtir us not at another, no more than a child can a milſtone? That we are quickned by the ſame word at one time, under which we were dull and ſtupid at another? And the ſame truth is deliciouſly ſwallowed by us, which ſeemed unſavoury at another, becauſe God edgeth it with a ſecret virtue at one time more than another? Hereby God would mind us to own him as the Author of all our grace, the ſecond grace as well as the firſt. Upon all theſe Conſiderations this can be no other than the work of God. Can a corrupt creature elevate himſelf from a ſtate of being hated by God, God, to a ſtate of being delighted in by him? Satan's work none can judg it to be; the deſtroyer of mankind would never be the reſtorer; the moſt malicious enemy to God would never contribute to the rearing a Temple to God in the ſoul, who hath uſurp'd Gods worſhip in all parts of the world. Good Angels could never do it, they wonder at it; the Wiſdom of God in thus creating all things in Jeſus Chriſt, is made known to them by it, Eph. 3. 9, 10. They never aſcrib'd it to themſelves; if they did, they could never have been good, their goodneſs conſiſting in praiſing of God, and giving him his due. Good men never did it; the firſt planters of the Goſpel (whereby it is wrought) always gave God the praiſe of it, and acknowledged both their own action, and the ſucceſs, to be the effect of the grace of God, and upon every occaſion admir'd it, Acts 11. 21, 23. It was the hand of the Lord, and the grace of God.

III. The third general head, from what principles in God it flows, or what perfections of God are eminent in this work of Regeneration. What is obſervable in the forming Chriſt in the Womb of the Virgin, is obſervable in the forming Chriſt in the heart of a believer. Grace to chuſe her to be the holy Veſſel; Soveraignty to pitch upon her rather than any other of the Lineage of David; Truth to his promiſe in forming him in the Womb of a Virgin, and one of the Houſe of David; Wiſdom and Power in the formation of him in a Virgins Womb, above the power of Nature; Mercy bears the firſt ſway as the motive of the decree, but in a way of Soveraignty to call out ſome, and not others; Truth to himſelf obligeth, after Soveraign Mercy had made the Reſolution; Wiſdom ſteps in to contrive the beſt way to accompliſh what Mercy had moved, and Soveraignty had decreed; Holineſs riſeth up as the pattern; and Power rides out for the execution. Mercy moves, Soveraignty decrees, Truth obligeth, Wiſdom counſels, Holineſs regulates, Power executes.

(1.) Mercy and Goodneſs is a principal perfection of God illuſtrious in this work. Born not of the will of man, but of God, of the Will of his Mercy. Plato thought that Heroes were born ἐξ ἔρωτος θεῶν, the love of God; divine love brings forth an heroick Chriſtian into the world; all outward Mercies are ſtreams of Gods goodneſs; but thoſe are but trifles if compared with this. There is as much of God in imparting the holineſs of his Nature, as in imputing the Righteouſneſs of his Son. We are juſtified by Chriſt, quickned by Grace, ſaved by Grace; Grace is the womb of every ſpiritual bleſſing. To be delivered from Places and Company wherein we have occaſions and temptations to ſin, is an act which God owns as the fruit of his mercy: I brought thee out of the land of Ur of the Chaldees, Gen. 15. 7. an Idolatrous place; 'tis a greater fruit of his goodneſs to be delivered from a Nature which is the ſeed-plot of ſin. He heals our back ſlidden nature, becauſe he loves us freely. 'Tis therefore called Grace, which is not only Goodneſs and Mercy, but Goodneſs with a more beautiful varniſh and ornamental dreſs.

(1.) Therefore in this take notice of the peculiarity of mercy. Such a goodneſs that not one fallen Angel ever had, or ever ſhall have a mite of; neither did Mercy excite one good thought in God of new poliſhing any of thoſe Rebellious creatures; Mercy caſt no eye upon them, but Juſtice left them to their malicious obſtinacy. That the Rivers of living waters ſhould refuſe to run in ſuch a channel, or flow out of ſuch a belly, to run in the heart of a man more muddy! As peculiar grace pitched upon the very fleſh of Chriſt, to be united to the ſecond Perſon; ſo the like Grace pitches upon this or that particular ſoul, to be united to the body of Chriſt. That ſingular love which choſe Chriſt for the Head, choſe ſome men in him to be his members; choſen us in him, Eph. 1. 4. And the anointing which is upon the Head, is poured out by ſuch a peculiarity of love upon the Members, not only by an act of his Power as God, but by an act of appropriated Goodneſs, thy God, Heb. 1. 9. God anoints his fellows with that holy gracious unction, as their God, not only as God; for anointing him as the head, under that particular conſideration, he anoints alſo his fellows, his members, under the ſame conſideration too, becauſe he is as well their God, the God of the Members, as well as the God of the Head, for they are his fellows in that unction: the difference lies in the greater portion of grace given to the humane Nature of Chriſt.

Chriſt. And the Apoſtle Peter, 1 Pet. 1. 3. intimates in his thankſgiving to God, that God begat us as the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; Bleſſed be the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; the Paternal affection he bears to Chriſt, being the ground of the regeneration of his people; the paternal affection firſt pitching upon Chriſt, then upon others in him. Indeed it is a peculiar fatherly affection. In his mercy to the world he acts as a Rector or Governour; in that relation he propoſeth Laws, makes offers of peace, urgeth them in his word, ſtrives with men by his Spirit, enduing men with Reaſon, and deals with them as Rational creatures; he uſes afflictions and mercies, which might ſoften their hearts, did they not wilfully indulge themſelves in their hardneſs. This is his Rectoral Mercy, or his Mercy as a Governour, and as much as his relation of a Governour can oblige him to. If men will not change their lives, is God bound as a Governour to force them to it, or not rather to puniſh them for it? But in Regeneration there is a choicer affection, whereby beſides the relation of a Governour, he puts on that of a Father, and makes an inward and thorow change in ſome which he hath choſen into the relation of children: As a Farher, who cannot perſuade his Son lying under a mortal diſtemper, to take that Phyſick, which is neceſſary for ſaving his life, will compel him to it, open his mouth, and pour it in; but as he is a governour of his ſervant, he will provide it for him, and propoſe it to him; to do thus is kindneſs to his ſervant, tho he doth not manifeſt ſo peculiar an affection as he doth to his ſon. God governs men as he is the Author of Nature; he renews men, as he is the Author of Grace: he is the Lawgiver and Governour; it doth not follow that where he is ſo, he ſhould be the New Creator too; this is a peculiar Indulgence.

2. As there is a peculiarity of Mercy, ſo there is the largeneſs of his Mercy and Goodneſs in this work. It was his goodneſs to create us, but a full Sea of goodneſs made us new creatures, 1 Pet. 1. 3. Who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again to a lively hope, κατὰ τὸ πολὺ ἔλεος. His own mercy, without any other motive; much mercy, without any parcimony; not an act of ordinary goodneſs, but the deepeſt bowels of kindneſs, an everlaſting ſpring of goodneſs, an exuberancy of goodneſs. The choice love he bears to them in election, cannot be without ſome real act: 'tis a vain love that doth not operate: one great part of affection is to imitate the party beloved; But ſince that is unworthy of God to imitate a corrupt creature, he performs the other act of love, which is to aſſimilate us to himſelf, and bring us into a ſtate of imitation of him, endowng us with principles of reſemblance to him. 'Tis abundant mercy to love them; 'tis much more goodneſs to render them worthy of his love, and inſpire them with thoſe qualities, as effects of his love of benevolence, which may be an occaſion of his love of complacency. Worldly mercies do many times, yea for the moſt part (if you view the whole Globe of the earth) conſiſt with his hatred; but this is a beam from a clear Sun. At beſt other benefits are but the mercies of his hand, this of his heart. In thoſe he makes men like others of a higher rank, in this like himſelf.

(1.) 'Tis a goodneſs greater than that in Creation. 'Tis more an act of kindneſs to reform that which is deformed, than to form it at the beginning; becauſe it is more to have a happy than a ſimple being. To repair what is decayed, is a teſtimony of greater goodneſs, than at firſt to raiſe it. Creation is terminated to the good of a mutable nature, Regeneration is terminated to a ſupernatural good, and partaking of the divine nature. The Creation was an emanation of his goodneſs, never entituled the work of his Grace. Mans firſt uprightneſs was an impreſs of God; his ſecond uprightneſs is far more pleaſing to him, as being the fruit of his Sons death, wherein all his Attributes are more highly glorified. 'Tis a Regeneration by the Reſurrection of Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 3. that being the perfection of it, includes his death, which is the foundation of it, as the perfection of a thing includes the beginning. God pronounced all the ſtructures of the firſt Creation, good; but not with thoſe magnificent titles of his delighting in it, forming it for himſelf, that it might ſhow forth his praiſe; which expreſſions teſtifie a greater efflux of his goodneſs in this ſecond creation. Nor did Chriſt ever ſay his delight was in that, or in that one man Adam, but in the ſons of men, of Apoſtate Adam, as to be Redeemed and Renewed by him after their Apoſtacy, Prov. 8. 31. my delights were with the ſons of men. What Sons of men? The Exhortation, Verſe 32. intimates it, thoſe that are his Children renewed by him; that hearken to him and keep his ways. God pronounced it good, but not his Treaſure, his Portion, his Inheritance, his Segullah, his Houſe, his Diadem. All thoſe things which he made, even the nobleſt Heaven, as well as the loweſt Earth, he over-looks and ſpeaks ſlightly of them, Iſa. 66. 1, 2. all thoſe things hath my hand made, and all thoſe things have been, &c. * to fix his Eyes upon a contrite ſpirit, a renewed nature: he ſpeaks of them as things paſt away, and is intent only upon the New Creation; values it above Heaven and Earth, and all the Ceremonial worſhip. What is the Object of his greateſt eſtimation, partakes of a greater efflux of his goodneſs to make it ſo. And the Apoſtle Peter aggrandizeth this abundant Mercy in Regeneration, from the term unto a lively hope, not ſuch an uncertain hope, as Adam had when he was fulleſt of his mutable uprightneſs; * A living hope, that grows up more and more into life, till it comes to an Inheritance that fades not away as Adam's did. Surely there is more of bowels in the Spirits brooding over a ſinful Soul, to bring forth this beautiful frame, than in brooding over the confuſed maſs to bring forth a World.

* אב"ש

[2.] All the Grace and Goodneſs God hath, is emploied in it. In the Creation you cannot ſay, All the goodneſs of God was diſplaied, as not all his Power, nor all his Wiſdom: For as to his Power, he might have made Millions of Worlds unconceivably more beautiful and more wiſely contrived; for tho there be no defect of Wiſdom and Power, yet neither of thoſe Attributes were exerted to that height that they might have been: So for his goodneſs, he might have made Millions of more Angels and Men than he did create, with as (and more) illuſtrious Natures; for a man may conceive ſomething more than God hath diſplaied in the Creation, as to the extenſiveneſs of his perfections at leaſt. But in this God hath diſplaied, as it may ſeem, the utmoſt of his Grace: for no Man or Angel can conceive a higher grace than what God ſhows in this, of beginning in man a likeneſs to himſelf, and perfecting it hereafter to as high a pitch as a Creature is capable of. Therefore called unſearchable riches of Chriſt, Eph. 3. 7. A further good cannot be imagined or found out than what is there diſplayed. Therefore the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks of God, as effectually calling us into his eternal glory by Chriſt, under the title of the God of all grace, 1 Pet. 5. 10. which calling includes all preparation for glory. All grace doth not leſs fit us for it, than call us to it; there is more of grace in fitting us for it, than barely in calling us to it; and the call it ſelf hath more of grace in it, than the giving the poſſeſſion of that Inheritance you are called unto. 'Tis not ſo high a favour in a Prince, actually to ſet his Royal Bride in the Throne with him, as to call her to, and prepare her for ſo high a Dignity. To prepare a Soul for it by Regeneration, is an act of pure grace; to give it after a preparation for it, is an act of truth as well as grace; nothing obliged him to the firſt, his Promiſe binds him to the latter. What if I ſhould ſay, this renewing of us, and ſubduing our ſins in us, is a greater act of grace than a bare remiſſion? Micah 7. 18, 19. ſeems to favour it; to pardon us is an act of his delightful mercy; but to ſubdue our iniquities is an act of his tendereſt compaſſion; mercy is there joyned with pardon; and compaſſion with ſubduing: And the latter expreſſion, Thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the ſea, may refer to both thoſe acts of grace againſt the guilt and filth of ſin.

(3.) The freeneſs of his mercy is manifeſt in it. 'Tis as free as Election, Eph. 1. 3, 4. who hath bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings (of which Regeneration is none of the meaneſt) according as he hath choſen us in him *. 'Tis as free in the Stream as it is in the Fountain. Jeſus Chriſt is as freely formed in us, as we were freely choſen in him; as freely, quoad nos, as to us; not in regard of Chriſt, who merited the former, tho not the latter. 'Tis his own mercy. 1 Pet. 1. 3. his own will. James 1. 18. not moved by any other; as we do many things by the will of others when our own are not free, in which are mixt acts. 'Tis in regard of this freeneſs called grace. Suppoſing God would create man, and for ſuch an end as to enjoy bleſſedneſs, he could not create him otherwiſe than with an univerſal rectitude;

tude; becauſe had God created him with a temper contrary to his Law, he had been the Author of his ſin. Some therefore call not the Righteouſneſs of Adam, grace, becauſe it was a perfection due to his Nature upon his creation. But there was no neceſſity upon God to beſtow new creating grace, after he had ſtript himſelf of the Righteouſneſs of his firſt creation. And alſo ſuppoſing God will reſtore man to that end from which he fell, and re-fit him for that bleſſedneſs; he cannot fit him otherwiſe than by reſtoring him to that Righteouſneſs, as a means of attaining that bleſſedneſs. Yet both theſe are free, becauſe the Original foundation of both is free. God might chuſe whether he would create man when he was nothing, and chuſe whether he would reſtore man when he was fallen. Yet there is more freedom in this latter than in the former, in regard of the meaſures of the New Created Righteouſneſs, and in regard of the immutability of it; in regard alſo of demerit. Adam's duſt, before Creation, as it could merit nothing, ſo it had an advantage above us, that it could not lie under demerit. But we after the fall are in a ſtate of damnation, children of wrath: ſo that Regeneration is not a Creating us from nothing, but recovering us from a ſtate worſe than nothing. In regard that man was miſerable, he was capable of mercy; but, as he was a criminal, he was an object of ſeverity: that is free mercy to renew any man by grace, when he might have damned him by Juſtice; to work him for glory, when he had wrought himſelf for damnation: The Apoſtle therefore excludes all works whatſoever from any meritoriouſneſs in this caſe, Tit. 3. 5. Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. I ſay, He excludes all works, becauſe not one work, as good, was in being before the renewal of the Soul, for ſo Verſe 3. plainly implies, when he concludes all men, himſelf too, in a ſtate uncapable of doing any thing that was good: the honour of his truth indeed excites him to perfect it; but his grace, only without any other motive, moves him to beſtow it. All the grace you have in Regeneration ſprung only from this: the Righteouſneſs you are arraied with, the flames of Love in your hearts, the flights of your Faith coſt you nothing, they were all the births of Love. Goodneſs Decreed all when you were nothing; Grace formed all when you were worſe than nothing; your Faith is the faith of Gods elect, Tit. 1. 1. New Creatures were choſen to Faith by Grace; and by the ſame Grace was Faith formed in the Womb of the Soul: electing-Grace preceded; renewing Grace followed; the ſtream cannot be merited when the ſpring was free. Regeneration is an acceſſory to election. No man can merit the principal, therefore not the acceſſory.

2. As mercy and goodneſs, ſo the ſoveraignty of God is illuſtrious in this Work. Of God, in the Text, is of the will of God. The Covenant runs in a Royal ſtile; I will put my ſpirit into them; I will give a heart of fleſh, of my own free motion, and good pleaſure, like the Patents of Princes. God reſerves this in his own power, to give to whom he pleaſes; Cameron * ſaith, That Faith which is a great conſtitutive part of Regeneration, was not purchaſed meritoriouſly by Chriſts Death; and tho Chriſt doth give us Faith as well as Repentance, yet he doth that not as conſidered as a ſatisfier of God's Juſtice in his death, but as Gods Commiſſioner in his exaltation, being impowered by God to give the conditions, upon which they agreed together in the firſt compact about the Work of Mediation, unto all thoſe that God had given him to ſatisfy for. Whether this Opinion be well grounded or no, I will not determine; yet the making it depend ſolely upon Election, and to be given as a fruit of Election, that hereby we may be partakers of Chriſt, makes it more fully depend upon the Soveraignty of God. God renews when he pleaſes; The wind blows where it liſteth, John 3. 8. To ſome he affords means, to others not; he deals not with every Nation as he dealt with Iſrael. In ſome he works by means; to others he gives only the means without any inward work; 'tis his pleaſure that he works upon any one to will; his good pleaſure that he gives to any one to do, Phil. 2. 13. of his good pleaſure: ſome hear the Word; others the Spirit in the Word: ſome feel the ſtriking of the Air upon their Ear; others the ſtamp of the Spirit upon their Hearts: Who choſe this rough Stone to hew and poliſh, and let others lie in the Quarry? Who frames this this for a Statue, a representation of himself, and leaves another upon the Pavement? What doth all this result from, but his Soveraign pleasure?

(1) No ultimate reason can be rendered for this distinction, but Gods Soveraignty. * We can render an immediate reason of some actions of God; why the Heavens are round; because that is the most capacious figure, and fittest for motion: Why the Sun is the center of the World, as some think, because it may at a convenient distance, enlighten the Stars above, and quicken the things below: Why our hearts are in the midst of our Bodies; Because they may more commodiously afford heat to all the members: so also, why God loved Adam; because he saw his own Image in him: why he sends Judgments upon the Word; because of sin: why he saves believers, and condemns unbelievers; because they receive the grace of Christ, those reject it. We have not recourse immediately to Gods will for a Reason; the nature of the things themselves affords us one, obvious to us. But no reason can be rendred of other actions of God, but his good pleasure: Why he chose Abraham above other men, and delivered him from Ur of the Chaldees; why Israel above other nations; since all other men and Nations descended from Adam and Noah, and they were in their Natures equally corrupt with others; they were not in themselves better than others; nor other Nations worse than they. So in Esau and Jacob, why the elder should serve the younger, since they both issued from the same Parents, lay in the same Womb, were equally depraved in their Nature, had Original sin equally conveyed to them by their Parents; no reason can be rendered, but the Will of God. * So if it be askt, Why men are condemned? Because they do not believe; Why do they not believe? Because they will not. God hath given them means and faculties. If you ask, why God did not give them grace to believe and turn their Wills? No other Answer can be given, but because he will not. 'Tis his free-will to chuse some and not others. Election is put upon his pleasure, Eph. 1. 5. predestinated according to the good pleasure of his will: And the making known the mystery of his Will is put upon his pleasure, Eph. 1. 9. Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure: As God regards us absolutely, 'tis rather mercy than his good pleasure. Why hath he changed our Wills? Because he loved us, and bare good will to us in his everlasting purpose, to which he was incited by his own mercy: But if we compare our selves with others, and ask why he renews this man and not that? Then it is rather an act of the Soveraign liberty of his Will; for there cannot be the result of any reason from any thing else: he pitches his compassions where and upon whom he pleases. The Apostle joyns Mercy and this Soveraignty of his Will together, Rom. 9. 15. I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion: He is so absolute a Soveraign that he will give no account of these matters, but his own good pleasure. Why he renews any man, is meerly voluntary; why he saves renewed men, is just; why he justifies those that believe, is Justice to Christ, and Mercy to them; but why he bestows Faith on any, is meerly the good pleasure of his Will. The Pharisees believed not, because they were not of Christs sheep, John 10. 26. that is, they were not given to Christ by the Father, as is intimated, Verse 29. And the prosperity of those which are given to Christ is resolved wholly into the pleasure of God; the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand, Is. 53. 10. In all our searches into the cause of this, we must rest in his Soveraign pleasure; our Saviour himself renders this only as a reason of his distinguishing mercy, wherein himself doth, and therefore we must acquiesce. Matth. 11. 27. Even so, O Father, for so it pleased thee.

* Amiraut. Serm. sur. 2. Phil. 13. pag. 28, &c.

* Amiraut. Serm. sur. 2. Phil. 13. pag. 34, &c.

(2.) He may well do so, because he is no debtor to any man in the way of grace. There's nothing due to man but death, that is his wages; the other is a gift, Rom. 6. 23. To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, to them it is not given, Matth. 13. 11. Who shall controle him in the disposal of his own goods? Who shall say unto him, What dost thou? Grace is his own Treasure; if he gives the riches of it to any, it is his pleasure: If he will not bestow a Mite on any man, 'tis no wrong. If any man hath given to him, it shall be recompenced to him again, Rom. 11. 35. 'Tis not unjust with God to deny every man grace; 'tis not then unjust to deny a great part of men this grace: Who hath enjoyned him his way? ſaith Job; Or, Who can ſay, Thou haſt wrought iniquity? Job 36. 23. He is not to be taught by man how to govern the World: neither can any man juſtly blame him, if they judg aright of his actions. * Tho every man is bound to endeavour the converſion of others; and every good man hath ſo much charity, that he would turn all to Righteouſneſs if he could; and tho the Love of God is infinitely greater than mans; it cannot be argued from thence that therefore God ſhould renew every man. This Charity in man is a debt he owes to his Neighbour by Communion of Blood, upon which the Law of Charity is founded, which obligeth him to endeavour the happineſs and welfare of his Neighbour: but God is free from the engagements of any Law, but the liberty of his own will; he is under no Government but his own; he hath none ſuperior, none equal with him, to enjoyn him his way, and to preſcribe him Rules and Methods. If he gives any favour to man, it is his pleaſure; if man improves it well, God is not indebted to him, and obliged to give him more; no more than a Father is bound to give his Son a new ſtock, becauſe he hath improved well the firſt he hath intruſted him with; it depends only upon his pleaſure.

(3.) God's proceedings in this caſe do wholly declare it. In the firſt gift of his People to Chriſt he acted like a God greater than all in a way of ſupereminent Soveraignty; My father which gave them me, is greater than all, John 10. 29. He acts as a Potter with his Clay: he ſoftens one heart, and leaves another to its natural hardneſs. He converts Paul a perſecutor; but none of the other Phariſees who ſpurred him on in that fury, and commiſſioned him to it; he ſnatcheth ſome from the embracements of luſt, while he ſuffers others to run their race to Hell. David, by grace, is made a man after Gods own heart; and Saul left to be a man after his own will: ſome he changeth in the heat of their purſuit of ſinful pleaſures; others he wounds to death by his Judgments: the reaſon of the latter is deſerved Juſtice; the reaſon of the other is undeſerved pleaſure. He choſeth the mean things of the World to be higheſt in his favour, and paſſes over thoſe that the World eſteems moſt excellent. Not many wiſe, not many mighty, is his Soveraign method. The amiable endowments eſteemed by the men of the World, have no influence upon him. He acts in this way with his own People: he gives ſometimes to Will, when he doth not give preſently to do: he diſtributes greater meaſures of grace to one than to another: he ſometimes excites them by his grace, ſometimes lets them lie as Logs before him, that he may be owned by them to be a free Agent. And further, it muſt needs be thus, becauſe God doth not Work in Regeneration as a natural Agent, and put forth his ſtrength to the utmoſt: as the Sun ſhines, and the fire burns, ad extremum virium, unleſs a Cloud interpoſe to hinder the one, or Water quench the other: but as an arbitrary Agent, who exerts his power according to his own will, and withholds it according to his pleaſure. For there are two acts of his Soveraign Will, one whereby he doth command men to do their duty, promiſes rewards, and threatens puniſhment; but the ſubject is to be diſpoſed to do Gods Will of Precept. Here comes in another act of his Soveraignty, whereby he Wills the diſpoſing ſuch and ſuch hearts to the accepting of his grace, and doth Will not to give others that grace, but leave them to themſelves; this we ſee practiſed by God almoſt in every days experience.

3. The truth of God is apparent in this Work. Truth to his own purpoſe, 1 Tim. 1. 9. Who hath called us with a holy calling, according to his own purpoſe and grace, which was given us in Jeſus Chriſt before the world began. Soveraignty firſt ſingles this or that man out; and truth to that firm and immutable counſel, and that reſolve in his own mind, ſteps in to excite his Holineſs, Wiſdom and Power, to make every ſuch perſon conformed to the Image of his Son. It was not from any truth reſpecting any condition annext to any promiſe he had made, which he might find in the creature; for the Apoſtle plainly excludes it, not according to our work: for what motion can our work in a ſtate of Nature cauſe in God, but that of anger and averſion ariſing from truth to his threatning, the condition whereof is fulfilled by us: but not one Mite of good fruit that could as a condition challenge this great work at the hands of the Truth of God by vertue of his promiſe. His Truth to his threatning would have raiſed up thoughts of deſtroying men; his Truth to his purpoſe carried on his deſign of effectually calling them. 'Tis not an engagement of truth to his creature, but of truth to himſelf. So that if you ask why he hath called Peter, Paul, and others, ſince many better conditioned than they have rejected the Goſpel; the Anſwer is, Becauſe he had ſo purpoſed in himſelf; and he is Faithful and cannot deny his own counſel, for that were to deny himſelf, and that eternal Idea in his own mind, 2 Tim. 2. 13. He is faithful and cannot deny himſelf, in regard of his purpoſe, in regard of his abſolute promiſe. Truth to his promiſe; his promiſe to his Son, for ſo Tit. 1. 2. is principally to be underſtood, In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lye, promiſed before the world began: there was a donation of ſome, made to Chriſt, and a donation of grace to Chriſt for them, depoſited in his hands as a Treaſure to be diſpenſed to every one of them in their proper time. His truth comes in upon this double donative; a donative of grace to them in Chriſt, before the World began, which would be but as a uſeleſs ruſty Treaſure, if not beſtowed upon thoſe for whom it was intruſted in his hands: A donative of ſome according to this purpoſe to Chriſt, whoſe Death, and Reſurrection, and Purchaſe, would be ineffectual, if thoſe thus given were not in time engrafted in him, and renewed by him, to be made partakers of all that which he purchaſed and preſerved for them. Jeſus Chriſt was to have a ſeed by Covenant, a People to be conformed to his Image; the iſſue then of forming a People for his ſeed, is the effect of Gods truth to Chriſt. And conſequent to this Antecedent purpoſe in himſelf, and Promiſe to Chriſt, he gives him an order to bring in thoſe that were thus deſigned to be his Sheep, which he calls his Sheep, by right of donation, before they were renewed; My Sheep by right of Gift from my Father, mine by right of purchaſe at my Death, mine by right of poſſeſſion at their effectual call; theſe I muſt bring in; not I may, but I muſt; and they ſhall hear my voice, John 10. 16. Other ſheep I have: them alſo I muſt bring, and they ſhall hear my voice: not they may; but they ſhall be enclined to comply with my Word and Call; Satan and their own luſts ſhall not hinder them from coming unto me, but they ſhall be over-ruled by a Powerful Spirit: ſo that there is truth to his purpoſe, truth to his Promiſe to Chriſt, truth to the depoſitum in Chriſts hands, truth to his Word publiſht, that he would give a New Heart. So that whatſoever heart this Work is wrought in, 'tis a manifeſt effect of the truth of God to himſelf and his Chriſt. The Gift of grace, in poſſeſſion, is a neceſſary conſequent of that Gift of it, in purpoſe, before the World began.

Truth

4. The Wiſdom of God appears in this Work. The ſecrets of Wiſdom ſhine forth in the great concerns of the Soul in Chriſt, who is made Wiſdom principally to us in our Sanctification, as well as Righteouſneſs and Redemption. Wiſdom in the imputation of Righteouſneſs, in the draught of Sanctification, and in the perfection of it in a compleat Redemption; Wiſdom, like a Thred, runs through every part of the Web. The New Birth is the great wiſdom of the Creature; by this he becomes wiſe, ſince the Scripture entitles all fools without it. The inſpiration of this wiſdom can own no other but Divine Wiſdom for the Author. 'Tis his own Wiſdom; for, Who hath been his counſellor? Rom. 11. 34. He Works all things according to the Counſel of his own Will, freely, wiſely; a Work of his Will, a Work of his Underſtanding, Eph. 1. 11. Who works all things according to the counſel of his own will, Verſe 12. That we ſhould be to the praiſe of his glory, that the glory of the Father may ſhine out in us. If all things are thus wrought with the choiceſt counſel, much more the rareſt Work of God in the World. If all things are wrought with counſel, becauſe he will have a praiſe from them, much more that from whence he expects to gather the greateſt crop of glory. The bringing us to truſt in Chriſt, is for the praiſe of his glory; a glory redounds to him, becauſe there is nothing of our own in it, but all his; a farther glory redounds to him, becauſe it is in the wiſeſt manner. 'Tis to the praiſe and the glory of his goodneſs in the act of his Will: to the praiſe of the glory of his Wiſdom in the act of his Counſel. There was a myſtery of Wiſdom in the firſt ſecretion and ſingling out this or that perſon; a Revelation of Wiſdom in the preparations to it, and formation of it. If there be much of his Counſel in the minute paſſages of his Providence, in the loweſt Creatures, which are the ſubjects of that Providence, much more muſt there be in the framing the Soul to be a living Monument of his glory. 'Tis not a new moulding the outward caſe of the Body, but the inward Jewel wrapped up from the view of men: the ſpirit of the mind, which being more excellent, requires more of skill for the new forming of it.

(1.) The nature of the New Birth declares it to be an effect of his Wiſdom. 'Tis a building a Divine Temple, a Spiritual Tabernacle, for his own reſidence; ye are Gods building, 1 Cor. 3 9. Strength will not build a Houſe without Art to contrive and proportion the materials; Skill is the chief requiſite of an Architect. The higheſt pieces of Art, come from the moſt excellent Idea in the Creature. The beautiful Fabrick of Grace is modelled by the wiſeſt Idea in God: that which is glorious in the erection, ſuppoſeth excellent skill in the contrivance. Every renewed man is a lively ſtone, 1 Pet. 2. 5. Ye alſo as lively ſtones, every one of you, Poliſht and Carved by the Wiſe Creator for an everlaſting Statue; 'tis he that hath wrought us to the ſelf ſame thing, 2 Cor. 5. 5. κατεργασάμενος, Poliſht us and curiouſly wrought us, who were rough Stones, covered with the rubbiſh of ſin. As a wiſe builder, he lays the foundation in ſound habits, whereon to raiſe a ſuperſtructure of gracious actions. The counter part in the heart is no leſs a fruit of his Wiſdom, than the Law in the Tables of Stone; Wiſdom in the firſt framing the Law, Wiſdom alſo in the deep imprinting of it. That which enlightens the eyes, and makes wiſe to Salvation, can be entitled to no other Original cauſe than Divine Wiſdom. The Soul is a rational Work of God *. Surely then that which is the Soul of the Soul, the glory of the Creature, the preparation for Happineſs, more pleaſing to God than the brighteſt Nature, than the natural frame of the higheſt Soul, that which is the pleaſure and delight, muſt be the fruit too of infinite Wiſdom. Bare effects of power are not the immediate Objects of God's ſpecial delight.

* Nyſſen. ποίημα θεῦ λογικὸν.

(2.) The means of it declare it to be a fruit of his Wiſdom. Chriſt the exemplar hath the Treaſures of Wiſdom; Grace copied from it, is part of thoſe Treaſures. The Goſpel, the inſtrument, is the wiſdom of God, as well as the power of God, 1 Cor. 2. 7. Divine skill framed the model, reared the building; no leſs ſows the ſeed in the heart: what did partake of Wiſdom in the contrivance, progreſs, all the parts and methods of it, partakes of the ſame in the inward operations of it upon the Soul.

(3.) The manner of it ſpeaks it to be ſo. In regard of the Enemies he hath to deal with, there muſt be prudence to countermine the deep and unſearchable plots of the powers of Darkneſs. As there is the ſtrength of ſin within, the might of Satan without, as fit ſubjects for his power; ſo there are the ſtratagems of Satan, the ſubtilties and deceits of the fleſh, as a fit occaſion for his Almighty skill againſt Helliſh policy. In regard alſo of his working upon the Soul; he works upon thoſe that are ſo contrary to his deſign, without impoſing upon their faculties; he moves them according to their Phyſical Nature, tho contrary to their Moral Nature: he makes us do willingly what we would not; he ſo tunes the ſtrings, that they ſpeak out willingly, what Naturally they are moſt unfit for. The Spirit acts wiſely in the revealing to us the knowledg of Chriſt, as Eph. 1. 17. The ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledg of him; which may note the manner of his acting in the Revelation, which is the firſt work in the Soul, as well as the effect it doth produce; tho I ſuppoſe the effect is principally meant. Some queſtion the Wiſdom of God in acting ſo upon the Will, as not to leave it to its own indifference in this change. What reaſon is there to queſtion his Wiſdom? Do not the Angels in Heaven admire Gods Wiſdom as well as his Grace, who hath immutably fixed them to that which is good? Do they queſtion the Wiſdom of God for ſo happy a confirmation of them againſt that indifference which deſtroyed ſome of their fellows by Creation? But is there not an evident Art in this work, to make the Will willing, that had no affection to this change? To fit the Key ſo to all the Wards, that not one is diſordered? To move us contrary to our corrupt reaſon, yet bring us to that paſs to acknowledg we had reaſon to be ſo moved? To move our faculties one by another as Wheels in a Watch? To preſent ſent Spiritual things with ſuch an evident light, as engageth our Underſtandings to believe that which they would not believe before, and our Wills to embrace that which our Affections gainſay? It muſt therefore be a fruit of Divine skill, ſince it is a fruit of divine teaching. John 6. 45.

(4) There is a greater wiſdom in it, than in the Creation of the World. The higher the Work riſeth, the more of Skill appears. 'Tis a Divine Art to make man to live the life of Plants in his growth; the life of Beaſts in his ſenſe; the life of Angels in his mind: more it is then to make him live the life of God in his Grace. Man in his Body, partakes of Earth; in his Soul, of Heaven; in his Grace, of the Heaven of Heavens, of the God of Heaven: the Grace in the new birth is nearer the likeneſs of God, than the Figure of men in the firſt birth; God therefore doth more obſerve the numbers and meaſures in the Second Creation than he did in the Firſt. Man was the moſt excellent piece in the lower Creation; therefore more of Art in the framing of him, than in the whole Cœleſtial and Elementary World; the glorious bodies of Sun, Moon and Stars, had not ſuch marks upon them: the nearer reſemblance any thing hath to God, the more of Wiſdom, as well as Power is ſignified in the make of it.

5. The holineſs of God is ſeen in this work. The day of Gods Power breaks not upon us in the change of our Wills, without his appearance in the beauties of holineſs, Pſal. 110. 3. The Spirit is called a Spirit of Holineſs, not only as he is the Efficient, but as he is the Pattern, and like fire transforms into his own Nature; for that which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit. The Law in the Tables of Stone was an Image; the Law in the heart is an extract of Gods Holineſs. Our Firſt Creation in a mutable ſtate, was according to his own image, Gen 1. 26. Our Second Creation is more exactly like him in a gracious immutability. The holineſs in Chriſts human Nature was an effect of the holineſs of God; the holineſs we have then in reſemblance to Chriſt, muſt be a fruit of the ſame perfection. If we are renewed according to his Image, it muſt be according to his Holineſs. To be merciful and juſt, is to have a Moral image; to be holy, is to have a Divine: the Apoſtle intimates this in his Exhortation, we muſt be holy in ſerving him, becauſe he was holy in calling us, 1 Pet. 1. 15. As he which hath called you is holy, ſo be ye holy, &c. In this reſpect, God calls himſelf, not only a Holy one, but the Holy one of Iſrael, Iſa. 43. 15. I am the Lord your holy one, the Creator of Iſrael, your king. He is not only Holy in himſelf, but diſplays his Holineſs in them, by an act of a new Creation. By Creator, is not meant, his being the Creator of them, as he is of all, even of wicked men, and Devils; but implies a peculiar relation to them, as diſtinguiſht from others. He is the Creator of Devils, Holy in his actions towards Devils, but not their Holy one by any inward renovation, or conſecrating them to himſelf, as he is the Holy one of Iſrael. As he is a God in Covenant, he is our God, therefore our God, as he is a Holy God, as well as he is a Powerful God, communicating the one as well as the other in a Covenant-way: therefore the Prophet Habakkuk joins them both together, O, Lord, my God, my holy one, Hab. 1. 12. His Holineſs is no leſs neceſſary for the felicity of his People, than his Mercy and Power. What happineſs could his Mercy move, his Wiſdom contrive, or his Power effect, without the communication of his Holineſs? Mercy could not of it ſelf fit a man for it, nor Power give a man poſſeſſion of it, without Holineſs, attiring him with all thoſe graces which prepare him for it. God, as Soveraign, choſe us; as Merciful, pardons us; as Wiſe, guides us; as Powerful, protects us; as True, makes good his Promiſes to us; but as Holy, cleanſeth us from our old habits, makes us Veſſels of honour, filled with the ſavoury and delicious fruits of his Spirit, his pleaſant things. The implantation of grace in the heart, is no leſs an effect of his Holineſs, than the preſervation of it is; which our Saviour intimates, when in his Petition for it, he gives his Father rather the title of Holy, than of any other Attribute, John 17. 11. Holy father, keep through thy own Name.

6. The Power of God appears in this Work. Since the World began was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind, John 9. 32. neither was it ever heard that any man could open the Underſtanding of one that was born born dark. Every thing that pertains to life and godlineſs, of which Regeneration is not the meaneſt, is the work of Divine Power, 2 Pet. 1. 3. According as his divine power hath given to us all things that pertain to life and godlineſs, through the knowledg of him who hath called us to glory and vertue; glory and vertue, by a Hendiadis, for a glorious vertue: And the Apoſtle adds, That this calling was an effect of a glorious power; 'tis not διὰ, but διὰ, through glory and vertue; the ſame prepoſition διὰ, which as joyned with knowledg, is tranſlated through; as much as to ſay, through a glorious vertue or power; both ἀρετὴ and virtus, ſignifying valour and ſtrength in their ſeveral Languages. When God hardens a man, he only withdraws his grace. But a Divine vertue is neceſſary for the cure of our hereditary Diſeaſe. There is no great force required to cut a dead man; but to raiſe him, requires an extraordinary power. We may as well deny this Work to be a New Creation, a Reſurrection, as deny it to be an act of Divine Power. There is a Word that calls; there is alſo a power to work, 1 Theſ. 1. 5. Our Goſpel came not unto you in word only, but alſo in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt; that is, the Power of the Holy Ghoſt. There was not only grace in the word, to woo, but the power of the Holy Ghoſt in it, to overcome the heart. There is not only an act of an Almighty Spirit, but an act of his Almightineſs. The hand of the Lord created the World, the heavens are the work of his fingers, Pſal. 8. 3. but grace is the work of his arms, Iſa. 53. 1. It may be ſaid of the firſt grace in the new birth, as it was of Reuben, Gen. 49. 3. 'Tis his might, the beginning of his ſtrength, and the excellency of his power. Tho Miniſterial gifts were as excellent as Paul's, whoſe preaching was with demonſtration and power, and who knew the readieſt way to mens hearts, if a man ever did; yet the excellency of the power was of God: and when he brandiſht his ſpiritual weapons, they were only mighty through God, 2 Cor. 10. 4. Tho the declaration was his, yet the working was Chriſts, Rom. 15. 18. none of his People are willing, till the day of his power. Pſal. 110. 3.

(1.) 'Tis as great, yea, greater power, than that put forth in Creation. 'Tis as great; 'tis the introduction of another form, not in a way of any action or faſhion, but in ſuch a manner as was in the Creation; that is, by the mighty Operation of God; otherwiſe it could not be called a New Creature, tho it might be called a new thing. You call not that which is made by the Art or power of man, as a Watch, a Clock, a Houſe, a New Creature; for there is nothing of Creation in them, but art and induſtry, ſetting the pieces of matter, created to their hands, together in ſuch a form or figure. But this is called a New Creature, not ſo much in regard of the newneſs of the thing, but in regard of the power that wrought it, and the manner of working it, being the ſame with that of Creation. * And being termed ſo, it implies the exerting an efficacious power; for Creation is not wrought by a ceſſation of action (which would be in God, if the Will were only the cauſe of it) but the employment of an active vertue: God doth not hold his hand in his boſom, but ſpreads it open, and applies it to an efficacious action; ſince it is a New Creation, it implies a Creator, and a creative Power; Creation cannot be without both. 'Tis a greater power expended in Regeneration, than in Creation; more power Morally in this, than Phyſically in that: one word created the World; many words are combined for the New preparation of the heart. 'Tis eaſier to make a thouſand Glaſſes, than to ſet together one that is daſht in pieces. 'Tis eaſier with God to make a World, (quoad nos, as to our conception, for all things are alike eaſie with God) and create thouſands of men with his Image, as bright as Adam's, than to bring that into form which is ſo miſerably defaced.

* Amiraut. Serm. ſur. 2. Phil. 13. p. 20.

[1.] Firſt, In regard of the ſubject. Sin hath turned man into a Beaſt; and Omnipotency only can turn a beſtial man into Angelical and Divine. There is a leſs diſtance between the leaſt duſt and the glorious God, than there is between the holy God and an impure ſinner; ſin and grace are more contrary to one another, than aliquid and nihil, ſomething and nothing. A Straw may with leſs power be made a Star, than a corrupted ſinner be made a Saint. In Creation God was only to put in Nature, here he is to put off one that is ſtrong, and to bring in another altogether ſtrange and new; 'tis hard to bring a man off from his old ſtock, and as hard to make him nakedly to truſt Chriſt: 'tis more difficult to make a man leave his ſin, than to change his Opinion, ſince men are more in love with habitual wickedneſs, than with any Opinion whatſoever. In regard of the indiſpoſedneſs of the Soul. There is ſome foundation for a natural Religion, there being general notions of God and his Attributes, which would Adminiſter ſome concluſions that he was to be feared and reverenced; and according to theſe notions many checks of Conſcience, which would induce men to ſome Moral behaviour towards God: But in the ſetting our hearts right to God, and creating them in a Mediator, there was not the leaſt duſt in Nature to build upon. In the creating of Adam's body, there was ſome preexiſtent matter; the duſt of the ground, whereof his body was by a divine power made and organized; but we meet with no preexiſtent matter for the formation of the Soul, which made him a rational Creature; that indeed was the breath of God, not engendered by any concurring cauſe in nature: there is no preexiſtent matter in the creature, of which this Image is formed, tho there be a preexiſtent ſubject to receive the impreſſion of it; 'tis not the rearing any thing upon the foundation of Nature; but introducing a Nature wholly new, which ſpeaks Almightineſs. In regard of the contradiction in the ſubject. The ſtream of mans natural Reaſon, the principles of ſelf, whereby he is guided, run counter to it; there is a pride of Reaſon which will not ſtoop to the Goſpel, which in mans wiſdom is counted fooliſhneſs. Man is an untamed Heifer, a wild Aſſe that ſnuffs up the wind, full of hatred to the ways of God, guided by Gygantick luſts, which make as great a reſiſtance as a Mountain of Braſs; ſtoutneſs of heart, ſtrong prejudices againſt the Law of God; fierceneſs of affection, drinking iniquity like Water; univerſal madneſs, reſiſting the Spirit, harebrain'd imaginations; frowardneſs in the Will, forwardneſs to evil, perverſity againſt good: Can any thing, leſs than an Almighty power, make a univerſal cure? 'Tis more eaſy to make men ſtoop to ſome victorious Prince, and become his vaſſals, than to bring men to a ſubmiſſion to God and his Laws, which they entertain with contempt and ſcorn. Nothing obeyed Gods Word in the Creation; tho it contributed not to his deſign, yet it could not oppoſe him; it could not ſwell againſt him, becauſe it was nothing. But every ſinner is rebellious, diſputes Gods commands, fortifies himſelf againſt his entrance, gives not up himſelf without a conteſt. This pride is hereditary, it bore ſway in the heart ever ſince Adam's fall, and hath preſcription of as long a ſtanding as the World, to plead for poſſeſſion. What, but infinite power, can fling down this pride at the foot of the Croſs, make the heart ſtrike its ſwelling Sail to Chriſt, and become nothing in it ſelf, that Chriſt may be all, life in him, and all Righteouſneſs to him? 'Tis only poſſible to God to make a Camel with this bunch on its back, paſs through a Needles eye: no leſs than divine power can bring down theſe Armies of oppoſite imaginations, which haveboth multitude and ſtrength, (and no man knows either their number or ſtrength,) and the whole frame of contradiction againſt the grace of Chriſt. Our Saviour intimates this creative power in that Thankſgiving to his Father, Matth. 11. 25. I thank thee, O father, Lord of heaven and earth, &c. Chriſt, in all his Addreſſes to his Father, uſed Attributes and Titles ſuitable to the buſineſs he inſiſted on. The revelation of divine knowledg to Babes, the moulding their hearts to receive it, was an act of God as he is Lord of Heaven and Earth, putting forth an infinite power in the forming of it. If God were the Author of grace in the hearts of thoſe Babes, perſons better diſpoſed, and nearer the Kingdom of Heaven, as he was Lord of Heaven and Earth; then there muſt be ſome greater power than that of the Creation of the World, put forth to conquer the wiſe and prudent, whoſe wiſdom and prudence ſtands Armed in the breaches of Nature to beat off the aſſaults of the Goſpel.

[2.] In regard of the oppoſition of the preſent poſſeſſors. The chaſing out an Armed Devil that hath kept the Palace in peace ſo long, muſt be by a power ſuperior to his own, Luke 11. 21, 22. This great Goliah hath his Armour about him, hath had long poſſeſſion and deareſt affections: the impulſes of natural concupiſcence take his part: he hath his alluring baits, his pleaſing propoſals: the world and the fleſh are linkt with him in a league, to hinder the reſtoration of the Soul to Chriſt, and the reſtoration of Gods Image to the Soul. A threefold cord is not eaſily broken. It muſt be a power ſuperior to thoſe three great powers in conjunction, that muſt bind the ſtrong man: and caſting him out, and ſpoiling his goods, are acts of power, Matth. 12. 29. Satan is too ſtrong to be eaſily caſt out, and the fleſh loves him too dearly to be eaſily divorced from him; he is never like to lay down his Arms by perſuaſions; tho all the Angels in Heaven ſhould intreat him, he would not give up one foot of his Empire. Nay, tho what God doth propoſe hath a greater weight of goodneſs, pleaſure and profit in it ſelf, than what thoſe three great impoſters can offer, yet ſince Reaſon is weak and mightily corrupted under the conduct of ſenſe, which hath an alliance with Satan's propoſals, and firſt ſucks them in, it is not like to meet with any entertainment, as being againſt the intereſt of the fleſh; and the Will being backt with two ſuch powerful ſeconds, as Satan and the World, to aſſiſt it in its refuſals. Indeed, if he that is in the Regenerate, were not greater and more powerful than he that is in the World, they would not be able to reſiſt his allurements and ſubtilties, 1 John 4. 4. The triumphs of Chriſt at his Aſcenſion declare his power in his acquiſition; with a ſtrong hand he broke the chain of ſinners, and led captivity captive before he gave gifts to men, Pſal. 68. 18. He doth the like in giving grace to the heart: he rides upon his white horſe in the power of Almighty grace, when he conquers the enmity in the Soul, as well as when he overcomes the enemies of his Church, Revel. 6. 2.

(2.) 'Tis a power as great as that which wrought in the Reſurrection of Chriſt. 'Tis conſiderable how loftily the Apoſtle ſets it out, Eph. 1. 19, 20. And what is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to us ward who believe according to the working of his mighty power: Which he wrought in Chriſt, when he raiſed him from the dead, and ſet him at his own right hand in heavenly places. Exceeding greatneſs of his Power, ὑπερβάλλον, with an Hyperbole, according to the working or efficaciouſneſs of his mighty power, noting the infuſion of Faith in the Soul by a powerful impreſſion, According to the working of the might or ſtrength; one word was not enough to ſignify the great power working: 'tis ſtrength with a greater edg upon it; as when a man would fetch a mighty blow, he ſtirs up all his ſtrength, ſets his Teeth an edg to ſummon all his ſpirits to aſſiſt his Arm. The Power of God in creation of nature is never in the whole Scripture ſet forth ſo magnificently as his Power in the creation of grace is in this place. The Apoſtle picks not out any examples of Gods Power in his ordinary Works, or that Power in leſſer Miracles which exceeded the power of Nature, to illuſtrate this power by. He doth not ſay, 'Tis that power whereby we work Miracles, or ſpeak with Tongues: no; neither is it that power whereby our Saviour wrought ſuch Miracles when he was in the World. 'Tis a more illuſtrious power than the giving Sight to the blind, Speech to the dumb, Hearing to the deaf, yea, or Life to a putrified Carcaſs; this is an extraordinary power: But yet this gracious power is higher than all this; for it is as great as that which wrought the two greateſt Miracles that ever were acted in the Creation; as great as the raiſing Jeſus Chriſt, perfectly dead in the Grave, and having the weight of the ſin of the World upon him; and as great as that power, which after the raiſing of him, ſet him in his human Nature at his right hand, above Principalities and Powers, above the whole Angelical ſtate: As much as to ſay, As great as all that Power which wrought the whole ſcene of the Redemption, from the foundation-ſtone to the top-ſtone. 'Tis ſuch an unconquerable power, whereby God brings about all his Decrees which terminated in Chriſt. Some ſay, this power is not exerciſed in the begetting Faith, but in the Faithful after Faith is begun. 'Tis very ſtrange that a leſs power is neceſſary to beget, than to preſerve a thing after it is brought into being. And the ſame power is requiſite to raiſe the heart of the Moralleſt man under Heaven out of the grave of corrupted nature, as well as thoſe that are furtheſt in their diſpoſitions from God. As, had not our Saviour had the weight of the ſins of men upon him, had he been dead but an hour or two, lain in the Grave with a little looſe Earth, or light Sand caſt upon him; it would have required infinite power to have reſtored him to Life. The Apoſtle mentions this in other places, tho not ſo highly as in this, Rom. 6. 4. that like as Chriſt was raiſed up by the glory of the Father, even ſo we ſhould walk in newneſs of life. It muſt be underſtood thus: Even ſo we, being raiſed up from ſin by the glory of the Father, ſhould walk in newneſs of life. And it may be partly the meaning of the Apoſtle Peter, 1 Pet:1.3. Who hath begotten us again to a lively hope by, or through, the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead, not only as the foundation of our hopes, but by a power conformable to that which raiſed Chriſt from the dead. I would only by the way note, That this infers a higher operation than meerly an exhortation and ſuaſion; for would any man ſay of a Philoſopher that had taught him Morality, That he had diſplayed in him the exceeding greatneſs of his power, only upon the account of adviſing and counſelling him to reform his manners, and live more ſoberly and honeſtly in the world? Our Saviour eſteemed this one thing greater than all the other Miracles he wrought, and declared himſelf to be the Chriſt more by this than by any other. When John ſent to know who he was, he returns no other account, than the liſt of his Miracles, The blind ſee, the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed, to the poor the Goſpel is preached, Luk. 7. 20. That which brings up the Rear, as the greateſt, is the poor ευαγγελίζονται are evangelized; 'tis not to be taken actively of the preaching of the Goſpel, but paſſively, that they were wrought upon by the Goſpel, and became Goſpell'd people, transform'd into the mould of it, elſe it would bear no analogy to the other Miracles; the deaf hear, and the dead were raiſed; they had not exhortations to hear and live, but the effects were wrought in them; ſo thoſe words import not only the preaching of the Goſpel to them, but the powerful operation of the Goſpel in them. This greateſt Miracle in the Catalogue is the only Miracle our Saviour hath left in the world ſince the ceſſation of all the reſt.

I have inſiſted the longer upon theſe perfections in God apparent in this Work:

1. To ſtir up every renewed perſon to a thankful frame toward God; That he ſhould engage his choiceſt Attributes for the good of a poor creature. To what purpoſe did the Apoſtle ſo long and ſo highly ſpeak of the power of God in raiſing them from a ſpiritual death, but that they ſhould acknowledg it, and admire God for it? It cannot but raiſe high admirations and adorations of God, to conſider how Mercy moved for them, Soveraignty call'd them out, Wiſdom modell'd them, Holineſs cleanſed them, and Power framed them.

2. To ſtir up deep Humility. 'Tis a plain declaration of our miſerable eſtate by Nature, and the difficulty of emerging out of it; impoſſible for any creature to effect. Had not God been infinitely Merciful, Wiſe, Holy, True, and Omnipotent, and put forth his Power to free men from a ſlavery to ſin, not a man had been able to eſcapeout of it; and theſe two, admiration of God, and humiliation of ſelf, are the two great acts of a Chriſtian, which ſet all other Graces on work. Mercy ſpeaks us very miſerable, Wiſdom declares us fools, Holineſs unclean, and Power extreamly weak.

3. How mightily will it give a ground to the exerciſe of faith? He that is deeply ſenſible of this work of holineſs and power in him, cannot but truſt God upon his deed, as well as before he did upon his word. As you go to the promiſes without you, conſider alſo the counter-part of the promiſe within you, and the efficacy of that power which wrought it; you have a ground of faith within you: the power extends to every one wherein this work is wrought: What is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to us-ward who believe; this the Apoſtle ſpeaks to all the believing Epheſians.

4. Therefore look much into your ſelves by way of examination, to obſerve the actings of Gods Wiſdom, Holineſs and Power, within you. The want of this makes many gracious perſons live diſconſolately. Paul was certainly diligent in his obſervation, ſince he ſpeaks ſo feelingly and experimentally of it. 'Tis the way to anſwer Satans objections, ſilence unbelieving thoughts, when you can trace the ſteps and operations of them in you: it would make you ſtrive for an encreaſe of this work of Regeneration, that you may feel in your ſelves more evidences of the Holineſs and Power of God.

5. Thoſe that want it, may well deſpair of attaining it by themſelves and their own ſtrength. Divine Wiſdom and Power are exerted in this work; and men may as well think themſelves able to raiſe a dead man, yea Chriſt from the grave, and ſet him at the right hand of God, as do this by their own ſtrength: if we want an eye or a hand, all the creation cannot furniſh us with either. How can any power but that which is infinite, give us an eye to look to Chriſt within the vail, and a hand to claſp him in heaven?

6. It directs men where to ſeek it, and to ſeek it earneſtly. At the hands of God; Since Infinite Wiſdom, Holineſs and Power, are neceſſary for the production of it. With earneſtneſs, becauſe it is ſo tranſcendent a work, hath ſo many perfections of God ſhining in it, that creature-ſtrength and wiſdom is utterly unable to frame and raiſe it; and with hopes too, if they earneſtly ſeek it, ſince God hath hereby declared himſelf infinitely loving in the combination of ſo many Attributes for the effecting of it. Plead therefore the glory of God in theſe his Attributes; and if God give you a heart to ſeek it, it is a probable argument he will give you that grace, which he hath given you a heart to deſire.

IV. Queſt. How God doth this?

1. This work is ſecret, and therefore difficult to be deſcrib'd. The effects are as obvious to a ſpiritual ſenſe, as the methods of it obſcure to our underſtandings; ſecret as the original of Winds, ſenſible as the ſound and bluſter of them, John 3. 8. If a dead man were raiſed, he would not know the manner how his ſoul returned into the body, how it took its former place, and made up a new union; yet he would know that he lives and moves. A gracious ſoul knows that he was carnal, and now ſpiritual; blind, and that he now ſees: he finds ſtrength inſtead of weakneſs; inclinations to good, inſtead of oppoſition; ſweetneſs in the ways of God, inſtead of bitterneſs. The methods of grace are obſcure, as thoſe of Nature, Eccleſ. 11. 5. Who knows the way of the ſpirit, or how the bones grow in the womb of her that is with child? even ſo thou knoweſt not the works of God who makes all. The manner of the formation of Chriſt in the ſoul, is as undiſcernable as the formation of a Child, or the manner of Chriſt's conception in the womb of the Virgin; both which are fearful and wonderful, as it is ſaid of the firſt, Pſal. 139. 14. Who can declare his generation? Iſa. 53. 8. that is, the generation of Chriſt, either in his perſon, or in his people. We cannot give a ſatisfactory account of the natural motions of our ſouls, how one faculty commands another, how the ſoul governs the ſeveral parts of the body; what the nature of the action of our mind, is in contemplation and reflection; how our Wills move the ſpirits in the body whereby the members are acted in their motion, and the functions of life perform'd: Much more undiſcernable are the ſupernatural methods of the Spirit of God. We know our ſelves heirs to the corruption of the firſt Adam, by the inbeing of it; the light of the grace of the ſecond Adam diſcovers it ſelf in the ſoul; but the manner of the deſcent of either is not eaſily to be determined. The Loadſtones attracting of Iron is the beſt repreſentation of this work; the ſoul, like that, moves ſenſibly, cleaves ſtrongly to God; but wherein this virtue conſiſts, how communicated both in that of Nature, and this of Spirit, dazles the eye of Reaſon.

2. Yet this is evident, that 'tis rational; that is, congruous to the eſſential nature of man. * God doth not deal with us as beaſts, or as creatures deſtitute of ſenſe, but as creatures of an intelligent order. Who is there that believes in Chriſt in ſuch a manner, as heavy things fall to the earth, or light things flye up to the air, or as beaſts run at the beck of their ſenſual appetite, without Rule or Reaſon? If the Spirit of God wrought ſo upon man, this were to lay our faculties aſleep, not to act them, but to act only upon them; this were to invert the natural order by creation, to raze out the foundations of Virtue, and deny the creature the pleaſure of his condition, who according to ſuch a manner of operation could not underſtand his own ſtate, no more than a brute can the harmony of Muſick, or the pleaſing variety of colours: But Grace perfects our ſouls, poſſeſſeth them with new principles, moves one faculty by another, like the motions of the wheels in a Clock or Watch; like the common courſe of Providence, wherein he orders all affairs according to the dependance of them one upon another by creation, without making any inroad upon the natural Rights of any creature, but preſerving them entire, unleſs in ſome miraculous action. He diffuſeth a ſupernatural tural virtue into the ſoul, not to thwart it in that courſe of working he appointed it in the creation, but to move it agreeably to its nature as a rational being. As the Sun conveys a celeſtial virtue upon the Plants, drawing them forth by its influence according to their ſeveral natures; ſo the Holy Ghoſt introduceth a ſupernatural principle into men, whereby they act as reaſonable creatures in a higher ſtrain. What methods our Saviour uſed in the firſt declaration of the Goſpel, he uſes in the propagation of it in the hearts of men. The ſame reaſon that is uſed in writing the Indenture, is uſed in writing the Counterpart. He might by his Omniſcient Wiſdom have found the way to the ſecreteſt corner of every mans heart, and by his power have ſet up what ſtandard he pleaſed in every part of the Caſtle, without propoſing the Goſpel in the way of Miracles and Arguments; but he tranſacts all that affair in ſuch a manner, that men might be moved in a rational way to their own happineſs. He required a rational belief, as he gave rational evidences, Joh. 10. 37. If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not; that is, the works that none but one empowered by God could do. God that requires of us a reaſonable ſervice, would work upon us by a reaſonable operation. God therefore works by way of a ſpiritual illumination of the underſtanding, in propounding the creatures happineſs by Arguments and Reaſons, and in a way of a ſpiritual impreſſion upon the will, moving it ſweetly to the embracing that happineſs, and the means to it which he doth propoſe; and indeed without this work preceding, the motion of the will could never be regular.

God doth this by a double work.

1. Upon the Underſtanding.
2. Upon the Will.

(1.) Upon the Underſtanding. The opening the eyes precedes the converſion from darkneſs to light, in Gods operation, as well as in the Apoſtles commiſſion; Acts 26. 18. The firſt appearance of life when God raiſeth the ſoul, is in the clearneſs and diſtinctneſs of its knowledg of God, Hoſ. 6. 2, 3. And the Apoſtle in his exhortation to the Romans, tells them, the way for the transformation of their ſouls, was by the renewing of their minds, Be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, Rom. 12. 2. The light of the Sun is ſeen breaking out at the dawning of the day, before the heat of the Sun be felt. As the action of our ſenſe is to ſenſible objects, ſo is that of our ſoul to ſpiritual; our eye firſt ſees an object, before our hearts deſire it, or our members move to it; ſo there is an apprehenſion of the goodneſs of the thing propoſed, before there be any motion of our wills to it. So God begins his work in our minds, and terminates it in our wills. In regard of this, as a ſtate of Nature is ſet forth under the term of darkneſs, ſo a ſtate of grace is often termed light, that being the firſt work in the new creation, as it was the firſt word of command in the old, Let there be light, 2 Cor. 4. 6. Col. 3. 10. and is therefore called a renewing in knowledg, or unto knowledg or acknowledgment, ἀνακαίνωσιν εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν. If you conſider the Scripture, you will find moſt of the terms whereby this is ſet forth to us, have relation to the underſtanding. The Goſpel it ſelf is called knowledg, Luke 1. 77. Wiſdom, 1 Cor. 1. 30. What faculty in man is appointed for the apprehending of a Science to gain wiſdom, but the Underſtanding? That whereby we receive the Goſpel, is called the ſpirit of the mind, the eyes of the underſtanding and ſight, which is put before believing, Joh. 6. 40. Every one which ſees the Son, and believes on him. The work of grace is called Revelation, Gal. 1. 16. Illumination, Epheſ. 1. 18. Tranſlation from darkneſs to light; opening the heart. The action of our minds being enlightned, is called comprehending, Eph. 3. 18. and knowledg, 2 Pet. 1. 2. All reſpect the Underſtanding, as the original Wheel which God primarily ſets in order *, from whence he doth influence ſecondarily all the other faculties which depend upon its guidance, God preſerving hereby the order which he inſtituted in Nature: therefore when the Underſtanding ſavingly apprehends the deformity of ſin, the Will muſt needs hate it: When it apprehends the Mercy of God, and the beauty of Holineſs, the Will muſt needs love him; and the higher the degrees of this ſaving illumination are in the mind, the ſtronger and firmer are the habits and acts of grace in the Will. This illuminative act of the Spirit is before (prior natura) the other of enclining the Will: for the Underſtanding is firſt exerciſed about the Word, as verum, true, before fore the Will is concern'd in it as good. The Underſtanding takes in the light of the Goſpel, which by the working of the Spirit is reflected upon the Will, whereby it is changed into the image of Chriſt whoſe Goſpel it is, 2 Cor. 3. 18. Beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the ſame image. The firſt act is of the mind, which is the eye of the ſoul; where the Apoſtle intimates, that the whole progreſs as well as the firſt change, is wrought in this manner.

* Teſtard de natura, &c. Theſ. 233, 234.

This is wrought,

1. By removing the indiſpoſition and prejudices which naturally are in the mind. As a wiſe Phyſician which orders his Medicines for the removing of the principal humour. Chains of darkneſs muſt be broken, films upon the eye muſt be removed, which hinder the act of Viſion: for what the eye is to the body, that the underſtanding is to the ſoul. The darkneſs of ignorance is promiſed in the Covenant to be ſcattered, They ſhall all know me from the leaſt to the greateſt of them, Jer. 31. 34. This being a Law in the inward parts, the eye muſt be cleared to read it, as well as the heart cleanſed to obey it. The object being ſpiritual, requires a ſpiritual diſpoſition in the faculty for the reception of it. This is called in Scripture a giving eyes to ſee, and ears to hear, Deut. 29. 4. and the revealing things not only by the word, but by the ſpirit, 1 Cor. 2. 10. which in regard of rectifying the reaſons and judgments of men, is called a ſpirit of judgment, Iſa. 4. 4. and ſhall have purged the blood of Jeruſalem from the midſt thereof, by the ſpirit of judgment, and the ſpirit of burning; a ſpirit of judgment, as it is light in the Underſtanding, removing the darkneſs; a ſpirit of burning, as it is heat in the heart, thawing the hardneſs. It reduceth the mind into a right order, and teacheth it to judg between truth and falſhood, between good and evil; the want of which is the cauſe of ſin, whence ſins are called ἀγνοήματα, Heb. 9. 7. errors, as ariſing from error in judgment. Since the mind is filled with fogs, and uncapable to perceive the ſplendor of divine truths, God acts upon the mind by an inward virtue, cauſing the word propoſed, to be mixed with an act of faith, which he begets in the ſoul, whereby it apprehends the excellency of that ſtate preſented to it in the Goſpel. As there is a manifeſtation of his Name in the Word, ſo there is an operation of his grace; an internal teaching by God, as well as an external by the Goſpel; the propoſal of the Word by man, the opening and fitting the heart by God, Joh. 6. 45. Every man that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, comes unto me. Chriſt taught all by his Miniſtry, the Father only ſome by his Spirit. Learning of God goes before coming to Chriſt; and thoſe two acts are plainly diſtinguiſht, Iſa. 6. 9, 10. hear, and not underſtand; the lock of their minds was to be opened, as well as that of their ears; the Prophets voice could unlock the one, the Spirit only had the key of the other. Men may enlighten as moral cauſes, God only as the efficient cauſe, to root out the inward indiſpoſition. The Spirit alſo removes the prejudices againſt Chriſt as undeſirable, againſt Holineſs as troubleſome; takes down the ſtrength of corrupt Reaſonings, pulls down thoſe Idols in the mind, and falſe notions of happineſs; out-reaſons men out of their inward thoughts of a happineſs in ſenſual pleaſures, pride of life, Mammon of Honour or Wealth, which are the root of our ſpiritual diſeaſe, and firſt to be cur'd. In this there is a manifeſt difference between the working of Satan, and the operation of God; he ſets his battery againſt the affections, becauſe the entry is there eaſieſt; God breaks in upon the Underſtanding, which being the chief Fort, will quickly be a means to reduce the leſſer Cittadels. And when the work begins in removing the blindneſs, it is the way to a true converſion; when it begins only in the affections, it is a prognoſtick of a quick ſtarting aſide. In an outward exhortation, God acts ſutably to our Nature, ſince we are endued with Underſtanding and Will; but in acting upon us within, he doth remedy the vice of our Nature, ſince our Reaſon and Will are corrupted.

(2.) It is wrought by bringing the mind and the object cloſe together. * Sight is produced in a blind man by drawing off the ſcales from his eyes, and the recourſe of ſpirits to the eye neceſſary for ſight; beſides this, there muſt be outward light, and objects coloured by that light; and from the eye ſo diſpoſed within, and the thing diſcovered without, ariſeth the action of ſight: So from the preparation of the Underſtanding, and the application of the object, ariſeth this action of Spiritual tual Vision. There is a double opening, one of the Gospel, the other of the Understanding; our Saviour did both, he opened the Scriptures, Luke 4.32. and opened their Understandings, ver. 45. that there might be a mutual entrance, that the Word might dwell in their hearts, and their hearts have admission into the Word. The Spirit shows the great things of the Gospel to the soul, Joh. 16.14. ἀναγγελεῖ, He shall receive of mine, and show it unto you; not in general, but bring them near to them, to make them view, and know the things that are freely given to them of God, 1 Cor. 2. 12. the benefits of the death and resurrection of Christ; he repeats them again and again, that there may be an evidence in the mind that they are the Royal gifts of God. There is a knowledg before this work of the Spirit, but as of things at a distance; many know the things proposed in the Gospel, but they know it not as a glorious Gospel, nor see the wonders in this Law, till the Spirit brings that and the faculty close together. As a man may discern a statue or picture at a distance, but till the eye and the objects meet closer together, it cannot discern the beautiful workmanship upon them, with any affection to them. Not that a man knew nothing, or knows new reasons of those things which he knew before; but there is a nearer, and therefore clearer representation of them, which is demonstratio ostensiva, whereby he knows them in another manner than he did before. As a man may know the promises before, but they were not brought so near to him as to tast them; tast being an addition to knowledg, whereby a man knows that sensibly, which before he only knew notionally. 'Tis one thing to know a Mechanical Instrument, and another to know it in the operation of it, when it is applied to its proper use. 'Tis like a man that hath his Understanding more cleared by seeing Mathematical Demonstrations, and Lines drawn, than by all the Rules of Art in his head.

(3.) By fixing the mind upon the object so closely presented. The Spirit settles that light and the object so in the mind, that it can no more blow it out, than puff out the sparklings of a Diamond, or than an Artist endued with the habit of some Art, can divest himself of his Skill. Many men have some convictions of truth, but flashy and uncertain, and which slip from their minds: but when the Spirit opens the heart, it holds the object to the mind, and the mind to the object; starts one holy thought after another about the truth it hath darted in, makes the mind peer about it, and take notice of every lineament of that truth that we eye, and those thoughts lye down, rise up, and walk with us. When Lydia's heart was opened, she attended to the things spoken by Paul, Acts 16. 14. her whole heart cleaved to them. In this respect the Spirit is a Remembrancer, making the soul ponder, and beat over again with all intensness of mind, the goodness and truth of those things in the Gospel which are brought unto it; that the heart is, as Paul was, bound in spirit to Jerusalem, Acts 20. 22. The thoughts of that Journey did so haunt him, and follow him, as the shadow doth the body, that no arguments of friends, nor fear of danger, could divert him; the soul is bound by them, one consideration overtaking another, and all at work beating upon the mind. Hence consideration is put before conversion, Ezek. 18. 28. because he considers, and turns away from all his transgressions. And 'tis called the ingrafted word, fastned to the soul as a graft to the stock; when the heart is opened by the Spirit, the word is inserted in, and bound to it, and at last the heart becomes one with the word, and grows up with it.

(4.) By bringing the soul to an actual reasoning and discourse upon the sight of the evidence. God convinceth the judgment with Reasons proper to evidence the truth and goodness of what he doth propose, and that with pregnant and prevailing demonstrations, which give a competent satisfaction; therefore called the demonstration of the spirit and power, 1 Cor. 2. 4. that is, a spiritual and powerful demonstration. When the eye is opened, and the revelation made, and held close and fast to the soul with a divine demonstration, that this is the only means to elevate him to a high condition, and at last bring him to a blessed immortality; the Understanding is moved to compare the force of those Arguments, and consequently judgeth that true which before it counted false and foolishness; and comes by the help of this spiritual light to reason spiritually, and spiritually to discern the proposition made to it. It compares its natural state with the happy state offered offered to it; its own ignorance with that light, its own miſery with that mercy. God will not have man, that is ſo far above a beaſt, do any thing without reaſon; for this would be to do it brutiſhly, tho the thing done were never ſo good: When men act as men, they follow the judgment of the beſt Reaſon they can; and ſhall man that was created a Rational creature, be renewed without Reaſon, when the very work is to advance him to the true ſtate of a Reaſonable creature, and his Reaſon is enlightned by the Spirit, that it may rightly judg of the demonſtrative arguments it offers to him? Is there not as much Reaſon for the guidance of the Will in the higheſt concern, as for the conduct of it in affairs of a lower ſphere? Man was firſt endued with Reaſon, that he might rationally ſerve God; and his depraved Reaſon is reformed, that he may rationally return to God. If therefore he act like a man in other things, he doth not ſurely act like a brute in this; but the Spirit excites that Reaſon he hath enlightned, to judg of thoſe excellent things he doth propoſe, and the ſtrength of the Arguments he backs them with, which are ſo clear and undeniable, that they cannot be refus'd by a mind diveſted of thoſe indiſpoſitions which drew out before a contempt of them. The change in the Will being an election and choice, cannot be made without convincing and ſatisfying Reaſons which induce it to that choice, and juſtify the election it hath made; * That can hardly be called Faith, when a man believes that which he doth not think upon the higheſt reaſon was his duty to believe. And indeed what man is there that cannot alledg ſome Reaſon why he is induced to this or that act? God moves men by preſenting things to the Underſtanding, under the notion of good, honeſt, profitable; and when the Underſtanding is enlightned to judg of things in ſome meaſure under the ſame notion that God propoſeth them, a man's own Reaſon cannot but upon a view of them aſſent unto them; and that aſſent is followed with a change, according to the degrees of that illumination, if it be a ſaving one. Upon this account that our own Reaſon is excited to judg of the propoſal, our faith can no more be ſaid to be a human faith, or the work to proceed from our own power, than it can be ſaid to be ſenſitive, becauſe it comes by hearing: for tho faith depends upon hearing and reaſoning, as upon natural powers; yet the light whereby the faculties are acted, is wholly ſupernatural, and from the Spirit of God.

(5.) Hence follows a full conviction of the ſoul. Both the knowledg of its own miſery, and the amiableneſs of the Goſpel offer, whence iſſues a wearineſs under the one, and deſires for the other. By this enlightning, the ſoul ſees ſin in its Empire, God in his Wrath, Satan in his Tyranny, and the hardneſs of the ſtone within him: He ſees the Law accuſing, Sin triumphing, Heaven ſhut, and Hell open, God ready to judge him, and his ſoul every way deplorable. He ſees alſo in the Goſpel how Chriſt hath expiated ſin, anſwered the demands of the Law, ſtills the clamours of conſcience, ſatisfied the juſtice of God by bearing his wrath; hereupon the ſoul cloſes with Chriſt, and is born again. Here are heaps of ſin that cannot be numbred; on the other ſide are riches of mercy that cannot be reckoned; there is ſin to damn, here is a Chriſt to ſave; Heaven and Hell, Sin and Chriſt, Damnation and Salvation, are preſented in their proper colours, and preſſed upon the Underſtanding, which beholds all by a clear light. And thus by the illuminative virtue of the Spirit, the ſoul is laid at Gods foot in a ſenſe of its miſery, and then drawn into Chriſts arms by a ſenſe of his grace. This is wrought by a convictive perſuaſion, for ſo the word ἐλέγχω ſignifies, John 16. 8. which cauſes both a ſight of ſin, and a ſenſe of righteouſneſs, and produceth a full aſſent in the Underſtanding.

(2.) The next faculty wrought upon, is the Will. The Will is enclin'd as well as the Underſtanding enlightned, whereby ſpiritual things are approved with a ſpiritual affection; the ſame hand that darts light into the Mind, puts heat into the Will. After the act of Underſtanding hath preceded in a ſerious conſideration, and through conviction, the act of the Will by virtue of the ſame Spirit, follows in a delightful motion to the object propoſed to it; 'tis conducted by Light, and ſpirited by Love; the Underſtanding hands the object to the Will as neceſſary to be embraced; and the arms of the Will are opened to receive it, as the eyes of the Mind are to behold it.

For

Prop. 1. There seems to me to be an immediate supernatural work upon the Will, as well as upon the Understanding; not that the Understanding is only enlightned, and the Will follows the dictate of that, without any further touch of the Spirit upon it; But he Will as it is the Will, and therefore cannot be forced, there is need of a Moral cause which may determine it according to its nature, and draw it by the cords of a man. When a Master instructs a youth in his Trade, he doth it by arguments, morally; when he holds his hand with the Instrument in it, and directs the motion, he acts physically; so doth the Spirit exhort us to spiritual motion, telling us inwardly which is the way, that we may walk in it, and take our Wills by the hand, as it were, and lead them in the way they are to go. A Nurses tongue and exhortation is not enough to make a child to go, because of the weakness of its limbs; nor the light in the Understanding sufficient to move the Will, wherein there is an habitual weakness and contradiction. * How did God work up the Wills of the Egyptians to lend their Jewels to the Israelites, but by some immediate touch *. Their Reason might have furnisht them with many more arguments against it, than it could for it: They knew the Israelites had been highly injured, and that very lately too; that they could not but have a deep sense of their oppression, and intentions of revenge, as far as their power extended. They knew that the Israelites prepared for flight, and might more than conjecture that they intended never to return or send their Jewels to them; for what need had they of so many goods barely to sacrifice in the Wilderness? How were their Wills thus bended against so many arguments against this action, and without any strong Reasons to move them to consent to such a desire of the Israelites? How must this be, but by the efficacious power of God, not forcing their Wills, but taming their fierceness, softning them by a secret instinct, and exciting them to a grant of the Israelites request. The Apostle saith, God gives to will. If there were not a particular act upon the Will, it had better been said, God gives to understand and know, and man to will and do. After the evidence set up in the Understanding, there is a secret touch upon the Will, opening and enlarging it to run the way that is propos'd in an excellent and charming manner. As the Power of God raiseth every part of Christ, so the same power raiseth every faculty of the soul; it was also a physical power, since meer exhortation would never have effected it.

* Ducat. de Imag. dei. lib. 2. c. 4. p. 32.

(1.) The Scripture intimates this in the terms whereby it signifies this work to us; as Creation, Resurrection, Regeneration, New birth, all which denote some physical operation distinct in each faculty in the new creation, as there was in the first; not only the Law in the mind to direct, but the heart of flesh to comply, is Gods act. The fleshy heart is wrought by him, as well as the knowledg of the mind lighted by him. In Generation something is removed, another thing introduced: in Regeneration then of the Will, there is consonant to that, an eradication of corrupt habits, and an implantation of gracious ones. 'Tis called a giving a heart, a circumcision of the heart to love God, Deut. 30. 6. Love is an act of the Will, tho it supposeth a knowledg of the amiable object in the Understanding. If Faith be principally in the Will, as I think it is, as to consent; and the words leaning, resting, coming, rather note an act of the Will, than an act of the Understanding; there is then an operation of God upon the subject, viz. the Will, in the implanting of it.

(2.) The Will is corrupted as well as the Understanding. The Works of the Flesh issue from both; if the corruption were only in the Understanding, then that being removed, the Will would be regenerated. As in a Watch, if the fault be only in one Wheel, that being mended, the whole frame is rectified; but if there be a flaw in all, the mending of one, tho the principal one, which moves the rest, will not set every Wheel right, without a particular application of Art to restore them to their due frame. Was not original righteousness subjectively in the Will, as well as in the Mind? Did not a stoutness in the Will succeed in the place of that Righteousness, as well as darkness in the place of light? Must not there then be a habit of mollifying grace bestowed upon the one, as well as a habit of enlightning truth set up in the other; an inclination to good in the Will, and an aversion from evil, as well as the knowledg of both? The corrupt proneneſs in the will, is the cauſe that it is eaſily excited to evil by the perſuaſion of the Devil and the World; and is there not need of an inward rectitude in the will to byas it to a free embracing and cloſe adherency to the good propoſed to it by God, that his grace may be efficacious in every part? This work is a quickning a man under a univerſal Spiritual Death; the will was dead, as well as the mind dark, which muſt have life inſtead of its deadneſs, as the other hath light inſtead of its darkneſs: And if they be two diſtinct faculties, then there are two diſtinct acts of the Spirit, tho they depend one upon another. There is no leſs power requiſite to make us Spiritually willing, than to make us Spiritually knowing; ſince the corrupt habits in our Wills are rather ſtronger than the prejudices in our Underſtandings: therefore there ſeems to be a diſtinct act in removing the reſiſtance from the one, as well as expelling the darkneſs from the other. As the Spirit takes away the wiſdom that was ſenſual, earthly and devilliſh, ſo it diveſts the will of that diſpoſition whereby it was enamoured on that devilliſh wiſdom of the fleſh, and makes it willing to cut off the right hand, and right eye, to deny ſin, which is the very ſelf, and engage in an irreconcileable quarrel againſt all that which engroſſed its choiceſt Affections.

(3.) If the Underſtanding hath ſuch a power, by vertue of its illumination, without an act alſo of the Spirit upon the will, and a particular application of the Underſtanding to the Will, and the Will to the Underſtanding, Why did not Adam's Will follow his Underſtanding? His Underſtanding was clear, without darkneſs; his Affections firſt made the rebellion; Sence was the leader, and the Will the follower. Eve's Underſtanding was not ſilent under the temptation of Satan; her knowledg was actuated in that ſpeech, God hath ſaid, You ſhall not eat of it, neither ſhall you touch it, leſt you die, Gen. 3. 3. ſhe cites the word, her Underſtanding muſt needs concur with it, unleſs it were corrupted and darkned before the fall; Where lay the reſiſtance? In the Affections, and the Will which ſided with them. Why may not the Will poſſeſt with thoſe evil habits, reſiſt the Underſtanding imperfectly reſtored to its primitive light, as well as Adam's Will did where there was no ſcale or film upon the eye of his Soul? And likely his Affections had kept their due order, if the Will had preſerved its due dependance upon Reaſon, and its ſoveraignty over the ſenſitive part. Do we not find that our Wills are oftner in contradiction to the true ſentiments of our Underſtanding, and in conjunction with the Affections, than in a due ſubordination to the one, and commanding over the other? Is it not frequently ſeen, that men of much light, knowledg and gifts of Reaſon, anſwer not the end of that illumination, and are without a Will to turn to God? Beſides, ſince corruption came in by the way of the Affections, when the Underſtanding was clear; how can Regeneration of the Will come in by the illumination of the Underſtanding without a particular Operation upon the Will and Affections? If it be ſaid, The Will follows the dictate of the Underſtanding; Why did it not ſo in Adam? If we were perfectly reſtored, as Adam was in innocency, without the grace of God in our Wills, as well as light in our Underſtandings, we were not like to keep up in due order.

(4) God in his other creatures gives not only a light and fancy in Nature, but endues them with ſuch Principles that encline them to their motion, as connatural to them. Why then ſhall we not think, * ſince the Will is an habitual power, that when the Will is moved to ſupernatural ends, 'tis endued with ſuch a ſupernatural habit, whereby it may be ſweetly and readily moved to the chief good, as its proper Object. Are there not corrupt habits in the Will, which the Scripture calls luſts, and the works of the fleſh, Gal. 5. 19, 20, 21. which the ſpirit mortifies, as well as thoſe in the mind? Why not then gracious habits ſet up in the room of the other in this faculty, as well as in the other?

* Fervius, cap. 32. p. 496.

(5.) If there were not a Phyſical operation and habits in the Will, what would become of infants, who cannot in that ſtate be renewed without ſuch a kind of working? They are not capable of Moral Exhortations; we cannot conceive any other way the Spirit hath to work upon them, but by ſuch a Phyſical Operation, putting habits into their Wills, whereby they are renewed and ſanctified; they are capable of the habit, tho not of the act. We never find our Saviour viour ſpending any Exhortations upon Infants, but he took them in his Arms and bleſſed them; and told us, that of ſuch is the kingdom of heaven; and if the Kingdom of Heaven be of ſuch, there is ſome Operation upon them different from this method of working only upon their Underſtanding.

(6.) If there were not ſome Operation of the Spirit upon our Wills, Regeneration and Converſion would be more our work than Gods. If the Spirit terminates his working only upon the Underſtanding, and the Will be moved by the Underſtanding alone, without any conjunction of the Spirit in the work upon the Will; then the Spirit doth not immediately concur to the chiefeſt part of Regeneration, but as it illuminates the mind; for the chief part of renewing-grace is in the Will: ſo it would be more our work than Gods, if the Moral only were his, and the Phyſical Operation only ours. It was in a leſs affair than this, wherein David bleſſed God for the Peoples willingneſs, offering ſo freely; acknowledging it indeed the Peoples act, but by God's over-ruling their Wills, 1 Chron. 29. 13, 14.

(7.) God is all in all in glory, 1 Cor. 15. 28. When Chriſt ſhall have delivered the kingdom to his father, God then ſhall be all in all; all in their Underſtandings, all in their Wills; he ſhall be the immediate cauſe of all things, and govern and diſpoſe all things by himſelf, and for himſelf; binding the Souls of all the glorified by everlaſting ligatures to himſelf: all in all to the glorified, all light in their Underſtanding, all love and delight in their Will, objectively, efficiently. What efficacy he hath in glory, ſhall we deny him in grace in every particular faculty?

[2.] Propoſition. Yet this work, tho immediate, is not compulſive and by force. 'Tis a contradiction for the Will to be moved unwillingly: any force upon it deſtroys the nature of it; if it be forced, it ceaſeth to be Will. 'Tis not forced, becauſe it is according to Reaſon, and the Natural motion of the Creature; the Underſtanding propoſing, and the Will moved to an embracing; the Underſtanding going before with Light, the Will following after with Love. The liberty of the Will conſiſts in following the guidance of Reaſon; to have a liberty to go againſt it, is the greateſt miſery of the Creature: that is properly conſtraint, when we are compelled to work contrary to the Natural way of working: there is no conſtraint by force, but there is a kind of a conſtraint by love, becauſe the Spirit accompanies this Operation with ſo much efficacy, that inſtead of that ſadneſs we ſhould have in a thing we were forced unto, there is an unſpeakable joy and contentment in the Soul; it not being poſſible to taſte ſo much of the Love of God, to be delivered from ſo fearful a condemnation, to be brought to ſo glorious a hope, without being ſeized upon with much pleaſure and delight. God changeth the inclination of the Will, but doth not force it againſt its inclination: the Will, being a rational faculty, cannot be wrought upon but rationally. Since the main Work conſiſts in Faith and Love, 'tis impoſſible there can be any force: no man can be forced to believe againſt his Reaſon, or love againſt his Will, or deſire againſt his Inclinations. Belief is wrought by perſuaſion; no man can be perſuaded by force. It cannot be conceived, that the will ſhould will againſt the will. No man can be happy againſt his will, all happineſs conſiſting in a ſuitableneſs of the Object to the faculty: thoſe things that in themſelves are the greateſt pleaſures of the World, if they pleaſe not a man, cannot confer any happineſs upon him. The Spirit never works thus; becauſe where the ſpirit of the Lord is, there is liberty, 2 Cor. 3. 17. he deſtroys not the liberty, but reduceth it to will more nobly than before. Beſides, the liberty of the will doth not ſtand in indifference to this or that thing, for then the will would loſe its liberty every time it hath determined it ſelf to any one thing, becauſe after the determination it would be no longer indifferent to the other. But the liberty of the will conſiſts in being carried out according to the dictate of the Practical Judgment, and not by a blind inſtinct. God doth not deal with us as Stones, and Logs, or Slaves, whom the Whip makes to do that which they hate in their hearts: but conducts us in ways agreeable to our Nature: he calls, ſaying, Seek you my face; and enclines the will to anſwer, Thy face, Lord, I will ſeek, Pſ. 27. 8. That God who knows how to make a Will with a principle of freedom, knows how to work upon the will, without intrenching upon, or altering the eſſential priviledg he beſtowed upon it: he that formed us, as a Potter doth his Veſſel, knows very well the handles whereby he may take hold of us, without making any breach in our Nature.

[3.] Propoſition. 'Tis free and gentle. A conſtraint, not by force, but love, which is not an extrinſick force, but intrinſick and pleaſant to the will; he bends the creature ſo, that at the very inſtant wherein the will is ſavingly wrought upon, it delightfully conſents to its own happineſs: he draws by the cords of a man, and by a ſecret touch upon the will, makes it willing to be drawn, and moves it upon its own hinges. 'Tis ſweet and alluring: the Spirit of grace is called, the oyl of gladneſs; 'tis a delightful and ready motion which it cauſes in the will: 'tis a ſweet efficacy, and an efficacious ſweetneſs. At what time God doth ſavingly Work upon the will, to draw the Soul from ſin and the World, to himſelf, it doth with the greateſt willingneſs, freedom and delight, follow after God, turn to him, cloſe with him, and cleave to him, with all the heart, and with purpoſe never to depart from him, Cant. 1. 4. Draw me, and we will run after thee: drawing ſignifies the efficacious power of grace; running ſignifies the delightful motion of grace: the will is drawn, as if it would not come; it comes, as if it were not drawn. His grace is ſo ſweet and ſo ſtrong, that he neither wrongs the liberty of his Creature, nor doth prejudice his abſolute Power. As God moves neceſſary cauſes, neceſſarily; contingent cauſes, contingently; ſo he moves free agents freely, without offering violence to their natures. The Spirit glides into the heart by the ſweet illapſes of grace, and victoriouſly allures the Soul, Hoſ. 2. 14. I will allure her, and ſpeak to her heart; not by croſſing, but changing the inclination, by the all conquering and alluring charms of Love; as a man doth that perſon whom he intends for his Spouſe; for to that he alludes; becauſe in the latter part of the Chapter, he ſpeaks of the conſummation of his Marriage with the Church, Verſe 16. In that day thou ſhalt call me Iſhi; In what day? In the day that he ſhould allure her, and ſpeak to her heart. God puts on the deportment of a Lover in changing the frame of the will. The Spirit is as one that leads the way into Truth (The ſpirit ſhall guide you into all truth, John 16. 13.) * Not drags; he opens the heart, not by a forcible entry, but as a Key that fits every Ward in the Lock. The attraction of the will, is much like that of Iron by the Loadſtone, which had no motion of it ſelf, till the powerful emiſſions of the Loadſtones virtue reached it, and then it ſeems to move with a kind of voluntarineſs; there is no force uſed, but a delicious vertue emitted, which doth, as it were, both perſuade and enable it to join it ſelf to its beloved attractor. There is a ſecret vertue communicated by God, which, as ſoon as it toucheth the Soul, puts life and delightful motion into it, which before lay like a Log. It embraceth Chriſt as its portion, and paſſes a Decree, that it will keep his words, Pſal. 119. 57. Thou art my portion, O Lord: I have ſaid, that I will keep thy words.

[4.] Propoſition. 'Tis inſuperably victorious. What the mouth of God ſpeaks, what his will purpoſeth, his hand doth fulfil, 1 King. 8. 24. 'Tis not a faint and languiſhing impreſſion, but a reviving, ſpritely, and victorious touch. As the demonſtration of the Spirit is clear and undeniable; ſo the power of the Spirit is ſweet and irreſiſtible; both are joined, 1 Cor. 2. 4. An unexpreſſible ſweetneſs allures the Soul, and an unconquerable power draws the Soul; there are clear demonſtrations, charming perſuaſions, and invincible efficacy combined together in the Work. * He leaves not the will in indifference. If God were the Author of Faith only by putting the will into an indifference, tho it be determined by its own proper liberty, why may not he alſo be ſaid to be the Author of unbelief, if by the ſame liberty of this indifference it be determined to reject the Goſpel? For in the ſame manner God is Author of one motion of the will as well as of the other, if he doth no more than leave the will in an æquilibrium. This irreſiſtibleneſs takes not away the liberty of the will. Our Saviours obedience was free and voluntary, yet neceſſary and irreſiſtible. He could not ſin in regard of the Hypoſtatical union, yet he had a greater averſion to ſin than all the Angels in Heaven. Is not God freely and voluntarily good, yet neceſſarily ſo? He cannot be otherwiſe than good, he will not be otherwiſe than good. So the Will is irreſiſtibly drawn, and yet doth freely come to its own happineſs. The Soul is brought brought over to God, and adheres to him, not by a neceſſity of compulſion, but of immutability? As the Angels neceſſarily obey God, not by compulſion, but from an immutable love. A ſinner is neceſſarily a ſervant to ſin; a Regenerate man neceſſarily a ſervant to God; both by a kind of neceſſity of nature. Our main buſineſs then is to ſee, what new enlightnings there are in our minds by the Spirit in the Goſpel; what taſts and reliſhes we have of Divine Truths; how our Wills are allured to a ſincere and cloſe compliance with the propoſals of God in the Goſpel; what vigour is in them. This is Gods method, to Work firſt upon the Underſtanding, then upon the Will. That work which begins firſt in the Affections, without light dawning and breaking in upon the mind, and growing up by conſideration and enquiries into the Goſpel, is to be ſuſpected, and is not like to be durable.

This is the Scripture-method, and every Regenerate perſon may find it more or leſs in himſelf.

V. The USE is,

1. For, Inſtruction.

(1.) If God alone be the Author and Efficient of the New Birth, then it doth inſtruct us how inſufficient a good Education of it ſelf is to produce this work in the Soul, and how unfit to be reſted on without a further work. I doubt many may reſt upon a Religious Education, without ſearching and inquiring into themſelves what further work of God hath been wrought upon them. God hath intruſted Parents with a power of inſtructing their Children, but reſerves the power of renewing-Grace to himſelf. If Parents may ſet the Object before them, God only can give them a Spiritual eye to diſcern it: if they may inform the Underſtanding, a Divine touch only can bend the Will: if they may lay the Wood of Spiritual leſſons together, yet the fire to kindle them in the heart, and conſume the luſts, muſt deſcend from Heaven. Education may correct, but not extirpate the malignity of Nature: good inſtruction meeting with an orderly conſtitution, may ſow the ſeeds of Moral vertue, and reſtrain Natural corruption, but not weed that out of our Nature, or plant the root of grace, any more than the skilful management of a Beaſt can change its natural inclination, tho it may curb it. The folly bound up in the heart of a Child, is too ſtrong for the wiſdom of Man, and is wholly to be expelled by the wiſdom which comes down from Heaven, ſet up in the heart by Chriſt, who is the Wiſdom of the Father. The little Stars of Precepts glittering in the mind, cannot make the young Plants ſprout up with their heads towards Heaven, without the influence of the Sun: Chriſt, the Sun of Righteouſneſs, fixed in the Soul by the Spirit, can do more than all the Stars of Moral inſtructions in the World. Timothy had as Religious inſtruction from his Religious Mother and Grand-mother, as any in the World, both being believers, 2 Tim. 1. 5. yet Paul calls him his own ſon in the faith, 1 Tim. 1. 2. as having begotten him in the Goſpel: thoſe inſtructions did not beget him, tho they might facilitate the Evangelical Work, which was wrought by the Goſpel in Pauls miniſtry: Therefore the Apoſtle manifeſtly diſtinguiſheth between Inſtructers and Fathers, 1 Cor. 4. 15. Tho you have ten thouſand inſtructers in Chriſt, yet have you not many fathers: for in Chriſt Jeſus I have begotten you through the goſpel. He diſtinguiſheth their inſtructions from Chriſt the Efficient cauſe, and himſelf through the Goſpel, the inſtrumental cauſe. Yet ſuch inſtruction is not to be neglected when Children are capable; God may ſet home that by the Goſpel, which hath been ſuckt in, in younger years. Men may as well turn their backs upon the hearing the Word, becauſe it is inſufficient without the Operation of the Almighty Grace. Inſtruction and Prayer ſhould go hand in hand together. But take heed of reſting upon a good Education.

(2.) It inſtructs us, That Regeneration doth not depend meerly upon the Word, if God alone be the Efficient cauſe of it. It depends upon the inward efficacy of the Spirit. Had it depended upon the power of the Apoſtles, or the outward demonſtration of the Word, they would have converted all that they had preached to, they would not have ſuffered any to have remained obſtinate againſt the Goſpel: Charity would have obliged them to the exerciſe of their power; and their power would have made their charity effectual. As God doth ſeldom Work without means; ſo means can never work without God. David had the Law of God in his hand, but could not learn it without Gods teaching; therefore he prays, Pſal. 86. 11. Teach me thy way, O Lord: I will walk in thy truth. And in many places of the 119*th Pſalm*, he takes notice that all Spiritual knowledg comes from God, tho in the way of his Precepts, Verſe 98. Thou through thy commandments haſt made me wiſer than mine enemies: and Verſe. 104. Through thy precepts I get underſtanding. While we uſe the means, our eye ſhould be upon God. Thomas had his Fingers upon our Saviours wounds, but his thoughts upon Chriſts Divinity; my Lord, and my God. Food maintains the Body, but by vertue of the Soul animating it, and enabling it to concoct that Food. The Spirit of God is the ſoul of the Goſpel, and of all means, to make them efficacious: And with this power of the Spirit the weakeſt means can effect more than the greateſt means without it, which, indeed, can produce little or nothing. Peter's Sermon, Acts 2. was but ſhort, but improved by the Spirit to the converſion of three thouſand ſouls. Means can do nothing of themſelves to change the heart. When the Diſciples had two Ordinances repreſenting the Death of Chriſt; i. e. the Paſſeover and the Lords Supper; Pride, the great Enemy to Regeneration, put up its head above Water: they quarrelled who ſhould be greateſt, Luke 22. 24.

(3.) There is no Reaſon to confide in our own purpoſes and reſolutions, or any ſtrength of our own, if God alone be the Efficient cauſe of Regeneration. For it depends not upon our Reſolves without the Grace of God. Satan fears not our vows, he knows, without Grace, they are but as light Feathers, eaſily to be puft away by him: but ſparks, which without his breath, the flood of corruption in our Souls would extinguiſh as ſoon as they begin to appear. How can our reſolves without Grace renew us, when Peter's reſolve, with his inherent Grace, could not defend him? Who after his boaſting, when certainly he ſincerely meant what he ſaid, fell ſo ſhamefully, that he ſtood in need of a new converſion. How ſoon do we, after a tranſient awakning, fall to nodding in our ſpiritual ſleep? If Grace be not preſent with us to cure our Lethargy, our purpoſes are as empty Sails hoiſted by us; the breath of the Spirit only fills with a full gale for motion. We can never ſtedfaſtly look into heaven, and ſee the glory of God, unleſs we be full of the Holy Ghoſt, Act. 7. 55. Stephen's eye would have been twinkling, had not the Divine Spirit fixed it. How ſoon will a ſlight blaſt of a temptation ſhake a building, which hath no other foundation but the movable Sand of our own purpoſes, when as ſlight a temptation ſhook the Image of God out of Adam with all its brightneſs, who was built with Gods own hand, with a power alſo to keep himſelf? Adam could not be without purpoſes of obedience when he heard the Precept, yet with a ſlender temptation came tumbling to the duſt, and fell as low as Hell. A vain confidence in our own reſolutions, is ſo far from being a cauſe of this Spiritual Birth, that it is rather a hinderance, and part of the pride of Nature, that muſt be demoliſht, and to be reckoned as one of the eldeſt things among theſe old things, that are to paſs away. Truſt not therefore to your ſelves; look up daily for the Divine influence; lean not to your own underſtanding, tho in part enlightned; confide not in your own wills, tho in part inclined to the beſt things; purſue nothing in your own ſtrength.

(4.) 'Tis an injury to God to aſſociate any thing with him in this Work, which he challengeth as his own production. Would it not be a diſparagement to deny him the ſole efficiency in one of the nobleſt Works of his Wiſdom and Holineſs? That he who wrought the comely Fabrick of the firſt Creation by his own Power and Wiſdom, without a co-partner, or deputing any of the higheſt Angels to bring the World into form; ſhould not have the honour of a Work which bears the ſtamp of a higher Wiſdom and Power than the whole Creation! That he who contrived the Models of the little Creatures in the World, ſhould leave this to the fooliſh contrivance of any Creature! Why ſhould we imagine that the Divine Image, upon which the higheſt bleſſedneſs of the Creature depends, ſhould be of ſo little value in the Judgment of Gods Infinite Wiſdom, as to be turned over from the care of ſo Wiſe a Workman, to the capriciouſneſs of a light and uncertain Will, more blind and mutable than Fortune the Heathen Goddeſs?

'Tis more (we have heard) to frame so excellent a piece as the New Creature is, out of the rubbish of sin, than to frame the whole Celestial and Elementary World out of a rude mass of matter; since there is a greater Gulf to be shot between Corruption and Grace, than between nothing and the beautiful Structure of Heaven and Earth: and therefore we may less disparage him, in denying him the title of Creator of the World, than that of the Creator of a New Heart, since he hath Promised by his own Mouth to do it with his own Hand. The Apostle cannot be charged with ignorance, but knew what he said in that comprehensive Thanksgiving, for all spiritual blessings in Christ; if all, then one of the highest, the New Creation, is not intended to be left out of the Roll of Spiritual Blessings; associating none with God, as the Principal, but Christ as the Mediator, conveying this Grace by his Spirit, according to the orders of the Father; Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, Eph. 1. 3.

(5.) See from hence how excellent a thing it is to be born again, if God be the sole Efficient of it! Whatsoever God is the Author of in his ordinary Works, is excellent in its kind; they are all the effects of his Will; this is an effect of his gracious will: other Generations are by the will of man, wherein the will of God concurs with them; this is solely by the will of God, without any concurrence of the will of man in the first work, called therefore by way of excellency, The faith of the operation of God, Col. 2. 12. not a Gift conveyed by Angels, but his Spirit. A grain of Grace of Gods planting is more worth than Millions of Gold of mans getting: a more worthy Gift than all the Gold of Ophir, which God gives to men by their industry, who shall never see his face; but this by his own Spirit in order to Glory: 'tis a Royal Gift he reserves in his own hands, to bestow upon those that were his favourites in his Eternal purposes; it grows not in every mans ground, neither is it sown in every mans field. The Soul is more excellent than the Body, not only in respect of its Nature, but in respect of its immediate Author: God is called particularly, The father of Spirits, not of Bodies, tho he is so; but in the production of Bodies he acts by the hand of Nature; in the production of the Soul, by his own hand; in that work, he acts by the intervention of second causes; in this, without serving himself of any other Efficient cause but his own will: If the Soul, as being the only work of God, is therefore more excellent, then certainly a new-born Soul is more excellent than any thing in the world, in regard God is the Author of it in a more peculiar manner by the Operation of his choicest Affections.

(6.) If God be the Efficient of Regeneration, then there is a necessity of the influence of God in all the progress of Grace. 'Tis yet imperfect; the same hand that planted it, must also water and dress it. There is a tough sinew left in mans will, which makes him halt, after he hath the new name of Israel put upon him; a weakness of Faith, a coldness of Love, a faintness of Zeal. What he is the Creator of, is nursed by his Providence; what he is the New Creator of, is fostered by a succession of Grace: the Scripture therefore appropriates all to him; he is the God that Calls us, the God that Anoints us, the God that Carries us, the God that Establisheth us, the God that Keeps us, and the God that Perfects us. He is the Author of Grace in its first issue, its fruitful sproutings, its delicious ripenings; it depends upon him in creation, preservation, augmentation, as well as Natural things depend upon him in all their progressive motions, from one degree to another, as the Author of Nature. When Nature was most unspotted, Grace was necessary to preserve and fix it in that state. Adam needed the assistance of Grace with the embellishments of Nature. The same power that inspires us with life, inspires us with a perpetual continuation of it. If the tide that turns the stream of the River, desert it, and return to its own Channel, the River will return to its natural Current. Our hearts will decline, our life languish, unless fed by that supernatural efficacy which did first produce it. The Plants cannot grow meerly from their own internal form; nor Trees bring forth their pleasant fruits without the influence of Rain, and Sun, feeding and hatching their innate spirits, and drawing them out to make a show of themselves in Flowers and Fruits; and when they are brought forth, they stand in need of the same Rain to fill them, the same Sun to ripen them.

(7.) If

(7.) If God be the Efficient, &c. we ſee whether we are to have recourſe in all the exigencies of the New Creature; to whom, but to the Author of thoſe beginnings of Eternal Life? God is all, in all parts of this glorious work; The God of all grace, who hath called us into his eternal glory, make you perfect, ſtrengthen, ſtabliſh, ſettle you, &c. 1 Pet. 5. 10. There is need of preſerving, ſtrengthning, increaſing, quickning and perfecting grace.

Theſe you need, and theſe muſt be ſought, and will be had, from the ſame goodneſs and power by which you were new born.

[1.] Preſerving Grace.

(1.) God only can give it: There is a neceſſity of it: as God rears it, ſo he only can keep it from pining away. Plants will wither, if the Rain do not deſcend; the Flame will be extinguiſht, if Fewel be not added. There is as much a neceſſity of a conſtant influence to keep up this New Nature, as there is of the Sun to preſerve the Horizon from that darkneſs which would invade it upon the turning its face to other parts of the World. The perpetual duration of renewing grace, is not eſſential to grace; for then Adam and the Angels had ſtood by vertue of their grace, for nothing ever loſeth its eſſential property; but it is by an additional grace, diſtinct from the firſt grace, wherein our Regeneration doth conſiſt; as the preſervation of the Creatures in their Natural beings is by an act of God, diſtinct from his creative act. The firſt grace God gives now, is a bounty to his Creature, but it is further an obligation upon himſelf, not as it is grace, or as it is his own work, for Adam's grace which failed, was wrought by his fingers, inſpired by his breath; but as it is a new-Covenant-grace which alters the condition of it. God's finger writ the Law in the heart, and his breath can only blow the duſt off, that would fill the Engraved Letters.

(2.) God will preſerve it. Job would argue with God, and ask him, Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands? Job 10. 3. Is it agreeable to his goodneſs and wiſdom, to ſlight and neglect the work of his own heart; not a fruit of his common liberality to the Creation, but a choice fruit of his redeeming Love? His common Love, as he is the Author of Nature, preſerves the Old Creation; much more his ſpecial Love, as he is the Author of the New Nature, will preſerve the New Creation; his general goodneſs made the World, but his gracious goodneſs formed the Soul: the one is more ſplendid than the other, therefore the effect more durable. Mercy compaſſeth the godly about, Pſal. 32. 10. like Bulwarks that ſurround a City for its defence, againſt the aſſaults of ſpiritual Enemies. A higher Providence attends man than other Creatures, becauſe he is of a more noble conſtitution: upon the ſame account a higher Providence muſt attend the New Creature, as being far more noble than meer man: God embraceth all Creatures in his Arms with a common Love as Creatures; he lays the new begotten ones in his boſom by a ſpecial Love. His Power too is to be conſidered. He will not want a Power to preſerve that which he did not want Power to New Create: the Power being the ſame that raiſed Chriſt from the dead, which raiſed any from their Natural condition, will have the ſame iſſue; ſince it never ſuffered Chriſt to return to the Grave again, neither will it ſuffer any new-born Soul to return to a ſpiritual death. Every new Creature is the Fathers by purpoſe, and by actual traction; they were his before they were Chriſts: the Father draws them to Chriſt; and the Power of Chriſt will be as eminent to preſerve them, as the Power of the Father was to draw them. Why were the Creatures brought by that inſtinct God put into them, into Noah's Ark, but to be preſerved from the deſtroying deluge? Why did he take pains to write the Law a-new in the heart, if he would ſuffer it to be daſht out again? If he would not preſerve his own Work, why did he not let the Soul die wallowing in its old filthineſs, and forbear the expence of thoſe freſh Colours he hath new drawn his Image with? It ſeems to be a greater Power to take off all that load of ſin which lay upon you, than to preſerve you from having ſo great a burden again upon you. 'Tis not reaſonable to think, that God ſhould be at ſo much coſt, only to reſtore man to Adam's mutable condition, whereby to incur a greater condemnation.

[2.] Strengthning grace: this we need, as well as preſerving grace. 'Tis God that ſtrengthens us in the inward man: by that ſtrengthning Grace the New Creature can do all things; without it, nothing. Through him we are more than conquerors over principalities and powers, Rom. 8. 37, 38. Strength to mount up to Heaven as an Eagle, to run our race without wearineſs, to walk without fainting, to combat difficulties without ſinking fears, is only to be had by waiting upon the Lord, who is the Fountain whence all theſe flow, Iſa. 40. 31. and by his Grace confers a ſupernatural fortitude; Iſa. 40. 31. But they that wait upon the Lord, ſhall renew their ſtrength: they ſhall mount up with wings as Eagles: they ſhall run, and not be weary: they ſhall walk, and not faint. Look not therefore for ſtrength in your New Nature, look for it in God, in that Spirit which firſt renewed you; ſince that glorious Power is imparted to ſtrengthen you, which was at firſt employed to new create you. This was the matter of the Apoſtles prayer for the Coloſſians; and this ſhould be ours, Col. 1. 9, 11. Strengthned with all might according to his glorious power. There is much weakneſs in us, a medly of luſts, an Army of Enemies, but the way is open for us to that glorious power, to endue us with a new vigour, which firſt ſeized upon us with an inſuperable efficacy: our ſhattered and weakned ſins ſhall not be able to reſiſt that glorious power now, which they could not ſtand the ſhock of when they were in their full ſtrength. God will be a Sun and a ſhield, Pſal. 84. 11. a Sun to diſpel our darkneſs; a Shield to ſecure us from Darts: a Sun againſt the allurements of the World, defeating them by a charming light: a Shield againſt the affrightments of the World, over-powering them by an irreſiſtible force; the Sun that gave us life, the Shield that ſecures our ſtrength. The glorious power which we need in our progreſs, lies in the ſame Arm which wrought our deliverance, and from thence muſt be fetched: 'tis only by him that we have ſtrength to tread down the wicked one's temptations, and thoſe fiery Darts are made as aſhes under the ſoles of our feet, Mal. 4. 3.

[3.] We need increaſing Grace; and that is from God. The increaſe depends upon him, as well as the firſt planting: when we want it, he is the Fountain from whence we muſt draw it; ſo did the Diſciples, Luke 17. 5. Increaſe our faith; * or, add to us faith. Every new Spring, freſh Bud, ſpreading Bloſſom, is an addition by his influence. When we have it, we muſt acknowledg his ſole hand in it: So the Apoſtle did when he ſaw the growth of the Theſſalonians Faith, and the abounding of their Charity, 2 Theſſ. 1. 3. We are bound to thank *God always for you, becauſe that your faith grows exceedingly. He did it by Obligation; no ſuch tye had lain upon him, had God left them to increaſe it themſelves. The new fruits you bear, is from his new purging, as the firſt power to bear was from his planting, John 15. 2. If you would thrive, it muſt not be by your own, but by the increaſes of God: God gives the increaſe, both in the outward Adminiſtration, and inward Operation of the Goſpel, 1 Cor. 3. 7. Faith, in every aſſent, is conducted by that power which firſt ſettled it in the heart, and without it cannot commence any higher degree. As every ſpark of Spiritual Life is by his kindling, ſo every ſparkling of that ſpark is by his blowing. Look for it at Gods hands, beg of him to write that Law deeper which his Fingers firſt Engraved in your hearts. 'Tis Gods being a dew to Iſrael makes him grow up in beauty as the lilie and the olive-tree; in ſtrength, caſt out his roots as the cedars of Lebanon, Hoſ. 14. 5, 6, 7. If you would grow up as Calves of the Stall, you muſt lie under the healing wings of the Sun of Righteouſneſs, Mal. 4. 2. Unto you that fear my Name, ſhall the Sun of righteouſneſs ariſe with healing in his wings, &c. That Sun which by his beams conveyed into you a Spiritual Life, can only by the ſame heat, influence you to a taller growth. Every drop of the knowledg of his will till you come to be filled, every mite of Wiſdom and ſpiritual Underſtanding, is to be drawn from him only, Col. 1. 9. both the additions of knowledg, and the deeper impreſſions, and lively ſproutings of what we know.

[4.] Quickning Grace; this alſo we need. As our life, ſo the livelineſs and activity of Grace depends upon the Divine influence; a Divine motion is neceſſary to elevate our Souls to thoſe actions which are ſupernatural: our grace depends upon God in actu ſecundo, as well as actu primo: As God firſt puts a Nature into Creatures (in the exerciſe as well as the being) and then quickens them by his his Providential concurrence in thoſe acts ſutable to their Nature, which acts are therefore natural to thoſe Creatures: So by a gracious concurrence he doth quicken the New Nature in the Soul to the exerting of gracious Operations, according to that Nature he hath endued it with. As he tunes the ſtrings by his skill to fit them for a Divine harmony; ſo he enlivens them by his touch to make what Muſick he pleaſes; every Heavenly prayer, every gracious groan, every ſtart of Spiritual Affection, is from the Spirit tuning, quickning, aſſiſting againſt infirmities and deadneſs. There muſt be a continued drawing, to make a continued running. Draw us, and we will run after thee, Cant. 1. 4. It was the Church, the gracious Church, the Spouſe and Dove of Chriſt, yet ſenſible of her own inability to quicken her pace to new Communion with Chriſt, without freſh Communications firſt from him. There is a byas in the Soul to direct it in a right motion; there muſt be a hand without, to put it upon that motion; Chriſt muſt put his hand in at the hole of the Door, before a lazy Soul, tho gracious, will ſtir at his call, Cant. 5. 3. or as the Child which hath a principle of motion, muſt be aſſiſted and quickned by the Nurſe, before it can move a ſtep. Grace is more prevalent to keep us from ſin, than excite us to holineſs; yet neither can be done by it without new quicknings; our motion is in him, and by him, as well as our life, ſpiritually as well as naturally, Acts 17. 28. In him we live, move and have our being: the old ſtock muſt have continual ſupply: without Chriſt we can do nothing, John 15. 5. without him we cannot have grace in the Plant, nor grace in the fruit. As the Soul excites the ſpirits in the eye to an act of viſion; if they be not quickned by their Governour, tho things be before our eyes, they ſee nothing: ſo the Spirit of God excites, as it were, the Spirits of grace, to their particular acts, Faith to apprehend, and Love to work: the Goodneſs that made the Promiſe, guides the hand of the Soul to faſten upon it, Pſal. 119. 49. Remember the word unto thy ſervant, upon which thou haſt cauſed me to hope. As God makes the Promiſes, ſo he makes the meeting between the Soul and the Promiſe; every motion proceeds from Gods touch upon the heart enlarging it; therefore our dependance muſt be upon Gods Grace, Pſal. 119. 32. I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou ſhalt enlarge my heart: I will run, not by my own ſtrength, but by the hand of God enlarging and enlivening my heart. Indeed, if God did not give to act as well as implant the habit, he would give no more to us in the New Covenant, than he gave to Adam in the Old, who had a power to do, but not the act of doing: his power was from God, but the act of obedience depended upon himſelf, and for want of actual obedience he fell. We ſee whence we muſt derive our quicknings; we want them, becauſe we expect them from the New Nature in us, not from the Author of that nature, and the concurrence of his grace with it; and depending upon habitual, more than actual grace, is the cauſe of our having many a ſlip. We are as dead lumps, notwithſtanding all the grace we have, if God do not cauſe a free life to ſpring up in us by ſucceſſive breathings.

[5.] Perfecting grace is only from God. He is the finiſher of what he is the Author of, Heb 12.2. and in our ſpiritual warfare ſupplies us with new recruits, till the combat end in victory, and the victory in triumph. He will come as the former and the latter rain, Hoſ. 6. 3. As the former Rain to open the Womb of the Earth, and the latter Rain to ripen the fruits of the Earth: As he hath laid the foundation of Mount Zion, ſo he will perform the whole work in it: he fulfils the work of faith with the ſame power wherewith he begins it, 2 Theſſ. 1. 11. The power which cauſed the Reſurrection of Chriſt, cauſed his Aſcenſion: he had his Forty days upon the Earth, after his Reſurrection, before he was taken up to Glory. There is a continuance of a believer in the World after his Reſurrection from a Spiritual Death: But the ſame power which cauſed his Spiritual Reſurrection, will as ſurely cauſe his Heavenly Aſcenſion. That Arm that brought him out of Egypt, will conduct him to the limits of Canaan, the flouriſhing paſtures of the promiſed Land. Grace is the firſt Gift; Glory is the latter; Glory follows upon the heels of Grace; he will give grace and glory, Pſal. 84. 11. Grace to fit for Glory, and Glory to reward his own Grace; all Grace till it ends in Glory. God muſt be ſought and depended on for this: we cannot Will our perfection without without grace, as we cannot will our Regeneration without grace: God gives the will, the progreſſive as well as the initial will. Then ſeek only to God, depend upon him only, for the warmth of his goodneſs, to bring thoſe Chickens to perfection which he hath gathered under his wing; his Affections are not tired, 'tis a pure diſintereſted love mingled with no defects: his Wiſdom and Power is no leſs able to perfect, than his love is to incite him to it.

USE 2. The ſecond Uſe is of Comfort.

Is God the Author of Regeneration? He that is the God of all Grace is the God of all Comfort too: Where he is the one, he will be the other. As he creates the Soul to good works, ſo he creates it to Heavenly conſolations: when God acts as a God of Juſtice toward ſinners, he appears as a terrible God in his puniſhments: when he acts towards Saints as a God of Grace, he appears as a comforting God; he fills the one with all terrors, prepares the other for all comforts; he calls you by a New Creation into his Eternal Glory, and ſends therefore ſome ſparkles of Glory into the Soul here. Are you born of God? You approach in excellency as near to Chriſt as a Creatures capacity will admit. Chriſt was his natural begotten Son; believers his Spiritually Regenerated Children. Chriſt is the firſt born, but among many brethren, Rom. 8. 29. that Chriſt that ſanctifieth, and we that are ſanctified, are all of one, Heb. 2. 11. of one Nature, ſay ſome; of one Father, ſay others; therefore he is not aſhamed to call them brethren; one Nature doth not ſo much make us Brethren, as one Father. Chriſt was not Regenerated, but Generated; he ſtood not in need of the other, becauſe the firſt Generation failed not; neither could he, being God: he is the exact Image of his Fathers Perſon, and ſo particularly of all his Attributes, becauſe he partakes of his eſſence: believers are the living Images of Gods holineſs, not partaking of all his Attributes, but of that.

Particularly,

(1.) God will rejoyce in his own Work. If he rejoyced in the firſt planting of his Image at the Creation, he will no leſs rejoyce in it at the reſtauration; and with more gladneſs embrace the Son that is returned from death to life, by returning from his debauched courſe, than that Son that remained with him all the while. Why doth he renew the face of the Earth by the miſſion of his Spirit, but that he may rejoyce in his Works? Thou ſendeſt forth thy ſpirit, they are created: and thou reneweſt the face of the earth. The glory of the Lord ſhall endure for ever: the Lord ſhall rejoyce in his works, Pſal. 104. 30, 31. If God ſhall in time rejoyce in the Earth, wherein he had little joy after the Creation of it, and ſoon repented of his Work; he will rejoyce in the nobleſt Work, in the frame of his Image, which, next to Chriſt, makes all other Works of the lower Creation pleaſant to him. He creates Jeruſalem a rejoycing, and her people a joy, and he will rejoyce in the New Creation of his People, in the People he hath New Created, Iſa. 65. 18, 19.

(2.) He will deſtroy all Enemies to his own Work. How will his Love pierce into every part, and employ his Power in deſtroying the Enemies of his Work! whip buyers and ſellers out of his Spiritual Temple, caſt out all their remaining rubbiſh; let not his Houſe be always a Den of Thieves, that ſhall rob God of his Glory, and his Temple of its Beauty. That God that can raiſe men, 5000 years ago dead, as eaſily as one dead the laſt minute, can remove all the bands of corruption, tho never ſo ſtrong: If he hath raiſed you from death, he will lift you up from all the remainders of death; the Grave-clothes which yet remain about you, ſhall be in time united, as well as the Soul unlooſed from the principal bands of death. Tho there be in you a ſpirit that luſteth to envy, as well as a ſpirit that luſts to love, yet God gives more grace, James 4. 5, 6. luſts will down, corruptions fall in time before his grace: darkneſs muſt hide its hated head, when that word breaks louder from his Lips, Let there be light. The Promiſes of a thorough Sanctification belong to you, as well as the Promiſes of a perfect Remiſſion: If God be the Teacher, no matter what the Scholar is: if God be the Workman, no matter what the Matter is: if God be the Guardian, no matter what the Enemies are; nothing is too rugged for his Skill, or too hard for his Power.

(3.) He will order all things for the good of his own Work. They ſhall not labour in vain: for they are the ſeed of the bleſſed of the Lord, Iſa. 65. 23. He did not want grace to reſtore them, he will not want comforts to ſupport them. Their very afflictions ſhall be ordered to preſerve the work of his own heart in them; and while he prunes and cuts, he will purge away the luxuriant corruptions, that his Vine may be more beautiful and delicious: And if he doth chaſten you ſharply, it is that you may be nearer partakers of his holineſs, Heb. 12. 10.

USE 3. The third Uſe is of Exhortation.

(1.) Walk Humbly. Swell not big, as if your own power had procured it; let not Pride ſpread its Sails in your Souls. Conſider, you are Creatures ſtill, tho New Creatures: As God put into you whatſoever you have of natural exiſtence, ſo he hath put into you whatſoever you have of ſpiritual: you are duſt ſtill by your natural Creation, tho new formed by the Spirit. There is nothing of grace, no act of grace, but you receive mediately or immediately from God. You opened not your own eyes, nor thruſt back the Lock of your own hearts, nor can call one ſpark of that ſpiritual life you have, your own creature: it moved not at your beck, obeyed not your orders; 'tis when God ſaith, Go, that it goes, and do this and that, ſettle upon this or that Soul, and it doth it: How humble ſhould you be! ſince grace doth nothing in any, but by Gods order, not your own. God works in us, we add nothing to God. The melted Wax receives the ſtamp from the Seal, but the Wax adds nothing to the Seal. What haſt thou that thou haſt not received? If thou didſt receive it, why doſt thou boaſt as if thou hadſt not received it? 1 Cor. 4. 7. Grace is Gods communication to you, not yours to your ſelves. What is received, is not your own work, but anothers gift; were it deſert, we had reaſon to boaſt; but being a gift, we have no reaſon to grow big. Lie therefore before him in your own nothingneſs. Renewing grace firſt lighted upon you when you were humble; and grace in its increaſe flouriſhes when the Soul is in the ſame poſture.

(2.) Aſcribe all that you are, as renewed Creatures, to God. Aſcribe it wholly to him; let ſelf rub off every filing of this Gold from its own fingers. Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but unto thy Name be the praiſe, Pſal. 115. 1. The repetition removes the glory far from themſelves. If praiſe be comely for an upright perſon, it is moſt comely in the greateſt cauſe that can happen to him, Pſal. 33. 1. Account your ſelves therefore nothing, and God and Grace all; and let no ſhoutings be heard in your Souls, while God is rearing up the Divine Temple, but thoſe of grace, grace, Zech. 4. 7. both in the foundation, and ſuperſtructure, till he comes to the top-ſtone. Your breathing after God, is but the effect of his breathing after you: the Moon hath no light of her ſelf, but what ſhe receives from the Sun; nor any Creature a ſpark of grace, but what is derived from the Father of Lights. Gods purity is as the Sun; your grace as a beam from that Sun, not primitive in your Nature, but derivative from God. Were it not from grace, Saul had never been Paul, nor Peter a penitent, nor Mary a convert, nor Zacheus a Chriſtian, nor hadſt thou ever been brought to the ſweetneſs of a ſpiritual life, or advanced to the ſtate and comforts of another World. Did you will to run, till mercy moved your wills, and ſpirited the feet of your Souls? Your will, your race was nothing; Gods grace was all, Rom. 9. 16. Was it not his word of Command, Let there be life? Was it not his invincible Power battered down the ſtrong holds of ſin? O ſeriouſly think O Chriſtian, that dry and deſert heart of thine could never have been mollified and watered by rocky Nature, nor virtue ever Bud and Bloſſom in that barren Soil, unleſs the Soil were mended, as well as the Plant fixed, by ſome powerful hand: Bleſs God therefore, ſince, had it not been for him, you had never been humbled, never been renewed, never reached ſo high as a holy deſire, or a penitential tear, but lain till this day, and for ever, bemired in fallen nature.

That you may know what reaſon you have to bleſs God with the higheſt praiſes, conſider,

(1.) What your obligation is, how great! What good would your creation have done you since your fall, without a new creation by the same hand? It must have render'd you miserable without this, and could never have render'd you happy but by the intervention of this. Without this you might have been his sons and daughters by creation, and Devils by corruption. The Heathens were Gods off-spring, as they were rational creatures, Act. 17.28. and the Devils children as they were corrupt creatures. You might have had the image of God in a glimmering reason, without his image in a divine holiness. Was it not a greater obligation to restore that with kinder circumstances which you had wilfully thrown away, when it was in no wise due to you, than it was at first to bestow it? There was something like debt at first; supposing God would create a rational creature, integrity and innocency was naturally due to it, in regard of the Holiness and Wisdom of God, unless he would have been the Author of the creatures sinfulness; but since that voluntary defection, the restoration was in no sort due; therefore the obligation greater. If God had created a thousand Worlds, and given you the Lordship of them for some millions of years, had this been such a kindness as to afford you a New Nature, whereby you will be eternally happy in a likeness to God, and enjoyment of him? As the work of Redemption, so this of Regeneration darkens the glory of the work of Creation; since more of Grace, Wisdom, Power, Holiness, are the springs of it, the obligation must be far greater; the difference is as great as between Heaven and Earth. Will you not bless God for making you creatures? for recovery from a fit of sickness? Is the obligation less in delivering you from a spiritual death? Is not the reason of blessing God greater for the Second Creation, than the First, since it is the same skill adorns you with his image in the New Creation, which beautified man with that image at the first?

(2.) Was there not as much unfitness in you, as in the worst of men by Nature? Not one good disposition grew upon Nature, but all was the work of preventing grace: Could then the iron gates of your hearts flye open of themselves? Or could any else but a God break them open? Was not your Nature carried as violently to sin, as any; perhaps not into such brutish sins as others, yet more refined and devilish? If you did not launch out into the grossest sins, you owe your preservation to restraining grace. That Socrates was better and wiser than another, was from God in the acknowledgment of a Heathen *, who saith he was chosen to Virtue by the Divine suffrage: Were your strings better? sure they were of Gods tuning. Man was not more unfit for a natural being before God created him, than the best man in the world was for a spiritual being, till God wrought him with his own finger? Was not the worst in the world naturally as fit for it, as your selves? Did any better thing dwell in your flesh, than in theirs, to give grace entertainment? Did not grace at first make its way, conquering, and to conquer, and not one blow struck by you to facilitate the Victory? Nay, were you not so far from having a grain of grace by Nature, that there was nothing but opposition and rebellion against the Author of it? Did you not want every thing to make you lovely in Gods eye? Nay, did you not hate him, while he had a love of benevolence towards you? And have you not reason to bless him then, that he would not disdain to look upon you, such an impure and rebellious creature? Perhaps your case was the same with hers, Hos. 2. 5. who said, I will go after my lovers; she decreed to follow her idols, and was resolved not to be reclaimed; but God resolved otherwise, v. 6, 7. who would not leave her, till he had made her change her base and unworthy resolution, for better; She shall say, I will return, &c. And was it not a happy resolution in the Divine breast, not to suffer you to run mad and furiously to Hell? What an irrecoverable condition had you been in, if God had not spake a powerful word, Hitherto thou art gone, but no further shalt thou go? Were you not once in your blood, and pitied by no eye, when God said, Live? And can you not wonder at the mercy of his lips, and raise your Notes above an ordinary strain? Read over the Records of the first work upon thy heart, and see if any thing were written there with thy own finger: The very sense of thy own wretchedness, was Gods writing on thy heart; thou wast weighed in the balances, and found wanting, lighter than vanity, nothing of thy own to concur with God, but folly and misery.

* Κατὰ τὴν Θεοῦ χειροτονίαν.

(3.) If grace found thee unfit and rebellious, there could then be nothing of the leaſt deſert: And this ſhould make you caſt a wondering eye at the greatneſs of Gods kindneſs. Mans voluntary defection, without any violence offered to him, had render'd him unworthy of any recovery: you did no more deſerve it, than the worſt Devil, who ſhall never have one line of it drawn upon him. Not one previous diſpoſition, not one ſigh or groan for it, could be diſcerned; much leſs the draught it ſelf: Your true earnings were nothing but that death you lay under. The unlooſing any band of it, or knocking off any fetter, was meerly free grace. Is there not then reaſon to bleſs the Lord, when an undeſerved Power hath been put forth to new create you, when a deſerved Power might have buried you for ever under your own ruines? Suppoſe you had been the moſt exact Moraliſts in the world, the ſupernatural grace of the new birth could not be deſerved by you, becauſe nothing can be merited but by an act as excellent as the Reward. No man can merit by any act a thing of a greater value than the act it ſelf; but this grace is of another order, and far ſuperior to any Moral natural work. Indeed upon covenant, if a man doth ſuch a thing, he ſhall have ſuch a reward; the thing promiſed may be challenged upon the performing the condition, but cannot be ſaid to be merited, becauſe the act was inferior to the Reward in the true value of it; but this grace could neither be merited nor challenged at Gods hand upon a condition, ſince he had made no promiſe in this kind to give you a right to ſuch a demand. 'Tis one thing to be capable of it, another thing to have a juſt right. A ſinner in the ſtate of ſin is capable of being changed, but not capable of having a right to that change. Well then, you could never deſerve ſuch a mercy; and will you not prize it, and bleſs God for it?

(4.) Since you did not deſerve it, no nor the propoſals of it, conſider what a condition you had been in, had God left you to your ſelves, or put your wills only into an indifference. Had it been by a meer ſuaſion, or a naked propoſition of the Truth, I ſuppoſe you are ſo ſenſible of the mutability of your Wills, that you might well believe you ſhould ſcarce have complied with God. Your ſecurity at beſt had been but as good as Adam's, who had his poſſe, but not his velle. What furious paſſions and Devils in your ſouls were ſet againſt him? and had you been left to your own choice, you would not have ſtirred one foot to follow his Chariot. If you did purifie your ſouls in obeying the truth, it was through the Spirit, 1 Pet. 1. 22. and all the faith you have, was from the ſame Fountain, Acts 18. 27. Which believed through grace. Put it to your ſelves; Do you think your hearts were not ſo ſtout, that nothing but divine grace could mollifie them? Do you think there would have been any heat or warmth in you, unleſs God had kindled the flame? Can you imagine your frozen hearts would have melted, but by a Divine breath? It was happy for you that God would put your Wills beyond an indifference, and deal with you by the ſame power as he dealt with Chriſt, not leaving him or you in a doubtful ſtate between life and death. How happy was it for you that God would be Conqueror, and ſurmount your reſiſtance; tame your force, ſcatter your counſels, level your Mountain, and bring your fierceneſs under the yoke? That he would not wait your choice and leiſure, but make the event certain? That he had mercy on you, becauſe he would have mercy? That he would turn the ſtream of your hearts by the overmaſtering Tide of his Grace, and overpower the fleſh in the chief parts of your ſouls, and ſecure the rational powers of Mind and Will for himſelf? How glad may you be of the loſs of that indifference, that ſecures your happy eſtate for ever? Who that is in favour with a Prince, would not willingly have his Will fixed to pleaſe him, and dread nothing more than ſuch an indifference whereby he might hate his Prince, and loſe his favour?

(5.) Is there not reaſon you ſhould bleſs God, when he hath dealt thus graciouſly with you, and not with many others in the world? Why any of you ſhould be raiſed up to a ſpiritual life, when you ſee many others near you ſtretched out in a ſpiritual death: Why one upon the ſame bench, and not another; why one ſhould be gathered with his arm, and another left to the jaws of the devouring Lion; why you ſhould have any choice fruit grow in any of your hearts, when thorns and briers grow in every Hedg: That God ſhould have afforded you means of Regeneration, and not to moſt others in the World, is a ground of bleſſing and praiſe, much more that he ſhould afford you the grace of Regeneration, and not to many others under the ſame means: He hath not dealt ſo with every Nation in giving them the means, Pſal. 147. 19. he hath not dealt ſo with every perſon in giving them the grace. That wind that blows where it liſteth, hath left other dry bones to remain dry ſtill; paſt by others more civil, and of ſweeter converſations. Drawn his image in one, and left others to tumble down to Hell in the likeneſs of Adam, wherein they were born. Overlookt one that was not far from the Kingdom of Heaven, and laid hold on another that was many leagues further from Chriſt. The Spirit of God only makes this diſtinction; he will pour out his grace in Galatia and Macedonia, and not ſuffer it to be known in Bythinia, Acts 16.6,7,8. And they eſſayed to go into Bythinia, but the Spirit ſuffered them not. Cauſe it to rain in one City, on one perſon, and not on another; call one out of the grave, and leave others under the bands of death, and in the dregs of human nature. You ſee your calling, and you may ſee how diſtinguiſhing it is, not many wiſe after the fleſh, not many mighty, 1 Cor. 1. 26. Can you ſee this, and not bleſs the Caller, the Renewer? A leſs favour wrought ſo much upon David's heart, that he would bleſs God in ſpight of mocks and ſcoffs, 2 Sam. 6. 21. Oh rich diſcriminating grace! Where any are peculiar Monuments of Grace, they ſhould have peculiar notes of praiſe. What reaſon can others have to bleſs God, if ſuch ſhould have no hearts to bleſs him for ſo great a Mercy? All are under Gods Will of Precept; all are under his Will of Promiſe, if they perform that Precept: but all are not under his Will of Purpoſe, to give them ſtrength to perform that Precept.

(6.) 'Tis to be conſidered too, With what pains and patience God wrought this work in your hearts. You may beſt know what ado God had with your hearts before they were thus formed according to his will. Were they not as Clay to the Potter, which needed much tempering before they were fit for uſe? Did God find that pliableneſs in you, that the Devil found? Had he a cordial welcome at the firſt proffer? Do you not remember reſiſtance enough to make you for ever aſham'd that ever you ſhould put the bleſſed God to that toil? and yet you know not the thouſandth part of that reſiſtance God knew was lodged in your Nature. Do you not remember how he met you at every turn, hedged up your perverſe way with thorns, before he could be admitted to ſpeak a word to your heart? How he anſwered one objection after another, whereby you would have ſtifled his Work? Can you remember this, and not admire the Mercy that took ſuch pains with ſo unprofitable a heart? 'Tis called a Reſurrection, but it is more; before the reſurrection of the body, one part of man lives, and waits for re-union, tho the body be crumbled into very duſt; but there's no life in you naturally; ſo little in you to take part with God, that even that which is the glory of man, his Mind, and Reaſon, and Wiſdom, were in arms againſt this Work, as well as the ſenſitive and brutiſh part; for the carnal mind was enmity againſt God, Rom. 8. 7. What was your language to God at firſt, but like that of the Helliſh Spirit in the man in Luke 4. 34. What have we to do with thee? Yet he dealt with you as the Sun with the earth, which ſcatters the miſts it ſends out to choak its light, and ſpreads its warm wings over the face of the World. So doth God, tho men offend him with the ſteams of their ſins, and uncivilly command him to depart from them, yet he leaves them not till he hath made them willing that he ſhould do them good.

(7.) The work it ſelf requires admiration and bleſſing in regard of the excellency of it. 'Tis more admirable than all the Miracles of Nature; the whole world can no more compare with it, than a Dunghil can equal the worth of a Rock of Diamonds; all bleſſings which make you happy ſpiritually and eternally, are wrapped up in it. What can God give greater than his own Nature? What are you capable of more than what he hath done and will do upon that foundation? If God had only given thee knowledg, thou mighteſt have been a Devil for all that; but the New Nature makes you equal with Angels. What Man or Angel could you be born of with ſo great advantage, as to be born of God? There is no higher being to be born of. What can he do more, than thus to beget you? You are new born according to that Image after which his only Son was eternally begotten; conceived by that Spirit whereby Chriſt was conceived in the Womb of the bleſſed Virgin; raiſed by the ſame Almighty hand whereby the great Pattern of the New birth was raiſed from the dead: 'Tis the higheſt elevation of humane nature, to be united to the Son of God, and to be made like to that glorious image. Greater gifts cannot be, than theſe two, Chriſt to deſcend to partake of human nature, and the creature elevated to partake of the Divine. If you will not loudly bleſs him for this, what can God do that ſhall deſerve your praiſe, ſince a greater he cannot confer, more full of the ſpirits of his favour towards you?

(8.) May there not be ſome circumſtances in your particular New birth, that may raiſe your hearts to bleſſing and praiſe? Perhaps thou wert born in a day, as his promiſe is of a Nation, Iſa. 66.7,8. and without thoſe racking pains which attend the New birth of many; he did not take thee by the throat, nor arreſt thee with legal terrors; but breathed upon thee with a gentle wind; conceived and formed thee in a little ſpace of time, that thou wert within the proſpect of heaven, before thou thought'ſt thy ſelf out of the ſuburbs of hell; and brought thee forth a Man-child, before thou didſt imagine thy ſelf to be delivered. Was it not mercy to renew thee without worrying thee? to melt thee by a gentle fire of love, not break thee piece-meal by the Hammer of Wrath? that thou ſhouldſt ſcarce diſcern the Lance from the Balſome, and the Wound from the Plaiſter? Perhaps he arreſted thee in a full courſe of ſin, in ſome deſperate career, when ſome plot was laid for a high piece of wickedneſs. It had been an act of his Power, hadſt thou been brought up in ſome Religious Family, tutor'd in the ways of Religion by a choicer education; but perhaps God took thee from the very ſteams of Hell, when thou hadſt not one thought of him, and he might have let thee alone, as well as he did others of thy companions. It had been admirable Power to turn clear Water into Wine; but more, to turn ſtinking and putrified Water into a generous Wine. Do not the viſible characters of Mercy and Power in ſuch a caſe call for more praiſe at thy hands? Can any other cauſe have a pretence to put in for a ſhare in thy acknowledgments?

(9.) You are not without many examples to move you to this acknowledgment. Our Saviour himſelf could not regard the Centurion's Faith without aſtoniſhment. He wondred at that in his Humanity, which he wrought himſelf by his Divinity, Mat. 8. 10. And when Peter profeſſeth his Faith in him by acknowledging him to be the Son of God, Chriſt preſently owns his Father as the Author of it, Mat. 16. 17. Fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. Angels ſang both at the firſt and ſecond Creation, and ſhouted for joy when the corner-ſtone thereof was laid, Job 38. 6, 7. When they ſaw its beautiful order, they then ſhewed themſelves to be the ſons of God indeed, in glorifying their Father for his incomparable Works. The Second Creation being more glorious than the Firſt, is not celebrated by them with fainter ſhoutings; if God hath then Hallelujahs for you, 'tis fit he ſhould have Hallelujahs from you. If Angels ſpeak loud, it is not fit you ſhould ſpeak low; 'tis their concern, as they are Gods friends and ſervants; your concern as you are his workmanſhip, of his own carving. The Saints in all Ages of the Church have led the way in this acknowledgment. The Elders, made Kings and Prieſts on earth, in a conqueſt of Satan and their own hearts, crown'd with a bleſſed grace, caſt down their crowns at the feet of God, Rev. 9. 11. For thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are and were created; both the preſent New Creation, and the Old. Thou haſt looſed my bonds, Pſal. 116. 16. what follows? I will offer to thee the ſacrifice of thanksgiving. And Gods renewing Davids youth like the Eagles, his changing him into a New man, ſaith Jerome, is one argument of David's praiſe, Pſal. 103. 5. Add to this, * Heathens have acknowledged it to be the work of God; One examining the reaſon why Homer calls Vertuous men Διΐους, anſwers, Becauſe Goodneſs was not a work of Art, but ἔργον Διός. If Divining and Myſtical knowledg be θεῷ τινὶ ἐπιπνοίᾳ, by divine inſpiration, ſhall we ſay of Virtue it is ἔργον τέχνης ὑφαντῆς, the work of mans Art? Where do you find any like Nebuchadnezzar, gazing upon the divine formation in his own heart, and proudly crying out, Is not this great Babylon which I have built? Doth ſuch language drop from a David's mouth? No; but, thou haſt quickned me: Or from Paul? No, by grace I am what I am. Every inch, every ſpark, every joint of the New man is from Grace.

* Max. Tyr. Diſſert. 22. p. 211. 216.
* Plato ſaith, Men are θεοῦ μοῖρα ἀγαθοί.

(10.) If

(10) If you do not acknowledg it to God, and bleſs him for it, you may juſtly ſuſpect you are not born of him. 'Tis the nature of true grace to reflect back upon God, as it is of a Sun-beam ſhining upon a wall to reflect back upon the Sun. Bleſſing God for it, is a character of a renewed man; it is an evidence of the ruine of the contradiction of nature againſt God, when man can ſtrip himſelf of all, and own God the prime fountain of what he is and hath. If a man boaſt of his being the cauſe of a New Birth in himſelf by any work of his own, 'tis a ſhrewd ſign he is not renewed; becauſe by ſuch boaſting he croſſes the main end of the Goſpel, which is to ſtain the pride of man, and debaſe him to the duſt from all grounds of glorying in himſelf. How jealous was the Apoſtle in this caſe, and therefore backs his aſſertion again and again, that he might beat mans hands off from fingering any thing of Gods Glory, Eph. 2. 5. by grace you are ſaved; again, Verſe 8, 9. and that not of your ſelves: it is the gift of God: once again, Not of works: and the reaſon why he is thus earneſt, was perpetually to diſcountenance ſelf-confidence, leſt any man ſhould boaſt: the deſign of God in all Goſpel diſpenſations, is to pull away the ſtool whereon the fleſh ſits to glory; 1 Cor. 1. 29, 31. that no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence. It would ſeem ſtrange that the New Birth, a main Goſpel-work, ſhould be wrought without promoting a Goſpel-end; to have a New Birth, and ſuch a flouriſhing pride, oppoſite to the end of it, is a contradiction. If the Doctrine of Faith doth exclude boaſting, as Rom. 3. 27. boaſting is excluded by the law of faith: the grace of Faith alſo will exclude it: where the New Birth is wrought, Pride, the great Enemy to it, will ſurely be captivated. We are then ſomething in and by God, when we are moſt nothing in our ſelves.

Well then: be much in the work of praiſing God, who ſhined into thy heart when it was dark, and ſealed inſtruction to thee; who took away the ſtony heart, and introduced one of fleſh in the room: who manifeſted a day of power in the night of your weakneſs; can you, dare you to aſcribe it to your ſelves? Let God then have the praiſe; 'tis our fault, we are more in complaints of what we want, than acknowledgments of what we have: O rob not God of his Deity, pretend not your ſelves partners with him in the leaſt of the ſtock. The more you return the glory of his grace, the more will he return the comfort of it to you: the more you give him that glory he is ſo jealous of, the more he will give you that grace he is ſo liberal of.

(3.) A third duty, for thoſe that are renewed; acknowledg God in all the changes you ſee in others. Miracles muſt be regarded. 'Tis greater for the Apoſtles to act with new hearts, than to ſpeak with new Tongues; greater than to ſtop the Sun in its courſe, which would ſet all the World upon an aſtoniſhed gaze. Shall any ſuch Miraculous Work be done in our view, and we ſtand only as ſtupid ſpectators, and not render to God that glory which is due to him for his choiceſt work? As the ſight and conſideration of the material Creation kept up the notion of the Being of God as Creator: ſo the conſideration of his works upon the Souls of men will quicken thy ſentiments of God as a New Creator. One is an argument to prove the power of his eſſence; the other an argument of the power of his grace. Noah doth not bleſs Sem firſt, for that act of filial duty ſhowed to his Father, but bleſſes God as the Author of that modeſty Sem had ſhown, in covering his Fathers nakedneſs, Gen. 9. 26. Bleſſed be the God of Sem. When a great number were turned to Chriſt, Barnabas preſently caſt up his eye to the grace of God, he ſaw the grace of God, Act. 11. 21, 23. Let every Lazarus you ſee raiſed from the Grave, raiſe up your Faith to a higher elevation, and dreſs it in a Jubilee attire. When you ſee a new Temple reared to God, own it as the Lords doing, and let it be marvellous in your eyes.

(4.) Be content with every condition your New Creator ſhall caſt you into. Diſcontent at any of Gods diſpenſations doth ill become one whom God hath new begotten to a glorious Inheritance. What can he do more than he hath done, and what he will do upon that foundation? All that he acts is to further that which he hath ſo powerfully and mercifully begun. What Son would repine at the loſing a Rattle, as long as he is born to a never-fading Inheritance? If grace hath put forth a power to New Create you, it will not uſe that power otherwiſe than for your good. It may contradict your Carnal deſires, not your Spiritual intereſt: well may any man be content with the Jewel that is left, tho the casket be loſt. All things are too light, if put into the ballance with the New Birth; the deareſt Husband or Wife, the ſweeteſt Children or Friends, the moſt flouriſhing Inheritance; ſtudy therefore contentment in the worſt condition upon this ground: you know not how ſoon you may be put to practiſe all your skill; Do you not ſee the Heavens gathering blackneſs over your heads? A New Birth, that allies us to God as his Children, will be of more force to ſettle us, than calamities can be to diſcompoſe us; for never was Child ſo dear to an Earthly, as a new created Soul is to its Heavenly Father.

(5.) Walk worthy of the Author of it. A verbal acknowledgment will ſignify little without a real imitation of the vertues of him that hath called you out of darkneſs into his marvellous light, 1 Pet. 2. 9. A holineſs is to be expreſt by you, like the holineſs of that God who hath renewed you. Let no devilliſh or brutiſh carriage be yoaked with a divine birth; indeed it cannot; the beſpotting corruptions of the World will not agree with the Regeneration of the Soul; the ſtains of the fleſh are inconſiſtent with the purity of the New Nature. Belial and Chriſt, God and Satan, are not joint begetters: Satan's impure breathings upon you ſhould not be admitted to mix with the breath of God. A New Nature by grace muſt not imitate a bruriſh Nature by ſin. A Soul born of God muſt not be faſhioned according to the World: If you differ from the World in your nature by grace, differ from the World alſo in your carriage by holineſs. 'Tis uncomely for one born of God to be taken with the fooliſh flaunting pride of the World more than the pattern God hath ſet him; that is to imitate Beaſts, not a Heavenly Father. The World is little, nothing, vanity in the eye of God, ſo ſhould it be in the eye of a divinely begotten Soul. Uſe the World as travellers an Inn, to lodg, not to dwell in, to accommodate you in your journey to that Father of whom you were born. Let a Heaven-born Nature be attended with Heavenly flights, longing for that happy ſtate wherein nothing but the divine nature ſhall be ſeen in you, as nothing but fire is ſeen in melted Gold.

(6.) Mourn for your imperfections. Give God his due, and grieve for your defect in paying him his own: The Soul in creation comes pure out of Gods hand; but it is poyſoned by the fleſh, and the impurity in the ſenſitive part of man. Tho your grace be from God, yet your imperfections are from your ſelves. The Waters that run through Sulphur and Allum Mines, flow from the Sea; but the ill taſte and ſcent are communicated by the matter it mixes with in its paſſage. God is the Author of your Faith, but not of the weakneſs of your Faith; the Author of your Love, but not of the coldneſs of your Love; the Author of your Zeal, but not of the faintneſs of your Zeal. Chide your hearts therefore for your weakneſs, as Chriſt did his Diſciples for their ſlowneſs in Faith. Rejoyce with trembling, Pſal. 2. 11. rejoyce in what you have, and mourn for what you want, and come ſhort in. Reaſon you have, ſince there is too much of the power of nature remaining with our beſt grace; ſo that it may be ſaid of it, as Lot of Zoar, What grace hath encloſed, is but a little one.

2. Exhort. To thoſe that are not born of God. You ſee at whoſe hands you are to ſeek it. God was the firſt contriver of the Goſpel, the firſt preacher of the Goſpel, the ſole Artiſt in any Goſpel-Operation: no man can come, except the father draw him: not ſome men, but no man; every man muſt therefore ſeek to this great Attractor. 'Tis a vanity of human Nature, that every man loves to be αὐτοδίδακτος, his own teacher; and no leſs a vanity it is that every man loves to be αὐτογέννητος, his own begetter. Men glory in the knowledg they get without a teacher; and no leſs glory in any change they can hammer out without a ſpiritual Father. As he that ſcorns to be taught by another, ſhall ſurely have a fool to his Tutor: ſo he that thinks to gain ſpiritual life by himſelf, ſhall be ſure to have death for his quickener. No man would ſeek life from death, or light from darkneſs; and the beſt natural man is no better. The glory of the Lord muſt riſe upon us, before we can riſe out of our death in ſin. Ariſe, and ſhine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is riſen upon thee, Iſa. 60. 1.

(1.) Seek

(1.) Seek it only at the hands of God. 'Tis not to be had by outward rules, but divine influence: the ſtreams of life muſt come from him, ſince with him only is the fountain of life, Pſal. 36. 9. I will give a heart of fleſh; I alone, without any other co-ordinate cauſe, either Man or Angel. He only hath the Key of the heart, as well as that of the Womb; confide not in your ſelves. Adam was a root to convey ſin and death, but no root to convey ſpiritual life: Corruption comes by propagation from him, grace only by ſpiritual Regeneration from God: would any wiſe man ſeek for Water in a deſart? or for grace from himſelf, who is naturally a dry Wilderneſs? What Toad, naturally full of Poyſon, ever made himſelf ſweet and wholſom? As Chriſt was by the grace of God made partaker of our nature in his Incarnation, ſo by the ſame grace only can we be made partakers of his nature by Regeneration: we are naturally weeds; if ever we be flowers in Gods Garden, the transformation muſt be Gods act alone.

Seek it of God. But,

[1.) In the uſe of means; not abating any thing of thine own induſtry: ſeek, while God offers it: hold your mouth under the Fountain while it runs. Moſes hewed the Tables, but God wrote the Law. God promiſed David, and Gideon victory, but not with their hands in their Pockets, but their Arms and Armies about them. Moſes muſt fight with the Arms of Iſrael, but pray to the God of battels and victory; we muſt with one hand uſe the directions God hath given, and lift up the other in ſpiritual ſupplication for ſucceſs upon them. Therefore let not the Doctrine of Gods Being, the cauſe of the New Birth, encourage your lazineſs and ſloth: this ſloth among men, Chemnitius thought to be the occaſion of Pelagius his error, who ſeeing the lazineſs of Chriſtians, thought to correct it by making them think highly of their own ſtrength; but that was a dangerous extream.

[2.] Yet let your eye be ſolely upon God in the uſe of them, ſince all the means in the World cannot do it without him. Unleſs God pull up the flood-gates, no water of life can ſtream into the Soul; means can no more of themſelves caſt out death, than the Diſciples could caſt out ſome Devils: but Chriſt was able to do what they could not. All the Angels in Heaven, and Men upon Earth, have not been able, theſe almoſt 6000 Years, to make one Fly; yet all the Angels and the whole frame of the World were made by God in ſix Days. Men ſpeak to the ſenſe, God to the heart; they to the underſtanding, and God into it: men argue with the Will, and God perſuades it. All the clamours of the whole Nation of the Jews, yea, of all the men in the World, would not have made Lazarus ſtir out of the grave, had not our Saviour ſpake the word, Lazarus come forth. How often do the Clouds of Heaven drop upon men, yet they ſtill remain as a dry chip! their ſtony hearts perhaps moiſtened with ſome tranſient flaſhy affections, but not mollified into fleſh. Pray therefore to God, before the uſe of any means. Lord breathe life ſo powerfully upon me, that I may walk before thee, and never find my ſelf again in a natural winding-ſheet; let thy voice, Lord, be heard, and felt by me as the voice of thy Son was by Lazarus. To uſe means without a ſeeking to God for his bleſſing, is to be exerciſed in Divine Inſtitutions with an Atheiſtical ſpirit: he is an Atheiſt that expects nouriſhment from his Meat without Gods benediction; and he no leſs that runs to means, without lifting up his heart to God, thinking to get grace conveyed by the means without Gods Operation.

(2.) Direction. Plead much with God from the glorious Attributes he honours in this Work. Lord here is a ſubject for thy power to work upon. God made the Heavens when there was nothing but a rude maſs; he brought forth the Sun, Moon and Stars, with all their glory, out of the barren Womb of nothing. Is thy heart worſe than nothing, more contradictory to God than nothing? 'Tis ſo: Aſſume an argument from hence, Lord here is a ſubject for thy power above what was manifeſted in Creation: there is not a more tough heart in the World than mine; loſe not the opportunity of diſplaying the greatneſs of thy power, ſince there is ſcarce a heart more ſtout and unwieldy than mine is: Lord beſtow a vital principle upon me; thou didſt it to the lifeleſs Body of Adam; thy power will be more magnified in the breathing upon a lifeleſs Soul of a Son and Daughter of Adam. In the ſame manner plead his Wiſdom and Holineſs. Plead alſo the enmity thy ſin hath againſt him, the wrong it hath done him, in ſpoiling the Creation, changing the end of it, hindering thee from thy natural duty; and that it is not for the intereſt of his glory to let ſin bear ſuch a ſway and dominion, and uſurp his room in one who would fain be another man.

(3.) Be deeply ſenſible of the corruption of thy nature; the want of this is the cauſe there is ſo little ſenſe in Men and Women of the abſolute neceſſity of the grace of Regeneration, and a change of nature. Therefore labour to ſee your ſelves in a forlorn condition by ſpiritual death. Look upon your great fall, as a Son of Adam, a ſlave of Satan, and poſſeſſor of a Helliſh nature, and at a vaſt diſtance from God and Happineſs.

(4.) Grieve not the Spirit in any of his Operations. Quench not the ſparks of the Spirit in any previous preparations and diſpoſitions to this New Birth. Be pliable to his breathings; hoiſt up your Sails to receive his Gales; when he knocks, open thy heart as wide as may be, puſh it to the furtheſt point, that there may be no Remora; let all the Houſe be free for his triumphant entrance; ſince thy ſtrength is too weak for it, beg of him at ſuch a ſeaſon to break it open: ſet upon prayer at ſuch a Seaſon, and leave not till you have prayed your ſpirits up, and your reſiſtance out. How ungrateful and fooliſh is it to grieve that Spirit, who offers to form you into a New Birth, and bring the life and joy of Heaven into your heart! This is the only means to recover the loſs you had by the fall of Adam, and ſurmount all the miſery of it. Seek to him; he that can gather the duſt of your Bodies, if blown to the further part of the World, and knit it together, can overcome the filthy and deadly noiſomneſs of your Souls: he can make a barren Wilderneſs to become Pools of Water; a lump of vanity, a garden of pleaſure; a heap of rubbiſh to ſprout up a new-born Sun: If you would therefore be animated with a Spirit of Life, you muſt approach the beams of the Sun, and lie under the rich and enlivening influences of it.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF THE WORD, THE INSTRUMENT OF REGENERATION.

James I. 18.

Of his own will begat he us, with the word of truth, that we ſhould be a kind of firſt fruits of his creatures.

I HAVE choſen this Text to treat of the Inſtrument of the New Birth.

The Apoſtle having adviſed them, (Verſe 13. But, let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted to evil, neither tempts he any man:) not to charge God as the Author of any temptation to evil, ſhowing it to be contrary to the Nature of God, who is Infinite Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs; for as he cannot be tempted with evil, ſo neither can he tempt any man; and declaring the true cauſe and ſpring of all evil to be inherent in our ſelves, even that luſt which is rivetted in our Nature, which he calls our own luſt, Verſe 14. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own luſt, and enticed. He takes occaſion from thence to ſhew the order of ſins working: ſin is firſt conceived by that Original corruption in our Nature, and formed and brought forth into action; and when it is finiſhed, and grows into a habit, it brings forth death, Verſe 15. To remove this error, which ſome in thoſe days had ſuckt in out of a natural ſelf-love that man hath to excuſe himſelf, and remove the cauſe of ſin far from him; the Apoſtle ſhows, that God is the Author and Fountain of all the good we have, Ver. 17. Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and comes down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableneſs, nor ſhadow of change; God being the Infinite Father of Lights, who hath no eclipſes or decreaſes, no ſhadows or mixtures of darkneſs, but alway ſhines with a conſtant and ſettled brightneſs; of this goodneſs hath given a great evidence in conferring the choiceſt mercy upon us, even a new begetting through the Goſpel, and thereby the relation of Children to him, that we might be conſecrated to him as the firſt fruits, and a peculiar portion. Of his own will, βουλη, by his meer motion, induced by no cauſe but the goodneſs in his own Breaſt. (1.) To diſtinguiſh it from the Generation of the Son, which is natural, this voluntary; of his own will, not naturally, as he begat his Son from Eternity. (2.) Not neceſſarily, by a neceſſity of nature, as the Sun, to which he had compared God before, doth enlighten, and enliven, when matter is prepared to receive his quickening beams; but by an Arbitrarineſs of grace. (3.) Not by any Obligation from the Creature: the Will of God is oppoſed to the merit of man. The New Creation anſwers to Election; the firſt purpoſe was free, the bringing that purpoſe to execution is free: whatſoever Obligation there is, reſults not from the creature, but from himſelf, his own immutable nature, which hath no variableneſs, nor ſhadow of change. Begat us ἀπεκύησεν, or brought us forth; for the ſame word ἀποκύει, Verſe 15. is tranſlated, brings forth.. By the word of truth, a title given to the Goſpel both in the Old and New Teſtament. In the Old, Pſal. 45. 4. And in thy majeſty ride proſperouſly, becauſe of truth, or * upon thy word of truth. In the New Teſtament, Eph. 1. 13. In whom you alſo truſted after you heard the word of truth, the Goſpel of your ſalvation. So 2 Cor. 6. 7. and 2 Tim. 2. 15. And 'tis called truth by way of excellency, as paramount to all other truth. (1.) Either, By an Hebraiſm, the word of truth; that is, the true word. (2.) Or rather, By way of eminency, as containing a higher truth, more excellent in it ſelf, more advantageous for the Creature, than any other Divine truth; wherein the higheſt glory of God, the ſure and everlaſting happineſs of the Creature is ſet forth; a word which he hath magnified above all his name, Pſal. 138. 2.

* על דבר אמת upon the word of truth.

And called the word of truth,

1. In regard of the Author, truth it ſelf; and the publiſher, he who was the way, the truth, and the life.

2. In oppoſition to all falſe Doctrines, which can never be the Inſtruments of converſion; for error to convert to truth, is the ſame thing as for darkneſs to diffuſe light, or water to kindle fire.

3. In oppoſition to the windy and flaſhy conceits of men, which can no more be Inſtrumental in the begetting a Chriſtian, than meer wind can beget a man.

4. In oppoſition to the legal ſhadows; the Goſpel declares the truth of thoſe Types. Both the Law and Prophecy were but as a dim Candle in a dark place, 2 Pet. 1. 19. but this as a Sun ſhining out at noon-day. All other diſcourſes did ſtream to this as their great Ocean, wherein they were to be ſwallowed up. The Law was the Word of Truth, but referred to the Goſpel as the great end of it. This contains the whole and ultimate purpoſe of God, for ſaving men by Jeſus Chriſt, and in him inriching them with all ſpiritual bleſſings; and not by the Works of the Law: and thus the Spirit which enlightens and ſeals inſtruction upon our Souls, is called The ſpirit of truth, John 14.17. as it is called a ſpirit of holineſs, as it makes us holy; a ſpirit of grace, as it makes us gracious; or as it declares the grace of God. Some by the word of truth underſtand Chriſt, the eſſential and uncreated λόγος word, as it is underſtood by ſome in 1 Pet. 1.23,25. By the word of God, which lives and abides for ever: and this is the word which by the Goſpel is preached to you; Poſſibly it may be meant of Chriſt, who by the Goſpel is declared and preached to be the Mediator between God and man, appointed to raiſe up thoſe that are given to him. Others by the word there, mean the Will of God of giving grace in Chriſt which is maniſeſt in, and expreſt by the Goſpel. But here it is evidently meant of the Goſpel, becauſe of the inference the Apoſtle makes, Verſe 19. be ſwift to hear; that is, prize the word, wait upon the means with all readineſs; ſlow to ſpeak, to utter your judgment of it, or be wiſe in your own conceit, whereof a readineſs to ſpeak peremptorily in Divine truth is ſometimes an evidence; ſlow to wrath and paſſion, which hinder any profit by the word. That we ſhould be a kind of firſt fruits of his creatures; the chief among his creatures: the firſt fruits were the beſt of every kind to be offered to God, whereby they acknowledged Gods gift of them, and deſired his bleſſing upon them, and were given as Gods peculiar right and portion. It was commanded in the Law, Deut. 18. 4. It was a cuſtom among many of the Heathens: to offer them, was a token of thankfulneſs; not to offer them, was accounted a ſign of Atheiſm and Prophaneſs*. The New Creature is Gods peculiar portion taken out of mankind; and it beſpeaks duty too; being conſecrated to God by a new begetting, they ſhould ſerve God with a new ſpirit, new thankfulneſs, new frames.

* Apulcii Apolog. p. 291.

We ſee here,

1. The Efficient of Regeneration, God: He, the Father of Lights.
2. The impulſive or moving cauſe, his own Will.
3. The inſtrumental cauſe, with the word of truth.
4. The final cauſe: that we may be a kind of firſt fruits.

The Doctrine I am to handle is,

Doct. That the Goſpel is the Inſtrument whereby God brings the Soul forth in a New Birth.

The Scripture doth diſtinguiſh the Efficient and Inſtrumental cauſe, by the prepoſitions ἐκ, or ἐξ and διὰ. When we are ſaid to be born of the Spirit, it is 1 John 5. 5. ἐκ πνεύματος, 1 John 3. 9. ἐκ Θεοῦ, 1 John 5. 1. never διὰ πνεύματος, or διὰ Θεοῦ; but we are no where ſaid to be born of the word, or begotten of the word, but διὰ λόγου, by or with the word, 1 Pet. 1. 23. and διὰ εὐαγγελίου, 1 Cor. 4. 15. I have begotten you through the Goſpel; the prepoſition ἐκ or ἐξ, uſually notes the Efficient or material cauſe; διὰ, the Inſtrumental or means by which a thing is wrought. Sin entered into the heart of Eve by the word of the Devil; Grace enters into the heart by the word of God; that entred by a word of error, this by a word of truth; Ye are clean through the word I have ſpoken to you, John 15. 3. whereby our Saviour means the word outwardly preached by him, for it is the word ſpoken by him. Not that it had this efficacy of it ſelf, but as an Inſtrument of their ſanctification, rendring them ready to every good work. The holineſs therefore which it begets, is called The holineſs of truth, Eph. 4. 24. oppoſed to the ἐπιθυμίας τῆς ἀπάτης, luſts of deceit, Verſe 22. Luſts grow up from error and deceit; and holineſs of the New Man grows up from truth. The Goſpel-Adminiſtration, in regard of the effects of it, is called the kingdom of God, Mark 1. 14. it erects the Kingdom of God in the World, and in the hearts of men; and called the Regeneration, Matth. 19. 28. ye which have followed me in the regeneration: the Goſpel-Adminiſtration being a creating of new heavens and a new earth, Iſa. 65. 17. This is the triumphal Chariot, wherein Chriſt rides Majeſtically to the conqueſt of hearts, Pſal. 45. 4. *And in thy majeſty ride proſperouſly, becauſe of truth. A Pſalm the Jews themſelves underſtand of the Meſſiah. The word of his truth is the ſupport of his Kingdom, whereby he awes ſinners into ſubmiſſion. Peace from Heaven, and the health of our Nature, is the fruit of the lips, tho of Gods Creation, Iſa. 57. 19. 'Tis like the Dew or Miſt which Watered the Ground, and prepared the Earth for the formation of Adam's Body, into which God breathed, afterwards, a living ſoul, Gen. 2. 6, 7.

* עיל דבר אמת

I. For Explication, take ſome Propoſitions:

1. 'Tis not the Law that is this Inſtrument. The Law taken in general for the legal Adminiſtration preſcribed to the Jews, was inſtrumental for renewing, becauſe there was a Typical Goſpel in that Judaical Adminiſtration, Heb. 4. 2. *For to us was the goſpel preached as well as unto them ; they were Evangelized, as the word ſignifies: the Judaical Adminiſtration was compounded of Law and Goſpel; the Moral Law, as a Covenant of works; the Ceremonial Law, repreſenting the Covenant of grace. The Law of God, or Goſpel among them, is ſaid to convert the Soul, Pſal. 19. 7. But the Law, taken as a Covenant of works, was not appointed for renewing the Soul; otherwiſe what need had there been of enacting another Law for that work? *And thoſe that ſay, the Law is inſtrumental in Converſion, or enflaming our Affections to obedience, ſay, That all the benefits by it it are to be aſcribed to the Covenant of Grace in Chriſt. 'Tis true, the Law conſidered in it ſelf is preparatory to caſt men down, and ſhow them their diſtance from God, and contrariety to his command: but the Law without the Goſpel never brought any man to Chriſt. Whatſoever it doth in this caſe, is not of it ſelf, but by the mingling the Goſpel with it, which ſpirits it to ſuch an end. Tho the Law did not encourage ſin, yet it gave no help againſt it, but left the ſoul under the dominion of it, which is evident by the Apoſtles inference, Rom. 6. 14. Sin ſhall not have dominion over you; for you are not under the law, but under grace; hence the property of the Law, which is meant by the Letter, 2 Cor. 3. 6. is to kill, but the Spirit gives life; that leaves under the ſeverity of Juſtice, after ſin had entred; but the ſpiritual adminiſtration wherein the Spirit works, is to quicken and renew the ſoul, and make it able to get above the guilt and power of ſin. The Apoſtle therefore wholly excludes the Law, Gal. 3. 2. Received you the Spirit by the works of the Law, or by the hearing of faith? That is, the Word of Faith, as the Goſpel is called, Rom. 10. 8. By Spirit is meant, ſaith Calvin, the Grace of Regeneration, as by Faith is meant the Doctrine of Faith. I might have preached (as if the Apoſtle had ſaid) the Works of the Law till my Lungs had been worn out, and the Renewing-ſpirit would never have entred into you by that Fire, but it deſcended upon you in the ſweet Goſpel-dew. The Goſpel is therefore called the Miniſtration of the Spirit, and the Miniſtration of Righteouſneſs, 2 Cor. 3. 8, 9. 'Tis the Chariot or Vehiculum, wherein the Spirit rides, the proclamation by which it is declared, the Channel through which it is conveyed. The Law diſcovers the Righteouſneſs of God, as well as the Goſpel; but that demands a Righteouſneſs from the Creature, the Goſpel confers a Righteouſneſs upon the Creature; the Law ſhows us Gods Righteouſneſs in his Nature, the Goſpel ſhows us Gods Righteouſneſs in his Nature, and Grace. The Law is a Hammer to break us, the Goſpel Gods Oyl to cure us; the Law makes ſin live and our Souls die, Rom. 7. 9. When the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died; the Goſpel makes ſin die and our ſouls live. The Law awakens the Lion, the Goſpel lets out his Blood. At the beſt the terrors of the Law do chain up our furious Affections, but the ſweetneſs of Goſpel Mercy changeth them. The Law prepares the Matter, the Goſpel brings the New Form. That was appointed for the Rule of our walk, not for the Reſtoration of our life. And they are the Promiſes of Mercy which are the Motives to return; rebels will not ſubmit to their Prince, as long as they know they ſhall have no quarter*. Hue and Cry makes the Thief fly away the faſter. By the great and precious Promiſes we are made Partakers of the Divine Nature, 2 Pet. 1 4. The Promiſes of the Law being conditional, belong not to us without fulfilling the condition, of which we are incapable of our ſelves. The Law therefore ſince the fall is deſtructive, the goſpel reſtorative, and the Promiſes of it, the Cords whereby God draws us.

* Εὐαγγελίζω μέσ. 21.

* Burges, Vindiciæ Legis. pag. 202.

2. The Goſpel is this Inſtrument. 'Tis an Inſtrument to unlock the Priſon doors, and take them off the hinges; ſtrike off the fetters, and draw out the ſoul to a glorious liberty. 'Tis by the voice of the Arch-angel men ſhall riſe in their bodies: 'Tis by the voice of the Son of God in the Word, that men riſe in their ſouls. Nothing elſe ever wrought ſuch miraculous changes; to make Lions become Lambs, Iſa. 11. 6. Hoſ. 4. 13. beloved idols to be caſt away with indignation; to make its entrance like fire, and conſume old luſts in a ſhort time; theſe have been undeniable Realities, which have created both affection and aſtoniſhment in ſome enemies as well as friends. It hath a more excellent inſtrumentality in it, than other Providences of God, becauſe it is a higher manifeſtation. Every creature conducts us to the knowledg of God, by giving us notice of his Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs, Rom. 1. 20. The declaration of his Works in the World, is inſtrumental to make men ſeek him, Acts 17. 27 Every days Providence declares his patience; every ſhower of rain his merciful proviſion for mankind, Acts 14. 17. every days preſervation of the World under a load of ſin, manifeſts his mercy. The Heavens have a tongue, and the Rod hath a voice; the deſign of all is to lead men to repentance, Rom. 2. 4. If theſe therefore be ſome kind of inſtruments upon the hearts of conſidering men, the Goſpel being a diſcovery ſuperior to all theſe, in manifeſting not only a God of Nature, but a God of Grace, muſt be deſigned to a choicer choicer and nobler work: The Heavens and Providences are inſtruments to inſtruct us, this to renew us.

'Tis an Inſtrument; but,

1. It is not a natural inſtrument, to work by any natural efficacy; As food doth nouriſh, the Sun ſhines, or the Air and Water cools, or as a ſharp knife cuts if it be applied to fit matter. If it were thus natural, it would not be of Grace: Tho the ſhining of the Sun, or the healing by a Plaiſter, are acts of the goodneſs and mercy of God, yet the Scripture calls them not by that higher title of acts of grace. If the operation were natural, the Goſpel would never be without its effect whereſoever it were preached; as the Sun, whereſoever it ſhines in any Land, doth both enlighten and warm. Our Saviour then would have had more ſucceſs, ſince the Goſpel could not have greater natural efficacy than from his lips; yet the number of his Converts were probably not much above five hundred, for ſo many he appeared to after his Reſurrection, 1 Cor. 15. 6. when many thouſands in that Land heard his voice, and ſaw his Miracles. Chriſt, who was alway able to give himſelf ſucceſs, would not; perhaps for this among many other reaſons, To advance his ſpiritual above his corporal preſence; and to prevent any thoughts of any natural virtue in the Word, without the power of the Spirit working by it. Every day teaches us, that tho many ſee the glaſs of the Goſpel, yet few ſee the glory of God in that Goſpel. Were it natural, then that all that hear it were not renewed, would be more miraculous than that any are; as it was more a miracle that the Sun ſhould ſtand ſtill in Joſhua's time, againſt its natural courſe of motion, than that it moves every day in the Heavens. * If it were a natural inſtrument, it muſt then have life in it ſelf; but how can the voice of a man, or the words and ſyllables in a Book, be capable of receiving ſpiritual life, which they muſt have before they can naturally convey it to others? Were it a natural Inſtrument, it would have the ſame effect upon the ſoul at one time, as at another. But doth not daily experience witneſs, that the word ſhines at ſome particular times upon the ſoul with a clearer ray than at other times, that ſuch a ſoul hath thought it ſelf in another world (as it were), and that too when it hath been much clouded by the weakneſs of the Inſtrument declaring it? Laſtly, Were it natural, the wiſeſt men, men of the ſharpeſt underſtandings, could not reſiſt it; no man can hinder the Suns ſhining upon him, when he is under the beams of it; it would warm him whether he would or no; yet have not ſuch been the moſt deſperate oppoſers of it in all Ages of the World, as well as in the times of the Apoſtles? 'Tis not then a Natural, but a Moral Inſtrument; which will follow afterwards, when we come to conſider how it works.

* Vid. Baxt. Reſt. Part 1. P. 160.

(2.) 'Tis the only Inſtrument appointed by God to this end in an ordinary way. God hath made a combination between hearing and *believing, Rom. 10. 14, 17. ſo that believing comes not without hearing. The Waters of the Sanctuary run onely through the Channels of the Goſpel; the Mines of Grace are found onely in the Climates of the Word. Why doth not Air nouriſh? Becauſe God did not ſet that, but Meat, apart for ſuch an end: Tho God could, by his Almighty Power, bleſs Air to this end, yet in an ordinary way he hath fixed his bleſſing on theſe natural cauſes of his own ordaining. God hath appointed ſecond cauſes for natural operations; if we would be warm, God hath appointed Fire and Sun to warm us; he could do it immediately, by ſpreading a lively heat in every member, as well as he gave at firſt a power to Fire to burn; but he uſes natural inſtruments in natural effects, and likewiſe ſpiritual inſtruments in ſpiritual productions. God may flow in an extraordinary way upon the ſoul by a divine breath, without any inſtrument: As he did immediately upon the Prophets, or as he gave light to the World the three firſt days of the Creation without a Sun, but ſince only by the Sun and Stars: But God ſeems here to have fixed his Power, Rom. 1. 16. The Goſpel is the power of God to ſalvation; not that his power ſhall alway attend it, but that he will exert his power, at leaſt ordinarily, only by it; no other organ through which the wind of the Spirit ſhall blow, no other Sword which the Spirit ſhall manage, but this, Eph. 6. 13. Tho our Saviour prayed upon the Croſs for ſome of his greateſt Enemies who had their hands embrued in his precious blood, tho he was heard, yet his prayer was not anſwered but through Peter's Miniſtry, to grace the firſt ſpiritual diſcovery of the Goſpel. Nothing elſe can have that efficacy. Had every man in Iſrael made a brazen Serpent, and looked upon it when they had been ſtung, they might have looked till they had groan'd their laſt, before they had met with any cure, becauſe only one was of Gods appointing: To a caſt of an eye upon that, he had only promiſed his healing virtue; in that only then he had lodged his power.

[1.] In regard of the reaſonable creature there muſt be ſome declaration. * God doth not ordinarily work but by means, and doth not produce any thing without them which may be done with them. God doth not maintain the creatures by a daily creation, but by generation; he maintains that faculty of generation in them by the means of health and nouriſhment, and that by the means of the fruits of the earth, and doth all this according to the Ordinance he fixed at the Creation, when he appointed every kind of creatures their proper food, and beſtowed his bleſſing upon them, Encreaſe and multiply. So according to the method God hath ſet of mens actions, 'tis neceſſary that this Regeneration ſhould be by ſome word as an Inſtrument: for God hath given Underſtanding and Will to man; we cannot underſtand any thing, or will any thing, but what is propoſed to us by ſome external object; as our eye can ſee nothing but what is without us; our hand take nothing but what is without us: ſo it is neceſſary that God by the Word ſhould ſet before us thoſe things which our Underſtandings may apprehend, and our Wills embrace. Now we believe things as we conceive them true, or not believe them as we conceive them falſe: We love, deſire, delight in things, as we conceive them honeſt or profitable; we hate, we refuſe, or grieve, as we conceive them diſhoneſt, or troubleſome, or hurtful to us: Whatever we are changed by in our Underſtandings, Wills and Affections, is repreſented to us under ſome of theſe conſiderations. To make an alteration in us according to our nature of Underſtanding, Will and Affection, 'tis neceſſary there ſhould be ſome declaration of things under thoſe conſiderations of True, Good, Delightful, &c. in the higheſt manner, to make a choice change in every faculty of the ſoul; and without this a man cannot be changed as a rational creature; he will otherwiſe have a change he knows not why, nor to what end, nor upon what conſideration, which is an unconceivable change in a rational creature.

[2.] 'Tis neceſſary the revelation of this Goſpel we have, ſhould be made. There is a neceſſity of ſome revelation; for no man can ſee that which is not viſible, or hear that which hath no ſound, or know that which is not declared. There is alſo a neceſſity of the Revelation of this Goſpel, ſince Faith is a great part of this work. How can any man believe that God is good in Chriſt, without knowing that he hath ſo declared himſelf? Since the Spirit takes of Chriſts, and ſhows it to us; there muſt be a revelation of Chriſt, and the goodneſs of God in Chriſt, before we can believe. Tho the manner of this Revelation may be different, and the Spirit may renew in an extraordinary manner; yet this is the Inſtrument whereby all ſpiritual begettings are wrought; the manner may be by viſions, dreams, by reading or hearing, yet ſtill it is the Goſpel which is revealed; the matter revealed is the ſame, tho the formal revelation, or manner, may be different. Paul's Regeneration was by a viſion; for at that viſion of the Light, and that voice of Chriſt, I ſuppoſe him to be renewed, becauſe of that full reſignation of his will to Chriſt, Acts 9. 6. yet the matter of the Revelation was the ſame, that Chriſt was the Meſſiah; for ſo Paul underſtands it, in giving him the title of Lord. Tho God may communicate himſelf without the written Word, to ſome that have it not, yet according to his appointment not without a revelation of what is in that Word.

[3.] This neceſſity will further appear, if we conſider that it always was ſo. Adam and Eve were the firſt after the fall, wherein God did conſtitute his Church, whoſe regeneration and converſion were wrought by that promiſe of the Seed of the Woman, made to them in Paradice, God ſurely putting an enmity in the heart of thoſe to whom this firſt promiſe of an enmity was made; upon which promiſe a Sacrifice followed, which ſome ground on Gen. 3. 21. God made them coats of ſkins of Beaſts, which the word עור ſignifies, and is never taken in Scripture

otherwiſe than for the outward skin of a Beaſt. * And indeed it is not likely that 129. years ſhould be between the Promiſe and the firſt Sacrifice; for ſome think Abel was killed by Cain in the 129*th year* after the Creation: for it is certain 130 years after the Creation Seth was born, Gen. 5.3. And this is confirmed Heb. 9. 32. neither the firſt teſtament was dedicated without blood; the firſt Teſtament was of an ancienter date than the Jewiſh Service ordained by Moſes; and ſome Ceremonies, as Sacrifices, and diſtinction of clean and unclean beaſts, were in uſe before, Gen. 8. 20. ſo that there ſeems to be a Sacrifice repreſenting the Meſſiah, for the dedication of the Firſt Teſtament, which Adam had received from God, and tranſmitted to Abel, whom he taught the way of Sacrificing. What Regeneration Adam had, was by this Word of the Goſpel; had not Adam believed it, he would not have delivered it to Abel; and Abel had not ſacrificed, unleſs he had been taught ſo by his Father, or immediately by God; but moſt likely by his Father, becauſe God doth not uſe extraordinary means, when ordinary will ſerve. And Abel was Regenerate; for it is ſaid, by faith he offered this ſacrifice, Heb. 11.4. and it was faith in Chriſt, faith in the promiſed ſeed; for all of them in that Catalogue, Heb. 11. did eye Chriſt by faith, as well as Moſes, of whom it is particularly expreſt, v. 26. that he eſteemed the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures of Egypt. Conſidering all this, it is evident, That the ancient Reſtauration was by the revelation of Chriſt and the Goſpel, as the only neceſſary means. Abraham, it is likely, had ſome external word in his Father Terah's Family, by tradition from the Patriarchs; and had the revelation of the promiſe made to him by God, Gen. 18. 19. And it was wrought then in an ordinary way, by inſtruction; for, for that Abraham is commended, and no doubt but Iſaac and Jacob did the ſame; ſo that all along this change of the heart was wrought by a declaration of the Word of the goſpel.

* Cloppenburgh. de ſtatu crinc. p. 13.

(4.) It ſeems to be the ſtanding Inſtrument of it to the end of the world. Some indeed think the converſion of the Jews ſhall not be by the declarations of the Word in a way of preaching and inſtruction, as the Gentiles were brought in, but by a viſible appearance of Chriſt, which they ground upon Zach. 12.10. They ſhall look upon him whom they have pierced, they ſhall ſee Chriſt in the clouds as pierced by them; and underſtand Paul's converſion by an extraordinary light ſhining round about him, and a voice from Heaven, to be a Type and Pattern of Gods manner of the future converſion of the Jews, which is intimated 1 Tim. 1.16. that the mercy he obtained was a pattern for them which ſhould hereafter believe on him to life everlaſting. Whether this be ſo or no; yet however the converſion is by a revelation of that which is the matter and ſubſtance of the goſpel, 'tis the revelation of Chriſt himſelf; and if, like Paul's converſion, by a Voice, as well as by ſight; by inſtruction as well as apparition. But it ſeems to me to be the perpetual ſtanding means of Regeneration. The fruits of our Saviours Aſcenſion ſhall endure to the end of the world; and the enduing men with gifts for the building him a ſpiritual houſe, is a great end of his Aſcenſion, Pſal. 68. 18. compared with Eph. 4. 8, 9. Thou haſt aſcended on high, thou haſt led captivity captive, thou haſt received gifts for men, yea for the rebellious alſo, that the Lord God might dwell among them. He receives gifts upon his Aſcenſion, for the ſubduing and changing the hearts of the Rebellious, that they may be a fit habitation for God, who dwells in them by his Spirit; theſe gifts being the fruit of ſo glorious an Aſcenſion, and a rich donative to him for the accompliſhment of his undertaking in the world, and being given for the ſmoothing, poliſhing, and fitting rude ſtones to combine together for a Temple for the Lord to dwell in (which is the reaſon why he keeps up the world); as long therefore as God hath a Temple, and any ſtone to poliſh, theſe gifts will remain in the Miniſtry of the Word, and be exerciſed in order to ſo great a building; and we may infer alſo by the way, that it is not likely that God doth dwell in any, but ſuch who are ſo ſubdued and formed by the Miniſtry of the Word, which is the fruit of Chriſts Aſcenſion. It ſeems alſo to have an ancienter date, and founded upon the Covenant of Redemption between the Father and the Son. All that prayer in the 17*th* of John, ſeems to me to run upon thoſe Articles agreed on between them. Thoſe that were given to Chriſt, were given to keep his word, John 17. 6. Thou gaveſt them me, and they have kept thy word. Which word was given to Christ by God in order to be given to them, v. 8. I have given them the word which thou gavest me. And in his Prayer for their Sanctification, v. 17. he seems to intimate that this was the ordinary Method then subscribed to by both, and the setled means of Sanctification; he doth not only propose his desire for their sanctification, but the means, through thy truth, and specifies what he means by truth, thy word is truth. And what he did here pray for, for them that were then with him, he did for all that should hereafter believe, v 20; and tho this be meant of a further sanctification of those that were already regenerate, yet it will I think evidently follow, that if the word by agreement between the Father and the Son, be the Instrument of every degree of Sanctification, it must be also of the first; since there can be no faith, but refers to the Object believed, and the ground why it is believed, whence belief of the truth is joyned with the sanctification of the spirit, 2 Thes. 2. 13. besides, v. 20. all belief for the future was to be through the word, through their word. Let me add another inference from this; what an excellent Argument is this to plead in Prayer, before you go to hear or read the word, Lord was not this an Article of Agreement between thee, and thy Son? was not this the desire of our Saviour, who knew the best means of sanctifying?

[5.] 'Tis necessary by Gods appointment, for all the degrees of the new birth, and all the appendixes to it. When God shows his own Glory for a further Change, he represents the Species of it in the glass of the Gospel, 2 Cor. 3. 18. beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory. 'Tis the ministration of the Spirit in all the acts of the Spirit. If the Spirit quicken, it is by some Gospel Precept; if it comforts, it is by some Gospel Promise; If it startles, it is by some Threatning in the Word; whatsoever working there is in a Christians heart, it is by some word or other dropping upon it. If any temptation which assaults us, be bafled, it is by the word, which is the Sword of the Spirit. The life of a Christian is made up of increasing light, refreshing Comforts, choicer inclinations of the heart towards God; by the same Law whereby the Soul is converted, the heart is rejoiced, and the eyes further enlightened, Psal. 19. 7, 8. The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the Soul, making wise the simple, rejoycing the heart, enlightening the eyes. The Spirit makes the Word not only the fire to kindle the Soul, but the bellows to blow; it is first life, then liveliness to the soul, 'tis through the word he begets us, and through the word he quickens us, thy word hath quickened me, Psal. 119. 50, 93. 'Tis by the Word God gathers a Church in the World, by the same word he sanctifies it to greater degrees Eph. 5. 26. 'Tis the seed whereby we are born, the dew whereby we are refresht. As it is the seed of our birth, so it is the milk of our growth, 1 Pet. 2. 2. Faith comes by hearing, and salvation after faith by the foolishness of preaching, 1 Cor. 1. 21. It helps us after we have believed through grace, Act. 18. 27. Our fruitfulness depends upon our plantation by this Rivers side. The influence of other Ordinances depends upon it. * Sacraments that nourish and encrease, are not efficacious, but by vertue of the word; they have their dependance on the word, as Seals upon the Covenant; the word is operative without Sacraments, Sacraments are not operative without the influence of the word, they are only assistants to it. This quickens and encreaseth habitual grace, as well as it was the Instrument first to usher it into the heart, Eph. 5. 26. that he might sanctifie and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word. As God will have the Mediation of his Son honoured in the whole progress and perfection of Grace as the meritorious cause, the efficacy of the spirit as the efficient cause, so he will have the word in every step to Heaven honoured as the instrumental cause; that as Jesus Christ is all in all, as the chief, so the word may be all in all as the means. As God created the world by the word of his power, and by the word of his providence bid the creatures encrease and multiply, so by the word of the gospel he lays the foundation and rears the building of his Spiritual house.

* Blake's Covenant seal'd, p. 213.

4. As it is not a natural Instrument, but the only Instrument appointed by God, and therefore, upon these, and upon other Accounts a necessary Instrument. So it is an Instrument, which makes mightily for Gods Glory. The meaner the appearance of the Instrument, the more evident the Power and Skill of the Workman.

man. It would be miraculous for a man to raise up another from death, by a composition of Medicines syringed down the Throat, but a greater Miracle to raise him by speaking a Word. In the New Birth there is nothing sensible to man but the Word, the other Causes are secret, like the Wind, you know not whence it comes, nor whither it goes. The Instrument being weak in it self, none can claim any share with God in the Glory of the Work. But were there a natural Strength in the means, much of the Honor would be pared from God, and assumed by the Creature. 'Tis like the Trumpet in the right hand of Gideons Soldiers, and a Pitcher with a Lamp in the left, upon the blowing of the Trumpet and the breaking the Pitcher, the Enemies fled, and God would have the means but small, but 300 of 32000, that Israel might not vaunt, and say, mine own Arm hath saved me, Judg. 7. 2. It had not been so admirable for Sampson to have killed so many with a Sword or Spear, or if the Walls of Jericho had fallen flat by the force of some battering Engine; but it was wonderful to see them tumble at the Blast of Rams Horns. Is it not the same to see strong holds, high thoughts, Goliah-like Corruptions, and spiritual Death it self fly before the voice of the Word? To see a man like the Babel Builders, swelling, and rearing up his own confidences against God, to have all the former language of his Soul confounded by a Word; to think of other Objects, speak in another strain, descend from self to dust, deny Pleasure, embrace a Crucified Christ: that carnal Reason should be silenced, Legions of Devils driven out, a Massy Dagon fall before an Ark of Wood, that hath nothing in it but the Rod of Aaron, and the Pot of Manna; In such weak Means is the Power of God exalted, and no other cry can reasonably be heard, but this is the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. So it was more glorious for our Saviour to turn many of the Jews to him after his death, than in his life, to bring them to believe by a Word, upon a Person they had crucifyed as a Malefactor, than if he had brought them to believe, while he was attended with a Train of Miracles: the Power of his Miracles might seem in their eyes to be extinct with his Death, since he that delivered others, did not deliver himself from the hands of his Murderers: He now honours both his own Word, and their Faith, in bringing them to believe by the preaching of men, who did not believe by the Word from his Lips attended with the Seals of so many Glorious Miracles.

5. Consider, As it is an Instrument, so but an Instrument. God begets by the Word, the Chief Operation depends upon the Spirit of God. No Sword can cut without a Hand to manage it, no Engine batter without a force to drive it. The Word is objective in it self, operative by the Power of the Spirit; Instrumental in it self, efficacious by the Holy-Ghost. The Word of Christ is first Spirit, and then life, The words that I speak, unto you they are Spirit, and they are life, Joh 6. 63. The Word is the Chariot of the Spirit, the Spirit, the Guider of the Word; there is a Gospel comes in word, and there is a Gospel comes in Power, 1 Thes. 1. 5. There is a publishing of the Gospel, and there is the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel, Rom. 15. 29. There was the Truth of God spoken by Peter, and Paul, and God in that Truth, working in the heart, Gal. 2. 8. He that wrought effectually in Peter to the Apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me towards the Gentiles. The Gospel in it self is like Christs Voice; the Gospel with the Spirit is like Christs Power raising Lazarus; other men might have spoke the same Words, but the Power of rising must come from above. 'Tis then successful when an inward Unction drops with the outward dew, when the vail is taken from the heart, and the Curtain from the Word, and both meet together, both Word, and Heart; when Christ kisseth with the kisses of his mouth, and the man embraceth it with the Affections of his heart. The Light in the Air is the Instrument by which we read, but the Principle of that Light is in the Sun in the Heavens. The Word is a Rod, a Breath, but efficacious in smiting and slaying the old man, as it is the rod of Christs mouth, the breath of his lips, Isa. 11. 3. A Rod like that of Moses, to charm us, but as it is the rod of his strength, Psal. 110. 2. A weapon, but only mighty through God, 2 Cor. 10. 4. A Seed, but brings not forth a Plant, but by the Influence of the Sun. The Word hath this Efficacy from the bleeding Wounds and dying Groans of Christ; 'tis by his making his soul an offering for sin, that he sees the Travel of his Soul in his New Born Creatures; by his Blood are all the Promises of Grace confirmed; by his Blood they are operative. The word whereby we are begotten, was appointed by God, confirmed by Chriſt, and the Spirit which begets us, was purchaſed by the ſame blood. To conclude, the Word declares Chriſt, and the Spirit excites the heart to accept him. The Word ſhows his Excellency, and the Spirit ſtirs up ſtrong cries after him. The Word declares the Promiſes, and the Spirit helps us to plead them. The Word adminiſters Reaſons againſt our reaſonings, and the Spirit edgeth them. The Word ſhews the way, and the Spirit enables to walk in it. The Word is the Seed of the Spirit, and the Spirit the quickner of the Word. The Word is the graft, and the Spirit the Engrafter; the Word is the Pool of Water, and the Spirit ſtirs it to make it healing.

II. Q. How doth the Word work?

1. Objectively; As it is a declaration of Gods Will. As it doth propoſe to the Underſtanding what is to be known in order to Salvation hereafter, and Practiſe here; as it doth declare the Purpoſe of God to ſave only by Jeſus Chriſt the Mediator, and by him to deliver us from Sin, Satan, and whatſoever is contrary to everlaſting happineſs; and thus is ſignificative of ſomething to our Minds and Underſtandings. The Spirit gives us an eye to ſee, and the Word is the Light which diſcovers the Object to the eye. The Spirit gives us an Organ, but ſomething muſt be propoſed for that Organ to exerciſe it ſelf about, otherwiſe there is no uſe of the Underſtanding in any rational Operation, which certainly there is; for tho the Object is ſupernatural, and the inward work upon the Mind ſupernatural, yet the propoſal of the Object to the Mind is made in a rational manner. The Word doth objectively propoſe life and death, in a way ſuitable to the Nature of Man, that he may rationally chuſe life; I have ſet before you life and death, bleſſing and curſing, therefore chuſe life, Deut. 30. 19. both the bleſſings of the Goſpel, and the Curſes of the Law are preſented in the Word, that the one may be choſen, the other avoided. The Word is propoſed under various Notions; as true, and ſo it is the Object of the Speculative underſtanding; as good, ſo it is the Object of the practical Underſtanding and Will; as profitable, ſo it is the Object of the Appetite and Affections; when it is received into the ſpeculative Underſtanding, it is a preparation to the new birth; when it is received into the practical Underſtanding and Will, 'tis the new birth. It diſcovers the wonders in Gods own heart, his Son, and his Promiſe; the Spirit demonſtrates it, and gives Power to embrace it; it firſt preſents the Promiſe, and then anſwers the Pleas the ſtubborn heart makes againſt it, yet by the ſame Goſpel; it fetches demonſtrative arguments from that quiver to ſatisfie a cavilling Underſtanding, and Motives from thence to overcome a reſiſting Will; it ſilenceth the fears, points to the way, excites the Soul to an acceptance of Chriſt, all by this Goſpel; and ſo draws us, as a man draws a Child, by preſenting ſome alluring object to him: The Spirit immediately himſelf, touches the Soul, but by the Word, as an Inſtrument propoſing the Object, and drawing out the Soul into an actual believing. The two chief parts of the Word are

[1.] The diſcovery of our miſery by Nature. The heart is ript open, our putrified Condition in our own Blood evidenced, our deplorable State unfolded, and thereby the Conſcience awakened to ſenſible reflections; it diſſects the Heart, diſcovers the ſecret Reſerves, unravels the Thoughts, purſues Sin to its faſtneſses, and pulls and brings it out, as Joſhuah the Kings to Execution. 1 Cor. 14. 25. And thus are the ſecrets of his heart made manifeſt, and ſo falling down on his face he will worſhip God, and report that God is in you of a truth. It opens Sin to the very Bowels, diſcovers the inward Filth, takes off its beautiful Diſguiſe, its ſilken Covering, and ſhows the running Ulcer under it. It diſcovers the forlorn Eſtate by Nature, and the inſufficiency of Fleſh and Blood to inherit the Kingdom of God. Let the Word be whiſpered by the Spirit in the Ears of a ruffling Sinner, and the Curtains which obſcured his Sin from his Eye, drawn open, that he may ſee what a Neſt of Devils he hath, what Aſtoniſtment will it raiſe in him! how will he ſtand amazed at his own Folly! how will he loath that ſelf, which before he ſo vehemently loved!

[2.] A Second Diſcovery is of the Neceſſity and Exiſtence of another Bottom. It diſcovers our Miſery by Nature, and our Remedy by Chriſt, the Plague brought upon the World by the firſt Adam, the Cure brought to the World by the Second cond. It proclaims a Peace concluded between God and the humbled Sinner by his Son the great Embassador, confirmed by his Blood, assured by his Resurrection. It shows him the Fountain of Death in his Sin, the Fountain of Life in Christ, the free Streams and gracious Communications of it. The Promise discovers the gracious Nature of God, his Kindness to Man, the openess of his Arms to receive him; and thus brings the soul off from it self to the Foot of God, and the Bottom of the Cross. When the Word like Fire, and the Heart like Tinder come close together, the Heart catcheth the spark and burns. From the Word Reconciliation and Peace step out, and meet the soul, it finds the Kisses of Christs Mouth inspiring it with Life, the Box of the Gospel promises broke open, the Window of the Gospel-Ark opened, and the Dove flying out of it into the desart heart. The Word proposeth things as they are in reality, and the soul knows things as it ought to know, 1 Cor. 8. 2. It understands the unavoidable necessity, and the infallible excellency of the things proposed. It sees the Rocks and Shelves wherein the danger lies, and a Compass whereby to Steer, a Road wherein to lie safe at Anchor; whereupon he relents for his sin, is astonished at divine kindness, rejoyceth at the promise, as before he trembled at the threatning, and hath far other thoughts of God than he had before: In which act divine life is breathed into the Soul.

2. The Word seems to have an active force, upon the Will tho the manner of it be very hard to conceive. 'Tis Operative in the hand of God for Sanctification: the Petition of our Saviour, John 17. 17. Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth, seems to intimate more than a bare objective relation to this work; it both shows us our spots, and cleanseth them. 'Tis a Seed: Seed, tho small, is active; no part of the Plant retains a greater efficacy; all the glory and strength of the Plant in its buds, blossoms, and fruit, are hidden in it: the Word is this Seed, which being settled in the heart, by the Power of the Spirit, brings forth this New Creature. 'Tis a glass, that not only represents the Image of God, but by the spirit changeth us into it, 2 Cor. 3. 18. A sword that pierceth the heart, Heb. 4. 12. yea, sharper than a two-edged sword, dividing asunder the soul and spirit; 'tis a fire to burn. The Spirit doth so edg the Word, that it cuts to the quick, discerns the very thoughts, insinuates into the depths of the heart, and rakes up the small Sands from the bottom, as a fierce wind doth from the bowels of the Sea. 'Tis Gods Ordnance to batter down strong holds; tho it be not a Natural Instrument to work necessarily, yet it is likened to Natural Instruments, which are active under the efficiency of the Agent which manages them; and this also, in the hand of the Spirit, works mighty effects. The sanctification of the spirit, and belief of the truth, are joyned together, one subordinate to another, 2 Thess. 2. 13. The Spirit efficiently infusing Holy habits; the Word objectively and actively: objectively as outwardly proposed; actively as inwardly engrafted: it at least excites the new infused gracious principle, and produceth our actual conversion and believing. As the pronouncing Excommunication, in the Primitive times, filled the person with terror; and no question, but upon the same acount, the Authoritative pronouncing the Pardon of sin by the Apostles, tho only declarative, might have a mighty Operation upon the Soul in filling it with joy; yet both, as managed by the Spirit, concurring with his own ordinance. So that the Word is mighty in operation, as well as clear in representation; for an activity seems to be ascribed to it by the Scripture Metaphors. The chief activity of it is seen in that likeness which it produceth in the Soul to it self. Seeds have an efficacious vertue to produce Plants of the same kind with that whose Seeds they are: so the Word produceth qualities in the heart like it self. The Law in the heart, is the Law in the Word transcribed in the soul; a graft which changeth a crabbed stock into a sweet Tree, James 1. 21. like a Seal, it leaves a likeness and impression of it self; it works a likeness to God as he is revealed in the Gospel; for we are changed into the same Image; What Image? The same image which we behold in that glass, 2 Cor. 3. 18. not his essential Image, but the Image of his glory represented in the Gospel for our imitation. The Word is the glory of God in a glass, and imprints the image of the glory of God in the heart. 'Tis a softening word, and produceth a mollified heart; an enlightning word, and causes an enlightned soul; a divine word, and engenders a divine nature; 'tis a spiritual ritual word, and produceth a ſpiritual frame; as it is Gods will, it ſubdues our will; 'tis a ſanctifying truth, and ſo makes a ſink of ſin to become the habitation of Chriſt. To conclude, this is certain, The promiſe in the word breeds principles in the heart ſuitable to it ſelf; it ſhows God a Father, and raiſes up principles of love and reverence; it ſhows Chriſt a Mediator, and raiſes up principles of faith and Deſire. Chriſt in the word, conceives Chriſt in the heart; Chriſt in the word, the beginning of grace, conceives Chriſt in the ſoul, the hope of glory.

III. The USE. 1. Information.

1. How admirable then is the power of the Goſpel! 'Tis a quickning word, not a dead; a powerful word, not a weak; a ſharp edged word, not dull; a piercing word, not cutting only skin deep, Heb. 4. 12. What welcome work doth it make, when a Door of utterance and a Door of entrance are both opened together! It hath a mighty power to out-wreſtle the principalities of Hell, and demoliſh the ſtrong holds of ſin in the heart. 'Tis a word of which it may be ſaid, as the Pſalmiſt of the Sun, Pſal. 19. 6. his circuit is to the ends of the earth, and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof. No part of the Soul is hidden from a New Birth by the warm beams of it, when directed by God to the Soul. What a powerful breath is that which can make a dead man ſtand upon his Feet and walk! If you ſhould find your Faces, by looking in a Glaſs, transformed into an Angelical beauty, would you not imagine ſome ſtrange and ſecret vertue in that Glaſs? How powerful is this Goſpel word, which changeth a Beaſt into a Man, a Devil into an Angel, a Clod of Earth into a Star of Heaven!

(1.) 'Tis above the power of all Moral Philoſophy. The wiſdom of the Heathens never equalled the Goſpel in ſuch Miracles: the Political Government of the beſt States never made ſuch alterations in the hearts of men. How excellent is that Goſpel, which hath done that for the renewing of Millions of Souls, which all the wit and wiſdom of the choiceſt Philoſophers could never effect upon one heart! All other Lectures can do no more than allay the paſſions, not change them; bring them into an order fit for human ſociety, not beget them for a Divine fellowſhip; not draw them forth out of a principle of Love to God, and fix them upon ſo high an end as the glory of God that is inviſible. This is the glorious begetting by the Goſpel, which enables not only to Moral actions, but inſpires with Divine principles and ends, and makes men highly delight in the ways they formerly abhorred. What are a few ſprinklings of changes Moral Philoſophy hath wrought in the lives of men, to the innumerable ones the Goſpel hath wrought, which were ſuch undeniable realities, that they were never openly contradicted by any of the moſt violent perſecutors of the Chriſtian Religion; and were alway the moſt urged argument for the truth of the Goſpel in the Ancient Apologies for it? How long may we read and hear meer Moral Diſcourſes, and arrive no higher than ſome reformation of life, with unchanged hearts; have ſin beaten from the out-works, yet retain the great Fort, the heart?

(2.) Above the power of the Law. The natural Law ſees not Chriſt; the Moſaical Law dimly ſhows him afar off: the Goſpel brings him near, to be embraced by us, and us to be divinely changed by him. The Natural Law makes the Model and frame of a man; the Moſaical adds ſome colours and preparations; and the Goſpel conveys ſpirit into them. The Natural Law begets us for the World; the Moſaical kills us for God; and the Goſpel raiſes up to Life. The Natural Law makes us ſerve God by Reaſon; the Moſaical by Fear; and the Goſpel by Love. 'Tis by this, and not by the Law, thoſe Three Graces, which are the main evidences of life, are ſettled in the Soul: It begets Faith, whereby we are taken off from the ſtock of Adam, and inſerted in Chriſt; Hope, whereby we flouriſh, and Love whereby we fructify. By Faith, we have life; by Hope, ſtrength; by Love, livelineſs and activity: All theſe are the fruits of the Goſpel-Adminiſtration.

(3.) Its power appears in the ſubjects it hath been inſtrumental to change. Souls bemired in the filthieſt luſts, have been made miraculouſly clean: it hath changed the hands of Rapine into inſtruments of Charity: hearts full of filth, into veſſels of purity: it hath brought down proud Reaſon to the obedience of Faith, and made active lusts to die at the foot of the Cross: it hath struck off Satan's chains, and snatcht away his captives into the liberty of Gods service. It hath changed the most stubborn hearts. The conversion of a great company of those Jewish Priests that were most violent against it, and the Author of it, is ascribed to the power of the word, Acts 6. 7. And the word of God increased, and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith. How many were raised to life by Peter's Sermon! More Souls turned, than words spoken upon Record. It subdues the Will, which cannot be conquered but by its own consent. Light can dart in upon the Understanding whether a man will or no, and flash in his face, tho he keep it in unrighteousness: Conscience will awaken and rouse them, tho men use all the arts they can to still it. The Will cannot be forced to any submission against its own consent; the power of the Gospel is seen in the conquest of the Will and putting new inclinations into that.

Faith,

(4.) The power of it is seen in the suddenness of its Operation. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, like the change at the last Resurrection, 1 Cor. 15. 51, 52. We shall all be changed, in a moment, at the last trumpet. How have troops of unmastered lusts fled at the voice of the Gospel-Trumpet, like a flock of frighted Birds, and left their long possessed mansion! How have the Affections, which have sheltered so many Enemies against God, been on the sudden weary of their residence, and abhorred what they loved, and loved what the moment before they abhorred! How have welcome temptations been upon this sudden change rejected, a despised Saviour dearly embraced, a furious Soul tamed, a darling self crucified, and a Soul open to every temptation strongly fortified against it! How frequent are the examples, in the first times of Christianity, of men that have been almost as bad as Devils one day, one hour, and joyful Martyrs the next; and as soon as ever they have been begotten by it, asserted the power of it in another New Birth by flames?

(5.) And this hath been done many times by one part, one particle of the word. One word of the Gospel, a single sentence, hath erected a Heavenly Trophy in a Soul, which all the volumes of the choicest meer Reason could never erect; one plain Scripture hath turned a face to Heaven, that never looked that way before, and made a man fix his eye there against his carnal interest. One plain Scripture hath killed a mans sins, and quickned his heart with eternal life; one word of Christ, remembred by Peter, made him weep bitterly; and two or three Scriptures pressed by the same Peter upon his hearers, pricked their hearts to the quick. How hath Hell flasht in the face of a sinner, out of a small cloud of a threatning, and Heaven shot into the Soul from one little Diamond-spark of a Promise! a little seed of the Word, like a grain of Mustard-seed, changed the Soul from a dwarfish to a tall stature! This the experience of every Age can testify.

(6.) And this power appears in the simplicity of it. * Savanarola observes, That when he neglected the preaching of the Scripture, and applied himself to Discourses of Philosophy, he gained little upon the hearts of People: but when he came to illustrate and explain the Scripture, the minds of People were wonderfully enflamed and excited to a serious frame. And that when he discoursed in a Philosophical manner, there was a non-attention, not only of the more ignorant, but the more learned sort too. But when he preached Scripture truths, he found the minds of men mightily delighted, stung with Divine truth, brought to compunction, and a reformation of their lives; which shows, saith he, the power of the word, acting more vigorously than all human Reason in the World. And indeed, Scripture and Scripture-reason, is the Wisdom of God; all other Reason is the wisdom of man. God will depress mans wisdom, and advance his own. It works as it is the word of God, which lives and abides for ever, 1 Pet. 1. 23. To wrap a fine piece of Silk about a Sword, or guild a Diamond, is to hinder the edg of the one, and the lustre of the other.

* Triumph. Crucis. lib. 2. cap. 8. p. 100.

2. Information. The Gospel is then certainly of Divine Authority. Since in this God hath set a Tabernacle for the Sun of Righteousness to move in; as the Heavens are the Tabernacle for the material Sun, Psal. 19. 4. That word that raises the dead, must needs be the word of no less than God. Our Saviours discovery of mens thoughts argued his Deity; the words diſcovery of the inward workings of the heart, and the alteration it makes there, evidenceth a Divine ſtamp upon it. God would never have made a lye ſo ſucceſsful in the World, or bleſſed it in making thoſe alterations in men, ſo comely in the eye of Moral Nature, ſo advantageous to human ſociety as the principles it inſtills into the minds of men are. A lye would never have been bleſt to be an inſtrument of ſo much vertue and truth; it would not conſiſt with the Righteouſneſs of Gods government, or his goodneſs and truth as Governour, to bring the hearts of men into ſo beautiful an order by a deceitful goſpel. What Word ever had ſuch Trophies? what Engine ever battered ſo many ſtrong holds? If the lame walk by the ſtrength of it, if the dead are raiſed by the power of it, if Lepers are cleanſed by the vertue of it, if impure Souls are ſanctified, dead Souls enlivened, are we to queſtion its Divine Authority? Should a word work ſuch wonderful effects for ſo many Ages, that had no ſtamp of Divine Authority upon it? would all thoſe Witneſſes be given by God to a meer impoſture? Let the victories it hath gained, evidence the Arm that wields it: What Sword was uſed at the firſt conqueſt of the World through grace, but this of the Spirit? How ſoon was the Devil, with all his heap of Idols, fain to fly before it! How ſoon was the Devil, with all his pack of luſts, forced to leave his habitation in the hearts of men! Is not that of Divine Authority that ſo routs the Enemies of God, puts ſin to flight, expels ſpiritual death, breaking the bands of that worſt king of terrors? That had skill to find out ſin in its lurking holes, and power to diſpoſſeſs that, and introduce ſpiritual life into the Soul? Can that be a thing leſs than Divine, that reſtores man to his due place as a creature reſpecting his Creator, referring all things to his glory? that implants the love, fear, hope of God in the mind? that makes man of a miſerable corrupt creature to become Divine? that roots out the vices of Hell, and ſtores the Soul with the vertues of Heaven? Can ſuch a Goſpel be termed leſs than a divine word of truth? If there be any word, that can ſo change the Nature, and transform Wolves into Lambs, let it have the honour and due praiſe when it is found out; but whatſoever the Atheiſm of the World is, that never felt the powerful efficacy of it, you ſurely that have felt it a mighty weapon to conquer the Devils that once poſſeſſed you, and an inſtrument to New Beget you when you lay in your blood, ſhould entertain no whiſper againſt the Divine Authority of it, but count it the Power and Wiſdom of God, as, indeed, it is in it ſelf, and in its effects upon Souls, Rom. 1. 16. 'Tis ſaid there, to be the power of God to ſalvation; upon that account the Apoſtle was not aſhamed of it, neither ſhould we; but conclude as the ſame Apoſtle ſaith, If I be not an Apoſtle, yet to you I am an Apoſtle; ſo if the Goſpel be not in it ſelf the Goſpel of God, ſurely it is ſo to you who have been renewed.

3. Information. It ſhows us the reaſon why the Goſpel is ſo much oppoſed by Satan in the World. It begets thoſe for Heaven, whom he had begotten for Hell. It pulls down his image, and ſets up Gods: it pulls the Crown off his head, the Scepter from his hand, ſnatches ſubjects from his Empire, ſtraitens his Territories, and demoliſheth his Forts, breaks his Engines, outwits his ſubtilty, makes his captives his Conquerors, and himſelf, the Conqueror, a Captive; It pulls men out of the kingdom of darkneſs, and tranſlates them into a kingdom of light, Col. 1. 13. And all this, as it is a word of truth, oppoſed to his word of deceit, whereby he hath cheated Mankind, and deceived the Nations: that we may well ſay of him, as the Apoſtle of death, O death, where is thy ſting? 1 Cor. 15. 55. O Hell, where is thy ſting? O Satan, where is thy victory? This ſlays Satan, and revives the Soul.

4. We ſee then how injurious they are to God, who would obſtruct the progreſs of the Goſpel in the World. That, as the Papiſts, would hinder the reading and preaching of the Word. Whoſe ſeed are they, but the ſeed of that Dragon, that would as well hinder the New Birth, as devour a Divine-begotten Babe as ſoon as ever it were born? Rev. 12. 4. Such would hinder the greateſt and moſt excellent Work of God upon the Souls of men, would have no ſpiritual generations for God in the World. Such envy Chriſt a ſeed, and God a family, they would deſpoil him of a family on Earth, tho they cannot of a family in Heaven. In baniſhing niſhing the Word, they would baniſh the grace of God out of the World, and leave no place, in a World drowned with ignorance, where this Dove ſhould ſet her foot. Thoſe that would take away the ſeed, would not have a ſpiritual Harveſt, but reduce Souls to a deplorable Famine; lock them up in the grave, and keep them under the bands of a ſpiritual death

5. It informs us, That the Goſpel ſhall then endure in the World, as long as God hath any to beget. Men may puff at it, but they cannot extinguiſh it; 'tis a word of Truth; and Truth is mighty, and will prevail. It was a mighty wind wherein the Spirit came upon the Apoſtles, to ſhow not only the quick and ſpeedy progreſs of the Goſpel, as upon the wings of the wind, but the mighty force of it, that men can no more ſilence the ſound of the Goſpel, than they can the bluſtring of the Wind. It ſhall prevail in all places, where God hath a Seed to bring in, a People to beget. Thoſe given to Chriſt ſhall come from far: from the eaſt, Iſa. 49. 12. and from the weſt, and from the land of Sinim (now, I think, called Damiata, in Egypt). The Word, being the Inſtrument, ſhall ſound every where, where he hath Sons and Daughters to beget for Chriſt. As long as Chriſt doth retain his Royalty, his mouth ſhall be a ſharp ſword, Iſa. 49. 2. That is the firſt thing concluded on between God and Chriſt, before they come to any further treaty; which is expreſt in that Chapter. As Chriſt ſhall be his Salvation to the ends of the Earth, ſo ſhall the Word be the Inſtrument of it to the end of the World, the poliſhed ſhaft is hid in his quiver. As he is a Light to the Gentiles, ſo the Golden Candleſtick of this Goſpel wherein this Light is ſet, ſhall endure in ſpight of Men and Devils. Since his Promiſe of a Seed to Chriſt ſtands ſure, the Word, whereby he begets a Generation for him, is as ſure as the Promiſe, and ſhall not return void, Iſa. 55. 11. but it ſhall accompliſh that which he pleaſes, and it ſhall proſper in the things whereto he ſent it. Never fear then the removal of the Goſpel out of the World, tho it be removed out of a particular place; ſince it is a Word of Truth, and an Inſtrument ordained to ſo glorious an end.

6. 'Tis a ſign then God hath ſome to beget, when he brings his Goſpel to any place. He hath a pleaſure to accompliſh, and it ſhall not return unto him void. Proſperity is entailed upon it for the doing the Work whereto he ſent it. Since then it is appointed an Inſtrument, in the hand of the Spirit, for a New Begetting, it will be efficacious upon ſome Souls where it comes; for the wiſe God would not ſend it, but to attain its main end upon ſome hearts. God never ſends his Word to any place, but it is received and reliſht by ſome as the ſavour of Life. It looſeth the bands of ſpiritual death in ſome, and binds them harder upon obſtinate ſinners: to them that periſh it is the ſavour of death. In every place the Goſpel was ſavoury to ſome, 2 Cor. 2. 14,15. God made manifeſt the ſavour of his knowledg, by the Apoſtles in every place. Wherever this Seed is ſown, the Harveſt hath been reapt, either more or leſs. 'Tis fruitful at Corinth, for there God had much People, Acts 18. 10. 'Tis not fruitleſs at Athens, tho the Harveſt was leſs; moſt mocked, but ſome believed, and but one man of Learning and worldly wiſdom, Acts 17.32,34. When God ſends John in a way of Righteouſneſs, if the Phariſees believe not, God will make a conqueſt of Publicans and Harlots, Matth. 21. 32. John came to you in the way of righteouſneſs, and you believed not: but the Publicans and Harlots believed him. The Net of the Goſpel is not caſt wholly in vain, but from the time of its coming, to the time of its removal, ſome Souls have been catcht, tho not of the moſt delicious Fiſh, yet of the worſt ſort.

7. It informs us, What an excellent thing is a New Birth! The end is more deſirable than the means: this is the chief end of all the Ordinances of God in the World; the Goſpel had never been revealed but for this intent: this is the deſign of the Spirits Operation in any Goſpel-Adminiſtration. All the lines of the Word are to draw the lineaments of grace in the heart. This muſt be a noble and excellent thing, for which chiefly the Oracles of God ſound in the World, for which ſo great a Light is ſet up in the Goſpel: All the Love of Chriſt breathes in the Goſpel: the whole Teſtament is ſealed by his Blood; the perpetual workings of the Holy Ghoſt, the preaching of the Word, the celebration of the Sacraments, are in ſubſerviency to to this end; the one to make us live; the other to make us grow. How unconceivably excellent is that, how valuable in the eye of God, how advantageous to the happineſs of men, that is, the deſign wherein ſo many Divine Operations meet!

8. What a lamentable thing is it, that ſo few ſhould be New Begotten by the Word of Truth! How many are there among us, that underſtand not what a New Begetting and Birth is, no more than Nicodemus when he diſcourſed with our Saviour! What a deplorable thing is it that the Word ſhould be preached, and ſo little regarded! that not only an hours, but many years Diſcourſes ſhould paſs away (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of our lives) like a tale that is told! Pſal. 90. 9. How miſerable is that man, that hath the objective cauſe of the New Birth, without the effective! 'Tis the Word of Truth; what will become of you, if you prefer a word of error before it? If you prefer the Devils killing ſuggeſtions before Gods reviving Oracles? What doth the Word of Truth move you to, but to a New Birth? Why will any man ſtruggle againſt it? Every reſiſtance of the Word, is a reſiſtance of God himſelf; 'tis God hews by the Prophets, Hoſ. 6. 5. 'Tis God offers to beget by the Word; every reluctance then againſt the Word, is a reluctance againſt God. The Word will either bring in a new form of grace, or a new form of torment. If the inworking of the one be rejected, the inworking of the other cannot be avoided; it will either cut the bands of a ſpiritual death, or cut the ſinews of our Souls. That piece of Timber that hath not its knots cut off for the building, ſhall be cut in pieces for the fire. A New life waits for them that obey the Goſpel; an endleſs death for them that reject it: they that obey not the goſpel, know not God, 2 Theſſ. 1.8. And what is reſerved for ſuch, but revenging flames in another World? It would be happy for ſuch, that they had never heard of a renewing Goſpel. Every Goſpel-Diſcourſe that might have been the cauſe of a ſpiritual life, and a divine cordial, if ſuckt in; Rejected, will be a bitter Drug in that Potion which ſhall be drunk in an eternal Fever.

9. Hereby you may examine whether you are New Begotten. 'Tis the Word of Truth whereby God begets. In this Word he opens the glory of his grace, and through this he conveys the power of his grace. The conqueſts of Chriſt were to be made by the Word, and it was ſo ſettled at the firſt conſtitution of him as Mediator and Redeemer, *Iſa.*49.2. He hath made my mouth like a ſharp ſword. It was by this the hearts of men were to be conquered. And what heart is not ſubdued by the Sword of his Mouth, is not ſubdued by the Power of his Arms. Some Word or other was the Inſtrument to beget you, (I ſpeak of people grown up). The Apoſtles Interrogation is a ſtrong Negative. There's no believing without hearing, Rom. 10. 14. Hearing goes before believing: he lays it down as a certain concluſion from his former arguing, So then faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. If you conclude your ſelves New Begotten, how came you by it? Is it by the Word, or no? That is Gods ordinary means: If you be not renewed by this, 'tis not likely you are renewed at all: no other Inſtrument hath God ordinarily appointed to this end. Afflictions may plow men for it, but the Word is the only Seed that renews the face of the Earth. All falſe notions or preſumptions of the New Birth muſt be brought to this touchſtone: 'tis a miſhapen and monſtrous birth, that is not by a ſeed of the ſame kind: the Law in the heart hath no ſeed of the ſame Nature with it to engender it, but the Law in the Word, that Word which we properly call Goſpel; the Word of Truth, not the word of Philoſophy, which is a word of uncertainty; Gods Word, not Plato's word. If a Thouſand Beaſts had been conſumed by common fire, not one of them had been an Holocauſt, a grateful Sacrifice, unleſs conſumed by the fire of the Altar which came down from Heaven. Moral wiſdom is not that fire, hath not that eminent deſcent from Heaven; 'tis not that ſpeech from Heaven whereby our Saviour is ſaid yet to ſpeak, Heb. 12. 25. A little ſpark kindled by the voice of Chriſt from Heaven, from whence he yet ſpeaks in the Goſpel, is more worth than all the Bonfires in the World, kindled by the ſparks of Moral wiſdom. Thoſe qualifications which grow of their own accord, without the Word, are like the Herbs which ſprout in wild places without any Tillage, which are of a different kind than what are planted and watered in a Garden, and over-looked by the care of man: If your dispositions, you boast of, were not planted by the Word, how fair soever they may look, they are but a wild kind of Fruit. Therefore it concerns you to look back upon your selves, think what word it was whereby you were begotten. If no particular word can be remembred, if your Regeneration were wrought insensibly in your younger years, examine what suitableness there is between the Word and your Souls, whether your hearts are turned into the nature of it. The measures of grace are according to the measures of the word: If you cannot remember the first glorious entrance of it, you must see for the rich dwelling of it. An Inhabitant may enter into our Houses unseen, but he cannot dwell there without our knowledg; the lines of the Word will be seen in the heart, tho the particular Pencil whereby they were wrought, may not be remembred.

10. It instructs Ministers how to preach. 'Tis the Word of Truth, the Gospel that must be the main matter of our preaching, and those things in the Gospel that have the greatest tendency to the new begetting men, and working this great change in them, and driving it on to greater maturity. The Instrument of Conversion is not barely the letter of the Word, but the sense and meaning of it, rationally impress upon the Understanding, and closely applied to the conscience. The opening the Word is the life of it, and the true means of Regeneration. If any man would turn his Servant or Child from a course of sin, would he discourse to them of the nature of the Sun and Stars, their Magnitude, Motions, Number and Qualities; this would be nothing to the true purpose; his way would be to show them the deformity and danger of their sin. The Word of Truth is Gods Instrument, and it should be ours; what is the end of the Word, should be the end of our preaching. It was through the Gospel, the Apostle begat the Corinthians: not that the preaching of the Law is excluded, but it must be preached in order to the Gospel as a preparation to it. Whatsoever in the Word of Truth doth prepare for the new Birth, produce it, cherish it, preserve it, center in one and the same end. How careful and industrious should we be to beget children to God, that we may present them, and say, here am I, and the children, which thou hast given me. The new bith will be your joy, and crown, and you will be ours, 1 Thes. 2. 19, 20. Aarons Sons are called the generations of Moses, as well as Aaron, Numb. 3. 1. tho none of his natural Sons are reckoned. Aarons by Natural Generation, Moses's perhaps by a spiritual Regeneration and Instruction.

USE 2. Of Exhortation.

1. Highly glorifie God for the Word of Truth which is so great an Instrument. How thankful should we be, for an invention to secure our Estates from consuming, Houses from Burning, Bodies from dying! The Gospel, the Word of Truth doth much more than this, 'tis an Instrument to beget a soul for God; an Instrument whereby God makes himself our Father, and us his Children. It is but an Instrument, let not the glory be given to the Instrument, but to the Agent. As it is an Instrument, let it have part of your Affection; but nothing of the Glory, that belongs to God; love the Truth, but glorifie and bless the God of Truth, that hath ordained it to be so excellent an Instrument.

(1.) Bless God in your hearts. [1.] That ever you had the Word of Truth made known to you. How many Millions sit in a spiritual darkness, without so much as the means of a new begetting! Millions never heard the Sound of it, nor ever will. [2ly.] Much more that it hath been successful to any of you, Have you any thing in your spirits that bears witness to the Truth of it? When you read or hear it, do you find something of kin to it in your souls, and feel something within you rise up and call it blessed: how should you read and hear it, with eruptions of thankfulness to God for it, hearty embraces of it, and fervent ejaculations to God to work more in you by the Power of it! Why hath the World grappled with any of our souls, and not with others? arrested any of you in a course of Sin, and left others to walk in their own ways, to run down silently like the streams of a River, till swallowed up in an Ocean of Death. The Apostle Paul heard the voice, others with him only a sound of Words, Act. 9. 7. Act. 22. 9. some have heard a sound of Words without the voice of God in it, while others have heard a Divine Voice in a humane sound. The Wind hath blown upon many, God in that Wind only upon few: ſome have received air, whilſt others have received ſpirit and life; ſome have only the body of the word, while others feel the ſpirit and power of it in their hearts; ſhall not God be glorified for this? Had it not been for him, and his ſpirit, words had been only words and wind to all as well as to ſome.

(2.) Glorifie God in your lives. As you feel the power of it in your hearts, let others ſee the brightneſs and efficacy of it in your actions. The new born creature ſhould principally aim at the glory of God, ſince the inſtrument whereby he is begotten, was firſt publiſht for the Glory of God in the higheſt, Luk. 2. 14. VVhat is produced by the efficacy of ſuch an inſtrument, muſt have the ſame end, viz. the glory of God in the practiſe of holineſs. A holy Goſpel imprinted can never leave the heart and life unholy. A Goſpel coyned for the glory of God, when wrought in the heart; can never ſuffer the ſoul to aim chiefly at ſelf, but at the great end for which the goſpel was firſt diſcovered; the goſpel of holineſs and truth in the heart, wil engender ſincerity and holineſs in the life.

2. Prize the Word of Truth, which works ſuch great Effects in the Soul. Value that as long as you live, which is the Cord whereby God hath drawn any of you out of the Dungeon of Death. Never count that fooliſhneſs by which God hath inſpired you with the choiceſt Wiſdom; and never count that weakneſs, which hath made any of you of dead, living; of darkneſs, light; and of miſerable, happy by grace. If a ſoul be worth a world, and therefore to be prized, how precious ought that to be which is an Inſtrument to beget a ſoul for the felicity of another World! How ſhould the Law of Gods mouth be better to us, than thouſands of gold and ſilver! Pſal. 119. 72. How ſhould we prize that Word whereby any of us have ſeen the Glory of God in his Sanctuary, the glory of God in our ſouls! When Corruptions are ſtrong, 'tis an Engine to batter them. When our hearts are hard, 'tis a hammer to break them; when our ſpirits are impoſtumated, it is a ſword to cut them. When our hearts are cold, it is a fire to enflame them. When our ſouls are faint, it is a cordial to refreſh them; it begins a New Birth, and maintains it. 'Tis the ſeed from whence we Spring, 1 Pet. 1. 23. the glaſs, wherein we ſee the glory of God, 2 Cor. 3. 18. By the Waters of the Sanctuary we have both Meat for Nouriſhment, and Medicines for Cure, from the tree that grows by its Streams, Ezek. 47. 12. The fruit thereof ſhall be for meat, and the leaf, for medicine. Have a great regard to it, keep it in the midſt of your hearts, for it is life, Prov. 4 21, 22.

3. Pray and endeavour for the Preſervation and Succeſs of the Word of Truth. Were there a Medicine that could preſerve life, how chary ſhould we be in preſerving that? The goſpel is the tree, whoſe leaves cure the nations, Revel. 22. 2. It was a Bleſſing God endued the Creatures with, when he bid them increaſe and multiply, Gen. 1. 22. It was an evidence that he intended to preſerve the world. If the Goſpel get ground in the hearts of men, 'tis an evidence it ſhall continue in ſpite of the oppoſitions of men or devils.

4. Wait upon God in the Word. Where there is a Revelation on God's part, there muſt be a hearing on ours. Sit down therefore at the feet of God, and receive of his Words, Deut. 33. 3. (1.) Deſpiſe it not: he that contemns it, never intends to be new begotten, ſince he ſlights the means of Gods appointment; he that intends an end, will uſe all means proportionably to his deſires for that end. He that contemns it, never was renewed; habitual Grace being wrought by it, cannot but in its own Nature have a great affection to it. He that loves Chriſt, cannot but love all the Methods of his Operations. (2.) Deſpiſe it not becauſe it is but an Inſtrument. Say not, becauſe God is the chief Agent, therefore you need not come to the Word. Our Saviour knew that man did not live by bread alone, but by every word, that proceeds out of the mouth of God, Mat. 4. 4. Did he therefore neglect means for preſerving his life? Becauſe God gives the increaſe, ſhould not the husbandman Plow and Sow? If God doth not work upon you by the means, you can have no rational hopes he will do it any other way: What tho Miniſters can only ſpeak to the ear? John Baptiſt could do no more, whoſe Miniſtry was notwithſtanding glorious, in being the forerunner of Chriſt. To neglect it therefore is to double-bar your hearts againſt the entrance of grace, and ſlight the truth which Chriſt brought down from the boſom of God.

[1.] Ne-

[1.] Never did God appoint any other way but this: Miracles were never appointed but as attendants upon this: Miracles come after teachings in the great gifts to the Church, 1 Cor. 12. 7, 8, 9, 10. Firſt, the manifeſtation of the ſpirit, the word of wiſdom and the word of knowledg, then gifts of healing, and Miracles. Miracles are ceaſed, as being not abſolutely neceſſary; but the Miniſtry of the word will laſt to the end of the World. By the Prophets God brings ſouls out of a ſtate of Bondage, and by the Prophets he preſerves them in a ſtate of Grace, Hoſ. 12. 13. By a Prophet the Lord brought Iſrael out of Egypt, and by a Prophet was he preſerved. Miracles and the Reſurrection of one from the dead, was never appointed under the legal Adminiſtration, but Moſes and the Prophets, Luk. 16. 13 Theſe were the ordinary means, and if theſe did not work, Miracles were ineffi cacious.

[2.] God never made any promiſe but in this way. God promiſed to circumciſe their hearts to love him with all their ſoul, but in the way of hearing his voice, and obſerving his ſtatutes, Deut. 30. 6, 10, 11. He meets ſouls only that remember him in his way, Iſa. 64. 5. And to the preaching of the Goſpel only our Saviour promiſed his preſence to the end of the world, Mat. 28. 20. the promiſe is perpetually and immovably throughout all Ages of the World fixed to this command. The promiſing his preſence to the preaching of the Goſpel, implies that his preſence ſhall be enjoyed only by attendance on the Goſpel. The gracious workings of the Spirit are by this; they are the words of Chriſt brought to remembrance by him, whereby he doth ſo mightily operate.

[3.] No other way did God apparently work by formerly. In the time when God did eſpecially manifeſt himſelf to his people by Viſions, Dreams, and Apparitions of Angels, and in thoſe ways made revelations to them, he converted not any either from a ſtate of Nature, or from a particular fall, but by the Word. Manaſſeh's converſion was by the word of the Seers, 2 Chron. 33. 18. Nor was David reclaim'd after his fall by an immediate Viſion, but by the Miniſtry of Nathan. Peter by a look, which revived the Word ſpoken to him, Luke 22. 61. The Angel that attended the Eunuch, Acts 8. 26. made no impreſſions upon him, but was ordered to direct Philip thither to explain to him the Myſtery of the Goſpel; and the Spirit particularly orders him to go near the Chariot, ver. 29. but makes no impreſſions upon him but by the Miniſtry of the Word. An Angel is ſent to direct Philip, but Philip is ſent to diſcover Chriſt. An Angel is ſent to Cornelius, not to preach the Goſpel, but to direct him where to ſend for a Teacher, Acts 10. 3, 5, 6. the Spirit prepares Peter to go, v. 19, 20. and likewiſe prepares Cornelius for his reception. God prepares the Jaylor by an Earthquake, but renews him not but by the Miniſtry of Paul, Acts 16. 26, 32. In the times of the Goſpel there was firſt to be a teaching of Gods ways, before a walking in his paths, Iſa. 3. 3. The Arm that made Heaven and Earth, makes the new heart and new ſpirit, but by a word as well as them. The Net of the Goſpel is only appointed to catch the fiſh; tho the fiſh that had the Tribute-money in its mouth, was immediately for the ſervice of Chriſt, yet he would not uſe his power to bring it to the ſhore, without Peter's caſting out the Net. Chriſt firſt brings ſouls to the Net, and by the Net to himſelf.

[4.] God hath always bleſt this, more or leſs. Moſes Rod in Moſes his hand hath wrought Miracles; Chriſts Rod in the Spirits hand hath wrought greater: the New creations have been always by it, and the after-breathings of the Spirit through it. By this he makes men righteous, holy, ſincere, in a way of eminency, as the morning-light which encreaſeth to a perfect day, and no longer as a morning cloud which quickly vaniſheth, Hoſ. 6. 5. which ſome underſtand of a Goſpel promiſe mixed with that diſcourſe. How hath the light of the beauty and excellency of God flaſhing upon the Underſtanding from the glaſs of the Goſpel, filled the Will and Affections of many with deſire and love to that glory it repreſents, and that ſtate it offers! The very leaves of it, the Profeſſion, hath healed Nations, and brought Humane Societies into order, and the fruit of it hath been the cure of many a ſoul. Wait therefore for the falling of this fruit. Grace is a beam from the Sun of Righteouſneſs, but darted through the Medium of Goſpel Air; a Pearl engendred by the blood of Chriſt, but only in the Goſpel Sea. It hath not been without its bleſſing to others; it hath raiſed men from death to life. Is the Virtue of the Seed expired? or the ſtrength of the Lord grown feeble? If ever therefore you would have the Image of God in inward impreſſions of grace, and outward expreſſions of Holineſs, you muſt look for your transformation in and by the Goſpel. All the other knowledg in the world cannot give a man a right notion of the new birth, much leſs produce it. Look not after Enthuſiaſms, nor expect it in new ways; to the Law and to the Teſtimony, way of Gods appointing. The Jews could not expect an Angel to bring them ſoundneſs of limbs, but by the Pool; nor we the Spirit to infuſe grace into us, but by the Word. Tis from the Mercy-ſeat only God ſpeaks to Iſrael. Wiſdoms gates are the places where to expect her Alms, Prov. 8. 34. Wait therefore upon the Word, wherein the Spirit of God travels with ſouls.

2. How ſhall we wait upon the Word, ſo as that we may be new begotten by it?

1. Wait upon the Word frequently. Be often in reading and hearing, and meditating on it. Men ſet upon theſe works, as if they were afraid they ſhould be new born too ſoon, or prejudiced in their concerns and contentments in the world; as if they feared the mighty wind of the Spirit ſhould blow away their beloved droſs too faſt; as if it were a matter of indifferency to be like their Maker. If you had gold not throughly refined, would you not caſt it again and again into the fire? If filth not wholly purged, would you not uſe the Fountain again and again? Thoſe that are in the Sun are coloured and heated by it, and have things more viſible: Thoſe that are much in the Word, ſee more of the Wonders, feel more of the warmth, receive deeper impreſſions, are endued with the grace and holineſs of truth, have a purer flame in their affections for Heaven. How do you know but an opportunity miſſed, might have been the beſt Market? How do you know but the Spirit might have joyned himſelf to the word, as Philip to the Eunuchs Chariot while he was reading? While Peter yet ſpake thoſe words, ('tis ſaid) the Holy Ghoſt fell upon all them which heard the word, Act. 10. 44. What Words? Even the Marrow of the Goſpel. v. 43. that through his name, whoſoever believes in him ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins. God may have a portion ready for us, and we go without it, becauſe we are not ready to receive it. We muſt not expect a Raven to bring us food upon a bed of ſluggiſhneſs. Do it the rather, becauſe you may live to ſee ſuch times, wherein Bibles may be as much ſhut, as they are now open, wherein (as in former times) you may be willing to give a large parcel of your goods for one Chapter of it. We read of ſome that have given a load of Hay for one Chapter of St. James. Be frequent in waiting upon the Word.

2. Let your Hearts be fixt upon that which is the great end of the word. New begettings are the end of the Goſpel; Come then with minds fixed upon this end, and deſires for it. Regard it not as a meer ſound of words, but as an Inſtrument of the nobleſt Operations in the Soul. If this be the great work of the Goſpel, we ought to read and hear it with deſires to be enlivened where we are dead, quickned where we are dull; be made new creatures, where we are yet but old; taller Creatures, where we are yet but of a low ſtature; not only to have our underſtandings inſtructed but your hearts changed. To enquire after God to behold the beauty of the Lord, Pſal. 27. 4. that we may be transformed into it: to look for God who is in the word of a truth; for the kingdom of God comes nigh to you in the Goſpel; that was the Word, that Chriſt when he ſent his diſciples out firſt to preach, bid them ſpeak unto men, Luk. 12. 9. Men uſually get no more, than they come to ſeek. He that goes to market, intending only to lay out his mony upon ſome trifle, returns for the moſt part with no better commodity. Zacheus got upon the tree to meet with Chriſt, and ſo noble an end wanted not an excellent ſucceſs; that day came ſalvation into his houſe, Luk. 19. 9. When the Jews did not mind the end of Sacrifices, and regarded not the things God principally looked for in them, God ſlighted them, and they went without any divine operations upon their ſouls by them, Iſa. 1. 11, 13, 14. When our ends ſuit the Goſpel, then are we like to feel goſpel influences. We come with wrong ends, and therefore return with unchanged hearts; we come for a ſound, and go away with no more. Our end therefore in coming ſhould be to gain this new begetting ting, or increaſe the growth of the new Creature; our ends are not elſe conformable to the ends of God in it; therefore, as the earth ſucks in the rain, and the roots in the earth attract it unto themſelves that they may bring forth fruit; ſo ſhould we open our hearts to receive the ſhowers of the Word with an aim at a new Birth, or a further growth. As this is finis operis, ſo it ſhould be finis operantis.

3. Mind the Word in the ſimplicity of it, and that in it, which tends to that end. Some men are more taken with Colours, than truth; more enamored with words than matter, fill themſelves only with air, and neglect the Subſtance. Such are like thoſe that are pleaſed with the Colours of the Rainbow, more than with the light reflected, or the Covenant of God repreſented by it. No man is renewed by Phraſes and Fancies, thoſe are only as the Oyl to make the Nails of the Sanctuary drive in the eaſier, in Eccleſ. 12.11. Acceptable words joined with words of truth, are as the faſtening of the nails, both given by one ſhepherd. Words there muſt be to make things intelligible; illuſtrations to make things delightfully intelligible, but the ſeminal vertue lies not in the huſk and skin, but in the Kernel, the reſt dies, but the ſubſtance of the Seed lives, and brings forth fruit; ſeparate therefore between the huſk and the Seed. The Word doth not work as it is elegant, but as it is divine, as it is a word of Truth Illuſtrations are but the ornaments of the Temple, the Glory of it is in the Ark and Mercy-Seat. 'Tis not the engraving upon the ſword cuts, but the edg; nor the Key, as it is guilt, opens, but as fitted to the Wards. Your faith muſt not ſtand in the wiſdom of men, but in the power of God, 1 Cor. 2. 5. 'tis the juice of the meat, and not the garniſhings of the diſh, that nouriſhes. Was it the Word as a pleaſant Song, or as a divine ſeed that changed the ſouls of old, made Martyrs ſmile in the midſt of Flames? It was the knowledg of the excellency of the promiſe, and not wordly Eloquence made them with ſo much courage ſlight Gibbets, Stakes, Executioners; they had learned the truth as it is in Jeſus.

4. Mind the word as the word of truth. Take it not upon the account of perſons, value it for its own ſake, as it is a word of truth. 'Tis neither Paul nor Apollos, but God that gives the encreaſe. Value it not by men; 'tis no matter what the Pipe is, whether Gold or Lead, ſo the water be the water of life; the word hath an edg, becauſe it is the word of God, not becauſe it is whetted upon this or that Grindſtone. Some will ſcarce receive a Truth, but from one they fancy; as if a man ſhould be ſo fooliſh as to refuſe a Medicine which will preſerve his life, becauſe it is not preſented to him in a glaſs which he hath a particular eſteem of. To receive or refuſe any Truth upon the account of the perſon, is a ſign of carnality, and the way to remain carnal; upon this account the Apoſtle pronounceth the Corinthians again and again carnal, 1 Cor. 3. 4. Deſpiſe not the meaneſt Inſtrument. Our Saviour in his Agony was comforted by an Angel, much more inferior to him who was the Lord of Angels, than any Miniſter can be to a Hearer. Mr. Peacock being Fellow of a Colledg, in great deſpair, when ſome Miniſter had been diſcourſing with him, and prevailing nothing, offering to pray with him; No, ſaith he, diſhonour not God ſo much, as to pray for ſuch a Reprobate. A young Scholar of his ſtanding by, anſwered, Surely a Reprobate could not be ſo tender of Gods honour; which words prevailed more to the bringing him to believe, than allthat the other had ſpoken. When men turn their backs upon the Word, becauſe the mouth doth not pleaſe them, they turn their backs upon God, Joh. 13. 20. and perhaps upon their own mercy. When any have reſpect to the man more than the Word, God will leave them to the operation of the man, and withdraw his own.

5. Attend upon the Word with an eye to God. Look not for the New birth only from the Word. It was the folly of the Jews, to think to find life in the Scriptures without Chriſt; life in the Letter, without the Original of life, Joh. 5. 39, 40. Except the Lord build the houſe (that is, the Temple) they labour in vain that build it, Pſ. 127. 1. Without God all our endeavours to build a ſpiritual Temple, are like the ſtrivings to waſh a Blackamore white. No believing the word, tho preached a thouſand times, without Gods revealing his arm, Iſa. 53. 1. 'Tis not the File that makes the Watch, but the Artiſt by it. No Inſtrument can act without the virtue of ſome ſuperior Agent: 'Tis the Altar that ſanctifies the Gold, and Chriſt that ſanctifies his Ordinances. Paul may plant by his Doctrine and Miracles; Apollos may water by his affectionate Eloquence; but God alone can give the encreaſe by his Almighty breath. Man ſows the ſeed, but God only can make it fructify. The richeſt ſhowers cannot make the ground fruitful, but as Inſtruments under Gods bleſſing. 'Tis not ſaid the Prophets did hew them, but God by his Prophets, Hoſ. 6. 5. Then have your eyes fixed upon God. 'Tis the word of his lips, not of mans, whereby any are ſnatcht out of the paths of the deſtroyer, as well as kept from them. Man's teachings direct us to Chriſt; Gods teachings bring us to Chriſt; Man brings the Goſpel, at moſt, to the heart, the Spirit only brings the Gospel into the heart; Man puts the key in the Lock, God only turns it, and opens the heart by it; Man brings the word of truth, and God the truth of the word into the ſoul; Man brings the objective word of grace, God alone the attractive grace of the word. If where there is already the new birth, the ſoul muſt be fixed on God for further openings, much more where it is not yet wrought. David had an excellent knowledg, yet cryes out for the opening of his eyes to ſee the wonders in Gods Law. 'Tis God only can knock off the fetters of a ſpiritual death, and open the Iron gates, that the King of glory may enter with ſpiritual life. If any therefore will regard the word more than as an inſtrument, as a Partner with God in his operation, he may juſtly leave you to the weakneſs of that, and deny the influx of his own ſtrength.

(1.) Before you wait upon God in any Ordinance: Plead with him as Moſes did in another caſe, To what purpoſe ſhould I go, unleſs thy preſence go with me? What can the Letter do without the Spirit, or words without that powerful wind to blow them into my heart? None can have life by the bread of the word, without the bleſſing of God; as man brings the graft, deſire God to inſert it. As God hath promiſed gifts to his Church, ſo he promiſed his own teachings, Heb. 8. 11. All ſhall know me from the leaſt to the greateſt: Urge God with his own promiſe, deſire him to open his mouth, and to open your hearts; his mouth to breathe, and your hearts to receive. When men overlook God, he makes a ſeparation between the word and his own quickning preſence. The end doth not neceſſarily ariſe from the means; and therefore in the uſe of them there muſt be a fiduciary recourſe to the grace of God. In the time too of waiting upon God, let there be ejaculations, let your hearts be continually lift up to God, let your expectations be from him; we ſhould be like Jacob's Ladder, tho the feet ſtand in Bethel, the Houſe of God, our heads ſhould reach to heaven in all our attendances.

2. After you have been at the word. God is the great Seer, Chriſt the great Prophet; we ſhould go to him for the repetition of things upon our hearts; we may have that wind afterwards by prayer, which we felt not ſo ſtiff at hearing. The operations of truth, as well as the knowledg of it, are beſt fetch'd out upon our knees by earneſt prayer. How do you know but while you are praying, the fire may deſcend from Heaven, and transform you into a divine likeneſs? Thus you will make God the Alpha and Omega of his own Ordinances, in your acknowledgments of him, as well as he is ſo in himſelf.

(3.) Reſt not in bare hearing. Look for God in the Ordinances as he is the living God, who lives in himſelf, and gives life to men, and means, Pſal. 84. 2. My ſoul longs for the living God: there is a ſtrength and glory of God to be longed for in the ſanctuary: no means are to be reſted in or uſed, but as they lead to ſuch an end for which they are fitted. To reſt in the word heard, or read, is to make that our end, which God hath appointed only as the means. The Word is ſweet, but as it is the Pipe through which God and his Image, God and his grace, which is ſweeter and higher than all Ordinances, ſtream to the Soul. Rejoyce in the Word, but only as the wiſe men did in the Star, as it led them to Chriſt. The Word of Chriſt is precious; but nothing more precious than himſelf, and his formation in the Soul. Reſt not in the Word, but look through it to Chriſt.

6. Attend upon the Word ſubmiſſively. It is not the hearer, but the humble hearer, ſhall find the power of the Word working in him. As it is not the ſpeaking a Prayer but the wreſtling, and ſtrugling of the heart with God in Prayer, receives a gracious anſwer. The humble are the fitteſt ſubjects for grace, thoſe that lie upon the ground with their mouth cloſe to the Pipe. He gives grace to the humble. Reſign your ſelves up to the Word, ſtruggle not againſt the battery it makes, nor the wind that blows: receive every ſtroke till you ſee the frame of the New Creature. Let a ſilence be impoſed upon the fleſh, and ſelf bowed down to the duſt, while Chriſt the great Prophet ſpeaks. Be not peeviſh, nor expoſtulate with Gods Soveraignty, as they did, Iſa. 58. 3. Wherefore have we faſted, and thou ſeeſt not? wherefore have we afflicted our ſoul, and thou takeſt no knowledg? Acknowledg God a free Agent, ſubmit to his Soveraign pleaſure. A truly humble bow to God will prevail more than all the ſawcy expoſtulations of proud fleſh. In hearing the Word, pick not here a part, and there a part, as ſutes your humour, but conſider what really is Gods Will, and ſubmit to it; Cornelius was of this reſigning temper when the Spirit deſcended upon him, Acts 10. 33. We are here preſent before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. An humble Soul, ſaith Kempis, by the grace of God, underſtands more the reaſons of eternal truth, in a trice, than a man that hath ſtudied many years in the Schools, becauſe he hath the operations of them in his heart.

7. Receive the Word with Faith. I mean, not the Faith which is a part of the New Creature, but an aſſent. There is a rational belief, that it is the word of truth, which is in many men that have no juſtifying Faith. Actuate this. The believing the word to be ſo, to be the Word of God, is the firſt ſtep to the receiving advantage by it. No man will ever comply with that which he believes not to be true, or believes not himſelf to be concerned in. 'Tis ſaid by the Apoſtle, Heb. 4. 1, 2. The word profited not, becauſe it was not mixed with faith. There was truth in the Word, but no firm aſſent to it in their hearts. There can never be a full compliance with Chriſt, in order to a New Birth, if there be not firſt an aſſent to the Word. Where there is a defect in the firſt concoction, there will alſo be a defect in the ſecond and third. If you do not believe with Naaman, that the Waters of Jordan are appointed by God for this end, and not thoſe of Abana and Pharphar, you will never be rid of the ſpiritual death, no more than he would have been of his Leproſie. You never ſee God in his Sanctuary, nor feel God in his Power for want of this. Surely as this made our Saviour ſuſpend the power of his Miracles, by the ſame reaſon it makes him ſuſpend the power of his Word, Matth. 13. 58. He did not many mighty works there, becauſe of their unbelief. If men did believe there were a place where they might enjoy all Earthly delights in a higher meaſure, at an eaſier rate, how ambitious would they be of putting themſelves into a ſtate to enjoy them? If men did believe the repor of the Goſpel, would they not be full of great undertakings for the enjoyment of the proffers of it? But the Goſpel, more is the pity, hath not naturally that credit with men that a fiction hath.

8. Obſerve much the motions upon your hearts while you are attending upon God. If the Sails be not skilfully ordered to catch and hold, and make the beſt improvement of the wind that blows, much of the wind will paſs beſide it, and the Ship lag many leagues behind, or lie wind-bound a long time before it receive a like gale. God hath particular ſeaſons, Heb. 4. 7. To day if you will hear his voice. Sometimes the Spirit is more urging than at another time, and ſends his motions thicker upon the heart; let thoſe times be obſerved; and when there are motions on the Spirits part, let there be compliance on yours. Catch a promiſe when the Spirit opens: bind your ſelves to an obſervance of the Precept when the Spirit ſhows it: let Gods drawing be anſwered with the Souls running: obſerve what precious Oil is dropped through the Golden pipes upon the heart, and ſpill it not; take notice of what ſparks light upon you, and loſe not the warmth they may convey to your hearts; what beam of light breaks in, let it not be puft out by a temptation or diverſion: obſerve what is afforded to make your hearts burn, and your corruptions and ſinful inclinations cool. Regard not ſo much your Affections, as what touches are upon your Wills; Affections may ariſe from a natural conſtitution of the Body, ſome tempers being more eaſily excited to exert Affections than others; yet they are not always, nor altogether, to be diſregarded; nor are they always to be lookt upon as Ciphers; but, eſpecially, ſee what influence the Word hath upon the Underſtanding and Will chiefly, as well as upon the Affections. Judg of your ſelves by the inward power and might, by the breakings in of the light, and the ſpritely ſtrain of your Wills. The might of the Spirit works in the inner man, Eph. 3. 16. not in a part of the inner man, but in every faculty. See what compunction there is in your Souls, what ſtrong deſires in the Will. Bare Affections are but like a ſponge, which will by a light compreſſion let out that water which it ſo eaſily ſuckt up: men may receive the word with gladneſs without having any root of ſpiritual grace, Mark 4. 16, 17. When men regard only particular affections, they uſually ſit down in thoſe ſparks of their own kindling, and look not after a thorough change. Or if you find ſuch affections, ſee whether thoſe affections are raiſed rather by the truth than the dreſs; whether they be kindled by the conſideration of thoſe Attributes of God, his Mercy, Goodneſs, Wiſdom, Holineſs, which have a great hand in the New Birth; whether by the deep conſideration of our Saviours Death and Reſurrection, the great deſigns of the Goſpel; whether the motion be orderly; firſt, Underſtanding, then Will, and afterwards Affections: this is a genuine flame, kindled by a fire which comes down from Heaven, working upon all the parts of the Soul: a bare work upon the Affections is rather a ſtrange and carnal fire. Obſerve, therefore, what tender blades bud and ſhoot forth in the higher faculties of your Souls.

9. Preſs the Word much upon your hearts after hearing. How great is the neglect of this application of the Word of Truth? Men will ſpend hours in hearing, and not one minute in ſerious reflections; as if the word in their Ears, or a receit in their Pockets, could cure the Diſeaſe in the heart; this is the Worm at the root of all our ſpiritual advantages. What is only daſht upon the fancy, or lightly coloured, may ſoon be waſht off. The Soil muſt be made tenacious of the Seed by the Harrow of Meditation, which hides it in the heart, and covers it with Earth; for want of being laid deep, and banded by ſerious Meditation, the ſeed takes no root, becauſe there is not much Earth about it, Mark 4. 5, 6, 16. How can food nouriſh your body, unleſs it be concocted by natural heat? or ſpiritual food enliven you, unleſs concocted by Meditation? The Shepherds after they had heard the news of Chriſts Incarnation from the mouth of the Angel, reflected upon their duty, Luke 2. 14, 15. Words muſt be kept ſome time upon the mind, and rolled over and over again, before they can work any ſenſible change, becauſe the heart naturally hath an averſneſs to God and his Word: As the ſtrongeſt Phyſick muſt be in the Body ſome time, and be wrought upon by the Stomach, before it can work upon the humors. How do you know, but while you are muſing, a divine fire may ſparkle in your ſouls, and Chriſt riſe in your hearts? Grapes muſt be preſſed to get out the Wine that will chear the heart. Put the queſtion to your Soul, in every part you can remember, as our Saviour did to Martha, John 11. 25, 26. I am the reſurrection and the life. Believeſt thou this? There is ſuch a thing as the New Birth: believeſt thou this? 'Tis neceſſary to be had: believeſt thou this? God only can work it: believeſt thou this? And ſo for every divine truth. Leave not thy Soul to its vagaries; hold it on to the work, preſs it to give a poſitive anſwer whether it believe this or that truth. Put not your ſelves off with a ſlight anſwer to the queſtion, but examine the reaſons of your belief of it. Look upon your ſelves as really concerned in the word you hear; otherwiſe it will no more affect you, than if you ſhould tell an ambitious man, gaping after preferment in England, of a wealthy place fallen in Spain, which will not engage his thoughts, as being out of his ſphere, and at too great a diſtance. To have a liſtleſneſs to ſuch duties, or any ſpiritual duty, after hearing the word, which is the food of the ſoul, ſhows a great corruption within; as the heavineſs in the body, and corrupt vapours in the mouth, ſhow the badneſs of concoction.

10. Labour to have the ſavour of truth upon your ſpirits, as well as the notions of it in your heads. The Kingdom of God conſiſts not in word, but in power; the New Birth conſiſts not in a bare notion, but in ſpiritual ſavour. The higheſt notional knowledg comes far ſhort of experimental: the knowledg a blind man hath of light and colours, by hearing a Lecture upon it, is but meer ignorance to the knowledg knowledg he would have if his eys were opened. Endeavour to have the ſavour of Chriſts ointments, Cant. 1. 3. and inward ſence exerciſed, Heb. 5. 14. The Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth knowledg and judgment, Phil. 1. 9. Knowledg is a notion in the head; judgment, or αἴσθησις, is the ſence or ſavour of it in the heart. What a miſerable thing is it to ſpend our lives without a taſte? Knowledg is but as a Cloud that intercepts the beams of the Sun, and doth not advantage the Earth, unleſs melted into drops, and falling down into the boſom of it: let the knowledg of the Word of the Truth drop down in a kindly ſhower upon your hearts, let it be a knowledg of the word heated with love.

I might have added more; bring plain hearts to the word, put off all diſguiſes. Moſes took off his veil when he went into the preſence of God. Bring not fleſh and blood as your counſellors, theſe are no friends to a New Birth. And come with love; love makes the ſtrongeſt impreſſions upon the Soul.

It might here be alſo worth the enquiry, Why ſo few are renewed by the Word of Truth in this Age? Why the Goſpel has no more powerful effect among us, as in former Ages? 'Tis a wonder to ſee a man begotten by the Word, as it was a wonder for the woman to bring forth a man-child, Rev. 12. When our Saviour was brought into the Temple, not a man but Simeon knew him: no queſtion but many Phariſees, Doctors and Gentlemen, were walking there, but none but Simeon knew him, to whom he was revealed, Luke 2. 22, 25. the reſt lookt upon him as an ordinary Child. Formerly men flocked to Chriſt as the Doves to the windows; the ſword of the Spirit was never unſheathed, but it cut ſome hearts; the Word ſeems now to have loſt its edg and efficacy, which ought to be conſidered and laid to heart.

Many cauſes may be rendred, I'll only hint a few:

(1.) Taking Religion upon truſt. Old cuſtoms are hardly to be parted with; every man will walk in the Name of his God, Micah 4. 5. To root out falſe conceptions in Religion, which either education, fancy, or humour have rooted, is very difficult.

(2.) A conceit of the meanneſs of the Word: Whereby there is a ſecret contempt of it, and ſo a formal and cuſtomary uſe of it.

(3.) A conceit of men, that they are New Born already. Many think their condition good, becauſe of their civil honeſty. Tho that be a very comely and commendable thing, yet ſecurity in it kills its thouſands. Many, becauſe they are free from the common pollutions of the World, and poſſeſſed with many amiable virtues, never conſider how much their hearts are ſtored with an enmity againſt God: ſuch count their Righteouſneſs their gain, and think it a ſufficient bribe for Gods mercy.

(4.) A conceit that to be New Born is but to change an Opinion. A change of Opinion may look like Faith, as preſumption doth, but it is not Faith. The Devil holds ſome men in the chain of ſublimated ſpeculations, which hinder the working of the moſt ſpiritual and influential truths.

(5.) Pride of reaſon, frequency of diſputes. 'Tis a rational Age; an Age overgrown with reaſon; and the Scripture tells us, Not many wiſe, &c. The Truths of God, are very much turned into Scepticiſm.

(6.) The common Atheiſm that ſo much prevails among us. How ſhould men regard a Diſcourſe of the New Birth, a begetting to God, when they ſcarce believe there is a God at all, but their own luſts, to be like unto? How ſhould they be wrought upon by the Word of God, that ſcarce believe there is any God to reveal a Word, and that there is no Word of God?

(7.) Hardneſs of heart, occaſioned (through the juſt judgment of God) by the frequency and unprofitable hearing of the Word. The Word is moſt Operative when it comes firſt into a Nation or Town: when the heart is not broken by hearing the Word of Truth, it becomes more hardned and compact in ſin. Many other reaſons might be rendered, but I have held you too long upon this ſubject.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF GOD'S BEING THE AUTHOR OF RECONCILIATION.

II COR. V. XVIII, XIX.

All things are of God who hath reconcil'd us to himself by Jesus Christ. And hath given to us the Ministery of Reconciliation, To wit that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself.

THESE words are small in Bulk, but great in Mystery; 'tis the Heads of the Gospel in a Nut-shell; the most sparkling Diamond in the whole Golden Ring of Scripture. It comprehends the Counsels of Eternity and the Transactions of Time. A Wonder in Heaven, God bringing forth a Man-child to be a propitiation for Sin, which was the Jews Stumbling-block and the Gentiles Scoff *. But wherein the Wisdom and Grace of Gods Counsel in Heaven, and the Power of his Actions on Earth clearly shine forth in the Face of Jesus Christ. The Jacobs Ladder, the upper part fixed in Heaven, and the lower foot standing upon the Earth, Angels descended on that, God descends to man by this in Acts of Wisdom and Grace, and man ascends to God in Acts of Faith and Love.

* 1 Cor. 1. 23, 24.

If there be any Mystery in Christianity more admirable than another, it is this of Reconciliation. If any Mystery in this Mystery, 'tis the various and incomprehensible engagement of the Father in it in and through Christ. If any thing in Scripture sets forth this Mystery in a few words like a Picture in a little Medal, 'tis this which I have read, wherein the Apostle gives us a short, but full and clear account of the Doctrine of Reconciliation, which is the substantial part of the Gospel.

There is a double Reconciliation here and in the following verse expressed.

First, Fundamental; At the Death of Christ, whereby it was obtain'd. This is the ground of Gods laying aside his Anger; this is reconciliatio legalis or de jure.

Secondly, Actual or particular, when it is complyed with by Faith; this regards the Application of it, when God doth actually lay aside his Enmity, and imputes sin no more to the person. Which consists of two parts.

1. The Proclamation of this, ver. 20. We pray you in Christs stead, be ye reconcil'd to God. Declaring Gods willingness to take men into favour; this is the declaration of reconciliatio de jure or the right of Reconcilement. The Gospel contains the Articles of Peace, and the Counsels and Methods of God about it. 'Tis the Copy of Gods Heart from Eternity.

2. Particular Acceptance, which is on our part an acceptance of the Terms of Reconcilement, on Gods part an acceptance of us into his favour, and a non-imputation of our sins to us, which the Apostle calls Rom. 5. 11. the receiving the atonement, this is the accepting the Atonement, the ground of Reconciliation on mans part and the application on Gods part.

The first viz: The proclamation of it to us is Gods promise to us, the other is the performance; the one is Gods gracious Favour to us, the other is Gods gracious act in us. Christ is the cause of both these Reconciliations; of the fundamental Reconciliation by his Death, of our actual Reconciliation by his Life; the one by himself in Person, the other by his Deputy the Spirit.

God *]
God is taken here by some ἐνικῶς for the whole Trinity, Christ ὀικονομικῶς as Mediator.

* Ibid. cap. 20.

* Others, and more likely, understand by God, the Father; to whom Reconciliation is ascrib'd per modum appropriationis, as he is the fountain of the Divinity; as the Fathers use to call him *. As the Father is the principal person wronged, and declaring his anger against us, the Reconciliation is principally made to him; in which sence we are said to have access to the father, Eph. 2. 18. through Christ, and by the Spirit; the Son brings us to the Father, and the Spirit directs us to the Son. Christ takes away Gods Enmity to us, and the Spirit takes away our Enmity to God. As the first Creation is appropriated to the Father, so is the second also. The Apostle having describ'd the new state of things, ver. 17. tells us ver. 18. that all things are of God who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ; that this new state is of God, who is no less the Creator of the second state than of the first. Adam, the common head of Gods appointment, by his falling overthrew himself and his posterity; God therefore appoints another Head to reduce men again to himself. What is here called Reconciling, is called Eph. 1. 10. gathering together in one, ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι, God would gather them together to himself under one head, as they had been separated from him under one head.

* Πατὴρ τῦ υἱῦ, Nazian. Θεὸς ὁ Πατὴρ ἀπὸ αἰτίας ὁ πατὴρ ratione originis & principii

God was in Christ.]
Some make this expression to signifie no more than by Christ, ver. 18. Or for Christs sake, Eph. 4. 34. as God for Christs sake hath forgiven you.

But the Expression notes something more than for Christs sake; In actual pardon Christ is the moving Cause by his Intercession, as well as the meritorious Cause by his Propitiation; 1 Joh. 2. 2. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the father Jesus Christ the righteous, who is a propitiation, &c. But the first purpose of Reconciliation, and the appointing Christ as the Medium for it, had no moving Cause but the infinite Compassion of God to his fallen Creature. Christ was not the moving Cause of this, though he be the meritorious Cause of all the effects of it, and laid the foundation of an actual Reconciliation by being the Center of the agreement between the Justice and Mercy of God. Gods anger was appeased by the Death of Christ; But God was the first Authour of this propitiation, appointing this Method of restoring the Creature, and this Person, or Jesus, to do it.

God was in Christ] It may be meant of the Trinity, the Father was in Christ constituting and directing, the Son was in Christ by personal Union, the Spirit was in Christ gifting him for this work of Reconciliation; But I would rather understand it of the Father.

Being in Christ is not meant,

1. Of that essential inness or oneness whereby the Father and the Son are one in Essence. Or as a Father of the flesh and his son, are said to be of the same nature, disposition and likeness, whereby we say the father lives in the Son, in the lineaments and temper of the son, whereby he resembles the Father. 'Tis true, the father and the son have the same Nature, the same Perfections and Divine Excellencies; so the Father is in the Son without any respect to Reconciliation. He is so in the Son in Creation also. He is so also one with the Spirit; But this notes some singular manner of inness in Christ which is not in the third Person or in any else.

2. Nor

2 Nor in regard of that affection the father bears to Christ. He is indeed in a peculiar manner in Christ in regard of Love, more than in all Believers besides. He loved him as the Head, Believers as the Members. This is common to Believers with Christ, though not in the same degree.

3 But it notes some peculiar manner of operation in Christ as Mediator. Redemption was not the work only of the Son; the Son wrought it, the Father directed it; the Son paid the price, the Father appointed him to do so; received it of him, accepted it from him, and accounted it to others through him, which is that we are bound to believe, as Christ tells the Jews, Joh. 10. 38. that you may know and believe that the father is in Me, and I in him, Joh. 14. 20. I am in my father. The Father is in Christ by way of direction, support and influence; and Christ in the Father by way of observance, obedience and dependency. As the World was in Christ as in their surety and head, satisfying God; so God is in Christ as in his Ambassador, making peace with the world. All things that Christ acted and managed in this work, are to be referred to God as the prime Author.

The World.]

* The World properly signifies the frame of Heaven and Earth, and all Creatures therein joyned together by an exact harmony, order, and dependance upon one another; But in the Scripture is chiefly understood of Mankind, the top of the lower World and end of its Creation. 'Tis frequent in all Writers to put the place for the Inhabitants. And it is taken for the most part for the corrupted World, the World fallen under sin and wrath, and opposing God Joh. 1. 10. The World knew him not. And when God takes some out of the World, he calls them not by the name of the World, but his Church. And those that he brings out of this sinful condition, he is said to bring out of the world, and to choose out of the * world. The World is fundamentally reconcil'd, there being a foundation laid for the World to be at Peace with God, if they accept of the termes upon which this amity is to be obtain'd. Of all Ages of the World, those before the coming of Christ in the Flesh as well as those after, 1 Joh. 2. 2.

Reconciling.]

The greatest controversie lyes in this word; whither by it be meant Gods Reconciliation to us, or our laying down our Enmity against God. Socinus and his followers say, God was not angry with man, He was Reconcil'd before. But that this place is meant of affection towards God, because it is said We are reconciled to God, and not God to us.

But learned men have clear'd this. The * phrase in Heathen Authors of mens being reconcil'd to their Gods, is always understood for appeasing the anger of their Gods, and escaping those dreadful Judgments either actually inflicted or certainly threatned from heaven. By Reconciliation of us to God in this place cannot be meant our Conversion or any act of ours.

* Grotius de satisf. cap. 7. pag. 143, 146. Owen again? Biddle cap. 29.

1. Because the Reconciliation here spoken of was the Matter of the Apostles Discourses and Sermons, and the great argument they used to convert the world to God. If then that sence were true, it would be an impertinent argument unworthy of those that Christ call'd out to be the first Messengers and Heralds of this Redemption, the sence of their Discourse would run thus; God hath already converted you therefore be converted to him; as it is nonsence to exhort a man to do that very act which he hath already done.

2. This Reconciliation doth formally consist in the non-imputation of sin to men; Now this is Gods Act, not the Creatures: Not imputing sin and forgiving sin are the same * thing: Therefore the Reconciliation it self is an Act of God. If God were to be brought into our favour as a person offending, we should be said rather not to impute Gods supposed offences to him, and not to charge him with that which was the ground of our Hatred of him.

* Rom. 4. 7, 8.

The Apostle tells us that God doth not impute the Trespasses of the World to them Emphatically, as * Grotius observes, but he doth to another whom he had made sin for them, ver. 21. for he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin. And the Apostles were sent about the World to testify this Benefit, that men might give credit to God and turn to him.

And upon the Declaration of this Doctrine, That God had in Christ laid aside his anger for their sins, and having punished another for them, would not punish them if they embraced by Faith what was proposed to them. They besought men that they would lay aside their Enmity against God, as he declared himself willing to lay aside his Enmity against them, and had testified this by sending his own Son to bear their punishment.

There is a like place with this, Rom. 5. 6, 10. If when we were enemies, we were reconcil'd to God by the death of his son; much more being reconcil'd, we shall be saved by his life. If Christ dyed for sinners to make an atonement for them, it was then to procure Gods well-pleasedness with them, because they had offended him. But if he dyed to bring God in favour with us, then his death was an atonement for God, and to expiate Gods offences, who never was, nor can be guilty of any towards his creature.

* Grotius de satisfact. cap. 7. pag. 143, &c.

* But it is evident the Reconciliation there mentioned as well as in the Text, was antecedent to Conversion, and therefore is not the same with the Conversion of the Creature.

1. Because otherwise the Apostles Argument would have little validity in it, for it proceeds a majori, much more being reconcil'd by his death we shall be saved. If God were so infinitely kind to us as to turn away his anger from us by the death of his Son when we were yet enemies, how much more tender will he be of us since he hath taken us into favour, and we are actually converted to him?

2 The effect of this Reconciliation is a saving from wrath by the bloud of Christ, ver. 9. Much more being justified by his bloud we shall be saved from wrath through him. Therefore this Reconciliation must be by appeasing that wrath under which we should otherwise have fallen.

And the effect of it is to have peace with God, ver. 1. we have peace with God; whereas if it were meant of Gods being brought into our favour, it should have been said God hath peace with us, And that God hath access to us.

3. Justification is the effect and consequent of this reconciliation. And this Crellius confesseth, * Justificatio est effectus reconciliationis. But this is the Act of * God.

* Respon. ad Grot. de satisf. cap. 7. pag. 391.

4. Reconciliation is here attributed to the Death of Christ as a distinct cause from that of Conversion, Rom. 5. 10. If when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, that is the reconciliatio impetrata, which in the second expression of our actual or applied reconciliation is ascrib'd to the Life of Christ or Intercession; That being the end for which he lives in Heaven, Heb. 7. 25.

* Rom. 4. 5. Rom. 8. 33.

* Rom. 5. 11.

5. We are said to receive the * atonement, which is the same with receiving forgiveness of sins, Act. 10. 43. But to receive Conversion is a phrase not at all used in Scripture. When a man turns to the East, no man saith he receives turning to the East. Besides if it were meant of bringing God into our favour, it were more proper to say God receiv'd the atonement, and not we.

* Camero Prælect. pag. 142. Col. 2.

6. * If by Reconciliation were meant our bending our hearts to love God, there could not be any sufficient reason rendred, why the Sanctification of the Heart should be laid down by the Apostle as the end of this Reconciliation, as it is Col. 1. 22. Yet now hath he reconcil'd in the body of his flesh through death to present you holy and unreprovable in his sight. For nothing can be both medium and finis sui ipsius, its own end and means too.

By Reconciliation is meant the whole work of Redemption. The Scripture hath various termes for our recovery by Christ which all amount to one thing; But imply the variety of our misery by sin, and the full proportion of the remedy to all our capacities in that Misery. Our fall put us under various relations, our Saviour hath cut those knots and tyed new ones of a contrary nature. 'Tis called Reconciliation as it respects us as enemies, Salvation as it respects us in a state of damnation, Propitiation as we are guilty, Redemption as Captives and bound over to punishment. Reconciliation, Justification and Adoption differ thus; In Reconciliation God is considered as the Supream Lord and the injur'd party, and man is consider'd as an enemy that hath wrong'd him; In Justification God is consider'd as a Judge, and man as guilty; In Adoption God is considered as a Father, and man as an Alien. Reconciliation makes us Friends, Justification makes us Righteous, Adoption makes us Heirs.

This

This Verſe then repreſents to us the Doctrine of Redemption under the term of Reconciliation. In it we have

I. The principal Author and Spring of this Reconciliation, God.
II. The immediate efficient or the meritorious Cauſe of it, Chriſt.
III. The Subjects God and the World, the World to himſelf.
IV. The Form of this Reconciliation, Or the fruit of it. Not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them, Not charging them with their crimes.
V. The Inſtrumental Cauſe of Actual Reconcilement, the Miniſtry of the Word.

The Obſervations we may take notice of are theſe.

Firſt, Reconciliation by Chriſt is the foundation of the Regeneration of Nature, ver. 17, 18. All things are become new, and all things are of God who hath reconcil'd us to himſelf by Jeſus Chriſt. The deſign of God was to reduce us to Happineſs, which was not to be done without the ſatisfaction of his Juſtice. Chriſt by his Death ſatisfies that; in his life is a model of our ſanctification: God is firſt the God of peace, before he be the God of ſanctification, 1 Theſ. 5. 23. and the very God of peace ſanctifie you wholly. The deſtruction of the Enmity of our nature was founded upon the removing the Enmity in God: There had been no ſanctification of our Natures, had there not been a redemption of our Perſons, no more than for Devils, who remain unholy, becauſe they remain unreconcil'd. Beſides, ſince God hath been at peace with us he will ſanctifie us, That the actual peace may be preſerved by the weeding out the remainders of the Enmity in our Natures. 'Tis as he is a God of Peace that he conquers any of our ſpiritual Enemies. He will never engage in the bruiſing Satan under our feet, till he be our reconciled God in Chriſt, Rom. 6. 20. the God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your feet.

Secondly, God doth not act principally as a Creator, but as a reconcilable God ever ſince the firſt promiſe. All bleſſings flow from him as ſtanding in that relation. All his providences in keeping up the world, the fruitful ſhowers, the enjoyments of the ſons of men in the world, are upon the account of the Mediator, wherein he hath declar'd himſelf a reconciling God. He acts towards the world as a reconciling God, towards Believers as reconciled. He is reconcilable as long as he is inviting and keeps men alive in a ſtate of probation. But he is not reconciled but to thoſe that accept of the way of reconciliation which he hath wrought in his Son, and according to the methods whereby he wrought it. The relation of a Creator cannot ceaſe while there is any creature; But if God ſhould act towards the world only as Creator, the diſſolution of the world had been long agoe, becauſe the law of the Creation had been tranſgreſs'd. But he acts as a faithful * Creator, as a Creator according to the promiſe of the new Covenant which his faithfulneſs reſpects. * 1 Pet. 4. 19.

Thirdly, And that which I only intend, is this,

Doct. God is the great ſpring and author of our recovery. Or God was principally engaged in the whole undertaking and effecting of our Redemption and Reconciliation by Chriſt. God was the firſt mover in thoſe acts whereby the firſt foundation ſtone was laid and the building rear'd. All was begun by his order, and managed by his direction and influence, 2 Cor. 5. 18. All things are of God who hath reconcil'd, i. e. all things are of God in this reconciling act. The whole Trinity is concern'd in it. Each perſon acts a diſtinct part; the glory of contriving is appropriated to the Father, as he that made the firſt motion, counſelled Chriſt to undertake it, ſent him in the fulneſs of time, and bruis'd him upon the Croſs, making his ſoul an offering for ſin. The glory of effecting it is aſcrib'd to the ſecond Perſon, both in the ſatisfactory part to the juſtice of God, and alſo in the victorious part the conqueſt of Satan: The glory of working the conditions upon which it is to be enjoy'd and the applying it is attributed wholly to the ſpirit. The ſtory of the Creation ſeems to intimate ſome other work to be done in the World by God, beſides that work of Creation which God the Father made at that time Gen. 2. 2. And on the ſeventh day God ended the work which he had made, and reſted from all his work which he had made, And ver. 3. and reſted from all the work which God created and made; thrice repeated, He reſted from that work which he had made, he made no more of that kind and nature. But a reſt he could not find; he reſted from it, but not in it, there was a work of a nobler strain behind to be made by him for his rest; he foresaw how soon he should be disturb'd by the entrance of sin; and though he rested from making any more creatures of that sort, yet he had works of grace to make afterwards more wonderful than those of nature. He had a further display to make of his gracious Perfections, which could not be decyphered on the face of that Creation; But a work there was remaining, wherein he intended to bring forth the glory of his Divine Excellency which yet lay hid. This is the highest draught of Divine Wisdom and Goodness; Therefore if the Father created all things wherein his wisdom and goodness appears in a shadowy manner, drawn with fainter colours; he would have no less hand in this wherein his wisdom was to appear without a Vail, in its full Lustre and eternally durable Colours, when this material world shall pass away: A mighty variety of * Wisdom, which delights the Creator and amazeth the Creature! He would no less have a hand in the second creation of all things by Christ, than he had in the first, since a greater glory was to redound to him as reconciling than as creating, by how much it is more excellent to give man an happy Being than to give man a bare Being. God is therefore said to be the head of * Christ as Christ is the head of man; as man was made to declare the glory of Christ, so is Christ formed to declare the glory of God: As all Influences the Members receive in point of Direction and Motion are from the head, so all the influences Christ had were from God as the head directing and moving him; as the head counsels what the members act, so God counsels what Christ acts. God brings forth this Mediator as his Divine Image, and diffuseth all his Perfections in and through him before the eyes of men, and thought it a work too worthy to be contriv'd by any but himself, and transacted by any but his Son. God only sent him to make it, and called him back to himself as soon as ever he had finished it.

* Eph. 3. 10. πολυποίκιλος σοφία

* 1 Cor. 11. 3.

We shall consider,

1. What Reconciliation is, and wherein the nature of it consists.
2. That God the father is and must be the prime cause of this.
3. Wherein the agency of the father appears and by what acts 'tis manifested in this transaction.
4. The Use.

I. First, What Reconciliation is.

1 Reconciliation implyes that there was a former friendship. There were once good Termes between God and Man; there was a time wherein they lovingly met and convers'd together: Man loved God and was beloved by him, till he left his first love and broke out into rebellion against him. God pronounc'd all his Creatures good, and man at the last very good with an Emphasis. A God of Infinite Goodness could not hate his Creature which was an extract of his own Image: Man had the law of God engraven upon his heart, and therefore could not in that state hate God, while he was guided by that law of Righteousness and exact Goodness in himself. Thus was Man Gods Favourite above all Creatures of the lower World, styled his * Son: But how quickly did he prove a Parricide, and a quarrel was commenc'd between God and him? Now Reconciliation is piecing up of a broken amity, and a reglutination of those affections which were disjoyn'd. And the miracle of this Reconciliation made by God in Christ excels the former friendship; that might be broken off, as we find by woful experience it was. This as to some acts and fruits may be interrupted, not abolisht; as the beams of the Sun may be clouded, but the influence of the Sun cannot be Eclips'd. Then God and man were not so closely united but they might be parted, Now God and the Believer are so affectionately knit that they cannot be separated.

* Luk. 3. 38.

2. Reconciliation implies an Enmity and Hatred, or at least a Disgust on one, or both sides. Adam was created in a state of Gods favour, but not long after his Creation he Apostatiz'd to Corruption; By his creation a Child of Gods love, by his corruption a Child of Gods wrath: While he stood he was the possessor of Paradise and Heir of Heaven, when he fell God seals a lease of Ejectment and man becomes an Heir of Hell; he turns Rebel and joynes with Satan, Gods greatest Enemy; God took the forfeiture of his possession, turns him out of house and home, home, and hinders his re-entrance by a flaming ſword turning every way to keep his fingers off from the tree of life, or hope of felicity upon the former * ſcore. Man invaded Gods right of Soveraignty, and God of a Soveraign Father becomes a puniſhing Judge. Man falls into ſin and wrath falls upon man, ſin ſeparated between God and him and unſheath'd the flaming Sword. Thus are heaven and earth at variance. The hatred is mutual; God hates men not as his Creatures, but ſinners; Man hates God, not as God, but as Soveraign and Judge: Man turn'd off God from being his Lord, and God turn'd off man from being his favourite: Man vents his Serpentine poyſon againſt God, God pours out his wrathful anger on man. On mans part this Enmity is by ſin, on the part of God (1) From the righteouſneſs of his nature, ſince he cannot behold iniquity without * indignation. As he cannot but love Goodneſs, ſo he cannot but hate * iniquity, He hates and abhors all the workers of iniquity. He hates the ſins of his Saints though not their perſons; He hates the perſons of wicked men, not primarily, but for their ſin. (2) From the righteouſneſs of his law made againſt ſin, whereby he cannot but according to his veracity puniſh it. His curſes muſt be executed, his law vindicated, and his Juſtice ſatisfied; Truth and Fidelity to his Law, his Nature, his Juſtice engageth him. Since there is nothing of the Life of God in us naturally, there can be nothing of the Love of God to us; for what affection can the Deity have to brutiſhneſs? and infinite purity to lothſomeneſs? Now there having been ſuch an Enmity, man is properly ſaid to be reconcil'd; good Angels cannot properly be ſaid to be reconcil'd, becauſe there was no difference between God and them. 'Tis a Queſtion, becauſe Believers are ſaid to be reconcil'd, and Reconciliation implying a former Hatred, Whether God hated believers before their Converſion? In Anſwer to this.

* Gen. 3. ult.

* Hab. 1. 13.

* Pſal. 5. 5, 6.

1. To ſay God hated them fully before, and loves them now, would argue a mutability in God. Which the * Apoſtle excludes, He is the father of lights who is ſo far from having any real change, that he hath not a ſhadow of it. If he did not love his Elect before Chriſt died for them, and loves them afterwards, then there is a change in his will; for to love them is nothing elſe but to will Eternal Life to them, and for God to hate any is not to will Eternal Life to be their inheritance. If God did ſo hate his Elect before Chriſt's Death as to will that they ſhould not inherit Eternal Life at all, and after Chriſts Death did will that they ſhould, his will would then be inconſiſtent and changeable. If God choſe them from Eternity, he loved them from Eternity; If he choſe them in Chriſt as their * head, He loved them in Chriſt as their head; He could not chooſe them to eternal life in thoſe methods without loving them; as he loved Chriſt the head before he dyed for thoſe that were to be his members, ſo he loved thoſe that were to be his members before they were actually ingrafted in him. As he loved Chriſt as Mediator before he was actually ſacrificed, ſo he loved his choſen ones before they were actually reconcil'd. When Chriſt came to reconcile, he came to do Gods will, and when any Soul is actually reconcil'd it is not a change in Gods Will, but the performance of Gods eternal Will.

* Jam. 1. 17.

* Eph. 1. 4.

2. There is a change in the Creature, But that doth not imply a change in God. 'Tis not a new Will in God, but a new ſtate in the Creature. The Creation adds no new relation or accident, but a change and effect in the creature. And as the Schooles generally determine, 'Tis one thing mutare voluntatem, another thing velle mutationem; as a Maſter commands a Servant this work one day, another work another day; the maſter changeth not his will but wills a change in his work: Or as ſome illuſtrate it, as a Phyſitian preſcribes his patient one ſort of Phyſick one day and another kind of Phyſick the next; the Phyſitian doth not change his will, but will a change. As a man hath a mind to adopt a poor Child to be his ſon, affection is the ground of this reſolution. But he lets him for a while run about in rags and ſeems to take no notice of his miſery; yet at length takes him and clothes him and adopts him: There is a change in the ſtate of this child but not in the affection, the original of it: There was a change in the Prodigal when he return'd, but not in the Father when he embraced him; my ſon which was loſt is found, it was a new finding of the Son, but not a new affection in the Father.

Well, But how may God be ſaid to love or hate believers before their actual Reconciliation ſince he is the author of it?

1. God loves them with a love of purpoſe. God loves them with a love of purpoſe or Election, but till grace be wrought, not with a love of acceptation; we are within the love of his purpoſe as we are deſign'd to be the Servants of Chriſt, not within the love of his acceptation till we are actually the Servants of Chriſt, Rom. 14.18. ſerveth Chriſt and is acceptable to God. They are alienated from God while in a ſtate of nature, and not accepted by God till in a ſtate of grace. There is in God a love of good will, and a love of delight: Amor benevolentiæ, ſeu voluntas. Amor complacentiæ ſeu voluntas. The love of good will, is love in the Root; the love of delight, is love in the Flower. The love of good will looks upon us afar off, the love of delight inns it ſelf in us, draws near to us. By peace with God we have acceſs to God, by his love of delight he hath acceſs to us. God wills well to them before grace, but is not well pleaſed with them till grace. Chriſt is the effect of his love of benevolence and compaſſion to relieve us, which love order'd Chriſt as the means, Joh. 3. 16. but Chriſt is the cauſe of that love of friendſhip wherewith God loves us. A King hath a kindneſs for a Priſoner in his boults and ſends ſome to cloath him: but he hath no delight in him to think him fit for his embraces, till he be deliver'd both from his fetters and his filthineſs. An elect perſon is not ſimply beloved before his actual Reconciliation, becauſe he hath no gracious quality which may be the object of that love. Neither is he ſimply hated, for if ſo, how could he have, any gracious habits infus'd into him whereby he may be made the object of delight? It cannot be denied but that God intends to beſtow ſupernatural gifts upon thoſe he hath choſen, elſe wherein doth his love conſiſt? and it cannot be conceiv'd how a ſimple hatred can conſiſt with ſuch an intention. He loves them to make them his friends, and after reconciliation he loves them as his friends. 'Tis love in God to make an object for his love. God loves an object qualified with grace, therefore to qualifie an object ſo as to make it lovely, argues love in God to that object he ſo qualifies; Love in intention before the qualification. Hatred could never be the foundation and cauſe of that qualification; yea, the gift of Chriſt which is the effect, doth ſuppoſe the love of God which is the cauſe. God indeed was angry with all Mankind, but it was an anger mixed with love; he was angry but yet willing to be appeas'd; a pregnant example of this, which may give us an underſtanding of it, we have from the mouth of God himſelf; * My wrath is kindled againſt thee (ſpeaking to Eliphaz.) and againſt thy two friends, therefore take unto you now ſeven bullocks and ſeven Rams, and go to my ſervant Job and offer up for your ſelves a burnt-offering. There is a cloud upon Gods Face, but his Mercy as the Sun peeps out behind the Cloud; as he acquaints them with his anger, ſo he ſhews them the way to pacify it. Though his wrath was kindled, yet he is not ſo ready to enflame it, as he is to have it quencht by the means he preſcribes them, wherein Job was a type of Chriſt whoſe ſacrifice God only accepts as well as appoints. There is no love of complacency either in the perſons or ſervices of any, but as conſider'd in Chriſt the reconciler ſatisfying the juſtice of God. When an Elect Perſon is engrafted in Chriſt that love which was bubbling in the fountain from eternity, flows out in the ſtreams.

* Job 42. 7, 8.

2. God doth hate his elect in ſome ſence before their actual reconciliation. God was placable before Chriſt, appeas'd by Chriſt. But till there be ſuch Conditions which God hath appointed in the creature, he hath no intereſt in this reconciliation of God; and whatſoever perſon he be, in whom the Condition is not found, he remains under the wrath of God, and therefore is in ſome ſence under Gods Hatred.

(1) God doth not hate their perſons, nor any natural or moral good in them. Nor indeed the perſon of any Creature, for as perſons they are his own work; the Creation was good in Gods eye at the firſt framing, and whatſoever of goodneſs remains, is ſtill affected by an unchangeable Being; for infinite and unbounded goodneſs cannot hate that which is good either naturally or morally. Chriſt loved that morality he ſaw in the young man. God loves their moral qualities, and they are the common gifts of his Spirit, and qualities wherewith he hath endowed them; as their primitive natures were good, ſo what approaches neareſt to that nature, hath ſome tincture of goodneſs and therefore hath ſome amiableneſs in the eye of God. But he took no pleaſure in them, neither in their perſons nor ſervices as acceptable to him without the Son of his love.

(2) God hates their ſins. Sin is always odious to God, let the Perſon be what it will: God never hated, nor ever could, the Perſon of Chriſt, yet he hated and teſtified teſtified in the higheſt meaſure his hatred of thoſe iniquities he ſtood charged with as our Surety. The Father could not but hate the practices of a Prodigal, though he loved his Perſon. God loves nothing but himſelf, and other things as they are like himſelf, and in order to himſelf; therefore God muſt needs hate whatſoever is contrary to his immaculate purity and different from his Image. He hates the ſins of Believers, though pardon'd and mortified; though his Mercy pardons them, his Holineſs can never love them; though the Puniſhment be remov'd from the Perſon, yet the Nature and ſinfulneſs is not taken from the Sin. Much more doth God hate the ſins of his unconverted Elect, which are neither pardon'd nor mortified: if he hates ſin in its weakneſs, much more in its ſtrength. He hates their ſins objectively, That is the Object of, and the only object of his hatred; their perſons terminative, as the effects of his wrath do terminate in their perſons. Though ſin is the object of Gods hatred, as being a contrariety to his holy Law, yet it is not the object of his wrath, but the perſon ſinning; Actions are not immediately puniſhed, neither can, but the Perſons ſo acting. In that reſpect God may be ſaid to hate the Perſons of Men, and of his Elect before Converſion, as the effects of his wrath do terminate in them.

(3) God hates their ſtate. Though God loves Morality in Men, yet that doth not include the Acceptation of their Perſons, or of their Moral Acts, or any love to their ſtate; though Chriſt loved the young Mans Morality, yet he could not love his State, ſince it was at ſome diſtance from the Kingdom of Heaven, though not ſo great a diſtance as others were from it. The Elect before their Converſion are in a ſtate of Enmity, a ſtate of Darkneſs, a ſtate of Ignorance and a ſtate of Slavery, and that ſtate, is odious to God, and makes them uncapable, while in that ſtate, to inherit the Kingdom of God, 1 *Cor.*6.9.10,11. Such were ſome of you, ſuch ſinners and in ſuch a ſtate of ſin that could not inherit the Kingdom of God. A Man that hath a love to a beggarly Child, and doth intend to adopt him, he loves his Perſon, but hates his preſent ſtate of Naſtineſs and Beggary; and when he doth actually Adopt him, changeth his ſtate, his relation, and deveſts him of his Filthineſs. The ſtate of the Elect before Actual Reconciliation is odious, becauſe it is a ſtate of Alienation from God; whatſoever grows up from the root of the Old Adam, cannot be delightful to him.

(4) God hates them as to the with-holding the effects of his love. We call the Effects of Gods Grace, Grace; and the Effects of Gods Wrath, Wrath. So God may be ſaid to hate an Elect Perſon before his Converſion, becauſe being in that ſtate a Child of Wrath, the Wrath of God abides on him, and the curſes of the law are in force againſt him. As God is ſaid to Repent, when he with-holds thoſe judgments and effects of his Anger which he had Threatned againſt a Nation; ſo God may be ſaid to be angry, and to hate, when he pours out Vials of Wrath, and alſo when he with-holds the fruits and proper effects of Love.

3. Propoſition as a Caution. Though God be the prime Author of this Reconciliation, yet no man is Actually Reconciled to God, till he doth comply with thoſe Conditions whereupon God offers it. God was in Chriſt when he was Reconciling the World, we muſt be in Chriſt if we be Reconciled to God; He in a way of Direction, we in a way of Dependency. Till a man doth Believe, though God hath been Reconciling the World in Chriſt, yet he is not under the actual peace with God, though under the Offers of this Peace. The wrath of God abides on him, as well as the offers of Peace are propoſed to him: otherwiſe what need had the Apoſtle to beſeech men to be Reconcil'd to God, upon the account that he was in Chriſt Reconciling the World to himſelf, if there were not ſomething to be done by us in order to it, ver. 20. We pray you in Chriſt ſtead be ye reconcil'd to God? To what purpoſe ſhould we be exhorted to lay down our Armes, diſcard our Enmity, offer up our Weapons, if nothing were to be done on our parts. 'Tis true, God is in Chriſt reconciling the world, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them. But to whom? to all the World without any diſtinction? though the offers are made to all, yet while men accept not of them, ſin will be imputed to the unbelieving World; ſhall we think God will recede from his anger till we recede from our ſins? what Rebels can be ſaid to be reconcil'd to their Prince, till they obſerve the Conditions in his Proclamation? Chriſt cannot preſent men Friends, till by Faith they are united to him; for though there be an Accompliſhment of the general Reconciliation in the Death of Chriſt, yet there is no benefit accruing to us till full Union by Faith. Much leſs

* Col. 1. 21. can man be ſaid to be reconcil'd from Eternity; the Apoſtle cuts off that * Conceit, Yet now hath he reconcil'd: Now, not before; if it were from Eternity, the Coloſſians were never Enemies to God: If alwayes reconciled, the Apoſtle ſpeaks a Falſehood; for to be Enemies and Friends at the ſame time, implies a contradiction; to be reconcil'd from Eternity, and yet but now, are inconſiſtent. Alas we come into the World with the badge of Gods wrath upon us, and our backs turn'd upon God, the firſt thing we do is to kick againſt him. Reconciliation in the decree is from Eternity; but we cannot more properly be ſaid to be reconcil'd from Eternity becauſe of that, then to be created, and born from Eternity, becauſe decreed to come upon the Stage of the World in time. Reconciliation in the purchaſe is Temporary; we were reconcil'd Meritoriouſly at the time of Chriſts Death, but no more actually reconcil'd, than we can be ſaid to be born when Adam was created, becauſe we were in him as a Cauſe. Reconciliation particular and actual is temporary; we have then God appeas'd towards us, when we can by Faith hold upon his Son upon the Croſs, and with a hearty ſincere Faith plead the wounds made in Chriſts ſides, the ſorrows in his Soul as a propitiation for ſin, an atonement of Gods own appointment. 'Tis not Sin, but the Sinner is Reconcil'd. God will hold an Eternal Antipathy to Sin, as Sin doth to God; God will never be pacified towards Sin, though he will towards the Sinner. He is in Chriſt reconciling the World, not Sin in the World, to himſelf: Let none therefore build falſe Conceits upon this Doctrine. We muſt diſtinguiſh between Reconciliation deſign'd by God, obtain'd by Chriſt, offer'd by the Goſpel, receiv'd by the Soul.

4. This Reconciliation on Gods part in and by Chriſt, is very congruous for the honour of God and abſolutely neceſſary for us.

[1.] For the honour of God.

(1.) For the honour of his Wiſdome. Had not a Mediator been appointed, Mankind had been deſtroyed at the beginning of his Sin: God had loſt the glory of his preſent Works, and his Wiſdom would ſeem to lye under a diſparagement in publiſhing a Reſt from his Works and pronouncing them Good, when the very ſame day (as ſome think) they ſhould be ſullied with an univerſall ſpot, and the choiceſt part of the lower Creation turn'd back upon God, and all the other Creatures employed to baſe and unworthy ends, below their Creation and contrary to the honour of their Creator. Without the appointment of a Reconciler, the Honour of God in Creation had been impair'd, the Creation had been in vain: No Creatures could have attain'd the true end of their Creation; ſince man whom they were deſign'd to ſerve, had Apoſtatized from the ſervice of his and their Creator, they could not be employ'd by him in that ſtate for the ſervice they were ultimately intended for.

(2.) For the honour of his Truth and Juſtice. Since God had decreed and enacted, that whoſoever Sin'd ſhould Dye, God muſt either upon mans ſin deſtroy him to preſerve his Truth and Juſtice, or neglect his own Law, and turn it upſide down for the diſcovery of his Mercy. Theſe things were impoſſible to the Nature of God; He muſt be true to himſelf, juſt to his Law. If Juſtice then ſhould deſtroy, what way was there to diſcover his Mercy. If God ſhould reſtore man to his friendſhip, without any conſideration, where would be the Honour of his Juſtice, the firmneſs of his Truth in his Threatning? the Wiſdom of God finds a way for the Honour of both, whereby he preſerves the righteouſneſs of his Law, and the Counſel of his Mercy, not by changing the ſentence againſt Sin, but the Perſon; and laying that upon his Son as our Surety, which we by the rigour of the Law were to endure in our own Perſons, whereby Juſtice was ſatisfied with the puniſhment due to the Sinner, and Mercy was ſatisfied with the Merit due to our Saviour.

[2.] Neceſſary for us. Neceſſary ſince all men had breath'd in the Contagion of Adam, had his corrupt bloud, and the poyſon of the old Serpent diffuſed in their Veins; and being thus Enemies to God, became ſubject to Wrath and the Eternal Malediction of the Law. Neceſſary at the very firſt Defection; had there not been an Advocate to interpoſe, we cannot conceive how, according to the Methods of the eſtabliſh'd Law, God could have born one moment with the World; there was as much neceſſity for ſome extraordinary Remedy againſt the biting of the old Serpent, as againſt the bitings of the fiery ones in the Wilderneſs, which could not be cur'd by any natural means. They muſt have inevitably periſhed under their Venom, and man under his. If we come to God in our ſelves, what are we but as Criminals before a Judge, Stubble before Fire? God is infinitely good, i. e. infinitely contrary to Evil; and if to Evil, then to us, who think, ſpeak, act nothing but Evil. The Juſtice of God upon mans ſin, required that man ſhould endure an infinite puniſhment; and becauſe he could not endure a puniſhment intenſly Infinite, by reaſon of the limitedneſs of his nature, as a finite Creature, therefore he was to endure a puniſhment extenſively Infinite in regard of duration, whereof he was capable by reaſon of the Immortality of his Soul. Since things ſtood thus, the fallen Creature could not be reſtor'd to Felicity, till ſome way were found out to reſtore the Amity, with a full ſatisfaction to both, that God might, without any diſhonour to himſelf and his Law, rejoyce in his Creature; that the Creature might, with a firm ſecurity, rejoyce again in God. The * Will of God is an Evidence of the Neceſſity of it: Why did God ordain it, if it had not been neceſſary? The Natural Inclination and Will of Chriſt, as Man, was contrary to it; for he in the Fleſh deſir'd this Cup might paſs from him. How then ſhould the Infinite Wiſdom of God, the Infinite Affection to his Son, put him upon that which was ſo Ignominious; and the Infinite Wiſdom of the Son conſent to ſuch an event without an apparent neceſſity?

* Daille Sermon ſur reſurrec. pag. 226.

Second Thing. That God the Father muſt needs be, and is, the Author of this Reconciliation. II.

1. That God muſt needs be the Author of this work. Reconciliation in all the parts and degrees of it, in all the model and frame of it, is his Act. The firſt Invention of this way, the firſt Propoſition, the laſt Execution and Acceptation, owns him for the Author. To him we muſt needs owe the Contrivance, Declaration and Accompliſhment. If God be the firſt Cauſe in all things, he is the firſt Cauſe in the higheſt of his works. Nothing comes to paſs in Time, but what was decreed in Eternity. If any thing were done which he did not firſt Know, he were not infinitely Wiſe: If any thing were done which he did not firſt Will, poſitively or permiſſively, he were not Infinitely Supream and Powerful. All things are wrought by his Counſel, which is the Act of his Underſtanding; all things are wrought by his Will, which is the Act of his * Soveraignty: By God in Scripture ſometimes is meant the Father by way of Eminency becauſe he is the fountain of the * Deity; Bleſſed be the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

* Eph. 1. 11.

(1) All Humane Nature could not firſt invent it. The whole Wiſdom of Moſes and the Jewiſh Nation in the Wilderneſs, could not find a Remedy againſt the Bitings of the fiery Serpents, which indeed were ſo Venemous that they were abſolutely Mortal. And if they were the Preſteres, as the Greeks call them, which word ſignifies the ſame that the Hebrew doth, burning Serpents, no remedy was found againſt their Venom for many Ages after: In the time of the Romans * flouriſhing, the Poyſon ſuddenly enflamed the bloud, puft up the skin, diſfigur'd the countenance, depriv'd them of the ſhape of men, with the benefit of Life: An exact repreſentation of the miſery of Man by the Fall. No remedy could be found in Nature againſt this Evil in the Figure, no more can any againſt the Evil repreſented by it: neither the languiſhing Law of Nature, nor the fickly Philoſophy of the Heathens could ever find a Cure. The Reconciliation of God to man was too ſtupendious a work, for the joint Wit and Wiſdom of Man to arrive at. Man was ſo plung'd in the ſink of laps'd Nature, that he knew not how to deſire it: So amiable were his Dreams of happineſs in his Rebellion, that he had no mind to cheriſh any thoughts of it. He was ſo furious in his unjuſt war againſt God, that he had no will to accept of any ſuch Motion. The World was filled with all unrighteouſneſs, and Men were haters of * God. By all their Wiſdom they knew him not, 1 Cor. 1. 21. No Mind to know God, no Will to be at Peace with him. Had the wiſdom of the World been ſenſible of their deplorable Condition, could it have contriv'd a way for the glorifying his Mercy without invading the rights of his Juſtice, they might have dreamt of a pardon from his Mercy as the ſupream Governour; But how would the contentment of his Juſtice as eminent a Perfection in God as that of his Mercy, and the ſtability of his Truth in his threatning have inſuperably puzled them? the difficulty lay not upon the point of Mercy, every days Sun, and every ſeaſonable ſhower, were rich diſcoveries of this: But there was no direction in the other Caſe, to be read in the whole Manuſcript of Nature. The Heavens declare the glory of God as Creator, not as Reconciler; they diſcover'd his Glory, not any way of entrance into it. Had they had thoughts of accompliſhing it by a ſurety between God and them, where could they have pitched upon one worthy of Gods Acceptance? If they could have found out, and propos'd one, what tye was there upon God to Accept any other offer for the Offenders, but to exact it of their own Perſons? What man could have thought of ſuch an extenſive love, as the Reconciliation not of one or two particular Men, but of the World, by ſo ſtrange a means as the Death of Gods own Son? We read indeed of ſome one or two of the Heathen Philoſophers, that declar'd an impoſſibility of the Worlds Reformation without Gods taking Fleſh, but none imagin'd any thing of the Death of the Son of God; No not the Jews, but here and there one of their Rabbies long before his Coming. Oh the immenſe grace of God! to diſcover that to us in his Goſpel, which all the Wiſdom of fallen nature might have fruitleſly ſtudied to Eternity! As no man can frame an Univerſal Law, accommodated to the ſeveral ſtates and tempers of all the Men in the World, and to thoſe Notions of fit and juſt in the Minds of Men, but God, who knows what he hath Engraven upon Mens Minds; ſo none but God can know how to find a way of Redemption, that may anſwer the glory of all his Attributes, and the preſſing urgency of mens Neceſſities.

* Lucan Phar-ſal. lib. 9.

* Rom. 1. 29, 30.

(2) But might not the unblemiſht wiſdom of Angels, out of pity to Mankind, have found out a way of Reconcilement? They knew much more of God, than Man; they knew the wonders of his Goodneſs, yet had ſeen many of their own order drop into Hell under his Wrath. They might know that the Devils, a ſtronger Nature, could not ſatisfie God for their offence; much leſs Man, the weaker Nature. They would never have ſtood gazing upon it with Aſtoniſhment, when it was reveal'd, had it been ſo obvious to their clear and comprehenſive Reaſons: The greateſt Learning they have in it, is by the Church, Eph. 3. 10. To the intent that now, unto the Principalities and Powers in Heavenly Places, might be made known, by the Church, the manifold wiſdom of God: Objectively, not efficienter. It was a Myſtery hid in God, and only in him: Not an Angel ſeems to have had any thoughts of it, till the Revelation of it was made to the Church. Now, not before; all the Angels in Heaven were ignorant of it, and probably underſtood not the meaning of the firſt Promiſe in Paradiſe, till the coming of Chriſt in the Fleſh: Yea, after the Revelation, thoſe intelligent Spirits have not a perfect Knowledge of the whole ſcope of the Goſpel-ſtate; for they deſire to look into thoſe * things; they could never be inventers of, or conſulters in, that which they did not underſtand. Well then, Angels and Men may admire it when reveal'd, but not before imagine it; they may Applaud it, but never Contrive it. Which of them could preſume to nouriſh ſuch a thought, that the Father ſhould call out his Eternal Son, to be a temporary ſufferer, to Vail his Divinity with the raggs of an afflicted Humanity? what then was impoſſible to the approv'd Wiſdom of Men and Angels, muſt only be aſcrib'd to the VViſdom and Grace of God.

* 1 Pet. 1. 12.

[2.] God the Father muſt needs be the Principal in this buſineſs.

(1) The order of the Trinity requires it. There is an order in the Operation, as well as the Subſiſtence of the Three Perſons. As the Son is from the Father in order of Subſiſtence, ſo the Actions of the Son are from the Father in order of Motion and Direction. The Son is ſent by the Father, not only as Man, but as God; for the Spirit, that hath only a Divine Nature, is ſaid to be ſent by the Father and the Son. The Perſons are all equal, Chriſt * thought it no robbery to be equal with God; yet one operation is appropriated to the Father, another to the Son, another to the Holy Ghoſt, in regard of Order; and the Father as he is the fountain of the Deity, is the fountain of all Divine Operation; as the Sun is the fountain of its Beams, ſo it is the fountain of all the operation of its beams. All things are of the Father by the Son. He created all things by Jeſus * Chriſt, He reconcil'd us unto himſelf by * Chriſt: All things of the Father as the Fountain, by the Son as the Medium.

* Phil. 2. 6.

* Eph. 3. 9.

* 2 Cor. 5. 18.

Medium. There is a priority of Order in the Divine Paternity upon the account of Generation; and this Order is obſerved in the Divine Inſtitutions; Baptiſm is firſt in the Name of the Father, then of the Son, then of the Holy Ghoſt. Now it is * Mat. 28. 19. moſt Congruous, that as the Father was the Original of our Saviours Perſon, ſo he ſhould be of his Office; as he was God of his ſubſtance, ſo he ſhould be Mediator of his VVill; the Father firſt ſets the Copy, after which the Son writes. The * Son * Joh. 5. 19. can do nothing of himſelf, but what he ſees the Father do, for what things ſo ever he doth, thoſe alſo doth the Son likewiſe. All operations begin firſt from the Father; this place the Ancient Fathers underſtood of Chriſt as the ſecond Perſon, not as Mediator. If the firſt motion came from Chriſt, the Order of working in the Trinity would be inverted; the Father would then do what he ſees the Son do, the Son would be the Director, the Preceder, and the Father the follower: The Son would go before in propoſal, and the father follow after in conſent. God would not then be the God of Order in Heaven. Beſides, the love of the Father would not then be the principal Cauſe of our Redemption, upon which the Scripture every where placeth it, but the Love of the Son. Nay if the Authority of conſtituting the Mediator were not in the Father by way of Order, there could be little or no Teſtimony of his love ſince the Fall of Man. To imagine therefore any other Root of our Redemption, is to contradict the Order in the Trinity. But this is agreeable to our Conceptions of things as far as we can apprehend ſuch Myſteries. The Father from himſelf, Chriſt from the Father, the Spirit from both; ſo the Father contrives this, and is pleas'd with it, as being the exacteſt model of his Love, Wiſdom, and Juſtice, and the higheſt act of Love he could ſhew to his Son: The Son conſents to it, and is pleaſed with it, as being the higheſt act of Love he could ſhew to his Father, and to Men, in being their Reconciler; and to Angels in being their head. The Spirit is pleaſed with gifting him, as being the greateſt demonſtration of his power to gift Chriſt for ſo great a work, therefore * the ſpirit is ſaid to reſt upon him. Not only noting the continuance of the ſpirit on him, but the ſatisfaction the ſpirit ſhould have in this employment, as much in gifting Chriſt for it, as Chriſt in undertaking and managing the work. * Iſa. 11. 2.

[2.] If the father were not principal in it, the undertaking a reconciliation could not of it ſelf be valid.

(1.) There had been an injury to the Father in undertaking it, without his full conſent at leaſt. The Father is the principal party injur'd, and was therefore to be conſulted with in that which concern'd his own right. He is alſo the Governor of the World. 'Tis not convenient that a publick work ſhould be undertaken in a Nation without the conſent of the chief Magiſtrate who may elſe make it fruſtrate. When Princes of equal Dignity are at war, none undertakes the compoſing of the quarrel, till both Parties accept of the Mediation. But here is the ſupream Lord of the VVorld, and ungrateful Rebels at variance; the Chief Governour unjuſtly wronged. Now every man would judge it a preſumption for any to offer Terms of Peace to his Enemies and undertake the ſatisfaction of himſelf without his own conſent in the Caſe.

(2.) The Father could only by right appoint the Terms upon which, and the way whereby this Reconciliation ſhould be made. The Father being the Law-maker could only diſpence with his Law, and judge what ſatisfaction was fit for the Vindication of it. The Law ran in that ſtrain, that the party ſinning ſhould dye: Had the letter of the Law been exacted, every man had been a ſtranger to Salvation; the right therefore of waving the Letter of the Law, while he maintain'd the Reaſon and Subſtance of it, belonged to the Father. As the Supream Governour too, He could only transfer the puniſhment from the offending party to another that was willing to ſtand under the penalty in his ſtead. Since Creation is appropriated to the Father, and ſin entered upon the VVorld immediately after the Creation, it was God as a Creator was principally injur'd. The firſt ſin ſtruck more immediately at the Father, as Creator; Unbelief at the ſecond Perſon, the Redeemer; and a deſpiteful Contempt of Chriſt, after the Manifeſtation of him by the ſpirit, and the motions preſſing upon men, is called the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt. Chriſt intimates this, when he ſaith, they have both hated me and my father, i. e. me now, as well as my Father before. Now they ſhew a particular hatred to me by Unbelief as well as they have done to my father formerly by Idolatry. The Father therefore only had the Right to appoint the way of Reconciliation according to his good Pleaſure; ſince he was chiefly diſhonour'd, he is fitteſt to preſcribe the Method which he judges moſt convenient for the reſtitution of his honour; as all his attributes were wronged by ſin, ſo it was fit all his Attributes ſhould be glorified in Reconciliation of his Enemies; It was not fit that glory he is ſo jealous of, ſhould be intruſted in any hands, but by his own VVill; and his preſcribing all the wayes of Vindicating and illuſtrating it, and the glorifying of himſelf was his end in appointing Chriſt to this work; * thou art my ſervant, O Iſrael in whom I will be glorified; and the glory of God ſeems to be a name whereby Chriſt is called, * the Glory of the Lord is riſen upon thee. Since therefore a greater glory was his end in Redemption than barely in Creation, he had as much a right to be Principal in the Miracle of Reſtoration, as in that of Creation.

* Iſa. 60. 1.

(3.) The Father was not oblig'd, nor could be oblig'd by any, to entertain any thoughts of a Reconciliation. He might without any prejudice to his goodneſs, have demoliſht this defiled VVorld, and by his power rear'd another wherein to ſhew forth the glory of his immenſe Perfections: he might have made good the Law upon the perſon of every ſinner; much leſs was he bound to accept of any ſurety; He might have exacted the ſatisfaction at the hands of the Criminal, before he would have been reconcil'd. Being Soveraign, it was at his Liberty whether he would be appeas'd or no towards Rebels. If he was willing to be appeas'd, he might have choſe whether he would have admitted of any ſurety to ſtand in their place. When Reuben offer'd Jacob his two ſons as a pledg for Benjamin * Jacob was not bound to receive this offer, but at his Liberty whether he would take them or no. Nor was Naboth bound to part with his Vineyard for a better than his own upon Ahabs * offer. No man is bound to part with his propriety in his Goods, or his right over his Priſoner; But if a price be agreed upon, he is then bound by the rules of commutative juſtice to ſet the priſoner at liberty.

* Gen. 42. 37.
* 1 Kings 21. 2, 3.

(4) Therefore if the Son of God himſelf had been Incarnate, and Died for the World without the fathers Call and Miſſion, the Father was not oblig'd to accept it as the price of our Redemption: For all things without a Call are of themſelves invalid, and depend only upon the VVill of the Perſon, to whom they are related for their Acceptation. Gods Inſtitution confers Validity upon any things. Could the Brazen ſerpent ever have cur'd the Bitings of the fiery ones, had not God fixed it as a remedy?

Three things go to the Eſtabliſhing the Reconciliation.

(1) The Dignity of the Perſon Reconciling.
(2) The Valuableneſs of the Satisfaction he offers.
(3) The Call of the Perſon injur'd, or the Acceptation of it.

The two firſt makes the Merit ſufficient, the third only makes it Accepted. Had Chriſt endur'd all the Torments of the Croſs, the Acceptation of him for us, might not have been, had not the Fathers Conſtitution of him for that purpoſe preceded his Undertaking. Though the Death of Chriſt had an Intrinſick value, and therefore was in it ſelf Acceptable, yet the conſent of the Father only made it Accepted; he made us * accepted in Chriſt; therefore our Acceptation depends firſt upon the Acceptation of Chriſt. The ſtrength therefore of it in Scripture is put upon Gods well-pleaſedneſs with him; this is my beloved ſon in whom I am well-pleaſed. And upon Gods call of * him. It was his Will, the good pleaſure of his Will, and purpos'd in himſelf; it roſe up in his own heart and mind. Though the ſatisfaction of Chriſt derives not its vertue of meriting from the grace of God, yet it derives its Acceptation from the grace of God. The grace of God, and the merit of Chriſt, relate to one another, as the Cauſe and the Effect; the Antecedent and the Conſequent. The merit of Chriſt is the Cauſe of our actual Favour with God, but the merit of Chriſt is not the firſt ſpring of it; for it is ſubordinate to the general grace of God, which orders it as a means of that Reconciliation which he purpoſed in himſelf. In ſhort, 'Tis like this caſe, when a man deſires the goods of another and offers him as much they are worth, and more; though what he offers hath an intrinſick Value to compenſate the Poſſeſſor for thoſe goods whether the Perſon accept of that offer or no, yet the Acceptation of it depends purely upon his will; and the

* Eph. 1. 6.
* Eph. 1. 9.

ſum hath no validity to purchaſe what is deſired, without the Will of the preſent poſſeſſors.

(1.) If the Father had been oblig'd to receive any ſatisfaction, it muſt be from the perſon offending. No obligation can be conceiv'd incumbent upon him to receive it from a perſon wholly innocent, though it were of infinite value, becauſe none can tranſfer over the right of another, but he whoſe right it is.

(2.) Had not the Father fully agreed to this, I do not ſee how Chriſt could have made a Compenſation by his Sufferings. Had he aſſum'd a Body, and laid down that Body, and courted Death, had that been juſtifiable without a Call? the Humanity of Chriſt was a Creature, and therefore oblig'd by the Law of Nature, as Creatures are, to preſerve it ſelf. All men are bound to do ſo, unleſs God calls them to lay down their Lives, who is the Supream Lord of Life and Death. Suppoſe our Saviour might have laid down his Life, intentionally as a Compenſation for us, what could he have undergone in his humanity, but a Temporal Death? Was it not more we were to ſuffer? was not the wrath of God due to our ſouls? the ſoul was the chief offender, the ſoul then ought to be the principal ſufferer: If God therefore had not appointed Chriſt for thoſe Ends, the wrath of God could not have been inflicted upon the ſoul of Chriſt; for who ſhould have inflicted it? had it been juſt with God to have loaded a perſon with his wrath who was innocent from any actual or imputed crime both in his own perſon, and transferr'd from others? His meer Bodily ſufferings, could not have been a recompence for the ſin of the ſoul. The order of things fairly lyes thus, Man being unable to ſatisfie God for himſelf, nor any Creature being ſufficient to ſatisfie God for them; The Father calls the Son to take upon him the Humane Nature, and by ſatisfying his juſtice for ſin, reſtore us to happineſs. The Fathers Call, and his own voluntary conſent make him capable of having our ſins transferr'd upon him, and bearing them in his own body on the Tree. And Chriſt layes it upon the Commandment received from his Father together with his own free * conſent; I have power to lay down my life, and I have power to take it again, this commandment have I receiv'd from my Father. He had an Authority to lay down his Life, he had alſo a promiſe of Reſtoration of it by his Reſurrection. And to this End he had received, not only an Invitation, but a Command, which gave him full Authority to dye, and a ground alſo to plead the Validity of it, for the ends deſign'd by it. Therefore had he not receiv'd ſuch a Command, he had had no Authority to lay down his Life; no more than Abraham had authority to ſacrifice Iſaac of his own head, neither could he have challeng'd any Acceptation of it for man at the hands of God. * Joh. 10. 18.

(3.) The Scripture doth ground the Merit of Chriſt upon the Grace of God. 'Tis called the Gift of God, and the Gift by Grace, which by Chriſt hath abounded to many: * ſome bring this place to prove the abſolute efficiency of Chriſts Merit, had he laid down his Life without the appointment of the Father; becauſe, as the ſin of Adam had demerit enough to Condemn the World, ſo the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt had Merit enough to ſave the World. But the queſtion is, whence this merit did ariſe? It did riſe perſonally from Chriſt himſelf, and the Dignity of his Perſon; But as to the Acceptation from the Father, which the Apoſtle reſolves in this place, in telling us? 'Tis the Grace of God, and the Gift of God, becauſe if Chriſts Death had a natural power of Merit without any precurſory agreement between the Father and the Son, it could not be ſaid then to be the grace of God, for God could not but in a way of Juſtice accept it. There is a * double Merit, Abſolute and Ex pacto or Covenanted Merit. Abſolute, when any good is done to a Perſon, which in the very Deed it ſelf, obligeth him for whoſe good it is done, to the Benefactor which doth it; as Generation and Education are the acts whereby Parents Merit of their Children. So that whether Children will or no, upon that very account that they are begotten, and brought up, they owe every thing to their Parents; ſo Creation being the work of God, the good of the Creature, for that very cauſe every Creature eſpecially Rational, is oblig'd to God; and God by this Act, doth merit all Adoration, Obedience and Reſpect from his Creature. Covenanted Merit, is a work done which doth not in its own nature oblige, but by vertue of ſome preceding Compact and Agreement between the Perſon Meriting, and that Perſon of whom he doth Merit. As when a King propoſeth a Reward to thoſe * Rom. 5. 15, 16, &c.

thoſe that run a Race, let men run never ſo well, they have no right to demand a Reward, but upon ſuch a Declaration of the Prince, and ſuppoſing that Edict and Declaration, he that runs hath a right to the Reward promis'd and appointed by the King, but no right to a reward in General; the whole right doth riſe, not from the Race ſimply conſider'd, but as it reſpects the Declaration and Order of the Prince. If we ſpeak of a Covenant Merit, Chriſt did fully Merit at the hands of God Eternal Salvation, for he fully perform'd what was agreed upon: But if we ſpeak of abſolute Merit, neither Chriſt, nor any Creature could merit any thing at the hands of God, or render God oblig'd to them by a natural right; no more than any man that runs a Race can oblige a King by his ſwiftneſs. As the merit of Chriſt regards us, it is abſolute; for Chriſt by his very undertaking (ſuppoſing he had not had any agreement with the father) to deliver us, and appeaſe the wrath of God againſt us, he had abſolutely merited of us all love and obſervance, yea though he had failed in it; but he had not merited of God any thing for us, by any undoubted right, but as it reſpects that agreement between the Father and the Son.

* Pſal. 16. 2. *My * goodneſs extends not unto thee, but to the Saints which are in the Earth.* Chriſt did not add any thing to God, whereby he might abſolutely merit of him; but to the Saints he did, whereby they are for ever obliged to him. Chriſt did not merit any thing for us at the hands of God, but as Mediator; and to this office he was predeſtinated by God, and therefore he merited nothing but by that decree, what he did was from the office of Mediator or Prieſt; And becauſe he was ſo, therefore he merited. As when any Officers are appointed by the King, whatſoever they act by Vertue of their Office, has its foundation in, and force from the Royal Authority. His faithfulneſs whereby he merited, hath its validity from the

* Heb. 3. 2. appointment of him in his Offices by God; who was * faithful to him that appointed him. There had been no honour accruing to him, and conſequently nothing chal-

* Heb. 5. 4. leng'd by him, unleſs he had been called of * God; No man takes this honour unto himſelf, but he that is called of God. Chriſt himſelf owns the Father to be the foundation and ſtability of all the ſalvation he wrought Pſal. 89. 27. He ſhall cry unto me thou art my Father, my God, and the rock of my Salvation; alſo I will make him my firſt-born higher than the Kings of the Earth. This is taken from 2 Sam. 7. 14. and cited Heb. 1. 5. as belonging to Chriſt, to prove his dignity above the Angels. The rock of my ſalvation, the ſtrength and foundation of the ſalvation I have wrought for men; or alluding to the Rock from whence the waters flowed to the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs; either way our Saviour owns his Father as the ſtability of it. This Salvation, i. e. not perſonal but mediatory ſalvation.

[3.] As it could not have been valid, had not the Father been principal in it, ſo it muſt needs be principally from him, becauſe it had not been for his honour that it ſhould principally have come from another hand. * It was not expedient that we ſhould be redeem'd by any but God, both as to the Medium of our Redemption, and the grand Author and Contriver of it. As God created us for happineſs, ſo we by our own fault revolted from him: To be reſtor'd to that happineſs from whence we fell, is a greater good than ſimply to be created; becauſe 'tis more deplorable to lye under the intolerable vengeance of an infinite God, than to lye in the depth of nothing. Since therefore mans happineſs doth conſiſt in a bleſſed immortality, How much more would man be obliged to him, who reſtores him to his loſt happineſs, than to him who created him in a ſtate wherein he might fall to imperfection and miſery? Being God hath given us life, if another ſhould bring us to a better life, without his intereſting himſelf in it; How much more of tender melting bowels would he diſcover, in conferring upon us that which is more magnificent? and we ſhould be indebted to him for the greater, to the former for the leſs. If it were ſo honourable a thing for his goodneſs to create us by himſelf, 'tis no leſs honourable to intereſt himſelf in our reſtoration. It had been no honour to him to have his work reſtor'd to beauty and perfection, by any other skill and directions rather than his own. 'Tis as much for the honour of the Father, to appoint a head for the reſtoring the World, as he did a head for the increaſe of it. By that one man which he appointed, the root of Mankind, a blot came upon the World; it were not honourable for him to have another head ſtand up, for re-inveſting man in a nobler happineſs, without his appointment.

Conſidering

Considering that in this work there is a discovery of the dearest Love and profoundest Wisdom, therefore the Father, the principal person in the Deity, must needs be the principal Author and Director; otherwise the principal Glory of these perfections would not belong to the principal person.

1. Love. If the first motion came not from him, it would represent him an hard Master, negligent of the good of his Creature, without Bowels, and only won by the importunities of his Son to have pity towards us. It would represent him only with Thunders, and the Son with Bowels, the greatest Honour would redound to the Son, and the Son would deserve more Honour than the Father, whereas the Honour upon the account of Mediation is equally due to both; John 5. 23. That all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. The Father is to be honoured for the greatness of his Love, in committing his right of judging to the Son; as the Son is to be honoured for undertaking, so the Father is to be honoured for sending him. He that honours not the Son, honours not the Father which hath sent him. The sending Christ is the ground of the Honour due to the Father in the work of Redemption. If the Father were not then the chief Author, the Honour of this love of Christ would not redound to him; it would not be to the praise of the Glory of his Grace; as Ephes. 1. 6. but to the praise of the Glory of the Grace of the Son. Herein is the Love of the Father, that he was placable, desirous to be at peace, orders his Son to procure it upon such Honourable Terms for himself, and secure in the Issue for the Creature, that he might communicate his goodness through a mediation to the polluted and rebellious World. The Love of the Father in this dispensation is as great in moving it, as the love of Christ was in consenting. Abrahams willingness to sacrifice his Son, was a Type of this. Christs Death was prefigur'd in Isaac, the Fathers willingness represented in Abraham.

2. Wisdom. As Goodness was the Motive of this Reconciliation, so Wisdom was the Director: The Father would not be principal in the greatest and highest notes of Wisdom that ever sounded in the Ears of Men: the highest act of Wisdom would originally flow from the Son, not from the Father. In this business he is known to be the only wise God: which attribute Paul celebrates with an Emphasis * Now unto the King Eternal, &c. the only wise God be Honour and Glory for ever and ever, after he had spoken of Salvation by Christ. No less than the Wisdom of God could invent it; a punishment was due to lapsed Man, that Justice might not be defrauded: an infinite punishment the Creature could not bear, the Honour of God could not be fully vindicated in that way: Man justly ow'd a satisfaction, but could not pay it; nor without that satisfaction could be acquitted by justice from the Obligation to an Eternal Curse. What, but Infinite Wisdom could contrive a way for Mans Deliverance, whereby Justice might have the highest Right, and Mercy the greatest Applause; that the enmity between God and the Creature might be totally demolisht, never to break out again; the security of the Creature established, never to be unravelled any more? The Wisdom of God must then be the Arbitrator in this great Affair, to compose all seeming contradictions, and appoint means fully proportioned to the ends intended. His love would not leave the World to perish, nor his Justice leave Sin without punishment: The one did not consist with his merciful Goodness, nor the other with the Honour of his Law, and the immutability of his sentence. There is a way therefore found in the treasures of his Wisdom to procure peace to the Sinner with Honour to himself; to reconcile the Sinner without impunity for the Sin; to satisfie both the cryes of his Justice, and the yearnings of his Bowels: the one in the punishment of sin in a surety, the other in pardoning sin in our persons. * That God might be appeased, and that Man might have wherewith to appease him, there is given to the Humane Nature a new man, greater than a man, which might satisfie for man, and have that in himself which might exceed all the Debt Man owed to God. This is such a manifold Wisdom which must spring from the Father, and to whom the Honour of it is due; as being his eternal purpose which he purposed in Jesus Christ our Lord. * This being therefore the highest Act of Wisdom, must originally arise from the Father, the principal person in the Deity, the Fountain of all Decrees, and therefore of those wherein the choicest Wisdom of the Deity sparkles.

2. God the Father is the principal Author of this Reconciliation.

(1.) The particular ſtile God aſſumes in the New Teſtament manifeſts it. A Title not known in the Old Teſtament, often in the New *. In the Old Teſtament he was called the God of Iſrael; and immediately before the diſcovery of Chriſt in the fleſh, Zachary bleſſes him under that Title. * Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he hath viſited and redeemed his people. And God in a ſolemn manner entitles himſelf the Lord God of their Fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, the God of Jacob. This was to be his Name for ever, and his memorial to all Generations, * becauſe he was a God ſetling his Covenant with them, and promiſing the Meſſiah out of their Loynes; therefore when he was to deliver the Iſraelites from the Ægyptian bondage according to his promiſe to Abraham, he entitles himſelf thus, that their Fathers might reſpect him in that promiſe; and among them he was chiefly known by this Title, and that of their God that brought them out of the Land of Ægypt, and ſometimes the Lord which created Heaven and Earth. But when the myſtery of Redemption hid in God from Ages and Generations was drawn out of his treaſury, he appears upon the ſtage in another garb with a new Title: when the ſpiritual redemption, whereof all their other deliverances were as Types, was wrought. He declares himſelf in a new ſtile as the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, becauſe the ſeed promiſed, upon which account he was called the God of Abraham, was now come, and the Covenant of Redemption was fully ſettled with him, and in him; and ſo he is called the God of Chriſt *. [1.] Not in regard of the Divine Nature, for ſo Chriſt is God equal with the Father; Phil. 2. 6. but in regard of his Humane Nature, as he was a Creature, and ſubject to God as a Creature. [2.] In regard of his Mediatory Offices; in which reſpect he is his Fathers Embaſſador, ſent with a Commiſſion, acting according to inſtructions received from him; in this regard he often owns that he acted by his Fathers Authority, that his Father was greater than himſelf. [3.] In regard of the Covenant between them: In this reſpect chiefly he is ſaid to be the God of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as he is ſaid to be the God in a ſpecial manner to Abraham, as being in Covenant with him *. Chriſt was in Covenant with God ſeveral wayes; under the legal Covenant, having ſubjected himſelf to it, and covenanted to fulfill the conditions of it. In the Covenant of Redemption wherein it was promiſed him to have a ſeed, and to be the Mediator and Foundation of the Covenant of Grace, the confirmer of it by his Death, and interpreter of it, and Advocate for the fulfilling the terms of it; though he was not properly in that under the Covenant of Grace himſelf. And as he is thus the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, he is the Father of mercies, and God of all comfort to us *. And as he ſtands in this relation, all ſpiritual bleſſings flow from him to us *: he is therefore the principal perſon to be conſidered in the work of Reconciliation, not only as the party to whom we are reconcil'd, but the party by whom the whole Plot and Model of our Reconciliation was laid, which is effected by the Son, and applyed by the Spirit.

2. All the ſpiritual bleſſings we have by Chriſt ſpring from the Father: Surely then Reconciliation and Redemption, which are none of the meaneſt Bleſſings, indeed the viſible Foundation of all the reſt, ariſing immediately from Election, the ſecret Foundation, and which are indeed the end which Electing love aim'd at; theſe are the corner ſtone upon which all the reſt are built. What Communications could we have from a God implacable? a God not reconcil'd? Therefore to God the Father the Apoſtle aſcribes all * : Bleſſed be the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who hath bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings in Heavenly places in Chriſt. If all, then this, None are excepted, Pardon of Sin, Endowment with Righteouſneſs, Adoption of Sons, Infuſions of Grace, Participation of the Divine Nature, whatſoever Bleſſings deſerve the title of Spiritual, own the Father as the firſt Fountain: he adds, in Heavenly places as our Tranſlation, or Heavenly things as others; both amount to the ſame, all the Bleſſings which reſpect our Heavenly ſtate. The Father was the Authoritative Actor in all that Chriſt did; John 14. 10. The Father that dwells in me, he doth the works: As the power of a Prince reſides in the Embaſſador, for the performance of thoſe Actions to which he is deſign'd: Whatſoever Chriſt purchaſed of the Father, he purchaſed by the Will of the Father, that he might communicate himſelf to us with Honour to all his glorious perfections. The Old Teſtament alſo aſcribes this to the principal perſon in the Deity *, I will ſave them by the Lord their God, or Jehovah their God; or, as the Chaldee, I will redeem them by the word of the Lord. He is therefore frequently called the God of peace, becauſe he is full of thoughts of peace, and is the Fountain of our peace in Chriſt; as he is called the God of Holineſs, becauſe there is nothing he thinks, nothing he doth, nothing he ſpeaks but is Holy, and is the Fountain of all Holyneſs to his Creatures. All that which we have by Chriſt, is ſaid to be the myſtery of his Will purpoſ'd in himſelf, according to his good pleaſure. Eph. 1. 9. What was the object of this purpoſe? All thoſe ſpiritual Bleſſings the Apoſtle had numbred up before, which he reſolved himſelf to complete and communicate to us by Chriſt; as all the motions in the World depend upon the motion of the primum mobile, ſo all our Bleſſings upon the motion of Gods love. In the Communication of thoſe Bleſſings, the Father hath a particular hand; 'tis not ſaid only that Chriſt is made to us Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs, Sanctification and Redemption, but made all thoſe to us of God *. And the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth the Father from the Son by this character; The Father of whom are all things, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom, are all things *. The Father is the firſt cauſe, firſt mover, firſt contriver of all Spiritual Mercies for us, of him are all things. Chriſt, the only means appointed by the Father to work thoſe things for us, and communicate them to us; therefore it is ſaid, by him are all things. Therefore the whole work of Redemption is often in the Old Teſtament called Gods Salvation; and in the New Teſtament called the Will of the Father, and Chriſt all along owns it; as my Father hath commanded me, ſo I do. Even thoſe Bleſſings which follow upon the Death of Chriſt, are the iſſues of the Grace of God; the riches of his Grace is the firſt cauſe of forgiveneſs *, the freeneſs of his Grace of our Juſtification *, being juſtified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Chriſt: Yet thoſe are the meritorious fruits of Chriſts Death; much more are the Councels, Contrivances, and reſolves about this, the Acts of his Free Grace.

3. The Order and Foundation of Election diſcovers it. God choſe men in Chriſt *, which Election is there aſcribed to the Father: This was an Act of Love in the Father, which in no wiſe falls under the merit of Chriſt; ſome things Chriſt merited, as our Reconciliation, Juſtification, &c. Some things were purely the Acts of Gods Love without any merit of Chriſt, as Election, and the incarnation of Chriſt. Chriſt did not merit Election, for he was the firſt fruit of it; Nor Gods purpoſe of Reconciliation, nor his own miſſion into the World; Election then being the proper Act of the Father, all thoſe means which were order'd for the accompliſhing the ends of Election, are of the Fathers appointment, for under Election doth fall both the manner and order of that which is to be done; therefore Chriſt alſo who is the only means of our Redemption; and Chriſt himſelf tells us, That the Love of the Father did precede his miſſion; John 3. 16. It did therefore precede his Deſignation. And Peter expreſly aſſerts it, * who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the World, but was made manifeſt in theſe laſt times for you. For you, relates not only to the manifeſtation in the latter times, but to the fore-ordination of him before the Foundation of the World. Chriſt was firſt Elected as Head and Mediator, and as the corner ſtone to bear up the whole Building; For the Act of the Fathers Election in Chriſt, ſuppoſeth him firſt choſen to this mediatory work, and to be the Head of the Elect part of the World. After this Election of Chriſt others were predeſtinated to be conformed to this image of his; * whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the Image of his Son, that he might be the firſt born among many brethren. i. e. To Chriſt as Mediator, and taking humane Nature: Not to Chriſt barely conſidered as God, for as God, Chriſt is no where ſaid to be the firſt born among many Brethren. This conformity being ſpecially intended in Election; Chriſt was in the intention of the Father, the firſt Exemplar and Copy of it. One foot of the compaſs of Grace ſtood in Chriſt as the Center, while the other walked about the Circumference, pointing out one here, and another there, to draw a line as it were between every one of thoſe points, and Chriſt. The Father then being the prime cauſe of the Election of ſome out of the maſs of Mankind, was the prime cauſe of the Election of Chriſt to bring them to the enjoyment of that, to which they were Elected. 'Tis likely that God in founding an Everlaſting Kingdom, ſhould conſult about the Members, before he did about the Head. Chriſt was regiſter'd at the top of the book of Election, and his Members after him. 'Tis called therefore the book of the Lamb; Chriſt was the Title, and chief ſubject Matter of the Book: He was firſt choſen as the well-Head of Grace and Glory, then others choſen on whom, from, and through him thoſe ſhould be conferr'd; for he hath choſen us in him, that we ſhould be Holy; therefore he choſe Chriſt as the ſpring to convey this Holineſs to his Elect. The Elect were given by the Father, to Chriſt, as Mediator. Chriſt therefore was ſet up as Mediator by the Fathers pleaſure; his Office was ſettled by the Father before the gift was beſtowed upon him.

(4.) The Creation of the World which is aſcribed to the Father, was principally intended by him for this end. All things were created *by him and for him : Chriſt was the means whereby God created all things, and the end for which they were created, that he might be Head of the Elect Kingdom which God intended to eſtabliſh by him, and diſcover the perfections of God in an illuſtrious manner; and therefore God will'd Chriſt then as the Head of all his works. * It was from Eternity decreed by God to create a World, to communicate himſelf to his Creature, and to have a number of Elect to praiſe him; Therefore he reſolved to create Man, and endue him with ſuch faculties, yet mutable; he knew what every thing would work, if it were created in this or that ſtate and condition. He knew the Devil would be envious of Mans Happineſs, he knew what temptation would aſſault Man, and the full ſtrength of that temptation, to what degree it would ariſe, and that Man would ſink under this temptation, Apoſtatize from him, ingulf himſelf and the whole Humane Race in miſery, and give him thereby an occaſion to lay open his Wiſdom, Goodneſs, Mercy, and Juſtice; for God ſees all things diſtinctly in their true cauſes, and therefore cannot but know the event of them; upon this fore-knowledge God appointed a remedy for man, wherein to manifeſt his perfections in a tranſcendent manner. And indeed God wil'd the Creation, and upon that the permiſſion of ſin, that he might take occaſion from thence to communicate himſelf to man in the moſt excellent manner: for he that works wiſely, doth not only work from foreknowledge, but from a prævious intention; as when God would make Joſeph a Prince in Egypt, and uſe to that end the envy and ill will of his Brothers, 'tis not to be thought that God only afier the foreſight of their ſin, did will to make Joſeph a Prince; but on the contrary, he would advance Joſeph to a Prince-like ſtate, and therefore did permit his Brothers ſin, to uſe their evil to a good end: we find all the Providences of God concurring ſince the Foundation of the World, to the bringing forth Chriſt the Head of it; therefore the firſt Will of God in the Creation was the advancement of his Son, and founding an Everlaſting Kingdom under him, becauſe in all wiſe diſpoſals of things, even by men, the execution of things anſwers the intention; and thoſe things which are laſt in execution, are firſt in intention. And the Scripture doth clearly evidence this, for it ſpeaks of a promiſe of Eternal Life given to thoſe that believe before the World began *. He doth not ſay the Decree, but the Promiſe; this promiſe was then made by the Father to Chriſt, for the conſtituting this mediatory Kingdom; he is therefore by this promiſe ſetled by the Father, as the Head of the Creation, and the Author of Reconciliation; for 'tis made to him as the Head of the believing World, and as the feoffe in that for them, for it concerns Eternal Life. To us, ſaith he, i. e. to thoſe that believe; and this promiſe was nothing elſe but that word which is now manifeſted through preaching. * The whole Goſpel is built upon this promiſe, and is nothing elſe but the manifeſtation and reſult of that negotiation between them before the beginning of the World: The Goſpel is nothing elſe but this peice of Gold beaten into leaf; we can not rightly rightly understand the Gospel till we understand this transaction, because The Gospel is nothing else but the explication of this first promise of God to Christ. Now these great Acts of Election and Creation being the Acts principally of the Father, and done for the Glory of Christ, and the compleating under him an Eternal Kingdom; It will follow, that the Father was also principal in all the designs of Christ, and in what he did. All things are for the Elect. The Elect for Christ, Christ for God. The Glory of God stands at the top as the chief end of all. * All are yours, you are Christs, and Christ is Gods. They were all created for Christ as the immediate end, for God as the ultimate end, and therefore now ruled and governed by Christ, and at last the Kingdom shall be delivered up to the Father, that God may be all in all *. * 1 Cor. 3. 22, 23. * 1 Cor. 18. 24.

(5.) All the thoughts of God in all ages of the World were about this concern. Christ owns this in his acknowledgment to God *: Many O Lord my God are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts to us ward, they cannot be reckon'd up in order unto thee, If I would declare, and speak of them, they are more than can be numbred: some observe that this Psalm hath wholly a respect to Christ, by reason of the different placing the words of the Title: the Name of David in the Hebrew being put before the word Psalm, לדוד ומזמור, and rather to be render'd to the chief Musitian concerning David a Psalm, i. e. The Antitype of David, Christ being called David. Hos. 3. 5. Jer. 30. 9. He that speaks of the innumerable thoughts or consultations of God about this, is the same person that speaks v. 6, 7, 8. which words are applyed to Christ Heb. 10. 5, 6, 7. and those verses seem to tell us what those counsels of God which appear so admirable were, viz. about Redemption by Christ: To this result did they all come, That Sacrifice thou would'st not, but a Body hast thou prepared me. The infinite numberless thoughts of God center in this one thing of making Christ the Foundation of the Reconciliation intended, and exalting him thereupon. All the thoughts of God discovered to us in the Scripture referr to this: the Spirit of Prophesie seems to be given chiefly for the publication of this: this God spake by the Mouth of all his Holy Prophets ever since the World began; concerning the sufferings of Christ: * Those things which God before had show'd by the mouth of all his Prophets that Christ should suffer, he hath fulfil'd. Concerning also his exaltation, and the compleating of his Kingdom, it was spoken by the mouth of all the Holy Prophets since the World began *. This thing run so in the mind of God, that he would have all the mouths of all his Prophets filled with it, and when Prophecy began first to breathe in the World, it was to declare this Grace of God: Not a signal Prophecy reveal'd since the foundation of the World, but there was something of Christ in it. The Testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy *: The prophetick Spirit which was from the beginning of the World, was a Witness of Christ what God had appointed him to do; not one Prophet is excepted *. And therefore the Spirit is sometimes more large in those stories or passages which were Types or Declarations of Christ, than in other things; as in Abels Death by Cain, when nothing is spoken of the Death of the other Children of Adam. How lively and largely is the story of Joseph, a Type of Christ in his sufferings and advancement, represented, Davids flights, and his ascent to the Crown, Solomons Temple, the particular description and punctual delineation of the Jewish Ceremonies, all relating to this. The story of Jonah, upon record, when many other prophesies were lost, chiefly as a Type of his Death in the Belly of the Whale, and of his Resurrection in being cast out upon dry land, after three dayes lying in the pit. The Law and the Prophets appear two distinct things at the first sight; as Moses and Elias at Christs transfiguration appear'd distinct from Christ *; but when the Cloud was removed, none but Christ was seen. So Law and Prophets center in him, and his reconciling expiatory Death; they, as it were disappear, and Christ appears to be the full sum and scope of them, when we lay our Eyes nearer to the Divine Mystery. His whole undertaking was enclosed in the Types, and represented by the Prophets. God hath discover'd that all his Counsels and Thoughts from the beginning of the World were about this; and when ever he sent any prophetick message, it was a Witness of Christ, or had some Relation to him. This may give us an item how we should read the Prophets, with an Eye to Christ, that our Thoughts in Reading may agree with Gods thoughts in declaring. So that I think from these put together it appears, That the Father is the principal author of our Redemption; That the original of Gods favour to lapsed man, must spring from his own natural grace and goodness; That the Death of Christ, did not first dispose God to have Mercy on us. The Fathers Love preceded the Gift, and therefore preceded his Resolution concerning the Gift. The Scripture makes Christs Death every where the effect of Gods Love, what is the Effect is not the moving Cause; his first workings of Mercy to us, were not rais'd up by the Death of the Redeemer.

III. Third Thing. Wherein the Agency of the Father in this affair doth appear. God was in Christ Reconciling the World.

* Isa. 42. 1. * Isa. 43. 10. 1. As choosing and appointing Christ. In which respect he is called the * Elect of God, the Servant whom he hath * chosen, said to be appointed by him, Heb. 3. 2. He was fore-ordain'd in the Decree, design'd in the Promise, prefigur'd in the Types, Predicted by the Prophets. Our Redeemer came forth of the womb of a Decree from Eternity, before he came out of the Womb of the Virgin in time: He was hid in the Will of God, before he was made manifest in the flesh of a Redeemer: He was a Lamb slain in Decree, before he was slain upon the Cross: He was possessed by God in the beginning, or the beginning of his * way, the head of his works, and set up from everlasting to have his delights among the sons of men. The Fathers appointment of Christ, is not to be understood of an appointment to his Sonship, for so he was from Eternity begotten; but to his Mediatorship. As he was from Eternity the Son of God by Generation, so he was from Eternity the Mediator between God and Man by Constitution: The one is Natural, the other Arbitrary: As he was the Son, he was only God; as Mediator, God and Man. His being a Son, is in order of Nature before his being a Mediator; His being a Son, is from Gods Nature; His being a Mediator, is from Gods will. Believers are said to be begotten sons according to his Will, but Christ is a begotten Son according to his Nature, and Mediator according to his Will: Christ is a name of Charge and Office, not of Nature. He had been a Son, had he never been a Mediator, or stept in for the rescue of the World. All therefore that Christ did, is comprehended in one word, Doing the Will of God, * I come to do thy Will O God: there was an Antecedent Act of Will in God, before there was a subsequent Act of Will in Christ in order of Nature. 'Tis called therefore the Wisdom of God, in regard of Contrivance *; his Purpose in regard of the Immutability and Peremptorines of his * Will; the Pleasure of the Lord, in regard of the Delight he took both in the Contrivance and Resolution; Both in the Act of his Head and * Heart.

(1.) He was appointed by the Father to this End, viz. of Redemption. God set him up as a screen between the injur'd Deity, and the offending Creature. 'Tis the scope of the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, to manifest that Christ was design'd to be an High-Priest, To offer sacrifice for men. He was design'd to be a Sacrifice, because all other were * insufficient; and he submits to be a sacrifice, for to that purpose he had a body to do the Will of God in. This was Gods aim in his first choice: he was to be the foundation of the Covenant for his people, to bring the Prisoners from Prison, and those that sit in darkness out of the * Prison house; he intended him as a propitiation for * Sin; whom God hath set forth to be propitiation, προέθετο, purpos'd, (the same word is translated, Eph. 1. 9. purpos'd) ver. 25, 26. To declare, I say, his righteousness at this time that he may be just, and the justifier of them that believe in Jesus. Ἱλαστήριον alluding to the propitiatory under the Law, a type of Christ: He purpos'd him in his Eternal Decree to this end, he shadowed him in the Mercy-seat under the Law, and afterwards expos'd him to publick view, to declare his righteousness in the remission of Sin. And because it seems incredible, which a wounded Conscience especially will hardly believe, the Apostle repeats it again. One would think that Justice should lay aside its demands against the sinner, rather than feed on so rich a sacrifice. But God did, notwithstanding his near relation to him, single him out in his Eternal Council from Angels and Men, intended him in the ἱλαστήριον, and all the Types of the Law, and brought him upon the Stage in time to declare his Justice, to be as ready to be appeas'd, and save upon that account, as before it was to damn. He is therefore call'd the Lamb of God, Joh. 1. 29. (in allusion to the Lambs separated for the daily Sacrifice) to be offer'd up to God, God, for the taking away the sins of the World. It was with respect to the Will of God in this first appointment that he deliver'd up himself, * He gave himself for our sins according to the will of God, whereby is meant the father in the Deity. In the very ordaining him the Father respected our Glory, 1 Cor. 2. 7. Hidden wisdom which was ordain'd for our glory. This hidden wisdom is Christ Crucified, as appears in the next verse. Christ as reconciling by his suffering, is the wisdom of God hidden with him, not known to the world for many Ages. Had God had a mind to remain an Enemy, he had dealt with Mankind after that Covenant of Works which they had transgrest; and never had deputed a Mediator to stand between himself and them, to Administer things according to the tenor of another Covenant. It was highly represented, Exod. 24. 8. when Moses sprinkled the bloud of the sacrifice upon the people, calling it the bloud of the Covenant: at the end of this Action, Moses and Aaron, with his Sons and the seventy Elders, saw the God of Israel in a Humane Shape, ver. 10. There was under his feet as it were a paved work of Sapphire, and as it were the body of heaven in its clearness. The Sapphire, some tell us, was an Emblem of the Kingly and Priestly Office; such a representation there was when he appear'd as a man to * Ezekiel. Immediately after this typical representation of him in the sprinkling the bloud of the Covenant, he appear'd to them in a humane form, as the great intended Antitype of that Type they had been immediately before celebrating. As the Spirit is appointed to a peculiar Office to sanctifie, and therefore is called a Spirit of * holiness; and the end of his Mission is to sanctifie. So the appointment of Christ was to an Office of High Priest and Reconciler, and therefore whatsoever he did and suffered belonged to that office by peculiar designation. He was appointed to be a witness to the * people, a witness of the transcendent love of God, to bring men to God, that the Nations which knew him not might run unto him.

(2.) God appointed him to every office in order to this redemption, to every degree and circumstance. As a Priest to appease his Wrath, a Prophet to declare his mercy, a King to bring men to the terms of Reconciliation. He was appointed a Priest for ever, that we might draw nigh to * God; God design'd him as a Prophet, from whom we might receive his lively * oracles; God set him up as a King, that those might be blessed that put their trust in * him. The very Circumstances were appointed by God; That he should be born of a Virgin; the place where, Bethlehem; of the Jewish Race; of the Royal line of David, and that when it was decay'd and sunk to poverty and misery; a rod out of the stem of * Jesse, a root out of a dry * ground, and the Jews never question'd the Royalty of Christs Extraction. The time of his coming was fixed in Jacobs prophecy about the time of the fall of the Jewish * Government, before the ruine of the second Temple, Mat. 3. 1. After 70 weeks of years, from the time of Daniels prophesie. What was figur'd in Gods opening Adams side to form a spouse; in the death of righteous Abel by the hands of his brother Cain; in Isaac, under the edge of the knife upon mount Moriah, and rais'd to be a blessing to the World; In Joseph in the Pit and Prison, and afterwards on the Throne, to deliver the Church from Famine; In the Paschal Lamb, kill'd to save the sprinkled houses with its bloud from the destroying Angel, were really fulfill'd in him, all the circumstances were appointed with a particular designation of the end of them. The manner of his Death was foretold by * David, they have pierced my hands and my feet. The manner of his Crucifixion, his Burial, Resurrection and Prosperity afterwards, the blessing of men by him, justification by the knowledge of him were decyphered by * Isaiah above 700 years before his coming, so exactly, as if that prophesie had rather been a Gospel writ after his Death, since the events answer'd so punctually to each prediction. nate Counsel and foreknowledge of God. Counsel and Fore-knowledge are joyn'd, to shew that there was the highest reason and most resolute Will: not a Casual thing or contingency, but an immutable Decree for his reconciling death, fixed after the wisest Counsel. And therefore in this appointment to this Office, God took an Oath, and thereby constituted Christ an irrevocable Priest, after the Order of Melchisedec, Heb. 7. 21. to bless his people with * Peace, which Oath must refer to the first appointment of Christ to this office, in order to the making him a surety of a better Testament, ver. 22. Better, for the preservation of the honour of God and happiness of man. It was such a constitution that admitted not of the least alteration or Repentance in God; an Oath which was not taken for the Creation of the World, or the setling of the Aaronical Priesthood; by this Oath he declares this Constitution to be irreversible. In this regard he is said to be sealed by God, to shew the perpetuity of this Constitution, as the Seal to the book, Rev. 5. 1. shows the irreversible certainty of Gods Decrees. And therefore his appearance before his Incarnation in his Glory, as well as after his Ascension, was with a Rainbow incircling * him; a sign of an Everlasting Covenant that God would no more bring a destroying Deluge upon the World, Gen. 9. 16. The Apostle seems to intimate as though this Decree and Constitution was the Standard of all Gods other actions; the point in which they should all Center, or the rule which they should be squar'd by; for as * all our sins met on Christ, so all Gods Counsels met in him, Eph. 1. 9. the Rule must be perpetual, since all Gods works were to be regulated by this Counsel. Speaking of this Mystery of his Will, which he had purpos'd in himself, to gather in one all things in Christ, he repeats again, ver. 11. this purpose of him who works all things according to the counsel of his own will. All things took birth from this Counsel, and were for the perfecting this Will.

(4.) God chose him to this work with an high delight, as one fully fit for the work, In whom he could confide. He put no trust in his Saints, for they were in their own Nature defectible *; where a man cannot trust his Concerns, he can have no Pleasure. The Son of God's undertaking to be the head of the Elect, and satisfie for them, was that the Father could only place his confidence in; this was that which could only be acceptable to him. He calls him his Elect, Isa. 42. 1. בְּחִירִי, Behold my servant whom I uphold, my elect in whom my soul delights. My tryed Elect; the word signifies, one chosen after serious consideration and trial. God found none so fit among all the Legions of Angels, none that could so compleatly answer his design for Reconciliation; but upon a full Examination of the whole affair he found him exactly fit for it, and therefore brings him in with a Behold, a note of Admiration, as one he could rest in; for so the word אִתְמַךְ signifies as well as to uphold. Upon this trial, and upon this confidence, his soul, as it follows, delighted in him. He knew he would be faithful, and able to perfect it; some therefore refer, Heb. 1. 9. Thou hast loved righteousness, &c. therefore God hath anointed thee, &c. to the first constitution of Christ; God rested upon the holiness of his nature: and that Isa. 49. 1. From the Bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name, expresseth (in the judgment of some) the great joy of God in this Mediator, he had my name as I was constituted Mediator continually in his mouth. It was his pleasure to be always thinking and speaking of it; or it may note the familiar converse between the Father and the Son, concerning this work of Redemption; we speak and think much of that wherein we have the greatest pleasure. And those words, Prov. 8. 30, 31. I was daily his delight rejoycing in the habitable parts of the earth, intimate that the Son was the dayly delight of the Father, as he had plac'd his mediatory delights among the Sons of men; as the Father saw all things exactly setled and govern'd by the Son, according to his Mind and Council. And therefore when this suretiship of Christ is mention'd, God is pleas'd to expres himself with a pleasing Admiration, * their governour shall proceed out of the midst of them, and I will cause him to draw near and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engageth his heart to approach unto me, saith the Lord? Showing the delight of his soul in his own choice, and his Sons acceptance, in the greatness of his Person, and the heartiness of his undertaking. The word עָרַב signifies to pawn or be a surety. We many times expres our joy in a mode of admiration; so is God pleased to descend to our capacities in expressing his, what is the ground of it, ver. 22. the everlastingness of the Covenant; and you shall be my people, and I will be your God.

* Job 15. 15.

* Jer. 30. 21.

God. How may we approach to God with the pleas of Christ in our mouths, since the Father had so mighty a delight in him?

(5.) The Father had a particular love to Christ in this appointment, and highly loved him for his acceptance of it. If he lov'd his Sons consent to it, he loved his own proposal of it; John 17. 24. Thou hast loved me before the foundation of the World; which according to the best Interpreters, respects Christs person as Mediator, rather than his naked Deity. The Father loved Christ as Mediator in the first designment, that in him he might love his Elect. Our Saviour prays as Mediator; the Love therefore which he useth as an argument, was the love of the Father to him as Mediator. The Father's love to him as the second person in the Trinity, had not been an argument congruous for that petition of his peoples seeing his glory; for the Love of the Father to him in that regard, did not necessarily infer a Love to any Creature; but his love to him as Mediator and Head, doth infer his love to all his Members, and was a sutable argument wherewith to press him for a glorifying his whole Body. Certainly if God loved Christ because he did lay down his life for his sheep *, there must be an high degree of love to him, because he answer'd the Fathers appointment of him from Eternity, by a voluntary consent; as the Act of Suffering, so the first undertaking draws out the Fathers love: the Father loved him before, as his Natural Son; he now loves him as the Universal Head; the Fathers loving him for complying with this appointment, manifests the height of his love to all his Members, for whose sake, next to his own Glory, he constituted him in his Mediatory Office. Some think that the well-pleasedness of the Father with Christ for this work, was one part of the Glory of Christ: no doubt it was after its performance of it, and is his glory now in Heaven: If so, I would thus understand Joh. 17. 5. Glorify me with thy own self, with that glory which I had with thee before the World was: i. e. Testifie thy self well-pleased with my Mediation, which was the glory I had with thee as Mediator before the World was: the glory of his Deity was not impair'd, that was not therefore the glory he prays for; 'tis a glorifying him with his own self; what is it then but the high affection the Father bore to him; for what glory can we conceive to come from the Father to to the Son as Mediator before the World was, but this? The Argument he uses evidenceth it. * I have manifested thy name, i.e. I have actually done that, in the undertaking whereof O Father thou wert so highly pleased. And v. 4. I have glorified thee on the Earth, and finished the work thou gavest me to do. I have glorifyed thee by witnessing that thou art a God placable, full of love, Reconciling the World; therefore glorifie me. As the glory Christ brought to God relates to the business of Redemption, so the glory he requests of God which he had before, more likely relates, not to the glory of his Deity, but his glory as Mediator, which is Gods mighty pleasure with it, acceptation of his willingness to perform it, and great affection he bore to him thereupon. The glory of his Deity was not a Subject to be prayed for: the glory which he was by Covenant to have after his Death and Resurrection in his Humane Nature, was a glory in decree, and by compact, but not actually possessed before his ascension. But the acceptation of him, and high pleasure in him, as undertaking to be our surety, was a glory he really had with the Father before the World was: Nor doth this sense weaken the proof from hence of the Deity of Christ; for if he were in being before the World was, he was no Creature. How comfortably may we take up the same argument in our mouths as Christ did here, since the love he bore to Christ as Mediator before the World was, did redound to every Member of his Sons which was to be in time!

(6.) God doth glory in this contrivance and appointment. With what daring expressions to all Creatures doth God challenge the Honour of founding this Covenant of love and peace wholly to himself? No Creature did so much as put in his opinion in this counsel, or contribute any thing to it, but he would go away with the whole glory himself, Isa. 45. 21. Tell ye, and bring them near, yea, let them take counsel together, who hath declared this from ancient time? who hath told it from that time; have not I the Lord? and there is no God besides me, a just God, and a Saviour. There is no contriver, no declarer of this but my self. 'Tis not meant of the deliverance from Babylon, as some interpret it, which is evinc'd by the following verses, to the end of the chapter: as also verse 17. where it is called an Everlasting lasting Salvation, which shall admit of no shame and confusion, World without end, a Salvation that shall last as long as Eternity endures. Well might all the Attributes of God glory. How surprizing is his love, that the Holy of Holies should so love Sinners; the Soveraign Monarch justly jealous of his glory, furious Rebels, and unprofitable Slaves, as to appoint his Son for the Reconciler and Saviour: What Motives could there be but misery to draw out the Bowels of this love? What attractives in ungrateful creatures lying in their blood? What arguments could be in our thoughts to plead with God for so admirable a design? Justice and Mercy are comprehended as the great things he glories in: Just God, and a Saviour. Wisdom might glory in the contrivance, and Goodness in the appointment of one so strong to be a Sacrifice for propitiation; to be himself a just Judge, and yet a tender Saviour; (for the Father is called Saviour as well as the Son *; the kindness of God our Saviour distinguisht from Christ our Saviour, v. 6.) he finds a way to have a valuable satisfaction of his Justice, wherein should be bound up an Eternal security to the Sinner; a great Priest for our guilt, and a beautiful pattern for our imitation; Justice should triumph in the Punishment, Mercy in the Redemption, the Creature in the fruits redounding from both. How much was his Soveraignty glorified in it, which he seems also to aim at; I am a God, and there is none beside me. His Soveraignty was manifest over all the Creation; Men and Angels were his absolute Vassals; there was nothing wanting to declare the highest pitch of it, when his own Son became a Servant; the Lord of all things became lower than Angels, and as low as the meanest man; who shall stand out against his pleasure, since the Son, equal with him, stood not out against his Fathers Will? God doth this of himself, of his own Grace; by himself, his own Wisdom; for himself, his own Glory.

2. God the Father solemnly called him, John 10. 36. Say you of him whom the Father hath sanctified and sent into the World, thou blasphemest, because I have said I am the Son of God? Our Saviour mentions a double act of the Father towards him, Separation and Mission, a Dedication of Christ to his Mediatorship, and then his Actual Mission. This Call is expresst Isa. 49. 1. The Lord hath called me from the womb; which doth not imply, saith Calvin, that he was but then called, when he came out of the Womb of the Virgin, or that the Prophet doth define the beginning of time; but it is as much as if he had said, before I came out of the Womb, God called me, and separated me to this Office: As Paul speaks of his separation from the womb *, yet he was chosen before the foundation of the World; and Jeremiah was known before he was form'd in the Belly, and sanctifyed and ordain'd a Prophet before he came out of the Womb. So that in this place the Prophet introduceth Christ, speaking of his call to this Office, after it was formed in the Eternal counsel of God. In regard of this call by God, and his acceptance of it, he is the same yesterday that he was to day, and will be for ever. His call to the Mediatorship was of an higher date than the Types of the Law; for before Abraham was, he was *, in the call to, and actual exercise of his Mediatory Function; it was an argument to prove his former assertion, that Abraham saw his day, and rejoyced in the sight of it; which would be of no strength, if he were not then known as Mediator, by whom God was to be reconcil'd to Man. 'Tis I am, to show the constant Relation he had to this Office before Abraham was, I am; Mediator; affirming himself here to be the Messiah according to the Jews usual speech, that the Law and the Messiah were before the Creation of the World. The words used to express the call of Christ, are of a greater signification than the word used for the call of Aaron, Heb. 5. 4. καλούμενος, as if you should in ordinary way call a man to you, or call him by his Name: But v. 10. speaking of the Call of Christ, it is a word of a more weighty signification, προσαγορευθεὶς, solemnly called and pronounced an High Priest.

1 God called him to it as an honour. * No man takes this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high Priest, but he that said unto him, thou art my Son, to day have I begotten thee. Christ glorified not himself to be made an high Priest, but he, i. e. the Father glorified him, and bestow'd an honour upon him when he called him. The Father thought thought it an honour at the time of the Call, not that there could be any addition of honour to the Person of Christ as God, or as though he had been defective in Honour, in being the Son of God and not Mediator; but as the Mediatory or Priestly Office is an excellent Office, and honourable Employment. Supposing the Incarnation of Christ design'd, the Mediatory Office was the highest honour could be conferr'd upon him; what greater Glory can there be, than to be plac'd in such a sphear, wherein he may honour the Creator more than all besides? Can there be a greater Honour, next to being the Son of God, than to compensate the injuries God had suffer'd, and repair the Ruins under which the Creature had fallen; to restore Gods Honour to him without Blemish, yea, with a greater brightness; like a bloody Sun in the evening, rising fairer and fresher the next day; and Happiness to man without a flaw; to give God ground to look upon his works with Pleasure, and man a foundation to look upon God with delight? the honour appears to consist in being the Author of Eternal Salvation, as it follows * *; though this Honour was to cost him dear, yet he was recompens'd in the Ends of it, the high satisfaction of God and reparation of the creatures. In which sence his reward is said to be with him, as well as his work before * him; How is his work his reward? he shall feed his flock like a shepherd, and gather the Lambs with his arm; he shall restore Gods chosen ones into his fold. What greater glory than to be a reconciling Mediator, through whose hands all the communications between God and Man were to pass? * Nay the very calling him to death, and proposing it to him for such high ends, seems to be a greater honour than his innocence barely consider'd, or his Exaltation afterwards; * But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower then the Angels, for the suffering of death, crown'd with glory and honour, that he by the grace of God might taste death for every * man. It would be worth consideration, whether this glory and honour be not meant of the honour of his Office, as his being lower than the Angels is meant of his state of Humiliation in the World; and understanding it so, the words lye very fair before us. If it were understood of his Glory after his Sufferings, why should it be added immediately after that he should taste death for every man? that was not the end of his Exaltation after his death, but his exaltation was the reward of that. But the sence runs cleverly thus. But we see Jesus who in his state in the World was lower than Angels, yet in regard of his Office and design had a Crown of Honour and Glory above them all, in that by the grace of God he was set apart to taste death for every man; and by the pursuit of the Apostles discourses, speaking of his perfection by suffering for the destruction of the Devil who had brought death upon Mankind, and the making Reconciliation for the sins of the people, the office it self in which he was placed for those great ends may be well said to be a Crown of Honour and Glory. It was an honourable Office in a state of Humiliation, as Davids Line was an honourable Line in a state of Poverty. It was in his Death he discover'd his Vertues, Victories and Triumph. In his Death he blazon'd out all the Perfections of his Father; he illustrated his Mercy, and show'd how dear the souls of men were to him. He displayed his holiness, and manifested how odious the sins of men were to him. What would Christ have been (supposing the union of the second person to the Humanity) if he had not died? he had not been made perfect as the Apostle intimates (to * make the captain of their salvation perfect through suffering) without suffering. He was called by God to suffering, that he might be perfect as Mediator, that the Justice of God might as it were quench its thirst in his bloud, and the Mercy of God rise out of that Sea of Bloud, like a rich morning Sun: and perfect also as a pattern, for in that his Humility, Charity, Patience appear'd in the highest manner to the Sons of men for their imitation. God called him to it as an Honour, and plac'd the very honour of it in the very suffering that Death, as well as in acting afterwards upon that foundation as High Priest, for reconciling Man. 'Tis inconsistent with the immense goodness of God, to bind his Creature to any thing but what is highly conducing to the honour and happiness of his Creature. Much less doth it consist with the goodness of God, and that infinite Affection he bore to his Son, to call him to that which was not an honour in it self. But this Honour of High Priest God calls him to, is an honour next to that of his Sonship, which those words intimate * but thou hast said to him, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, as if it it were a new begetting him. If it be then an honour in the account of God for Christ to dye for such worthy Ends, 'tis not less an honour to him to exercise that Office, which is so honourable in it self, which is an high ground of Faith and Confidence in him, in all our approaches to him, wherein we do engage him in glorious acts and worthy of him.

2. God counselled him upon this call to undertake it with large proffers. * I will bless the Lord who hath given me counsel. It was the same person that blesseth God for this Counsel, who saith ver. 8. that he had set the Lord always before him; which words are expressly said by Peter to be spoken by David concerning him, i. e. Christ. * I foresaw the Lord alwayes before my face, for he is on my right hand; and so cites it to the end of the Psalm. Christ doth bless God for this Counsel, and set this Counsel of God alwayes before him, which I have spoken of in reference to Christs blessing God for it, before upon another occasion. I now cite it to evidence that there was a counsel of God to Christ about this affair. What was that he was counsell'd unto? To his Sufferings: which are intimated in the following verse; Upon the assurance that his flesh should rest in hope, and that his soul should not be left in Hell, or the Grave, the state of the dead, and the assurance of the fulness of joy and pleasure which he should have upon the account of this Mediation for Evermore. If the Father were the first mover, That motion was not without an advice to Christ to concern himself as Mediator, and declaring how agreeable it would be to him; upon which account, what Christ did and suffered, was not only out of a Bare Obedience, but an Affectionate Obedience; Joh. 14. 31. That the world may know that I love the Father. Therefore Psal. 40. 8. Tis said, Gods law was within his heart, or within his Bowels. It proceeded out of a tenderness of Affection to satisfie his Father, who was desirous of reconciling man to him. For in Christs undertaking, it could not be love to the Father, unless the effect of it, which was Reconciliation of man, had been declared by his Father to be a thing highly pleasing to him; which declaration was as a counselling Christ to this work. The Father counsels the creation of man, Gen. 1. 26. Let us make man; no less was the counsel about Redemption, the Fathers counsel, Let us so make man. The Father counselled him to be the head and knot of the whole Creation, whereby he might rest in it with a full complacency; the Son clasp't about the Father with Love and Joy; the Father enfolds Christ in the glorious Bosom of his counsel; the Son embraceth the Father with the arms of an Affectionate Compliance; a mighty Harmony! the one in proposing, the other in complying, that the glory of God, and the felicity of the Creature, might be compleated in an Eternal Marriage. The Truth is, the manner of the Eternal Decrees and Counsels of God, are to us finite Creatures, incomprehensible; but the Scripture lowers it self in Expressions sutable to our Conceptions. As God is, in his Word, represented to us with Eyes and Ears, and Humane Members, in a way of Condescension to our Capacities; upon the same account are the Transactions of God, by such wayes of Expression, brought down to our Apprehensions. Add to this, * the counsel of peace shall be between them both; Some make this Counsel of Peace to be between the two Offices, the Royal and Priestly, both in conjunction and not interfering one with another, as sometimes they did in the Jewish state. Others, between the two Persons, the Lord and the Man, that is called the Branch. The Will of the Father and the Son, as they are one Essence, is one; as they are two Persons, there is the Counsel of both. Counsels seem to belong rather to Persons than Offices.

3. God gives Christ a particular command concerning our Reconciliation and Redemption. God purposing the Redemption of man, the uniting his Elect under one Head, designing the Person, proposing to him the Affair, to be manag'd in a Body; our Mediator, accepting of this Constitution, receives a Command to dye; * this commandment have I receiv'd of my father, i. e. to lay down his Life. Sometimes it is called the Will of his Father. The Will of God is called a Law, Psal. 40. and the Sufferings of Christ are called Obedience, Phil. 2. 8. He became obedient unto the death of the Cross. He was obedient in all things, things antecedent to the Cross, and to the last point. It could not be Obedience to the Law as a Creature, because he never transgress'd it; and being innocent, and under the Covenant of Works, he had not disobeyed, if he had not suffer'd, because according to that covenant of Works,

Works, he was not bound to ſuffer; for being without ſin he might have pleaded his right; beſides God would never command any thing againſt his own covenant *. It muſt therefore be obedience to ſome other Precept, concerning his Mediatory Sufferings. And Rom. 5. 19. As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous. The Obedience of Chriſt, is oppoſed to the diſobedience of Adam; therefore as the diſobedience of Adam was a proper diſobedience, oppoſite to a plain Precept; ſo the obedience of Chriſt was a proper obedience, conformable to ſome Precept. A congruous reaſon may be rendred for this command, becauſe as men were deſtroyed by diſobedience, ſo they ſhould be repair'd by obedience; and becauſe a work done in obedience is more perfect in it ſelf, and acceptable to God; for his Authority and Soveraignty, the Righteouſneſs, Holineſs and Equity of his Law is ſolemnly own'd thereby. Some queſtion, whether the Command laid upon Chriſt, as Mediator, was a particular Precept, or only a revealing of his Incarnation and Death, as a neceſſary means for the Redemption of man, becauſe he had decreed to accept no other ſatisfaction. Some think this latter, and that upon Gods revealing his Mind, there preſently did ariſe in Chriſt an obligation to undertake this. 'Tis more likely, that this Affair is expreſt to us under the notion of a Call, Counſel, Command; to ſhew the Ardency of the Fathers Affection, for mans Recovery, in an Honourable way, to Himſelf; becauſe the Scripture placeth Redemption in the Fathers Love and Grace, as the Fountain; and in Chriſts love to his Father as well as to us, as hath been before noted. There was the Declaration of the Will of the Father, which was the Rule of Chriſts Acting, as the Will of God is the Rule of the Spirits Interceſſion in us, Rom. 8. 27. According to God; or as our Tranſlators have it, according to the will of God. A Rule ſeems to be ſet for the Spirits Acting when he was ſent, and a Rule ſet for Chriſts acting when he was called; the Spirit had a Rule ſet, for he was to glorifie * Chriſt, and Act upon that Foundation. This doth not weaken the voluntarineſs of Chriſt in his undertaking, who was ready to comply with the Call, and made himſelf of no reputation, when he became obedient to the death of the Croſs. When this command was given, is not ſo clear; but as the Promiſe was made before the World began, Tit. 1. 2. ſo might the Precept be given, before the World began, to Chriſt, conſidered as Mediator, for Precepts many times accompany Promiſes; the Divine Nature, which undertook the Mediatory Office, was not in it ſelf capable of a command or a promiſe.

Firſt, How adorable then is the depth of Gods Wiſdome, and the vehemency of his kindneſs, to have a remedy ready to apply for the cure of fallen nature? God had a ſalve lying by him for the ſore, and provided himſelf with a remedy for defeating the deſigns of Satan. * When he came to make a proceſs againſt Adam for his diſobedience, and pronounce that death which he had merited, he like a Merciful Father declar'd this appointment of one that ſhould ſuffer indignities from Satan, and deliver man from the death he had deſerved. When he came to expel Adam out of his forfeited Paradiſe, he aſſures him of one that ſhould open the gates of the heavenly Paradiſe to him. He appoints his Recovery, as well as charges him with his Crime; * and though he barr'd the Garden againſt him by a flaming ſword, he promiſes to readmit him by the ſeed of the woman, in whoſe bloud that ſword ſhould loſe both its edg, and flame; its cutting, and ſcorching quality. * Oh the miracles of Divine Love! The Law ſaw us guilty, inſolently taking up Arms againſt him, plunging our ſelves into thoſe Crimes he had prohibited, loathing thoſe Vertues he had commanded, guilty of millions of ſins, meriting millions of deaths, and the wrath of God, the quinteſſence of Hell. Yet how did his Bowels work within him, and never ceas'd till he had found a way infinitely ſatisfactory to himſelf, and infallibly ſafe for his creature, whereby his injur'd Attributes are righted, and our offending ſouls rendred capable of the happineſs they had made themſelves unworthy of! He did this, and did it himſelf, by a Decree incapable of any alteration, ſtanding like a firm Pillar to ſupport mans happineſs; the everlaſting fountain of his love, and joy were opened at the very thoughts of this Admirable deſign. He claſp'd about the Mediator with the deareſt Affections never to be withdrawn, counſell'd, commanded, would not grow cool, and faint in the concern. He drew out of the depths depths of his infinite Wisdom, such a Model which makes Angels gaze, and believing sinners fall down to the dust in an humble admiration. He hath appointed the Heir of all things, to be a servant for Rebels; the Lord of Glory, to be a man of sorrows; to pay his Life, more worth than the lives of all the Angels, as a Ransom for us; appointed him to shed his bloud, to preserve ours, and singled him out to feel the sword of his wrath in his own heart, that we might feel the effusions of his healing Balm in ours. Oh wonderful goodness! to appoint and call out purity to suffer for impurity, and the innocent for the Criminal.

2. Raise pleas in prayer from these Considerations. You address your selves to the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ, represent to him his eternal Design, the mark of his love, the Centre of his delight. Desire of him that Jesus, with all his Glories, with all his Graces: Argue with him, whether he hath not as much joy to see the fruits of his Sons Death, to confer them upon his lost and sensible Creatures, as to call him out for so great a purpose. Spread before him his Eternal counsels, open the book of his Resolves about Christ, read every syllable before him: Let your soaring Admirations, and your ardent Petitions keep pace together. How infinitely will the Father be pleased with such arguments drawn from his own Eternal Thoughts of Redemption. If he appointed a Mediator for you when you were Rebellious, he will not deny that Mediator to you, when you are earnest and humble Suppliants. His delight will be as much to bestow him upon them that seek him, as it was to consecrate him for men, when he knew they would spurn against him. He hath the same thoughts of reconciling Mercy, and nothing that he hath done in order to this, doth he yet repent of; he hath sworn when he call'd his Son, and will not repent; Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec: Make use therefore of him as supports of Faith, and Arguments in Prayer.

3. The Father enters into terms of Agreement with the Son, about the work and methods of Redemption: which is expresst by Divines by the Term of a Covenant.

A Covenant, is an Agreement of two or more Persons, in some common End pleasing to them both, upon certain Articles and Conditions voluntarily consented to by both, and to be perform'd by each party with solemn Obligations. So that in it there are two persons, mutual Proposals and Conditions, mutual consent, terminating in one and the same end. Now this Covenant between the Father and the Son, was a transaction between them concerning mans Recovery, consisting of Articles to be performed by both Parties; something to be perform'd by Christ to the Father, something to be perform'd by the Father to Christ. Something the Father required of him, something the Father promis'd to him. Some * make this Covenant to be rather Gods purpose and decree, concerning Christs Incarnation and Passion, and success of his suffering, and the issue thereupon, and therefore improperly called a Covenant. I do not stand upon the Term, though it seems to be best represented to our conceptions under the Notion of a Covenant, and the Scripture delivers it to us under the form of a treaty and debate, Isa. 49. Though the Father, Son and Spirit have but one Will essentially, yet in this affair they are distinctly considered as two Persons, treating and agreeing in one point upon certain conditions. Or as * There was a new habitude of Will in the Father and the Son, toward each other, that is not in them essentially, and it is called new, as being in God freely, not naturally. Such a covenant is acknowledged by most. Arminius confesseth it to be pretty clear from Isa. 53. 10. When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days; in his Oration De sacerdotio Christi. And some of the greatest Jesuites, as Suarez, Tirinus on Isa. 53. 10. which is much; For asserting this covenant, the doctrines of Election, efficacious Grace, and perseverance of that seed are establisht.

* Baxter Aphor. Thes. 2.

* Dr. Owen against Biddle cap. 27.

That there is such a Covenant, I shall offer some considerations.

1. As there was a Covenant made with the first Adam for himself and his posterity; so it is very likely there was a Covenant made with the second Adam, for himself and those which were chosen in him. Though this covenant of Redemption be not the same with the covenant of Grace, yet something in this covenant of Redemption did concern the seed of Christ. Upon the account of this covenant, God is the God of Christ, Psal. 89. 26. Psal. 40. 8. And Rev. 3. 12. you have Christ calling God, his God, no less than four times in that Verse. He is a surety of the covenant of

Grace,

Grace; there was then some other previous Treaty whereby Christ entered into Terms of Suretiship.

2. Christ is said to be faithful, Heb. 3. 2. As obedience implyes a precept, so faithfulness implies a trust, and a promise whereby a man hath oblig'd himself to perform that trust, according to the Direction given him. And Christ is said to trust God, Heb. 2. 13. As a Precept is a formall object of Obedience, so a Promise is a formal object of Trust: as he had a command, so he had a promise, both which imply a Covenant.

3. Christs Prayer doth in various parts manifest this; He doth not only intreat and Petition, but he challengeth something as due to him, upon the account of what he had done; in Joh. 17. he seems to run altogether upon a covenant strain, which must suppose some agreement and promise on the Fathers part. God had not else been oblig'd to accept what he had done, nor could our Saviour have challeng'd it at the hands of God. A Claim implies a Promise preceding, annext to a condition to be done by the party to whom the promise is made, which being perform'd, gives a right to demand the Reward. And hence, perhaps, it is that he calls God righteous Father, appealing therein to the faithfulness of God in this business. And indeed the Mediatory covenant seems to me by that Joh. 17. to be the ground upon which Christ his builds whole Intercession; that being a Transcript of it, and the pleas there being drawn by a strong compact.

4. This treaty is distinctly evidenced, Isa. 49, 3, 4, 5, 6. from which chapter to the end of that propheſie, there seems to be a continued Discourse concerning Christ. Christ directs his discourse to the Gentiles, acquainting them with the manner of this Treaty, ver. 1. Listen O Isles unto me, and hearken ye people from far.

(1.) God calls out Christ by the name of Israel, ver. 3. and said unto me, i. e. The Lord, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified. The name of the body being given to the head, as the name of the head is given to the body. The Church in union with Christ the head is called Christ, 1 Cor. 12. 12. which some think also to be the meaning of Gal. 3. 16. The promises were made to Abraham and his seed; Not to seeds as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ, Christ Mystical. I will be glorified in thee, as the head of the Jews, to prepare them a spiritual people for me.

(2) Christ thinks this too low, ver. 4. Then I said, i. e. he whose mouth God had made a sharp sword, I have labour'd in vain, I have spent my strength for nought; yet surely my judgment is with the Lord and my work is with my God. A small income for so great pains and cost. What shall I glorifie Thee only in Israel? 'Tis but a little glory thou wilt get from so small a handful that will believe in me among them; however I refer my self to thee O Father, and will stand to thy Judgment. 'Tis a glorious thing to be the Redeemer of Israel; yet it seems to be too narrow a Field for me to run my Race in. Judge of the greatness of my pains; and though I shall be glorious in thy eye, though Israel be not gathered, yet consider whither so great an undertaking will not require a greater reward then a few Israelites. Thou shalt, O Father, be glorified in me; but I foresee, that few of the Jews will embrace my Doctrine; I shall spend my strength, prayers and bloud for nought. תֹּהוּ וָבֹהוּ the word used to express the Chaos before it was formed into a World. It will be as a thing without form, a very little part of a new creation. Christ was at first Gods Angel to Israel, and before his coming in the flesh, had no other Nations, but as some sprinklings of them were proselyted to the Jews; and therefore the Gentiles are said, Isa. 55. 5. to be a people that he knew not, i. e. that he did not actually possess as his peculiar, in that manner as he rul'd in Israel, though the providential Government of all Nations was committed to him. But after his Exaltation in his humane Nature, he had the possession of them. Therefore

(3.) Christ then declares Gods enlarging his Terms, ver. 5. My God shall be my strength. Which words some take by themselves, as the beginnings of Gods further Grant. My God was my strength, he added courage to me by enlarging his Gift; which is expressed ver. 6. And he said, it is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant, to raise up the Tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserv'd of Israel; I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the Earth. The word [also] represents as it were a former sticking in the Jews. 'Tis too low a thing to take flesh, sweat, labour and dye for one Nation; thou shalt ſpread thy Tents to the end of the Earth, and have the Gentiles for thy poſſeſſion. When God ſaw me ready for ſo high a work, he did in his Treaty extend the bounds of my power and advantage further. He ſaid the limits of Iſrael were too narrow, the gain of Iſrael too light a recompence for ſo great a labor. God is brought in here propoſing; Chriſt grieving at the narrowneſs of it, yet complying with it. God making a ſecond Propoſal, wherein Chriſt doth acquieſce; and no further debate is mentioned, after the Gentiles were caſt into his lap. Whereupon ſome make a double decree, or at leaſt two parts of the decree of Salvation: 1. For the Converſion of the Jews. 2. A decree for the Converſion of the Gentiles.

5. The notion of a Treaty and Covenant is ſutable to our conceptions, and gives us a diſtinct account of the methods of Redemption; and alſo of the ground of the ſalvation of the Fathers, who died before the coming of the Redeemer in the fleſh. In order of Conception, the firſt Reſolution was this, That man ſhould be redeem'd; the ſecond, by what ways and means this Redemption ſhould be wrought; and how to make it ſure, that there may be no Revolt again. The ſecond Perſon is pitch'd upon for this undertaking; we muſt then conceive his voluntary conſent to this, and alſo ſome terms upon which he undertakes it, which is neceſſary to every action according to the rules of Wiſdom. Had not this way of Redemption been ſetled and ſtated, the Fathers before, and under the Law, could not have been ſaved; for they were ſaved by faith, faith could not be without a Promiſe, a Promiſe could not be without a previous aſcertaining the Method of Redemption; had Chriſt only conſented to it at the time of his coming into the World, there had been no ground of any promiſe before, becauſe the conſent of the Redeemer had till that time been uncertain; but the promiſe, ſuppoſeth his conſent poſitively given, before the promiſe was made. Again; The Covenant of Grace is as ancient as the firſt promiſe of the ſeed of the woman. And ſince the Grace the Patriarchs had, was communicated by virtue of a Covenant of Grace, it implies that there was an agreement between the Father and the Son; for it is by this Agreement the Covenant of Grace is eſtabliſht. Faith in a Mediator, the condition of that covenant, ſuppoſeth the ſettlement of the Mediator. We cannot ſuppoſe how any thing could be beſtowed upon men by vertue of a Covenant of Grace, before the Redeemer had actually Merited, without this Agreement; for whatſoever was beſtowed, was given upon the account of that merit to be wrought in time; therefore at leaſt a promiſe of ſo meriting muſt precede. As Articles of Agreement are made among men, before the Sealing of Writings and Payment of the Money, by vertue of which Articles there is ſome kind of right convey'd. Upon the account of this agreement, the Spirit was given to ſome particular men, but to very few, and in a leſs meaſure; for it was not congruous, that there ſhould be as great an effuſion of the Spirit before the actual payment required for it, as after. How this could be without a deſignation of the Perſon of Chriſt to this work of Redemption, and a voluntary undertaking on his part, and how there could be this deſigning and appointing him to it, and his accepting of it without ſome terms in the Nature of a Covenant, between the Father and the Son, cannot ſo diſtinctly and eaſily be conceived by us. But ſuch a notion as this, makes the whole work more obvious to our weak underſtandings.

For a cloſe of this part, I ſhall direct you to Pſal. 89. throughout, where this Covenant is very plainly mention'd, and the whole contexture of the Pſalm diſcovers the deſign of it to be, to ſet forth ſome a higher Perſon than David; and ſeems to be too magnificent and lofty for an Earthly Prince. As ver. 2. Mercy ſhall be built up for ever, thy faithfulneſs ſhalt thou eſtabliſh in the very heavens. But how was it eſtabliſhed in the heavens? ver. 3. In making a covenant with his choſen, and ſwearing to David his Servant, Thy ſeed will I eſtabliſh for ever and build up thy throne to all Generations. Here indeed was faithfulneſs eſtabliſhed in heaven. This will be more remarkable, if the Notion of a Learned * man of our own, be true. That this Pſalm was penn'd in the time of the Iſraelites bondage in Egypt, by Ethan the Son of Zerah, and Grandchild of Judah, the ſon of Jacob, who is mentioned 1 Chron. 2. 6. Therefore called Ethan the Ezrahite, or of Zerah, who was the ſon of Judah. Though there is mention made of Ethan in the time of David, 1 Chron. 15. 17, 19. and though David be be often mentioned in the Pſalm, yet, ſaith he, that was done prophetically: Howſoever it is, the Pſalm is underſtood of Chriſt by moſt of our Interpreters. And Chriſt is ſeveral times called David in the Prophets, who lived after the time of David. Why might not David be prophetically mentioned many years before his birth, as well as Cyrus was by the Prophet Iſaiah, ſome years before his? Some make this Covenant of Redemption the ſame with the Covenant of Grace: But they ſeem to be two diſtinct Covenants.

1. The Parties are diſtinct. In the one, the Father and the Son are the Parties covenanting: In the Covenant of Grace, God and Man. In the Mediatory Covenant there were two perſons equal: In the Covenant of Grace there is a Superiour, God; and an Inferiour, Man.

2. The Conditions are different. Death and Satisfaction for Sin thereby, was the condition of the Covenant of Redemption; Faith is the condition in the Covevant of Grace; Death required on Chriſts part, Faith required on Mans part. The giving Chriſt a ſeed, and Eternal Life to that ſeed, is the condition on Gods part to Chriſt; the giving Eternal Life only to the Party believing, is the condition on Gods part in the other. So that the reward in that Covenant is larger than the reward promiſed to us in the Covenant of Grace. In the Covenant of Grace the condition runs thus; Believe in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved. In the Covenant of Redemption, the condition runs thus, make thy ſoul an Offering for ſin, and thou ſhalt ſee a ſeed. The promiſes of God to Chriſt, or, rather God abſolutely conſider'd in that Covenant, was the Object of Chriſts Faith; God in Chriſt is the Object of our Faith in the Covenant of Grace: Believing in Chriſt, could be no condition in the Covenant of Redemption, as it is in the Covenant of Grace. Chriſt muſt be then the Object of his own Faith, not his Fathers.

3. The time of making theſe Covenants is different: the Covenant of Grace was made in time, after man had broke the Covenant of works; the Covenant of Redemption was made from Eternity. * I was ſet up from Everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the Earth was, when there were no depths I was brought forth, while as yet he had not made the Earth, nor the Fields, nor the higheſt part of the duſt of the World; Set up as Mediator, rejoycing in the habitable parts of the Earth. He rejoyced in Angels the chief parts of his Creation as God, In the habitable parts of the Earth as Mediator. The revelation of the Covenant of Redemption was in time, but the ſtipulation was from Eternity; the Father and Son being actually in Being, and ſo Stipulators; the Decree of making a Covenant of Grace, was from Eternity; but not the actual Covenant, becauſe there was no Soul to Covenant with; as the decree of Creating the World was in time, but the actual Creation at the beginning of time. The Covenant of Redemption is expreſt Iſa. 53. whence we can no more conclude, that it was but then made, than we may ſay, that Chriſt ſuffered then, becauſe his Sufferings are ſpoken of there, as already undergone. It was made when ſome were given to Chriſt, and therefore muſt be as ancient as Election, which was before the foundation of the World. * Prov. 8. 24. 25. 31.

4. Chriſt is the Mediator of the Covenant of Grace, but not the Mediator of the Covenant of Redemption, but a party*: He was the ſurety of the Covenant of * Grace; the Covenant of Redemption had no ſurety, the Father and the Son truſted one another upon the agreement; the Covenant of Grace is confirmed by the Blood of Chriſt; But we cannot ſay, that the Covenant of Redemption was confirm'd properly by that blood, any more, than as the ſhedding of his Blood was a neceſſary article in that Covenant. * Heb. 12. 24. * Heb. 7. 22.

5. Chriſt performed his part in the Covenant of Redemption; And by vertue of this mediatory Covenant, performed the Covenant of works; but he did confirm, not perform the Covenant of Grace.

6. By the Covenant of Redemption, Chriſt could challenge his reward upon his own account. But by the Covenant of Grace, Believers have a right to the reward only upon the account of Chriſt; there is an intrinſick worth in the Obedience of Chriſt whereby he merited; for there was a proportion between it, in regard of the dignity of his perſon, and the infiniteneſs of God: But there is no intrinſick worth in that Grace, which is the condition of the Covenant of Grace, to merit any thing; there was a condition of a valuable conſideration required of Chriſt;

But the condition required of us, hath no valuable proportion to the greatneſs of the reward. The reward was of Debt to him, becauſe what he performed, was by his own ſtrength; of Grace to us, becauſe what we perform, is by the ſtrength of another. And though the Exaltation of Chriſt is called a free Gift, * he hath given him a Name above every Name, ὑπερύψωσεν, that is in reſpect of the whole Oeconomy of the miſſion of Chriſt, and the manifeſtation of him, which is an Act of Gods free Grace to us. And in his Exaltation he is conſidered as appearing for us, and receiving from the Father all for our good; and becauſe it was an Act of Free Grace to us, to unite the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity to our fleſh.

* Phil. 2. 9.

7. The mediatory Covenant reſpects others in Chriſt, as well as Chriſt himſelf, viz. his ſeed, and the giving them a Glory. In the Covenant of Grace, the promiſe reſpects only the particular perſon that believes; it regards none elſe but the particular perſon, anſwering the Terms of that Covenant; no perſon can challenge any right upon anothers believing, but muſt believe himſelf, if he will be within the compaſs of the Covenant. But Chriſt upon the performance of the condition of the mediatory Covenant, could challenge not only for himſelf, but for others; and all that were to be his ſeed, and were to believe on him to the end of the * World, becauſe that Covenant reſpected not only himſelf, but others upon thoſe conditions he was to perform; for * the Redemption, Juſtification, and Happineſs of Believers are promiſed to Chriſt upon the condition of dying. All the ſeed of Chriſt are in the Covenant of Redemption, before they are Regenerate, but not actually in the Covenant of Grace, and under the influence of the ſpecial Benefits of it, till they are regenerate: as all mankind were in the Loyns of Adam, but not guilty of his pollution till their Natural Generation.

* Joh. 17. 20, 24.

* Iſa. 53. 11.

8. If the Covenant of Grace, and that of Redemption were the ſame, then Chriſt ſhould be both the Teſtator, and a Party. Chriſt is the Teſtator of the Covenant of Grace *; a Teſtator makes not a Will to bequeath Legacies to himſelf *.

* Heb. 9. 16, 17.

* Bulkly of the Covenant, p. 35.

So that theſe two Covenants are diſtinct: They agree in the common Nature of a Covenant, that there are conditions to be performed, and priviledges thereupon to be enjoyed. But the conditions and priviledges are diſtinct. They agree in this, that the Salvation of the ſeed is promiſed in both Covenants; 'tis promiſed to the Believer upon his Faith; 'tis promiſed to Chriſt in behalf of the ſeed upon his ſuffering. And further, the Covenant of Redemption is the foundation of the Covenant of Grace. In the Covenant of Grace, Chriſt, or God in Chriſt is the object of Faith. Chriſt had not been the object of Faith, had not ſuch an agreement between the Father and the Son preceded. How is Chriſt the Object of Faith, but as dying? what force had his Death had without ſome compact between the Father as the principal party wronged, and the Redeemer as the perſon ſatisfying? The Everlaſtingneſs of the Covenant of Grace depends upon the perpetuity of the Covenant of Redemption. * My Covenant ſhall ſtand faſt with him, his ſeed will I make to endure for ever. This Covenant between the Father and the Son muſt be broken, before the Covenant of God can fail to a Believer. Upon this account Chriſt is ſaid to be given for a Covenant to the People *; a Covenant to the people, i. e. to bring the people into Covenant with me; as being the foundation of the Covenant of Grace; upon which account he is called the peace, Eph. 2. 17. as being the foundation, and cauſe of peace between God and Man; and all the promiſes as eſtabliſhed by his Death, are Yea, and Amen in him: they receive their validity from his Death, and his Death receives its validity from the Covenant of Redemption. He thereby performing what was required on his part, ſetled the Covenant of Grace between God and us for ever unrepealable, and it had not its full ſettlement, but in the eſtabliſhment of this. Upon the account of this Covenant, the right of Chriſt as a Teſtator bequeathing the Inheritance is grounded, for he could not as a Teſtator bequeath what he had no right unto. His Teſtament was made by him, not as God, but as Mediator by means of his Death *. Therefore as Mediator he had a right, which cannot well be ſuppoſed without ſome precedent agreement between the Father and the Son, becauſe the right originally reſided in the Father. And this Covenant of Redemption is the ground of our Hope and Faith *: In hope of Eternal Life, which was promiſed before the World began. The hope Believers have of Eternal Life ſprings up Originally from that promiſe made by the Father to the Son, before the foundation of the World; for the promiſes of the Covenant of Grace, were included in this Covenant of Redemption; and to be made good, when Chriſt made the conditions on his part in that Covenant good. In this agreement then God was in Chriſt reconciling the World.

(1.) The Father covenants with Chriſt, that he ſhould undertake for man as a common head; to free men from that dreadful condition, wherein God foreſaw from Eternity they would fall upon their Creation. Hence he is called the ſecond Adam, as being a publick perſon; and as Adam had fallen off from Righteouſneſs to the love of Iniquity, and violated the Law of God; ſo the ſecond Adam as a Head of many fellows, was to love Righteouſneſs, and hate Iniquity *, i. e. vindicate the Honour of God laid proſtrate by ſin, and reſtore the Righteouſneſs of the Law. This being rendred there the ground of his advancement by God as his God, a God in Covenant with him, implies that it was the main Article inſiſted on, and a condition in the Covenant which Chriſt was to perform. Man was a criminal Debtor, the Debt muſt be paid; Chriſt by agreement puts himſelf in the Sinners ſtead, to pay this Debt, ſubmit to the revenging Arm of Juſtice, and thereby releaſe the Priſoner *; he was made under the Law, to redeem them that were under the Law; as we were under the Law, ſo was Chriſt to bear the curſe of the Law for us, that whatſoever power the Law had over us in regard of its precepts, Chriſt was to obey; in regard of its Curſes he was to undergo; and thus undertaking for us, he was to endure the ſhock of his Fathers Wrath, which we Sinners were lyable to. And therefore he is brought in, offering himſelf as a ſurety in our ſtead, Pſal. 40. 7. Lo I come to do thy Will O my God; thy Covenant-Will, as thou art my God; which Will was our Sanctification by the offering of his Body, Heb. 10. 10. referring to v. 7. and as being inſtead of us the principal Debtors, he calls our ſins his own; (ver. 13. mine iniquities have taken hold of me,) as he was our ſurety; the Debt which a ſurety engageth to pay being legally his own Debt, though he did not perſonally incur it by any Crime of his own, or Receit of that for which he ſtands indebted.

* Heb. 1. 9.

* Gal. 4. 4, 5.

(2.) In order to this, another condition neceſſarily conſequent upon the other, was, That he was to take a body. This Debt could not be paid, nor the Articles of the Covenant be performed, but in the Humane Nature, the divine being impaſſible; He was therefore to have a paſſible Nature, a Nature capable of, and prepar'd for ſuffering, Heb. 10. 5. a body to ſuffer that which was repreſented by theſe legal Sacrifices, wherein God took no pleaſure, v. 6. He was to have a Body of fleſh, ſurrounded with the infirmities of our fallen Nature, ſin only excepted; whereupon Chriſt doth freely comply, I come to do thy Will O my God; I am come to take ſuch a Body, which by thy Will is allotted to me.

(3.) In this body he was to pay a ſervice and obedience to his Father. After this agreement, whatſoever Chriſt did in the Body, falls under the term of Obedience to the Mediatory Law preſcrib'd him. Hence he is called God's ſervant, Iſa. 42. 1. and took upon him the form of a ſervant *; not as Servants were formerly bought with a price, and paſſed wholly into the right and dominion of another; but a ſervant, who by Covenant and agreement, undertakes an employment by the order of another; for he was ſuch a Servant, that he was alſo Lord, Heb. 3. 6. Heb. 1. 2. This is expreſt Iſa. 50. 5. The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious. God conſtituted him his Servant by the opening his ear, according to the Jewiſh cuſtom of boaring the ear, and he was not in any thing rebellious; he was to do whatſoever was commanded him to do, and therefore all the time of his Life before his Death, he acted an obedience to his Father, and did nothing but by his Fathers Command and Order. * As the Father hath given me commandment, ſo I do. He ſtipulated to take upon him the form of a Servant, Phil. 2. 6, 7. which ſeems to refer to this agreement: And after that, was made in the likeneſs of Men, referring to his incarnation; as a man is ſaid to take upon him ſuch a task, when he hath covenanted to do it.

* Philip. 2. 7.

* John 14. 31.

(4.) In this Body he was to dy at laſt: And therefore his dying is ſaid to be Obedience; * He became obedient to death, even the death of the Croſs; his dying, and dying ſo ignominiouſly upon the Croſs, was Obedience; which implies a Command and Order to dye, and to dye ſuch a death, otherwiſe it had not been Obedience, though it might be term'd affection. This was the chief Article of the Covenant,

* Iſa. 53. 10. * when thou ſhalt make his ſoul an Offering for Sin, he ſhall ſee his ſeed; תָּשִׂים is then the third perſon, and being fæminine, agrees well with נֶפֶשׁ a fæminine Noun. Other Tranſlations read it, If he ſhall make his Soul an Offering for ſin; or rather, according to others, and according to Grammar, If his Soul ſhall make an Offering for ſin. In this Death he was to reſpect the ſatisfaction of God's Juſtice; for it was not a bare Offering, but an Offering for Sin. God in impoſing this Article, reſpected this chiefly, as this was the main end of ſending him to be an ἱλασμὸς, 1 Joh. 4. 10. God hath ſent his Son to be the propitiation for our ſins: So it was the main end of this Article of dying, which Chriſt was to reſpect in his dying; for the regarding the end of any Service or Command, is a principal ingredient in Obedience; By virtue of which Covenant and Command thereupon, there was an ought

* Luk. 24. 26. upon Chriſt; * Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffer'd thoſe things? And a Command, John 10. 18. I have power to lay down my Life, I have ἐξουσίαν authority, for I have receiv-

† 1 Tim. 2. 5, 6. his mediatory Office chiefly conſiſted †. And methinks Chriſt doth intimate this laying down his Life for his Sheep to be the effect of this mutual agreement between the Father and himſelf, Joh. 10. 15. As the Father knows me, even ſo know I the Father, and I lay down my Life for the Sheep. It was the effect of their knowledge of one another, not a bare knowledge; for that might have been without Chriſts dying; But an intimate conjunction of mind, an approbation on both parts. This mind, to take upon him the form of a ſervant, was in Chriſt, Phil. 2. 5. and therefore this mind was in his Father, for their minds could not be different; there was a mutual knowledge and agreement in the whole affair, and from this knowledge one of another, did ariſe the laying down of his Life. God requir'd this Sacrifice of Chriſt

* Heb. 10. 5, 6, 7. excluſively of all others in the firſt treaty, as to any ſatisfaction. * Sacrifice and burnt-offering thou wouldſt not, in them thou hadſt no pleaſure; then ſaid I, lo I come: He pronounced them utterly uſeleſs for the ſatisfaction of Juſtice, though fit to prefigure the grand Sacrifice he intended. And that voice of Chriſt upon the Croſs, It is finiſhed, Joh. 19. 30. ſeems to refer to this agreement. I am come to a period on my part, the Article on my part is compleated, there remain no more Deaths for me to ſuffer. This ſeems to be a neceſſary Article, very congruous to the Wiſdom

* Heb. 2. 10. of God, as he is Creator, Governour and the end of all things. * It became him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many Sons to Glory, to make the Captain of their Salvation perfect through ſufferings. It became him as a wiſe Creator, as a wiſe Governour, as he is the end of all things, to inſiſt upon the Sufferings of Chriſt as the fitteſt means for the attaining the end he aimed at; for hereby his Juſtice and Mercy are glorifyed. In the performance, Chriſt was very exact in every punctilio; as they were ſhew'd by the Mouths of the Prophets, he ſo fulfil'd them, Act. 3, 18. and God ſhew'd them by the mouth of the Prophets as they were

3. In regard of what Chriſt was to do and ſuffer, the Father makes excellent promiſes to him.

1. Promiſes of Aſſiſtance. 2. Of a Seed. 3. Of Glory.

1. Pro-

1. Promiſes of Aſſiſtance.

1. Promiſes of a fitneſs for it. He had the promiſe of the Spirit to this purpoſe. * the Spirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him, the Spirit of Wiſdom, Underſtanding, Councel, Might, Knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord; to diſtribute all his gifts to him, in a fulneſs of meaſure, in a fulneſs of duration: all the gifts of the Spirit ſhould reſide in him, as in a proper Habitation, perpetually; as the Deity dwelt in the Humanity, and was never to forſake it. The Humane Nature being a Creature, could not beautifie and enrich it ſelf with needful gifts; this promiſe of the Spirit was therefore neceſſary, his Humanity could not elſe have performed the work it was deſign'd for. So that the habitual Holineſs reſiding in the Humanity of Chriſt, was a fruit of this Eternal Covenant. Though the Divine Nature of Chriſt, by vertue of its Union might ſanctifie the Humane Nature, yet the Spirit is promis'd him, becauſe it is the proper Office of the Holy Ghoſt to confer thoſe gifts, which are neceſſary for any undertaking in the World; And the perſonal operations of the Trinity do not interfere. It alſo might be, becauſe every perſon in the Trinity might evidently have a diſtinct hand in our Redemption. * Iſa. 11. 1, 2, 3.

2. Promiſes of protection in it: Upon this one ſtone there were to be ſeven Eyes: Zach. 3. 10. Seven Eyes upon one ſtone, a ſpecial care of him, and councel about him; Seven, notes multitude, Eyes note intention. Providence is ſignifyed by Eyes in Scripture; a ſpecial providence ſhall be exerciſed towards Chriſt in the whole management of his Office, and defence of his Kingdom; hence he doth acknowledge, that he was under the choice care of God, Luk. 2. 49. Wiſt you not that I am about my Fathers buſineſs, ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρός, among thoſe things my Father takes care of, why ſought you me? Do you not know that I am the choiceſt Jewel of my Father, and that he hath his Eye upon me? As one of the Cabinet rarities of my Father. God promiſed to hide him in the ſhadow of his hand, preſerve him as a ſhaft in his Quiver, in the midſt of the rage and fury of his Enemies. He doth ſolemnly promiſe his omnipotency, all his creating and governing power to hold his hand in his being for a Covenant of the people, and a light of the Gentiles, till he had brought the Priſoners from the Priſon, and them that ſit in darkneſs out of the Priſon-Houſe. Iſa. 42. 5, 6, 7. He promiſes here in the loftyeſt expreſſions, to ſtrengthen him ſo, that he ſhould not be diſcouraged, but ſee the bleſſed Effects of his undertaking; he would uphold him tenderly, as a Father doth his Son in his armes, that no hurt may happen to him, and that becauſe he had called him in righteouſneſs; or, as ſome, our righteouſneſs, to ſettle an Evangelical Righteouſneſs in the Earth. He is ſaid therefore to be made ſtrong by God for himſelf, Pſal. 80. 16. The Son of man whom thou haſt made ſtrong for thy ſelf; the King, Meſſiah, whom thou haſt ſtrengthned for thy ſelf, ſo the Targum: The Title of Son of Man was by way of eminency given to the Meſſiah in Daniel, and the Title he commonly gave himſelf in the New Teſtament. This aſſiſtance of Chriſt was repreſented by the Ark which had three coverings together with the Table of ſhew-bread repreſenting the Church *, as a Type of a ſpecial protection to both, whereas other conſecrated things had but two coverings. * Numb. 4. 8.

3, This aſſiſtance was to run through the whole courſe of his mediation. He was to be aſſiſted in his conflict, and in his ſucceſs, while his Soul was travelling, and while it was triumphing. He ſhould not be diſcouraged, till he had ſet Judgment in the Earth. Iſa. 42. 4. 'Tis a Meioſis, he ſhall be mightily encouraged, till he have wrought a perfect deliverance for his people; and there ſhall be a ſupporting hand under him till he hath compleated the work of Redemption: He ſhould ſtand, and be eſtabliſhed, and feed in the ſtrength of the Lord. Mic. 5. 4. In the Majeſty of the Name of the Lord his God. He ſhould gather, rule, and ſave his ſheep in the choiceſt of Gods ſtrength, as he was his God, i. e. a God in Covenant with him, and had appointed him to be the Judge of Iſrael, v. 1. and this, till he ſhould be the peace, v. 5. not only laying the corner ſtone by his Death, but the top-ſtone by his Exaltation.

4. Chriſt was to plead theſe promiſes, and encourage himſelf in them. He was to plead them, Pſal. 89. 26. He ſhall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the rock of my ſalvation. After the repetition of the promiſes of ſtrength and aſſiſtance, ver. 19, 20, 21, &c. he was enjoyned to put thoſe Covenant promiſes in ſuit, and then then he ſhould be made the firſt born, higher than the Kings of the Earth, and his Covenant ſhould ſtand faſt with him; as though God promiſed him the Gentiles for his poſſeſſion; yet he was to ask it. Pſal. 2. 8. In this Covenant there was an injunction upon Chriſt to intercede and plead for himſelf, and for his people; ſo that the interceſſion Chriſt doth manage in Heaven for the compleating of thoſe promiſes, which were formerly in that Covenant, or depended upon it (as all the promiſes in the Covenant of Grace do,) is an article in that Covenant, and therefore will be kept up, till all Enemies are made his foot-ſtool, and Death, which is the laſt, ſwallowed up in Victory. Chriſt encourag'd himſelf in thoſe promiſes; by theſe God made him hope when he was upon his Mothers breaſts, Pſal. 22. 9. and he pro-

Iſa. 50. 8, 9, 10. The Lord God will help me, therefore have I ſet my face as a flint, and I know that I ſhall not be aſhamed. The Lord God will help me, who is he that ſhall condemn me? and challengeth all the power of Earth and Hell to contend with him, ſince he had the promiſe of God to juſtifie him. My God ſhall be my ſtrength, Iſa. 49. 5. my God in covenant with me. And the Apoſtle brings him in declaring his truſt in God; Heb. 2. 13. and I will put my truſt in him. And he acknowledges that the preſervation of his Diſciples, and conſequently all his people enjoy by him, is through the Name of his Father; John 17. 12. He acknowledges his powerful aſſiſtance in every particle of his work. I have kept them in thy Name.

2. Promiſes of a ſeed, as the ſucceſs of his undertaking. He was firſt in order to
* Iſa. 53. 10, 11. dye, and then to ſee his ſeed *: when his Soul ſhall make an Offering for ſin, he ſhall ſee his ſeed, he ſhall ſee the travel of his Soul; his grief and pain ſhall not be fruitleſs: He was to have a flock to guide as a Shepherd, Members to animate as an Head, a Spouſe to cheriſh as a Husband, Children to breed up as a Father, Subjects to reign over as a King. There was a deſignation of ſome to him for thoſe Relations at this firſt agreement, which he doth acknowledge as a Donative from his Father. John 6. 6. Thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me. Thine by Election and Creation, Mine by Donation and Merit; they belonged to Chriſt as God before, though Originally to the Father as the Fountain of the Deity; but now to Chriſt by another tie, as Mediator, as Jewels to be made up by him: upon the account of which gift by compact, he calls them his ſheep before their actual infolding. Joh. 10. 15, 16. The promiſe made to Abraham of the Bleſſing of the Nations in his ſeed, is ſaid to be made to Chriſt Gal. 3. 19. till the ſeed ſhould come, to whom the promiſe was made, which ſeed is Chriſt, ver. 16. And ſome interpret, ver. 17. The Covenant that was confirm'd before of God in Chriſt εἰς Χριστὸν for, to Chriſt, as Eph. 1. 5. εἰς αὐτὸν for ἑαυτῷ, And Coloſ. 1. 20. reconcile all things εἰς αὐτὸν to himſelf; but howſoever, The promiſe to Abraham is certainly grounded upon a promiſe to Chriſt, that in him who was Abrahams ſeed, all Nations ſhould be bleſſed; whether that Hoſ. 14. 5, 6. be a promiſe to Chriſt, who is called Iſrael, or rather a promiſe or propheſie concerning the Church, of the Beauty of Chriſts ſeed as a Lilly, the firmneſs as a Cedar, and the fruitfulneſs as an Olive.

God promiſed 1. A Numerous ſeed. 2. A ſucceſſion of ſeed. 3. A Duration of ſeed.

1. God promiſed him a Numerous ſeed, like the Dew that falls at the dawn of
* Pſal. 110. 3. the Morning in abundance upon the Flowers and Plants of the Earth *; the dew of
* Mich. 5. 7. thy youth, from the womb of the morning *. As the Dew upon the Graſs: As the Poets call the Dew the tears of the Morning, ſo was this the fruit of Chriſts Tears and Blood; they were upon his aſcenſion to flock to him from all quarters of the World.

He

He promis'd to bring his ſeed from the Eaſt, and gather them from the Weſt; he would ſay to the North, give up; and to the South, keep not back; bring my ſons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the Earth, Iſa. 43. 5, 6. And Iſa. 54. 1. more ſhall be the children of the deſolate, than the children of the married wife, ſaith the Lord. The Rachel of our myſtical Jacob, that had remain'd ſo long barren, ſhould be ſuddenly mother of a numerous Train. Then was our Saviour Iſrael indeed, one that prevail'd with God (as the word ſignifies) to enlarge the Lines of his inheritance to the Gentiles. He was to ſpeak peace to the heathens, Zech. 9. 10. And according to this Article, God enlarg'd the Tents of the Church, ſo * that 23 years after the publication of the Goſpel, not only Syria and Arabia, and the bordering Provinces on Judæa, were full of Chriſtians; but Aſia, Italy, Spain, and the chiefeſt of the Weſtern part. And Tacitus ſaith, that in the 11 year of Nero, which was thirty one years after Chriſts Aſcenſion, Rome, the capital City of the World, ſwarm'd with Men profeſſing the Name of Chriſt. The death of Chriſt was to be more fruitful than his Life, and being liſted up upon the Croſs, he was to draw all men after him, and gather a plentiful Harveſt of all Kindreds, Tongues and Nations; a mighty Generation to be new born to ſerve him. He was to be caſt into the ground, that ſeed ſhould ſpring up from him, Joh. 12. 24. He was to be dead in reality, as Iſaac in figure, that he might be the everlaſting father of many Nations. Thus when he was on his part to be laid low as a root in the earth, by making his Soul an offering for Sin; God the Husbandman of this Vine, promiſeth to bring forth a new ſet, an abundance of branches ſprouting up from him. They ſhould come from afar off and build in the Temple of the Lord, Zech. 6. 15. Gentiles as well as Jews ſhould be knit together as lively ſtones to riſe up for a Temple to the Lord.

* Daille Serm. ſur Pſal. 110. 2, 3. pag. 605.

(2.) God promiſeth a ſucceſſion of ſeed. His name ſhall be continued as long as the Sun, Pſal. 72. 17. יִנּוֹן filiabitur, his name ſhall be childed in him, as the name of a Man is continued ſucceſſively in his poſterity. 'Tis not only one morning that the rich and plentiful dew ſhall fall from heaven upon the hearts of men, but ſucceſſively to the end of the World; as long as this Sun of Righteouſneſs ſhall riſe in any Horizon, and the day dawn before him. Grace ſhall be dropped upon the hearts of men for a Succeſſion of ſeed, till in the laſt Generation a period be put to the World. Seed ſhall be ſpringing up, till the laſt Fire ſieſe upon the World, at which time there ſhall be ſome catched up into the Air to meet him, and a Generation among the Nations ſhall be ſucceſſively bleſſed in him.

(3.) A Perpetual Seed is promis'd him. Gods Covenant ſhall ſtand faſt with him, and the iſſue of that is, that his ſeed will God make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven, Pſal. 89. 28, 29. His ſeed and Throne are coupled together, as if his Throne could not ſtand if his ſeed did fail; if his Subjects ſhould periſh, what would he be King of? If his Members ſhould conſume, what would he be head of? The promiſe of a perpetual Kingdom, ſecures the duration of his ſeed. This was ſo conſiderable an Article, that in his plea he inſiſts on it more reſolutely, and challengeth it with a more vigorous earneſtneſs, Joh. 17. 24. Father, I will that they alſo whom thou haſt given me be with me, &c. As he had at the firſt Treaty inſiſted upon the enlarging his inheritance among the Gentiles. He had hitherto been praying only for his own Glory, and their Preſervation and Sanctification in the World. He now brings in an Alſo; there was an Article for the Glory of his ſeed, as well as for the glory of his Perſon; and the word Alſo ſignifies, that he would be as earneſt for them, and inſiſt as much upon the performance of this Article which concern'd them, as upon that which concern'd himſelf. And the reaſon rendred, ſignifies thus, For thou lovedſt me from the foundation of the World. Thou didſt manifeſt thy love to me as Mediator before the foundation of the World, in this promiſe of a ſeed, and that they ſhould be perpetually with me to behold my Glory; this was the main Article which encouraged Chriſt to this work, wherein the Father manifeſted his love to him as Mediator before the World; and therefore in that rich promiſe wherein God engageth the Majeſty of his Name for the ſtrengthening of him, the perpetuity of his ſeed is enſur'd, Mich. 5. 4. He ſhall ſtand and feed in the ſtrength of the Lord, in the Majeſty of the name of the Lord his God, and they ſhall abide, who? ver. 3. the remnant of his brethren that ſhall return to the children of Iſrael, the brethren of that Ruler in Iſrael whoſe goings forth have been from everlaſting laſting, They ſhall abide. And ſome thus interpret, Iſa. 53. 10. he ſhall ſee his ſeed, he ſhall prolong his dayes, i. e. the dayes of his ſeed. They ſhall be perpetually with him. For it was the pleaſure of the Lord in this compact, to give them a Kingdom, (as Chriſt tells his diſciples); and this pleaſure of the Lord ſhould proſper in the hands of the Mediator. That which God in his Wiſdom aim'd at in his ſons ſufferings, he aim'd at certainly in the calling him, and engaging him by Covenant to ſuffer; and that was, the bringing many ſons to Glory, Heb. 2. 10. It became him in bringing many ſons to glory, to make the captain of their ſalvation perfect through ſufferings. The End and the Means, were becoming propoſitions for the Wiſdom of God to make, and as becoming for the Wiſdom of God to perform; ſince the means have been fully wrought, the End will be perfectly attain'd. Chriſt had thoſe promiſes of Eternal Life made to him, as a common Head, and a Feoffe in truſt for them, Tit. 1. 2. Eternal Life was promis'd before the World began. Not for himſelf, who was the Eternal Son of God. Could the promiſe of Eternal Life to his humanity make him take fleſh barely for that? It was promis'd to him for his ſeed, for whoſe Redemption he was to lay down his Life as a Ranſom. As God made a Covenant with Adam, not as an individual Perſon, but as a Nature, he being the repreſentative of Mankind, ſo that if he had ſtood, his poſterity had ſtood and enjoyed Life; ſo he made a Covenant with Chriſt, to give Eternal Life to thoſe that ſhould believe in him, who are as really in him by Regeneration, as men are in Adam by natural Deſcent.

To which may be added,

(4.) God promiſed his Grace to draw men to him. That this ſeed ſhould be ſure to him, God promiſes to prepare men for him. To remove the ſtony Heart, mollifie their Hearts, give them Hearts of fleſh, conquer their carnal Principles and Reſolutions, and put his Spirit into them, that they might be a fit progeny for Chriſt. Chriſt intimates this in that ſpeech, None can come unto me, except the Father which hath ſent me, draw him, Joh. 6. 44. As the Fathers ſending him was the iſſue of a Compact between them, ſo the drawing any is a fruit of that Compact; for Chriſt removes this from himſelf, as an Article to be perform'd on his part, as that which lay ſolely upon his Fathers hands, as belonging to him as much as his own Miſſion and the particular circumſtances of it: And this promiſe he had, Pſal. 110. 2. That the people ſhould be willing in the day of his power. God ordered him indeed to call the Nations, Iſa. 55. 5. Thou ſhalt call a Nation which thou knoweſt not, and Nations that knew not thee ſhall run unto thee, becauſe of the Lord thy God, for he hath glorified thee. But the vigor which ſhould ſpirit them to ſo quick a Race to Chriſt, he reſerves to himſelf; they ſhall run becauſe of the Lord thy God; By his power, as he was the Lord; by his faithfulneſs, as he was his God in Covenant: And the reaſon render'd, is the glorifying him. Which is both an engagement to Chriſt to call thoſe his Father would have him call, and an engagement on the Father to bring the Nations to him. The coming in of Nations would redound to his honour; and it is likely this is part of the Glory Chriſt prays for, Joh. 17. 5. he doth not particularize what that Glory was, but ſome gueſs may be made by his falling off from that Petition to the praying for his people; the preſervation of them and keeping thoſe that had been given to him (which includes the bringing them all in) is part of the Glory which was promis'd to him. And this glorifying of him in his people, he begs for at his Fathers hand, as being by this covenant to be his Act. The coming in of Nations to him, was a great part of the Glory of Chriſt promis'd him in this Covenant. The Converſion of every man by the efficacy of Grace, is the fruit of the Covenant between the Father and the Son, as God is the Lord God of Chriſt. And therefore the calling of us by God, is ſaid to be according to his own purpoſe, and that grace, which was given us in Chriſt before the world was, 2 Tim. 1. 9. a promiſe of Grace for us, and of our calling in time made then. For what is here called the purpoſe of God, is Tit. 1. 2. called the promiſe of God, and intimated as a promiſe in thoſe words Given us in Jeſus Chriſt, by an agreement with him as our Head, as the Promiſe of Life upon the Covenant of Works, was given us in Adam as our common head. And ſo the promiſe of taking away the Heart of ſtone, and giving an Heart of fleſh, may be ſaid to be promiſes made to Chriſt on the behalf of his Seed, not of his Perſon; becauſe without this taking away the Heart of ſtone, and giving ing an Heart of flesh, it was impossible the Nations or any man, could be blessed in him. Notwithstanding, That this efficacious Grace is from the Father and by his Spirit, by the Covenant, yet all thus Regenerated may well be called the seed of Christ, because the end of the sufferings of Christ was to merit a Spirit of Grace for those that were given to him; and the Spirit doth nothing in forming a seed, but what rises up from the merit of Christs sufferings. 'Tis the Travel of his soul, though the formation of the Spirit. Christ endur'd the pangs upon the Cross for every new Creature, though the Spirit brings it forth into the World. So that they are his seed, as springing up from the Merit of his death, and being animated by the power of his Life; they are Christs seed by right of purchase, the Spirits seed in regard of operation; yet as they are the Spirits seed, they may be called Christs seed, because the coming of the spirit in its plentiful effusion for such an end, was a fruit of his Death and his Ascension, Joh. 16. 7. He was sent by him, as the greatest gift of his Royalty.

(5.) There was something concern'd Christ to do in this Article of a seed, He was to take a special care of them. There was not only a may, but a must bring; Joh. 10. 16. Other sheep I have which are not of this fold, them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice. He was to call them, and the Father would draw them, and he was to bring them into one fold with the Israelites; and this doth arise from this compact, or the mutual knowledge the Father and he had of one another; the mutual Agreement, which was the cause of laying down his Life, ver. 15. Knowing, in God, sometimes signifies Election, 2 Tim. 2. 19. God had chosen Christ to this End, and Christ had accepted of it to this End. These he was to teach, Isa. 8. 16. Those which he calls Children, which the Lord had given, are ver. 18. called his Disciples, among whom he was to seal the Law; whom he was to instruct in that Knowledge of God, which was Eternal Life; and manifest his Name to them, Joh. 17. 2, 3, 6. And particularly, he was to instruct them in this great Doctrine, we are now treating of, ver. 7. Now they have known, that all things whatsoever thou hast given me, are of thee. Which was indeed the manifestation of the Name of his Father, which he had spoken of ver. 5. that all things which I do, are by thy Appointment, Order and Assistance. I have ascribed nothing to my self, but magnified thy love, as the sole Fountain of all that I have done; which was necessary, for I doubt many men think the Father to be cruel and full of Hatred to his Creatures, and that he was over-perswaded to Redemption by the importunities of his Son: As a severe Prince might be mollified by the Supplications of his Heir. It was not so; and Christ was to acquaint men with the true Notion of God, and what his Thoughts and Affections were concerning them, and to shew him to be a proper Object of Faith in this business. He was to use a great tenderness towards them, he was not only to gather the Lambs with his Arm and Power, but to carry them in his Bosom. Not only to lead them, but Gently to lead them; to have a special Care of them, Isa. 40. 11. When they were given to him, they were given with some Rules and Orders how he should manage them, and he was to have his eye not only upon the flock in general, but upon every one in particular, that as any of them were weak, he should use them with more Gentleness; take such an one in his bosom; he should have seven eyes upon the weakest, as his Father had upon him the Corner-stone; he is therefore said to know his Sheep, Joh. 10. 14. (every one in particular, as he knows the stars by name) otherwise the Foundation of the Lord, this Covenant of Redemption, which is the foundation of all his proceedings could not stand sure. The Father knew them in particular, when he gave them to Christ; and Christ knew them in particular, when he receiv'd them from him. It seems also that by this Covenant he was to bring every conquering soul to a Triumph, and he had power given him to this purpose, Joh. 17. 2. In the perfection he promises to them that overcome, he seems to referre it all to the Covenant with the Father; Rev. 3. 12. He would make them pillars in the Temple of his God, write upon them the name of his God, and the name of the City of his God, which is new Jerusalem, which comes down out of heaven from his God; where he mentions God as his God in every reward he promises the victorious souls in the Church of Philadelphia, four times in that verse, as I have observ'd before.

3. Promiſes of a Glory upon his Suffering. As he was to endure the Croſs, ſo he was alſo to enjoy a Crown. The enduring the croſs was an Article on his part, the beſtowing a crown was an Article on Gods part; it was teſtified before by the Prophets, that Sufferings ſhould precede, the Glory follow, 1 Pet. 1. 11. The ſolemn inauguration into all his Offices, was after his making Reconciliation; making an end of ſin, bringing in Everlaſting Righteouſneſs, and thereby ſhutting up all Propheſie and Viſion, becauſe all the Propheſies tended to him, and were accompliſht in him; and then as manifeſting himſelf the moſt holy, he was to be anointed, i. e. fully inveſted in all the offices of King, Prieſt and Prophet, Dan. 9. 24. The compact runs thus, Do this, ſuffer Death for the vindication of the Honour of my Law, and thou ſhalt be a Prieſt and King for ever. He could not therefore be ſolemnly inſtall'd, till he had perform'd the Condition on his part (for the promiſe was made to him conſider'd as Mediator, or God-Man) then it was that he was advanc'd: For the ground of his Exaltation is pitcht wholly upon his Sufferings Phil. 2. 9. Wherefore God hath highly exalted him, i. e. Becauſe he became obedient to the Death of the Croſs; God hath given him a name which is above every name; and becauſe he loved righteouſneſs, therefore God as his God covenanting with him, hath anointed him with the oyl of gladneſs above his fellows, Heb. 1. 9. therefore he hath given him a Glory, as a juſt debt due to the price paid, the ſufferings undergone, and the obedience yeilded to the Mediatory Law. Therefore the Glory Chriſt prayed for, which he had before the world was, Joh. 17. 5. may be underſtood of that Glory which he had in promiſe to be given to him upon the compleating the work he then engaged for. For this Covenant was not about giving him his eſſential Kingdom, for that belonged to him by Nature, as he was God equal with the Father. But the Mediatory Kingdom belonged to his Office by a particular Grant. There were two Works of Chriſt, Works of Humiliation, which were Suffering and Dying; which were Voluntary, not Natural Works; no Natural Tye upon him as the Son of God to undergo them, but a Moral Tye after Agreement and Promiſe. There are Regal Works which were conferr'd on him by his Father, that he ſhould be honour'd and ador'd in the World as Mediator; Heb. 1. 6. worſhipp'd by all the Angels of God, when the Glory of his Deity, ſhould be manifeſted in the Humanity, which had been ſo long Vail'd, and had but now and then beam'd out: and this full ſhine of the Deity through the Humanity, was a new mode of Glory acquir'd by the right of his death.

(1.) He had a Promiſe of Reſurrection. As he had a Power or Authority by command to lay down his Life, ſo he had a power and authority by promiſe to take it again, Joh. 10. 18. His Heart was glad, his Glory rejoyc'd, his Fleſh had hope in his Sufferings; the ground of which Hope was, the Aſſurance from his Father, that his ſoul ſhould not be left in Hell, nor his Holy One (one ſo holy in the undertaking, and ſo holy in the Execution) ſee Corruption, but ſhould be reduc'd again to the path of Life more glorious, and attended with a fulneſs of Joy, Pſal. 16. 10, 11. 'Tis contain'd in the Promiſe of ſeeing his ſeed; for if he were to remain dead, how ſhould he ſee his ſeed?

(2.) A Promiſe of a Royal inheritance. The appointing him in the humane Nature, heir of all things (Heb. 1. 2. whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom alſo he made the Worlds) which is diſtinguiſht from that power he had over all things by right of the Creation of them, as the Perſon by whom God made the Worlds. That power was Natural, this by Appointment; the inheritance that belonged to Adam, as the head of the lower creation, being forfeited by him, was reſtored to the Humane Nature of Chriſt; which Chriſt was ſo pleas'd with, in the firſt grant, that he eſteems it a goodly heritage, Pſal. 16. 6. which appointing him Head and Heir of all things, was for the behoof of the Church his ſpiritual ſeed, Eph. 1. 22. The head over all things to the Church.

(3.) An Extenſive Power. In Heaven as well as Earth, Mat. 28. 18. not only to Judge among many people, and rebuke ſtrong Nations, Mic. 4. 3. but to be the head of Principalities and Powers. That every knee in heaven, and under the earth, earth, as well as in the earth, ſhould bow down to him, and every tongue ſhould confeſs that he is Lord, to the glory of God the Father, who appointed him. Phil. 2. 10, 11. A power over all fleſh was granted to him, and claimed by him, as a Glory given him by promiſe upon his glorifying of his Father, Joh. 17. 2. Glorifie thy Son, as thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given him. A power over the ſeed of the Serpent, the whole fleſh as it ſtood in oppoſition to Spirit, and the intereſt of the redeem'd ones; for it was granted to him as a Feoffe in truſt for the uſe and behoof of his ſeed; and to be exerciſed by him in ſubſerviency to the Eternal Happineſs of his people, the great deſign and fruit of Reconciliation. He had power before his Suffering; for as God ſaved men upon the promiſe of his ſuffering, ſo upon the ſame promiſe he committed all power of judgment to him; but the ſolemn inveſtiture and publication of it, was at his Reſurrection, and aſcenſion. Acts 2. 36. God hath made that ſame Jeſus whom you have crucified, both Lord and Chriſt. For the ſetting him at his right hand in the Humane Nature, was a full declaration and confirmation of the right of that power, which he had acquir'd by his Death; therefore he prays for his glory, and pleads a deed of gift for it, which was by this agreement, and therefore deſires a full inveſtiture of it, as it had been agreed on, firſt to be askt by him, and then given by God. Pſal. 2. 8. Ask of me.

(4.) A perpetual and royal Prieſthood. Pſal. 110. 4. And indeed all the rights of the firſt born, which were the right of Government, and the right of Prieſthood; by virtue of which he was to perpetuate the vertue of his expiation, and alſo purifie the Sons of Levi, and purge them as Gold and Silver, that they might offer to the Lord an Offering in Righteouſneſs. Mal. 3. 2.

(5.) An univerſal Victory. The propagation of his Kingdom in all parts of the World. Iſa. 42. 4. The iſles ſhall wait for his Law; the conqueſts of many Hearts by his Spirit, the willingneſs of people in the day of his power, the ſubduing ſome Rebellions by the Sword of his Mouth, others by the Sword of his Arm, when the Lord at his right hand ſhould ſtrike through Kings in the day of his wrath, Pſal. 110. 5, 6. At laſt a conqueſt of all his Enemies, the Devil, and Death; 1 Cor. 15. 26. which was for the benefit of his people. He had conquered the Devil, and Death in his perſon; he was to have a compleat Victory over both in his Members: ſo that we ſee the encouraging promiſe made him by his Father, was the purchaſe of a ſeed; and the Glory God promiſed him, was in relation to, and for the advantage of that ſeed, that the Reconciliation to be purchaſed for them, might be compleatly enjoyed by them. Judge then, whether the Father was not ſignally in this agreement in Chriſt, reconciling the World to himſelf.

We have handled this Covenant, let us ſee what confirmation there was of it. On God's part we find an Oath; God ſwears that Chriſt ſhould be a Prieſt *; he is therefore called the man of Gods right hand in the prayer of the Church *, whether for the haſtning the ſuffering of Chriſt, or for his Aſſiſtance, is uncertain; the man to whom thou haſt ſworn with thy right hand, ſo the Targum; the manner of taking Oaths being to lift up the right hand; ſo Pſal. 89. 3. I have ſworn to David my Servant, when he made a Covenant with him; though this was ſpoken to David in the Type, 1 Sam. 7. yet v. 14. I will be his Father, and he ſhall be my Son, is applyed to Chriſt, Heb. 1. 5. And he ſwears by his Holineſs, Pſal. 89. 36. Once have I ſworn by my Holineſs that I will not lye unto David, his ſeed ſhall endure for ever, and his Throne as the Sun before me. By David I underſtand Chriſt: once, i. e. once for all, irrevocably, unchangeably, and that by his Holineſs, by all that will fit him for a Governour and Judge of the World, by that Holineſs which he chiefly aim'd to advance by this undertaking of his Son; as I am an Holy God, and deſire my Holineſs may be truſted by this undertaking, I will ſtand to my word, by that Holineſs which is the beauty of every attribute; without which, neither Power, Mercy, Juſtice, nor Wiſdom could be perfections worthy of a God, as they could not be, if Holineſs could not be aſcrib'd to every one of them, Holy Power, Holy Mercy, Holy Juſtice, and Holy Wiſdom. By his Holineſs which comprehends all his Attributes, which would fail, ſhould he violate his Oath; whereby it appears that this offering the ſeed of Chriſt, was the main Article which God intended, which his heart was ſet upon, ſince he aſſures it by the ſtrongeſt bond of an Oath, and an Oath by that

* Pſal. 80. 17. Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand. vid. Muis in loc.

Attribute which was so necessary to the being of the Deity, without which, we can have no conception of a God; we may conceive God punishing all men by Justice, or pardoning all men by Mercy; but we cannot conceive a God without Holiness, for then we conceive a God without the highest perfection belonging to the Deity, an ungodded God. Now by this seed is not meant Christ the seed of David, because that David whom he had found as his Servant, v. 20. must be meant of Christ by the greatness of the expression which follows after; and it is the seed of this David he will make to endure for ever, ver. 29. his seed, his seed who was the first born. And though the word of the Oath is said to be since the Law, Heb. 7. 28: that must be in regard of the manifestation of it, or rather in order of Nature. For in this Covenant God excluded all other Sacrifices as insufficient; the order in the decree runs thus, first the Creation of Man, Covenant of works, &c. The foresight of the violation of that Covenant, the insufficiency of other Sacrifices for expiation, then the setling this grand Sacrifice and High Priest by an Oath; for the first call of Christ was upon the inability of other Sacrifices to afford God any pleasure, Heb. 10. 5, 6, 7. i. e. the foresight of their inability. * It was confirm'd also to Abraham by an Oath, that the Nations should be blessed in his seed, Heb. 6. 17. μεσιτευσεν he mediated by an Oath; the tenor whereof was, That as Abraham was willing to offer his Son in a bloody Sacrifice to him, so he would offer up his only Son for Abraham, and all such as should follow his example of Faith and Obedience.

* Jackson's vol. 2. Fol. Book 10 Ch. 56. p. 302.

Use of this.

1. We see the main cause of unbelief and despair. 'Tis the ignorance of the Fathers interest in Redemption; the ignorance of the transaction between the Father and the Son is the cause of this, Joh. 15. 21. because they knew not him that sent me; they consider not that this was the Fathers contrivance, that I am sent forth by him, and order'd by him to do what I do. If we had a clear vision of the Gospel, and remembred God as intent upon a way of Redemption, we should not nourish that which disparageth the whole plot. Such Souls look upon him as a God of Wrath, rather than a God of Peace; whose Hand is more fill'd with Thunders, than his Heart with Love; they regard him as one of a narrow and contracted goodness; that God minded nothing after mans sin, but preparing his Bow, and sharpning his Arrows: Hence they have frightful thoughts of God, slavish fears, fretful jealousies, that he will never accomplish their desires, though they seek him never so fervently.

2. See the blackness of unbelief. 'Tis as much as lyes in a man to make void the end of God, frustrate the Covenant of Redemption, deprive God of all the Glory he was to get by the Articles of it, and Christ of the Honour of his undertaking, and make the whole Covenant insignificant: rejecting the Eternal councel of Wisdom, as well as the rejecting John's Baptism, Luk. 7. 30. was so interpreted. Whosoever doth not believe upon the declaration of the Gospel, doth endeavour to deprive Christ of a Seed as far as he can. And those that endeavour to keep off others from Christ, endeavour as far as their power extends, to make God violate his Oath. This contrivance of God is the greatest Master-piece of Wisdom and Love; it was the most becoming thing God ever set about, most agreeable to his Mercy and Justice; unbelief doth what it can to demolish this Fabrick of God's Erecting, as though the contrivance of his Wisdom were a piece of folly, and the beating of his Heart only worthy of the spurns of our feet.

3. Salvation is upon the most certain terms to every Believer.

(1.) In regard that every Believer is the seed of Christ. God hath given such to Christ with an absolute Will, that they should not perish; Christ by Covenant was to take care of them: God by covenant was engaged that Christ should see his seed. He confirm'd it by an Oath, that his Seed should endure for ever. Shall God be defeated of his Will, and the design of his Everlasting Covenant? He committed by covenant the Souls of his people to Christ, as his charge *. Would God put a charge he values, into the hands of impotence or unskilfulness. Will Christ be guilty of disaffection to his Father? Can he break the trust repos'd in him? Will

the Father be guilty of unfaithfulneſs to Chriſt? Can there be a violation of Articles ſo ſolemnly made between them? This ſeed was to be perfect, Chriſt was to ſee the travel of his Soul, which will be, when he hath given Chriſt a full poſſeſſion of that truſt he acquir'd for him upon the Croſs; but they muſt wait, for it is with his people as with himſelf; he obtained a right upon the Croſs for himſelf, and them; but neither he nor they are yet in a full poſſeſſion of the right he then purchaſed.

(2.) In regard of the firmneſs of the Covenant between them. The covenant the Father hath made with Chriſt, is an Obligation wherein he ſtands bound to Chriſt, and conſequently to every parcel of his ſeed; free Grace to us made him a promiſer to Chriſt, and his promiſe made him a Debtor to him: therefore if it be poſſible that the Infinitely true God could be falſe to a temporary promiſe, how could he be falſe to his Son, the Son of his deareſt love, the Son that he appointed, call'd out, and put upon this undertaking? How can he be falſe to his own Counſel, and to a ſolemn Everlaſting Covenant? His truth is a powerful engagement for performance, eſpecially added to that love which firſt moved him to make this covenant. The covenant indeed was firm between God and Adam, had Adam ſtood; but there was not altogether ſo ſtrong an Obligation on God, he never confirm'd it by an Oath; he never was ſo much pleas'd with that, as with this. The greater pleaſure any man hath in the promiſe he makes, and the ſtronger reſolution to perform it, the ſtronger aſſeverations he backs it with. To what purpoſe doth Chriſt give us a Draught and Epitome of this Eternal tranſaction, as the ground of his pleas in Heaven; but that the joy of Believers may be full, that they might have his joy fulfilled in themſelves? Joh. 17. 13. Theſe things I ſpeak in the World, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themſelves; that they might have a joy in the conſideration of it, as he had in the making this covenant, and performing his part in it; theſe things I ſpeake in the World. I give them this Hiſtory of our agreement, this copy of the Articles between thee and me, that they may read thy Eternal counſel concerning their good, and have a ſtrong conſolation, and run to this publick record in all caſes, ſpread it before, yea, and plead it with thee. And by virtue of this covenant, though a Believer fall into ſin, (for it is not poſſible he can run on in a courſe of ſin) God will reduce him: the afflicting them to that end is a condition enſur'd in this covenant. Pſ. 89. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. God will viſit them with Rods, but not laſh them with Scorpions; he will afflict them, but not deſtroy them; whip them, but not damn them, becauſe he will not take away his loving kindneſs from his Son, or ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail.

(3.) In regard that Chriſt has ſuffered and performed all on his part. Chriſt hath perform'd his part, by making his Soul an offering for ſin; he muſt therefore ſee his ſeed, and that to ſatisfaction; Iſa. 53. 11. otherwiſe there would be a breach of covenant and promiſe on the Fathers part; God was to pleaſe Chriſt, as Chriſt had pleaſed him; and the pleaſure is not mutual, unleſs both be pleaſed alike. The wafting therefore of every believer through this vale of miſery, is a debt God ows to Chriſt, and a ſatisfaction neceſſary to make his happineſs as Mediator compleat, and which our Saviour may challenge as a due debt by virtue of compact. Will God ever go back from his word, tear the Articles on his part in peices, and ſo let the ſtrength and blood of Chriſt be ſpent for nought?

(4.) In this Covenant God hath link't his own glory, and the Salvation of Believers together: For in this covenant, wherein God was to be glorified, Chriſt was to be his Salvation to the ends of the Earth. Iſa. 49. 3. 6. As he covenanted with Chriſt for a Glory from him; ſo by covenant, he gave up the Gentiles to him, and thus having ſetled them together upon one corner ſtone, the happineſs of a Believer is as firmly upon that baſis eſtabliſhed, as the Honour of God. And therefore what the Prophet calls the Glory of God. Iſa. 40. 5. All fleſh ſhall ſee the Glory of God: Luke expreſſeth by Salvation, Luk. 3. 6. All fleſh ſhall ſee the Salvation of God; and when God had declar'd his Will for the ſending Chriſt, for the redeeming of the Priſoners from captivity; Iſa. 42. 5, 6. ver. 8. he ſaith, my glory will I not give unto another. I will intruſt no other with redeeming work, which is my Glory, but this Servant of mine; ſo that the peace is as firm as God's Honour, and can then only ceaſe when God ſhall ceaſe, to love Himſelf, his Son, and his own Glory.

What

What greater ground of Faith can there be than this, since God's love cannot reach a strain higher, than to venture his own Glory in the same bottom with a Believers Happiness?

4. Fly to this Covenant of Redemption, as well as to the Covenant of Grace, since that is the foundation of this. All other considerations of Christs Death, merit, and every thing stor'd up in Christ, can give us little hope, unless we consider this covenant, which supports all the other stones of the building. Fly to it when your souls are in Heavinesse; though there may be sometimes clouds upon the face of God, yet consider those compassions in his heart, when he struck this covenant with Christ: He covenanted to bruise his own Son by his wrath, while he promised to support him by his strength, and the sounding of his bowels alwaies kept pace with the blows of his hand. The consideration of this will encourage our faintness, silence our fears, nonplus our scruples, and settle a staggering faith. Is a Believer in a storm? here is an Anchor to hold him: Is he sinking? here is a Bough to catch at: Is he pursued by Spiritual Enemies? here is a refuge to fly to. Sin cannot so much oblige Gods Justice to punish, as his Oath to Christ obligeth him to save a repenting, and believing Sinner. These two covenants, that of Redemption, and the other of Grace, are as a Hur and Aaron to hold up the hands of a feeble Faith. His love cannot dye, as long as his faithfulness remains, nor his peace with the soul perish, as long as the covenant with his Son indures. This covenant of Redemption is to be pleaded by us, as well as the merit of Christs Death, because the merit of his Death is founded upon this compact.

4. The Father did fit Christ for this great undertaking to make reconciliation. Christ was the Vine, Joh. 15. 1. I am the Vine, and my Father the Husbandman; a vine of the Fathers planting, a Vine of the Fathers dressing; and God planted him a Noble Vine, in order to the bearing branches: he made him a Vine fit to cherish those he should insert in him; he is therefore said to be sanctify'd by the Father when he is sent into the World. Joh. 10. 36. Say you of him, whom the Father hath sanctified and sent into the World? Sanctifyed in order to his mission, or sanctified at his mission, that the Glory of God's reconciling love might be manifest by him; sanctified to do the works of his Father, for which end he was sent into the World, as ver. 37. intimates, If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. Much of Gods secret counsel was spent about him; whence he is called a polished shaft in his quiver, Isa. 49. 2. in the quiver of his secret counsel wherein he was hid. This promise he had in that agreement between them, that the Spirit of the Lord should be put upon him. Isa. 42. 1. And for this great end of Redemption, as you may read in the following verses in that Chapter. And since the end of his undertaking, was to glorify God in the work of Redemption; the wisest Counsels would be employed to furnish Christ for bringing about the highest Glory to God, and Happiness to Man.

* Moulin Decad. 4. Serm. 1. p. 13. somewhat changed.

(1.) A fitness for so great a task was absolutely necessary. * In regard of his Office. As he was setled in an Office by the Father, so the Graces and Gifts of the Spirit were necessary to fit the Humane Nature for those great works of the Father, which were to be perform'd in it. The Humane Nature had been unprofitable without an Office, and an Office had been unsuccessful without Graces and Gifts for the execution of it. An Office of Mediator, without capacity, fulness, charity, and goodness, had been useless, and to no purpose. In regard of the greatness of the work he was to do. Sin had blemisht the World, turn'd all Creatures from their true end by mans revolt from the service of God, whereby those creatures which were made to serve a Loyal Subject, were forced to serve a Rebel. The World then was to be restor'd, the Ruines by sin repair'd, the sin remov'd, and the sinner redeem'd: As this requir'd infinite skill for the contrivance, so it requir'd infinite fitness for the execution. The Glory of Gods design requir'd it, which was to make his Attributes most illustrious, and display them more magnificently in the work of Redemption, than in that of Creation: and this being to be done in the Humane Nature, (whose fall had necessitated a reparation or destruction,) because by that God was dishonoured; in that therefore the Glory of his Attributes was to be manifested, it requir'd a mighty fitness for the manifestation of an infinite Glory.

(2.) Christ

(2.) Christ in regard of his Divine Nature was infinitely fit, and in regard of the Union of that to the Humane ſutably fit. For in regard of his Infinite Knowledge, he knew the rights of God in the infinite extent of his Glory, and what was fit for the reparation of thoſe Rights which had been Violated: he knew the Infinite Holineſs of his Father, he knew the utmoſt malice of the inward Bowels of Sin, which he was to expiate; for he knew all things *, for the Father loves the Son, and ſhows him all things that himſelf doth. As God he knew what wrong God had ſuſtain'd in point of Honour, and in point of Service; and what was neceſſary to reſtore the Honour to God, and reduce the creature to the ſervice of the Creator. In regard of his infinite Holineſs; Therefore God who is Holy, could be ſanctified in his Righteouſneſs, Iſa. 5. 16. In regard of his Power, as he was the fitteſt Medium, by whom God created the World *: So he was the fitteſt Medium by whom God might repair the World, and give a new conſiſtency to it; Col. 1. 16. He was before all things, and by him all things conſiſt. He was the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, or the Father of the Age to come, and therefore the prince of peace, Iſa. 9. 6. It was neceſſary he ſhould be God; as it was neceſſary he ſhould be man, to make the compenſation ſuitable, becauſe the humane Nature had committed the treſpaſs; ſo it was neceſſary he ſhould be God, to make the compenſation ſufficient, becauſe God had receiv'd the wrong. Two things were requiſite; Suffering, therefore he muſt be Man; Satisfaction by that ſuffering, therefore he muſt be God. Two things in Juſtice to be conſidered; The Equity of Juſtice, therefore the Nature offending muſt ſuffer; the Infiniteneſs of Juſtice, therefore an Infinite Perſon muſt ſuffer: he therefore being thus Infinite, could anſwer the Infiniteneſs of Gods honour in the Reparation, and the Infiniteneſs of our Debts in the Expiation. For as he had a Humane Nature, wherein to merit, ſo he had a Divine Nature, whereby to make that merit ſufficient. No other Nature could be fit; the Angelical Nature was not Infinite, and therefore could not pay an infinite price; the Humane Nature was neither infinite nor innocent, and therefore could not ſatisfie for infinite Guilt. He was to ſtand under the ſin of the World; and what Creature could ever be fit to bear ſo vaſt a burden! As none but an Infinite Goodneſs could exerciſe ſo great a patience towards the ſins of men, ſo none but an Infinite Goodneſs could pay a ſatisfaction for them. Now though Chriſt as he was the Son of man, gave his life a Ranſom for many, Mat. 20. 28. yet the value of the redeeming price aroſe from it, as the blood of God, Act. 20. 28. He gave his Life as man, but the purchaſe was made by him as God. It could not have been for our Glory, or purchas'd a glory for us, unleſs he who was the Lord of Glory had been Crucified *; for being the expreſs image of God and upholding all things by the word of his power, he did by himſelf purge our ſins, Heb. 1. 3. So that his ſhoulders were able to bear the weighteſt Burden, his ſtrength able to endure the ſharpeſt Curſes, and his Soul able to drink down the bitteреſt Potions. Chriſt therefore being God, and united to the Humane nature, was every way fit, as being God and Man in one Perſon, that what the Humane Nature could not do by reaſon of its imbecillity as a creature, the Divine might; and what the Divine Nature could not do by reaſon of its perfection, the Humane Nature might perform. That Gods honour might be repair'd by an infinite ſatisfaction, and man reduced to ſervice by the higheſt motive, viz. the Incarnation of his Son; than which, God could not afford a greater.

* Joh. 5. 21.

* 1 Cor. 2. 6, 8.

3. The fitneſs, whether of his Divine Nature, or his Humane, did originally ariſe from the Father. The Father, as the fountain of the Deity, did confer on him his natural fitneſs; by communicating to him the Divine Nature from Eternity, by Natural Generation. He had a Natural fitneſs as the Son of God, and a gracious fitneſs as the ſon of Man; the natural fitneſs was from the Father, for as the Father hath life in himſelf, ſo hath he given to the Son to have life in himſelf, Joh. 5. 26. To have life in himſelf is the property of God, who is therefore called the living God; And this is given by the Father.

1. All the fulneſs whereby he is fit to reconcile, and accompliſh his Mediatory work, he is enriched with from the Father. Col. 1. 19. It pleaſed the Father that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell. 'Tis true, the word Father is not in the Greek Text, but is to be ſupplied from the diſcourſe of the Apoſtle before Verſe 12. where he begins a thankſgiving to the Father. He did not only ordain him to be Head of the Church, but he he fitted him with whatſoever was neceſſary to conſtitute him in that Office, and enable him for the exerciſe of it. By this fulneſs, is meant both a fulneſs of the Divinity, as he is the Image of God, and a fulneſs of habitual Grace, as he is the firſt born of every Creature; having the rights of the firſt-born given to him, as he is the head of the body the Church, and the firſt-born from the dead. God would have this great Mediator filled with all the perfection of the Deity, and all the excellency of Grace in his Humanity, that he might be in this office of Mediation every way acceptable to God, and ſucceſsful for Man; that no fault might be found in him either by God, or man, to ſtave off the acceptance of the one, or the reliance of the other, that ſo the Reconciliation might be in all parts and degrees compleat.

2 The Father ſtor'd up this fulneſs in Chriſt with a mighty pleaſure. He did not only order the communication of this fulneſs to him, and the perpetual reſidence of it in him for his appointed ends, but he did it with a tranſcendent pleaſure; An ἡδονὴ, ſuch a pleaſure as he had in his Perſon, as that which anſwer'd all his Ends, both for his own Glory, and his Creatures Recovery. As he was the Treaſury of Grace for us, ſo he was the Object of Gods Delight.

3 This fulneſs was lodg'd in Chriſt, for the making peace with his Father, and accompliſhing all the ends of it. As he aſſembled all light together and fixed it in the Sun, as a Natural Type of Chriſt, to convey light and heat thereby to all ſublunary Bodies, as alſo to the Starrs in the Firmament, whence both might derive that excellency they have, and ſo agree in one point and principle; ſo he hath eſpouſed together the Divine and Humane Perfections in one Perſon, that thereby he might reconcile all things to himſelf; By him I ſay, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven, that both the Reſtoration of the broken peace with men, and the Confirmation of the ſtanding Peace with Angels, might meet in him, and be deriv'd from him, as one Center of both. For as it pleas'd the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell; ſo it was a pleaſure to him, that it ſhould perpetually reſide in him to this end, that peace might be made, and all the intendments and conſequents of it be promoted to a perfect iſſue: that he having an Alliance to God by his Divinity, and an Alliance to Man by his Humanity might ſtand as a perfect Mediator between God and his creature, to make peace and preſerve it. For hereby he underſtood the rights of God to ſecure them, and the indigencies of man to relieve him. He had his humanity fitted to be a ſufferer, and his divinity fitted to be a repairer: The one made him paſſible, the other able, and the Holineſs of his Perſon made him acceptable. His being in the form of a Servant, made him obnoxious to ſuffering; and his being in the form of God, made that ſuffering Meritorious of our peace, that in all reſpects he might become a Prince of Peace both in Heaven and Earth.

4. We may note alſo the conſtancy of it; It dwells in him. This was the pleaſure of the Father, that it ſhould not only be communicated to him to lodge, but dwell in him; not as a private perſon, but an univerſal principle; as Head of the Body, as well as a Reconciler, that he might be able to do the Works of God, and fill the emptineſs of Man. God promis'd to engrave the engravings of this Stone, which is uſher'd in with a repetition of a Behold; Zech. 3. 9. Behold the ſtone that I have laid, Behold I will engrave the engravings thereof ſaith the Lord; that men might obſerve it and the end of it. He would work all habitual Grace in him with an indelible character; as the engravings of a ſtone, cannot be razed out without defacing and diſſolving ſome part of the ſtone at leaſt, ſometimes not without breaking the whole. The end of this Engraving is expreſt in the following words, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day. Some underſtand it alſo of his Death: And I think it may be underſtood of both his fitneſs for Suffering, and his Actual Suffering. The end of this Sculpture, was for the taking away ſin, and making Reconciliation with God by the Expiation of it. So that the Graces of the Spirit are not only pour'd upon his head, as that which may be dried up again; but engraven on him, as noting fixedneſs and duration. Fulneſs acquaints us with the abundance of this Grace, and dwelling ſignifies the perpetual Reſidence of it, Engraving the deep rootedneſs; and all for this end of Redemption.

This

This fitneſs of his Humane Nature was the work of the Father, not immediately, but by his Spirit.

1. He is fitted with a body.

(1.) This was neceſſary: Man as conſtituted of Soul and Body, had violated the Articles of the firſt Covenant: therefore man as conſtituted of Soul and Body, muſt anſwer the violations of it. * He was therefore to have a body of the ſame kind with that man that had broken the Covenant, whoſe puniſhment he was to remove; therefore he was not to be new made from the Earth as Adam was, but to deſcend from him; otherwiſe he had not been of the ſame kind, and ſo could not ſatisfie for that kind whereof he was not a part. As the Obligation deſcended upon all men from the firſt man, ſo it was fit that one deſcended from him ſhould ſatisfie that obligation. * Sabund. Theol. Tit. 253.

(2.) It was alſo neceſſary that he ſhould have a mortal body: That he might be nearly related to us in all things, (ſin excepted) and redeem us by his paſſion. Bloud was to be ſhed, death was to be endur'd (for we ow'd to God our life and bloud) the Righteouſneſs of God was to be declared, Rom. 3. 25. which could not be but in the offending Nature, his Life he muſt loſe, thereby to lay a ſtrong foundation for the removing of ſin, with a rich manifeſtation of Gods Righteouſneſs. Now to make a body Mortal, which was not in it ſelf ſinful, was a Work only to be wrought by the Wiſdom of God, whereby to make a ſalvo for his Righteouſneſs, always manifeſted to his Rational Creatures. That Soul that ſins, It ſhall die; had not Adam ſinn'd, he had not died; our Saviour died, who never ſinned; he was therefore to have ſuch a body whereby our ſins might be imputed to him, yet not inherent in him. He was then to have a Humane Nature to ſuffer our puniſhment, as well as a Divine Nature to ſurmount it. A Fleſh was neceſſary to be a ſacrifice for ſin, as well as the Deity to be a Prieſt. What could he have offered for us, had he not had Fleſh and Bloud? without a Body, he had been a Prieſt without a ſacrifice; without an holy Fleſh, he had been a Prieſt with a ſinful ſacrifice. He was to have a body to bear our ſins on a tree, 1 Pet. 2. 24. Yet an holy body, that by the offering of that body once for all, we might be ſanctified, Heb. 10. 10. As God only could, ſo he did provide him ſuch a body; this he aſcribes to God, Heb. 10. 5. A body haſt thou prepar'd me. A Mortal Body, fit to be a ſacrifice; A Body prepar'd, after the rejection of all other ſacrifices wherein God could find no pleaſure: a body alſo prepar'd to be a Reconciling ſacrifice, ſuch a body wherein he might do the Will of God, i. e. the whole Will of God, which was to take away ſin. It was a Body ſo fitted, as to be obedient to the Soul; to have no rebellious power in it, againſt Reaſon and Command; but to be fully and readily obedient in all its motions to God; not barely a body, but a body ſo temper'd as to do the ſervice requir'd of it. It was not indeed fit, that the Body wherein the Deity was to Tabernacle *, ſhould be fram'd by a leſs Wiſdom, and ſlighter order, than the Moſaical Tabernacle, which was a ſhadow of it; which was done by exact order, and by the inſpirations of the Spirit, filling the Workmen with skill, Exod. 31. 2, 3. * Joh. 1. 14. ἐσκήνωσεν.

(3.) Yet he was to have a holy Body, free from any taint of Moral Imperfection, fit for the ſervice he was devoted to; for which the leaſt ſpeck upon his Humanity had render'd him unfit. This could not have been, had he deſcended from Adam by way of ordinary and Natural Generation. He had then been a Debtor himſelf, a Lamb with blemiſh, and ſo wanted a ſacrifice for himſelf. His ſacrifice would have been defective, and have needed ſome other ſacrifice to fill up the gaps of it. It was neceſſary he ſhould deſcend from Adam in a way of Birth, but not in a way of ſeminal tradution; that he might have the Nature of Adam, without the ſpot. Such a knot could not be untied without infinite skill, nor ſuch a way of production be wrought without the Infinite power of God.

Therefore,

1. The holy Ghoſt frames this body of Chriſt, of the ſeed of the woman, that it might be Mortal, and have his heel bruiſed by the Devil, Gen. 3. 15. Not of the ſeed of the Man in an ordinary way of Generation, that it might be without any taint of ſin, ſanctifying therefore the ſeed of the woman in a peculiar manner. Wherefore in relation to his Humanity, Conception and Birth, he is the holy thing, Luk. 1.35. As his Body is called, the holy One in the Grave, Pſal. 16. 10. Thou wilt not ſuffer thy holy One to ſee corruption. His ſoul was not in the Grave, being ſeparated from the body upon the recommendation of it upon the Croſs into his Fathers hands. And as it was an holy body, ſo it was a mortal body, called therefore a body of fleſh, Col. 1. 22. This God had appointed and predicted as an extraordinary thing, Jer. 31. 22. The Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, a woman ſhall compaſs a man; גֶּבֶר a mighty man. By calling it a new thing, he points to a miraculous Birth of the Meſſiah, and the word creating ſignifies ſomething out of a Natural Courſe, next to a meer Creation, and Gods Work as much as Creation. A new thing, as not being from the old ſtock; for though his Nature was the ſame with Adams *, yet he had no taint of Original Sin; Becauſe he was not morally in the Loins of Adam before his Fall (the promiſe of his Incarnation of the ſeed of the Woman being given after the Fall) whereby the ſin of Adam could not be imputed to him. It was therefore a new thing, and an holy thing according to that new promiſe after the Fall. Though the Spirit was the immediate Agent in fitting this Body, yet it was by the appointment and power of the Father; Luk. 1. 35. The holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee. where, by the Higheſt, is underſtood the Father, the Myſtery of the Trinity being manifeſted in the Incarnation of the Son of God.

* Owen of the Spirit. p. 136.

2. The holy Ghoſt makes the union between the Divine and Humane Nature. The over-ſhadowing by the power of the higheſt unites the two Natures, whereby that holy thing in the Virgins Womb ſhould be called the Son of God, Luk. 1. 35. which could not be without a Union of the Divine Nature to the ſubſtance, made of the ſeed of the Woman, by this over-ſhadowing; which alſo is the act of the Father by the Spirit, as being in the power of the higheſt. And this is that which is called the Gratia unionis, Grace of Union, which Chriſt had from God, whereby the Godhead dwelt bodily in him, or perſonally, Col. 2. 9. the two Natures; the Divine, ſignified by the Godhead; the Humane, by that wherein it dwelt, making up one Perſon; σῶμα among the Greeks ſignifying not a bare Body, but a Perſon; as it doth alſo in common ſpeech among us.

The Union of the two Natures by a particular Conjunction, whereby the Divine Nature dwelt ſubſtantially in the Humane, and was acted by it in all undertakings, was the work of God by his Spirit. This Union of both Natures was for the making peace, Col. 1. 21, 22. And you that were ſometimes alienated, yet now he hath reconcil'd in the body of his fleſh through death; Who? ver. 15. He who was the image of the inviſible God. The Image of the inviſible Deity, rendred himſelf viſible in the Humanity, to reconcile us to his Father, ſo that by this Union, we who are afar off from the Deity, are brought near in his Humanity; and the gulf of Original ſin which conſiſted in enmity to God, and which hindered the paſſage of God to Man, or Man to God, is filled up, taken away, and the work done in and by him. As he was God, he knew the terrors of Hell, becauſe he knew all things; but as God, he could not have experience of them: He was to have a body of fleſh to bear them, as well as he was the Image of the inviſible God to ſupport that body under them. As Man, he was fit to endure his Wrath; and as God, fit to appeaſe it. As Man, he was fit to undergo the ſharpneſs of the Curſe, and as God, able to remove it. As Man, he was capable to obey both the Moral and Mediatory Law; and as God, to tranſmit the fruit of that Obedience to us, which is intimated in theſe words, Yet now hath he [who was the Image of the inviſible God] reconcil'd, &c. to preſent you holy, and unblameable and unreproveable in his ſight. Preſenting us, as he is the Image of God, in our Nature free from ſin by the waſhing of his bloud, after he had reconcil'd us through the body of his fleſh: The Meriting of Reconciliation was wrought in his fleſh, but aroſe from his Deity.

Thus Chriſt had a Body, every way fitted with a holy Soul, with a glorious Indweller, that he might be every way fit for making peace. A Body in all things like ours, but without Impurity, that he might be our Kinſman, and become a Goel, a Redeemer by right of Propinquity; that he might be the ſuffering Head of the Humane Nature, which he could not be without our Nature. Had he taken the the Angelical Nature which was more excellent in it ſelf, and ſuffered in that; his ſufferings would have been eſteemed the ſufferings of that whole Nature, but not of the Humane Nature, becauſe not partaking of it, and ſo he could not have ſuffered for it, unleſs he had ſuffered in it: For ſince he was to make reconciliation for the ſins of the people, he took upon him not the Nature of Angels, but he took on him the ſeed of Abraham, becauſe it behoved him to be made like unto his Brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Prieſt in things pertaining to God, to make this Reconciliation. Heb. 2. 16, 17. We may note, beſides the Holineſs of his Body, it was ſo fram'd by the appointment of the Father, and the operation of the Holy Ghoſt, and tempered with ſuch affections, as to do this work with the greateſt compaſſion to the fallen Nature of Man; that whereas he had a Holineſs to make him faithful to God, ſo he had a tenderneſs in his Nature to make him merciful to us, for the carrying on this Reconciliation, and the ends of it to the higheſt perfection: So that thoſe two Natures thus united by God, made him every way capable, and fit to be a Reconciler, knowing the Juſtice of Gods claim, that he might give to God what he knew to be his due, and feeling the infirmities of our Nature, that he might purchaſe that remedy he knew we wanted. Herein we ſee the incomparable Wiſdom and love of the Father in fitting Chriſt, ſo that he might be in him reconciling the World to himſelf.

2. He is filled with his Spirit by the Father, i. e. with all the Gifts and Graces of the Spirit neceſſary to this work. That precious Oyntment compoſed of ſo many ſweet and excellent ingredients, wherewith the Levitical High-Prieſt was anointed, Exod. 30. was a Type of thoſe excellent Graces of the great High Prieſt, whereby he was qualified for the exerciſe of his Offices. As the Spirit eſpouſed the Humane Nature to the Divine, ſo he eſpous'd all his Gifts and Graces to the Humane. As the body was conceived by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, ſo his ſoul was beautified and adorned by the Graces of the Holy Ghoſt, whereby he became fairer than the Children of men, and Grace was poured into his lips. Pſal. 45. 2. His going forth is prepar'd as the morning, Hoſ. 6. 3. furniſht with all things neceſſary to work out redemption, and free the World from the Wrath of God, as the Sun is with light to deliver the World from the darkneſs of the night.

(1.) The ſubject of theſe gifts was the rational ſoul of Chriſt. The Humane Nature was only anointed with the Spirit, the Divine Nature being infinite, could receive no increaſe of gifts; it having a fulneſs of perfection by Eternal Generation. Yet though the Divine Nature ſtood in no need of thoſe gifts, it did capacitate the Humanity of Chriſt for greater receits, by reaſon of its union with it, than any other meer Creature was capable of. We muſt not think, as ſome may conceive, that the Divine Nature was inſtead of a ſoul to the body of Chriſt: He had a real rational ſoul; for ſince the whole Nature of Man was corrupted, both ſoul and body, the whole Nature of Man was to be repair'd. How could he have ſuffered in a Body without a ſoul, the wrath due to our ſouls as well as bodies? Had he only had a body, he had not taken the humane Nature, only the meaneſt and worſt part of man, not that which conſtitutes the man: Unleſs he had been God and Man in one perſon, his blood could not have been called the blood of God, and unleſs he had a ſoul and body, an entire Nature, his blood could not have been the blood of man; as he was to have a body prepared, ſo he was to have a ſoul proportionably furniſht.

2. He was abundantly filled with them, he had the Spirit not by meaſure, Joh. 3. 34. not as light in a room, but as light in the Sun: not as water in a Veſſel where the bounds are viſible, but like Water in the Ocean, where the depths and limits are unknown. In him there was nothing but Spirit and fulneſs, without limits for quantity; without imperfection for quality; all the Treaſures; the Fountain, not the Rivers. There are varieties of Gifts as there are of Stars, and the qualities of them in Heaven; and of Flowers, and the Beauties of them upon Earth; what were various in others, were entire in him. Others have parcels of thoſe Gifts and Graces, like Abrahams children by Keturah; but Chriſt hath them entire: As Iſaac had an Inheritance, as the Heir of promiſe; ſo Chriſt, as the Heir of all things, had the poſſeſſion of the choiceſt Gifts in the treaſuries of his Father. As God had communicated an infinite being to him by Eternal Generation; so it was convenient to communicate a fullness of Graces and Gifts to the Humanity, as far as it was capable to receive and contain it, because it was joyn'd to so excellent a Nature, as the Divine; for though he was made flesh, yet he had the glory, as of the only begotten Son of God. It was fit therefore he should be full of Grace and Truth in that flesh. Joh. 1. 14. It was not congruous, that the Spirit of God should come into the Soul of Christ with half his Attendants, but with the greatest Majesty, with his whole train of Excellencies. * Not that the perfections pour'd out upon his Soul by the Spirit of Grace and Glory were infinite, because those Graces were created qualities, and infiniteness can never be ascrib'd to a Creature: and his Soul was the subject of them, and that being a Creature, was not capable of receiving into it subjectively, that which is infinite; but he had them without measure, as to the kinds of gifts: in the mass, not in parcels: As to the degrees of them; others have them in a lower degree, as light in a Candle; Christ in the highest degree, as light in the Heavens; so that whatsoever pertains to the Nature of Grace, was conferr'd on Christ, as whatsoever belongs to the Nature of light and heat is stor'd up in the Sun. All his Garments did smell of Myrrh, Aloes, and Cassia. Psal. 45. 8. As God hath made the Sea a treasure of Waters, emptyed into it from all the Rivers of the World: So he hath made Christ a mighty Ocean of all perfections, in a vaster quantity, and richer qualities than any other Creature is capable to receive: As the Sea is more capacious to receive the perpetual Flouds, than the greatest River in the World. If the whole Creation should be reaped, and glean'd, and stor'd up in one person, it would be but as the drops of a Bucket, to the fulness of Christ, which the Father hath laid up in him.

* Durrant in Colos. 1. 19.

3. These graces were infus'd into him at once. As the new creature hath all its parts fram'd at once, so the head of all the new creatures was principled at once with them. Though in regard of the various exercises of them, they grew up in him by degrees. Luk 2. 40. The Child grew, and waxed strong in Spirit, filled with wisdom, ver. 52. and shone forth as he increas'd in age, by new excitations of them by the Spirit of God. Grace came into the soul of Christ, as his Soul into his Body, or as light into the sun at the creation, not by pieces. But as the Soul did not exercise its functions, so his graces did not exert their strength, but by degrees according to the capacity of his age, and occasional occurrences. The anointing of this Spirit was confer'd upon him at his incarnation; when he was made flesh, he was full of Grace and Truth, Joh. 1. 14. Also visibly at his Baptism, which was his entrance into the exercise of his Office, as a visible token of his Fathers acceptation of him, now at his inauguration. Mat. 3. 16, 17. As David the Type was anointed at Bethlehem, the place of his habitation by Samuel, and afterwards at Hebron, when he was actually installed King by the Tribe of Judah. The first, anointing at his incarnation, was his furniture for his Office, that at his Baptism his investiture in his Office.

4. These gifts and graces of the Spirit were necessary for the humane Nature. * It was necessary that the Soul of Christ should exert supernatural acts: there was a necessity of love to God, to spirit him in his mighty difficulties; of faith in God, to suck refreshment from the promises made to him as Mediator, when he should arrive at any conflict; these were supernatural acts in themselves, and so were above the bare natural strength of the soul of Christ, and the powers of it. As the Soul of Christ did need a natural concourse to natural actions, as other Souls do, and needed the gift of miracles for the working of miracles; so he needed a supernatural Grace to exert supernatural Acts. 'Tis Essential to the Nature of a Creature to depend upon God for all communications; to act independently, and without the influence of another, is a property of God, not to be deriv'd to any creature; the humanity of being Christ then a creature, could not act of it self without the influence of a superior being; the humanity then did not endow it self; Grace is not minted by any Creature. It did no more inspire it self with Grace, than it did inspire it self with Life. As God was the Father of Christ, so he was the Father of Grace to him; the Divine Nature of Christ gave a personal dignity by union, but conferr'd not of it self a beauty upon it. Had the Divine Nature by virtue of its union, elevated the faculties of Christs soul, he needed not have grown in Wisdom dom and knowledge; the Divine Nature, though united to the Humanity, did not communicate to it all that it was capable of receiving. This communication was the proper work of the Spirit, according to the order in the operations of the Trinity. Hence his Humane Soul knew not the time of the day of judgment, though as God he did. If his Divine Nature had advanc'd his rational faculties, it had also stocked him with full comforts, without the mission of an Angel to refresh him in the Garden; Luk. 22. 43. and why did it not also advance the vegetative power to rear up his body to a full stature?

This Elevation was the work of the Spirit. It was necessary he should be thus furnisht.

(1.) In regard of the greatness of his task. Gifts are imparted to men sutable to the places wherein they stand for Action, and according to the largeness of the Vessel. Christs place was higher, his work harder than any Creatures, therefore required a greater measure of gifts than all Creatures in Heaven and Earth put together. Though he was mighty in his person, and fit to have help laid upon him for us, yet he was to be anointed with the Holy Oyl, Psal. 89. 19, 20. without this fulness of Grace the Humane Nature could never have arriv'd to the perfection of the great undertaking, but would have sunk in the midst of the work.

(2.) In regard he was to be a pattern, as well as the Prince of Believers: a pattern, ought to be the perfectest in the kind. Christ was to be set up as a pattern for Believers, both of the Spirits operation in him, and of their imitation of him. Those who draw pictures look upon the Original, that they may work them into a likeness to it. The Spirit of God in the fashioning Souls, is to conform them to the image of Christ. Rom. 8. 29. It was fit that the pattern of all the Heirs of Heaven, should be fully exact to the pleasure of God. It being Gods end to bestow more upon the Creature in this Redemption, than he did upon it by creation, and that in a more sutable manner; there was as much need of an infinite fitness in the person that was to prepare the way for those Communications in an honourable manner to God, and everlastingly comfortable to the Creature.

(5.) The Father was the principal cause of this furniture. It was God that anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, Act. 10. 38. And God gives the Spirit not by measure to him. Joh. 3. 34.
